was in default in the performance of his work under this lease; that it stated the exact amount of the default; that it stated that he was to remedy such default within thirty days; that four or five days later he was handed another notice; that this second notice was to the same effect as the first; that it specified the amount of work he was in default and notified him he would have thirty days in which to remedy the default; that he paid no attention to either notice; and that he had done no "tunnel work" upon the leased property before he received this notice. This evidence sufficiently supports the finding in question.

[2] It is next contended that the evidence does not support the court's finding that a default existed on December 14, 1936, with respect to the amount of work called for by the terms of the lease. Assuming, as appellants contend, that there is some evidence in the record which would have supported a finding to the effect that the required amount of work was done there is other evidence to the contrary which amply sustains this finding. It may be further observed that much of the evidence upon which appellant relies, if accepted as true, relates to work in the nature of prospecting, for which work the appellant had but a limited time, and not to actual mining operations within the meaning of the terms of the lease. Moreover, the record rather clearly indicates why the evidence upon which the appellant particularly relies was not accepted at face value by the court. No machinery or equipment was placed upon the leased property and the appellant was mainly engaged in working some near by claims and in attempting to sell his interest in this claim, and the record amply sustains the court's finding that he did not comply with the terms of this lease.

[3] The finding that the Golden Butte Mining Company, Ltd., did not acquire any right in and to this property is attacked. That partnership acquired nothing other than any interest the appellant might have, it acquired such interest with full knowledge of all of the facts, and that interest was terminated before any assignment thereof was made.

Three other points raised are entirely without merit, involve matters which were proper and which could not have affected the result, and require no detailed consideration.

A motion to dismiss this appeal on the ground that all questions are moot since the term of the lease has now expired was also submitted. While it seems probable that the lease has expired by the lapse of time and that it has not been renewed in accordance with its terms, one matter in this connection has not been presented and is not disclosed by the record before us, and for this reason we have preferred to pass upon the appeal upon its merits.

The motion to dismiss is denied and the judgment is affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 796

SILVA et al. v. MARKET ST. RY. CO. et al.

Civ. 11813.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 27, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇨694(2), 719(6)

An error in granting a nonsuit is an "error of law" which may be reviewed on appeal from judgment when presented by bill of exceptions without any specification of insufficiency of evidence.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Error of Law".

2. Appeal and error ⇨719(6)

An appeal from a judgment notwithstanding the verdict presents the identical question which is presented by an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, and if the one presents only an error of law which may be inquired into without a specification of insufficiency so must the other.

3. Appeal and error ⇨719(6)

Where plaintiffs appealed from judgment notwithstanding the verdict for defendant and bill of exceptions did not specify wherein evidence was insufficient to support the decision or show an exception to judgment, appellate court could consider sufficiency of evidence to support decision since appeal presented the same question as an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit and no specification of insufficiency of evidence was necessary in such appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 647.

4. Negligence ⚷90, 93(3)

Where the mother, father and sister were riding with the driver of an automobile at time of the accident and the automobile belonged to the father, negligence of the driver would be imputed to the father as owner and to the mother but would not be imputed to the sister who was a mere guest and had no control over the driver nor interest in the automobile.

5. Appeal and error ⚷934(1)

On appeal from judgment for defendant notwithstanding verdict of jury for plaintiff, appellate court was only required to inquire whether there was any substantial evidence in record giving it the most favorable interpretation that it would reasonably bear and drawing from it all favorable inferences that would support the verdict of the jury.

6. Street railroads ⚷117(28, 34)

Where driver of automobile looked to left as he neared intersection and saw only an approaching street car a few feet back of a stop sign, and looked to his right as he proceeded across the intersection and was then struck by street car, whether the street car's failure to stop was the "proximate cause" of the collision, and whether driver was negligent was a question for jury.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proximate Cause".

7. Automobiles ⚷224(1), 245(88)

The extent of duty of passenger in automobile depends upon the particular circumstances and is a question for the jury.

8. Street railroads ⚷117(28)

Whether plaintiffs who were riding in an automobile which collided with a street car at intersection when the driver of the automobile seeing a street car approaching a stop sign and in reliance upon its duty to stop proceeded across intersection were contributorily negligent was a question for jury.

9. Trial ⚷139(1)

In action for injuries resulting from collision of an automobile with a street car, court was not authorized to take case from jury on ground that testimony of occupants of automobile and physical facts of accident demonstrated that plaintiff's theory of the accident was inherently impossible.

10. Appeal and error ⚷695(3)

Where material testimony was clearly intelligible without reference to map used as illustration on trial and sufficient to show verdict was supported by substantial evidence, and no amount of contradiction could affect result of appeal, failure to include the map in the record was immaterial.

11. Judgment ⚷199(3)

Where evidence preponderated in favor of defendants, trial court could not enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict for defendant.

12. Judgment ⚷199(3)
New trial ⚷65

Trial court has power to correct an unjustified verdict upon motion for new trial, but cannot make judgment notwithstanding the verdict serve the same purpose where there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Action by Antone F. Silva and others against Market Street Railway Company for injuries suffered in automobile collision. From a judgment notwithstanding the verdict for defendant, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed.

Vincent W. Hallinan, Emmett R. Burns, and James A. Himmel, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Wm. M. Abbott, Cyril Appel, and Ivores R. Dains, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

[1-3] This is an appeal from a judgment for defendants entered notwithstanding the verdict of a jury in favor of the appealing plaintiffs. The appeal is presented by bill of exceptions and respondents claim that this court cannot consider the sufficiency of the evidence because the bill contains no specification wherein the evidence is insufficient to support the decision. The rule is settled in this state that an error in granting a nonsuit is an error of law which may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment when presented by bill of exceptions without any specification of insufficiency of the evidence in the bill. Donahue v. Gallavan, 43 Cal. 573, 574; Hammond v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 522, 24 P. 837, 20 Am.St.Rep. 239; Barfield v. South Side Irr. Co., 111 Cal. 118, 43 P. 406; Martin v. Southern Pacific Co., 150 Cal. 124, 88 P. 701; Beeson v. Schloss, 183 Cal. 618, 192 P. 292; Western California L. Co. v. Welch, 41 Cal.App. 435, 183 P. 169. An appeal from a judgment notwithstanding the verdict presents the identical question which is presented by an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit (Ferran v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 350, 44 P.2d 533; Card v. Boms, 210 Cal. 200, 291 P. 190) and if the one presents only an error of law which may be inquired into without a specification of insufficiency so must the other. The dictum of this court in Fuchs v. Southern Pacific Co., 5 Cal.App.2d 409, 42 P.2d 704, stating a contrary conclusion, was announced without a consideration of the cases above cited. Nor is the objection open to respondents that the bill shows no exception to the judgment non obstante, since section 647, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that "the final decision in an action or proceeding * * * [is] deemed to have been excepted to." Beeson v. Schloss, supra, 183 Cal. at page 622, 192 P. 292.

[4] Appellants are the mother, father and sister of Joseph Thomas Silva, who was driving the automobile at the time of the collision out of which this action grows. The automobile belonged to the father Antone F. Silva. Some space is devoted in the briefs to the question whether the negligence, if any appeared, of the driver would be imputed to the three plaintiffs. Since the submission of the case the Supreme Court has decided the case of Milgate v. Wraith, 19 Cal.2d 297, 121 P.2d 10. Under the authority of that decision the negligence, if any, of the driver would be imputed to Antone F. Silva as owner of the car and the cause of action of his wife, Louise Silva, would apparently be subject to the same defense. 3 Cal.Jur., Ten-year Supp., pp. 542, 543. This defense would not apply to Marie Silva who, from the evidence, was a mere guest and neither had any control over the driver nor interest in the automobile in which she was riding.

[5] In considering an appeal from a judgment of this character we have only to inquire whether there is any substantial evidence in the record which giving it the most favorable interpretation that it will reasonably bear and drawing from it all favorable inferences, will support the verdict of the jury. Ferran v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. The automobile in which plaintiffs were riding was on the evening of the collision proceeding northerly on Potrero Avenue in San Francisco. Potrero Avenue is crossed by Sixteenth Street. Potrero Avenue is a boulevard street and there is a regulation "stop sign" near the westerly property line of Potrero Avenue on Sixteenth Street. As the driver of the automobile approached Sixteenth Street and when he was about five or six feet south of the south curb line he looked to his left and saw the street car operated by defendants a few feet back of the stop sign on Sixteenth Street. It was then in motion. There was no other traffic coming from his left and the driver turned his gaze to his right to look for traffic from that direction and proceeded into the intersection at a speed of fifteen to twenty miles per hour without again looking to his left. When he was crossing the eastbound track of the Market Street Railway he heard his sister scream and almost immediately the street car struck the automobile in the neighborhood of its rear left wheel. The father's testimony was substantially the same, and the sister testified that from the time they reached the curb line she was watching the street car and it made no stop.

[6] From this evidence the jury was entitled to conclude that the street car was not stopped at the intersection and that the collision was proximately caused by this violation of law. 2 Cal.Jur., Ten-year Supp., p. 349. They were likewise entitled to find that the driver of the automobile was not guilty of negligence. It would be at least a question of fact whether the driver, seeing the car approaching a stop sign, and in reliance upon its duty to stop taking his eyes from it to look for traffic in the other direction, was guilty of negligence in so doing. In Inouye v. McCall, 35 Cal.App.2d 634, at page 638, 96 P.2d 386, at page 388, the court said: "Upon this testimony we cannot assume that deceased was negligent. He had a right to believe the driver of the truck would obey the law and stop at the arterial and yield to him the right of way."

[7, 8] Nor can any of the plaintiffs be held negligent as a matter of law. The extent of the duty of a passenger "depends upon the particular circumstances of each case, and is a question for the jury." Wagner v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 210 Cal. 526, 528, 292 P. 645, 646; Dowd v. Atlas Taxicab, etc, Co., 187 Cal. 523, 529, 530, 202 P. 870.

[9] Respondents make an elaborate argument based upon testimony of the plaintiffs and their driver and the distances traveled by the automobile and street car from the time that the street car was first seen by the occupants of the automobile and the physical facts of the accident in an attempt to demonstrate that the plaintiffs' theory of the accident is inherently impossible. We have considered this argument carefully and are not convinced by it. The argument depends upon estimates of the speed of the automobile and the positions of the moving car and moving automobile at the time the car was first observed as testified to by plaintiffs and their driver. Such testimony cannot be mathematically accurate and a few feet or a few miles per hour one way or the other would completely change the result of any such calculation. Applying the same test to defendant Wimmer's testimony the same sort of argument could be as plausibly made by plaintiffs since Wimmer testified that the automobile traveling at the rate of thirty miles per hour skidded into the front of the car and "the body of the automobile pressed itself right up against the corner of the street car" and stopped.

[10] Respondents complain that a map used to illustrate the testimony of the witnesses was not included in the bill of exceptions. Since all of the testimony that we have quoted is clearly intelligible without reference to the map and is sufficient to show that the verdict of the jury was supported by substantial evidence, and since no amount of contradiction in the testimony could affect the result of this appeal, the record presented was sufficient to show the error complained of.

[11, 12] The case was one in which the evidence preponderated in favor of defendants; but that cannot be made the justification for a judgment non obstante. The trial judge has ample power to correct what may appear to him to be an unjustified verdict upon motion for new trial, but he cannot make a judgment non obstante serve the same purpose where there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict. Ferran v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, 3 Cal.2d at page 353, 44 P.2d 533.

The judgment is reversed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

BUXBOM v. SMITH et al.*

Civ. 12810.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 24, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 21, 1942.

1. Master and servant 🔑41(2)

Where plaintiff sued for breach of contract of employment to manage the publication of a newspaper, the damages awarded plaintiff for loss of trained organization, supervisors, good will, and for general damages to plaintiff's business as a distributor of handbills, newspapers, and advertising matter, could not be sustained, since in performing the contract alleged plaintiff needed no such organization and could use none, and defendants' refusal to perform the contract could not have damaged plaintiff in such particulars.

2. Damages 🔑124(3)

Where without fault on his part one party to a contract who is willing to perform it is prevented from doing so by the other party, the primary measure of damages is the amount of his loss which may consist of his reasonable outlay or expenditure toward performance and the anticipated profits which he would have derived from performance. Civ.Code, §§ 1512, 3300.

3. Master and servant 🔑41(2)

In action for breach of contract to distribute newspapers at the rate of $5 per thousand copies which defendant refused to permit plaintiff to complete, where court awarded plaintiff profits which would have been derived from the distribution of the papers for the remainder of the term that was all plaintiff was entitled to, and allowance of damages for loss of plaintiff's trained organization, supervisors, good will, and general damages to plaintiff's business was error. Civ.Code, §§ 1512, 3300.

4. Master and servant 🔑41(2)

In action for breach of contract to distribute newspapers, allegation that in reliance upon contract plaintiff enlarged his organization without stating amount expended and allegation that after canceling the contract defendants employed plaintiff's men, did not entitle plaintiff to damages, since, while it is actionable for a third person having knowledge that an employee is working under contract to induce such employee to break his contract, such conduct is a "tort" and not a "breach of contract".

* Subsequent opinion 132 P.2d 4.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Breach of Contract" and "Tort".

5. Principal and agent ⚷136(1)

In action for breaches of contracts to manage the publication of a newspaper and to distribute it where one of the defendants had acted merely as the agent of another defendant, and such fact was known to the plaintiff, such agent was not personally liable on either of contracts. Civ.Code, § 2343.

6. Principal and agent ⚷190(3)

In action for breaches of employment contracts made by agent of defendant where plaintiff testified that principal said that all matters involved should be taken up with agent, and that anything agent did would be all right, and that thereafter plaintiff made contract with agent, evidence supported finding that contracts were made by principal through such agent.

7. Appeal and error ⚷1151(2)

Where plaintiff suing for breaches of employment contracts was improperly allowed damages for an act which if committed would be tortious, modification of judgment of trial court excluding amount allowed for such tort would not prevent plaintiff from recovering for alleged tort in a proper action therefor.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Seymour Buxbom against E. F. Smith and another for breaches of contracts of employment. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed in part, and modified and affirmed in part.

W. T. Stockman and John L. Flynn, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Franz R. Sachse, Jesse E. Jacobson, and John C. Packard, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

In bringing this action plaintiff labeled his complaint as one for "breach of contract of employment." The defendants, appealing from a judgment against them, complain that the trial court awarded plaintiff damages that could be allowed, if at all, only in some action sounding in tort. The complaint alleges two contracts and the breach of both of them as the basis for the action. One was a contract by which defendants employed plaintiff for a term of six months to handle the publication of a "newspaper," so-called, which was to carry free of charge all advertising of a chain of markets owned and operated by defendant Smith and to carry advertising of other markets at reasonable rates, plaintiff to receive 25 per cent of the gross advertising receipts for his services. By the other contract alleged, defendants employed plaintiff, for six months, to distribute the newspaper above mentioned at the rate of five dollars per thousand copies. The defendants canceled both the above mentioned contracts soon after they were made, and refused to perform them further, both cancellations being without plaintiff's consent. It is also alleged that at the time of making the contracts plaintiff was the owner of a distributing business and was engaged in distributing handbills, newspapers and advertising matter in the region where this newspaper was to be circulated, and that after the contracts were made plaintiff enlarged his distributing crews, employed additional supervisors and prepared to handle 40,000 copies of said newspaper. The complaint also alleges "that by reason of the said breaches of contract by defendants and proximately caused thereby, plaintiff has suffered damages as follows," setting forth seven items, two of which are substantially the same, except in amount, as the two damage items hereinafter quoted from the findings.

After trial the court made findings in plaintiff's favor which substantially followed the language of the complaint above outlined, except as to damages. The court denied plaintiff any commissions for sale of advertising, gave him two other small items of damage for breach of the publication contract, and found: "That as a result of defendants' violation of the terms of said contracts, the plaintiff has suffered damage as follows: In the sum of $1121.40 representing the profit which would have been derived by plaintiff from the distribution of said paper for the remainder of the term of said distribution contract. * * * In the further sum of $4,000 for the loss of plaintiff's trained organization, supervisors, good will and for general damages to plaintiff's business."

The defendants object to the damage item of $4,000 thus awarded as not a proper element of damage at all under the complaint or for breach of such contracts as plaintiff has alleged, and further as not shown in this case to have resulted from the breach. We think these contentions must be sustained.

[1] There can be no doubt, from the allegations of the complaint as well as the title given it by plaintiff, that the action is solely one for two breaches of contract, and the damages sought are claimed to have resulted from those breaches of contract alone. It is equally clear from the findings that the damages awarded are given only by reason of those breaches of contract. Obviously the item for loss of plaintiff's distributing organization, etc., can have no relation to the breach of the contract for managing the publication of the newspaper. For the purpose of performing that contract plaintiff needed no such organization and could use none, and defendants' refusal to perform that contract could not have affected it.

[2, 3] It is also plain to us that this item is not a proper element of damages for breach of the distribution contract. That contract was for the distribution of papers at a definite price, and by defendants' acts plaintiff was prevented from performing it after a short period of time. He was fully paid for the performance rendered, so that the question here affects only his damages for the performance prevented. In such a case the rule, as stated in 25 C.J.S., Damages, § 78, p. 575, is: "Where, without fault on his part, one party to a contract who is willing to perform it is prevented from doing so by the other party, the primary measure of damages is the amount of his loss, which may consist of his reasonable outlay or expenditure toward performance, and the anticipated profits which he would have derived from performance." In conformity to this rule, see sections 1512 and 3300 of the Civil Code; also Connell v. Higgins, 1915, 170 Cal. 541, 549, 150 P. 769; Cederberg v. Robison, 1893, 100 Cal. 93, 98, 34 P. 625; Caspary v. Moore, 1937, 21 Cal.App. 2d 694, 699, 70 P.2d 224; Spitzer v. Pathe Exchange, Inc., 1933, 132 Cal.App. 612, 620, 23 P.2d 308; Blair v. Brownstone Oil & Refining Co., 1917, 35 Cal.App. 394, 170 P. 160. In the case of Overstreet v. Merritt, 1921, 186 Cal. 494, 200 P. 11, on which plaintiff strongly relies to support the judgment, the plaintiff, who had given up an established business in order to engage in a new business with defendant, which defendant then refused to establish, was allowed to recover his loss from the giving up of his old business. This is merely an application of the first part of the measure of damages stated in the rule above quoted, that is, the "reasonable outlay or expenditure toward performance." In the case at bar there is no showing under this part of the rule, either in the pleadings, the findings or the evidence. It is alleged and found that the plaintiff, in anticipation of performing the contract, enlarged his distributing organization, and there is some evidence to the same effect, but it nowhere appears that he expended any money in so doing, or that he devoted any particular amount of time thereto, or that his time, if so spent, was of any particular value. Moreover, the finding does not purport to award anything for such an item. The plaintiff is fully compensated for the second element of damages stated in the rule by the award of the profits which, the court found, he would have made if allowed to complete the distribution contract. As far as this contract is concerned there is no room for further items of damage. If the plaintiff has suffered a damage by the loss of his organization it has not resulted from the breach of this contract, but from some other cause.

[4] The complaint alleges that, after canceling the distributing contract, the defendants "employed plaintiff's distributing crews, and supervisors in said area," and the findings repeat this statement and add that "defendants took over and appropriated the plaintiff's distributing organization." Plaintiff insists that this conduct was a breach of the contract, but he points to no provision of it which is so breached. The contract, as pleaded and found, says nothing of a distributing organization; it does not require plaintiff to provide such an organization, or to render any personal services at all, but would permit him to subcontract the entire work to others, if he so desired. The evidence on this point goes no further than the pleading. If the findings above quoted tend toward any cause of action in plaintiff against defendants it is not one for breach of either of the contracts sued on, but one for some independent tort. No such cause of action is completely stated, however, in either complaint or findings. Thus, "it is actionable for a third person, having knowledge that an employé is working under contract, to induce such employé to break his contract." (Patterson Glass Co. v. Thomas, 1919, 41 Cal.App. 559, 566, 183 P. 190, 193); to same effect, see 39 Cor.Jur. 1370; and many cases cited in note in 84 A.L.R. 77. On inducing breach of contract, generally, see Imperial Ice Co. v. Rossier, 1941, 18 Cal.2d 33, 112 P.2d 631. Such conduct is a tort, not a breach of contract. (39 Cor.Jur. 1373; Bloom v. Bohemians, Inc., 1921, 223 Ill. App. 269; Huff v. Watkins, 1883, 20 S.C. 477, 480.) But knowledge by the defendant of the contract of employment, breach of which is induced by him, is essential to a cause of action of this kind. (39 Cor.Jur. 1372.) The complaint and findings do not show such knowledge here. Except in rather general fashion they do not even show that there were any such contracts, and the evidence leaves the matter even more doubtful.

[5] The defendant Wright further contends that he is not liable at all in this action. It appears without conflict that he acted in all the matters involved herein as the agent of defendant Smith and that this fact was at all times known to plaintiff. Wright was therefore not personally liable on either of the contracts and the judgment against him is erroneous, unless one of the conditions to the personal liability of an agent specified in section 2343 of the Civil Code is met. In his brief plaintiff concedes this proposition and admits, as he must under the evidence, that the first two subdivisions of that section are not applicable, but contends that Wright is liable for the $4,000 award under subdivision 3, which makes an agent liable "when his acts are wrongful in their nature." Since we have already held that this item of damage cannot be recovered from any defendant under the complaint and findings this argument must fail.

[6] It is argued by defendant Smith that the evidence does not support the findings and judgment against him, particularly in that there is no evidence of Wright's authority to act for him in making the contracts sued on. But the plaintiff testified that before these contracts were made, and at a time when he was negotiating with Wright on the subject, he saw Smith and told him he had been talking to Wright about distributing circulars, and discussed the newspaper, "and he seemed rather busy; and he said, 'No, you take all those matters up with Mr. Wright; he handles all that; and anything you do with him is all right for the company.'" Plaintiff made no further effort to deal with Smith directly but made his arrangements with Wright. This was sufficient to show at least an ostensible authority in Wright to make, in behalf of Smith, the contracts in question. The evidence conflicts on the question whether any such contracts were made at all, but that of plaintiff and another witness called by him is sufficient to support the findings that they were made.

[7] No complaint is made of any items of damage other than the $4,000; and the judgment here, if modified to exclude it, will not be conclusive on plaintiff's right to recover it in a proper action. Hence there seems no reason to order a new trial as to defendant Smith. We cannot, however, order judgment for Wright on the findings because they assert that he personally entered into the contracts sued on.

The judgment against the defendant Wright is reversed. The judgment against the defendant Smith is modified by reducing the amount stated in paragraph 1 thereof from $5,156.40 to $1,156.40, and as so modified it is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

FERNELIUS et al. v. PIERCE et al.*

Civ. 11805.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 26, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 22, 1942.

1. Officers ⚷118

The doctrine of "respondeat superior" is not applicable to public officers, and a superior officer is ordinarily not responsible to third parties for the acts of his subordinates unless he directed acts to be done or personally co-operated therein.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Respondeat Superior".

---

* Subsequent opinion 138 P.2d 12.

2. Appeal and error 🔑917(1)

For the purposes of an appeal from a judgment entered after a demurrer to the complaint was sustained, all allegations of the complaint are assumed to be true.

3. Officers 🔑118

A public officer is not responsible for the tortious acts of a subordinate who is not in his private service but is himself a servant of the same governmental agency unless such officer has directed or co-operated in the acts done or unless, having unlimited power of appointment and removal, the officer has failed to use ordinary care in the selection or in the retention of the subordinate.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑170

Oakland city manager with power, subject to the civil service provisions of the charter, to appoint, discipline, and remove subordinate officers responsible to him, did not have an "unlimited power" of appointment and removal over police officers, and hence was not liable for death of prisoner at hands of police officers, for failure to use ordinary care in the selection or retention of such officers. St.1931, pp. 2653, 2655, art. 7, § 27, subds. 2, 5; p. 2665, art. 13, §§ 81, 82.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Unlimited Power".

5. Municipal corporations 🔑182

Under Oakland charter giving chief officials power to suspend subordinates temporarily for incompetency or dereliction of duty, and establishing removal procedure subject to appeal to civil service board, chief of police does not have an "unlimited power" of appointment or removal over police officers, and hence is not liable for death of prisoner at hands of police officers for failure to use ordinary care in the selection or retention of such officers. St.1931, p. 2665, art. 13, §§ 81, 82.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑170

The Oakland city manager was not liable for the unlawful acts and omissions of police officers selected pursuant to the provisions of the charter unless he directed such acts or personally cooperated therein. St. 1931, pp. 2653, 2655, art. 7, § 27, subds. 2, 5; p. 2665, art. 13, §§ 81, 82.

7. Officers 🔑118

A superior officer is not liable for the torts of subordinates or deputies where the latter are themselves statutory officers and not under the superior's unrestricted control or right of hiring and discharging.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑173(5), 182

In action for wrongful death of prisoner at hands of police officers where complaint failed to state cause of action against either city manager or chief of police, it also failed to state a cause of action upon a bond given as surety that such officers would perform the duties imposed upon them by law.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑173(1), 182

Under the Oakland charter, a police officer or patrolman is not a "deputy city manager" or "deputy chief of police" or a "clerk" but is a "special officer" responsible as such to the municipal corporation, precluding a recovery by one injured by such officer or patrolman upon the official bond executed by the city manager and chief of police covering breaches committed by their deputies or clerks. St.1931, pp. 2653, 2655, art. 7, § 27; Pol.Code, § 959; St.1911, p. 1606, art. 14, § 87.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Clerk", "Deputy Chief of Police", "Deputy City Manager", and "Special Officer".

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Lola Mae Fernelius and others against August Pierce and others for the wrongful death of Fred Fernelius. From a judgment for defendants, Bodie A. Wallman, Hassler, and Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Heber James Brown, of Oakland, and Johnson & Harmon and Wm. H. Henderson, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

F. Bert Fernhoff, City Atty., John W. Collier, Asst. City Atty., and Hagar, Crosby & Crosby, all of Oakland, and Thomas E. Davis, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs are the widow and minor children of Fred Fernelius, deceased. They brought this action seeking damages for the death of said deceased, alleging that said death resulted from an unlawful assault upon said deceased by two police officers while said deceased was confined in the city jail of the City of Oakland. The defendants Pierce and Hancock were the two police officers who were alleged to have made said unlawful assault. The defendants Hassler and Wallman were respectively the city manager and the chief of police of said City of Oakland. The defendant Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland was sued as the surety on the official bond of defendants Hassler and Wallman. Separate demurrers were interposed by the several defendants. The demurrers of defendants Pierce and Hancock were overruled. The demurrers of defendants Hassler, Wallman and Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland were sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment thereafter entered against plaintiffs and in favor of the last mentioned defendants.

The main question raised on this appeal is that presented by plaintiffs' contention that the complaint stated a cause of action against defendants Hassler and Wallman and that the trial court therefore erred in sustaining the demurrers of said defendants without leave to amend. Said defendants seek to defend the ruling of the trial court on their demurrers solely upon the ground that no cause of action was stated against them.

[1, 2] All parties are agreed that the doctrine commonly known as respondeat superior is not applicable to public officers and that a superior officer is not ordinarily responsible to third parties for the acts of his subordinates unless he had directed said acts to be done or has personally cooperated therein. Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113; Hilton v. Oliver, 204 Cal. 535, 269 P. 425, 61 A.L.R. 297; Whiteman v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., 60 Cal.App. 234, 212 P. 706; Baisley v. Henry, 55 Cal.App 760, 204 P. 399; 21 Cal.Jur. 405. Plaintiffs argue, however, that a superior officer is responsible to third parties for his own negligence consisting of either the negligent appointment or the negligent retention of incompetent subordinates. The complaint of plaintiffs against defendants Hassler and Wallman was drawn solely upon the theory of the negligent retention of incompetent subordinates, and for the purpose of this appeal we must assume that all allegations thereof are true.

It is unnecessary to set forth in detail all of the allegations of the complaint as said defendants do not question the sufficiency of the specific allegations to support plaintiffs' theory. Said defendants question only the soundness of the theory itself.

The complaint alleged the unlawful assault upon the deceased by said police officers resulting in skull fractures and concussion of the brain leading to the death of the deceased. It further alleged the existence of the power in defendants Hassler and Wallman to appoint and remove said police officers. It further alleged: "That defendants August Pierce and Glen Hancock were unfit and incompetent to perform their duties as police officers of the City of Oakland, as follows, to wit: that said August Pierce and Glen Hancock were vicious, high tempered, and addicted to the use of unnecessary force and violence and likely to unlawfully assault, beat, wound, ill-treat and use unnecessary force and violence against any person in their charge as police officers of the said City of Oakland. That defendants Bodie Wallman and John F. Hassler prior to May 4, 1940, knew, or should have known in the exercise of due care, of the aforesaid incompetence and unfitness of defendant August Pierce and defendant Glen Hancock to perform their duties as police officers of the City of Oakland; (Here follow allegation of numerous previous alleged unlawful assaults by the defendant police officers and allegations on information and belief of reports made to defendants Hassler and Wallman concerning said unlawful assaults) * * * That in spite of the fact that said defendants Bodie Wallman and John F. Hassler knew or should have known prior to May 4, 1940, that the defendants August Pierce and Glen Hancock were unfit and incompetent as aforesaid, they wholly failed and neglected to suspend, discipline or discharge said August Pierce and Glen Hancock, they having the power and the duty so to do as set out in paragraphs V and VI hereof, and thereby failed and neglected to well, truly, honestly and faithfully perform the duties of their respective offices."

Though there is much argument in the briefs for a distinction in the rule of liability between the negligent appointment and the negligent retention of an incompetent subordinate, the real point at issue is the status of the subordinate as it relates to the supervision and control of the superior. The principle upon which liability rests in cases of this character is stated in Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Los Angeles County, 11 Cal.2d 675, 679, 81

P.2d 919, 921: "It may be conceded that in the absence of statute the modern view is opposed to making public officers civilly liable for torts of deputies, where the latter are themselves statutory officers and not under the superior's unrestricted control or right of hiring and discharging. See Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113 (municipal police officer); Van Vorce v. Thomas, 18 Cal.App.2d 723, 64 P.2d 772 (deputy marshal of municipal court); Pavish v. Meyers, 129 Wash. 605, 225 P. 633, 34 A.L.R. 561 (police officer); note, 43 Harv.L.Rev. 327. The other view is usually grounded upon the identity of the officer and his deputy or the unrestricted right of control. See Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 256, 71 P. 165, 75 P. 842, 100 Am.St. Rep. 123; Duluth v. Ross, 140 Minn. 161, 167 N.W. 485; New York v. Fox, 232 N.Y. 167, 133 N.E. 434. In the instant case the clerk's deputies are independent statutory officers within the rule of such cases as Michel v. Smith, supra, and Van Vorce v. Thomas, supra." Emphasis ours.

The determining point here is the question of "unrestricted control." The statements found in 43 Cor.Jur. p. 717 and 21 Cal.Jur. p. 405 are but partial statements of the rule. To say that a public officer is not responsible unless he has directed or cooperated in the tortious acts of the subordinate, or unless he has failed to use ordinary care in the appointment does not conform to the modern decisions. Conceding that a public officer might be liable if he knowingly and willingly retained in the service one who is incompetent to perform his duties, such liability does not rest solely upon the statement that he has not discharged the subordinate from his public employment. The leading case on the subject is Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113. That was an action against the chief of police, a sergeant, and two subordinate police officers for an unlawful arrest and imprisonment. There the court noted the distinction between the status of a sheriff and his deputy, and a chief of police and subordinates who were also public servants whose appointment and removal were governed by civil service restrictions. After consideration of the old rule relating to a sheriff and his deputy the court said (188 Cal. at page 202, 205 P. at page 114): "A different rule prevails in the case of the chief of a municipal police department. He may even be charged with the duty of selecting the members of the force, but he is not responsible for their acts, unless he has directed such acts to be done, or has personally co-operated in the offense, for each policeman is, like himself, a public servant. Casey v. Scott, 82 Ark. 362, 101 S.W. 1152, 118 Am.St. Rep. 80, 12 Ann.Cas. 184." The court then clearly stated that, because of the civil service provisions of the charter, the chief of police "may not be held liable in damages for the unlawful acts and omissions of the subordinates of the department, selected pursuant to the provisions of the charter, unless it can be shown that he has directed such acts or personally co-operated therein."

This ruling was followed in Lorah v. Biscailuz, 12 Cal.App.2d 100, 54 P.2d 1125, where the court denied the liability of the sheriff for a tortious act of his deputy who was appointed and made subject to removal under civil service provisions of the Los Angeles County charter. Michel v. Smith, supra, was followed in Bower v. Davis, 13 Cal.App.2d 678, 57 P.2d 574, which was a suit against the chief of police for an alleged assault and conversion by a turnkey in the city police station. It was followed in Van Vorce v. Thomas, 18 Cal.App.2d 723, 64 P.2d 772, which was a suit against the marshal for an alleged assault by a deputy. In rejecting the early rule that the sheriff and his deputy are one, and that the superior is always liable for the acts of his subordinate, the court emphasized the change in "principle" brought about by the civil service restrictions upon the power of selection and removal. We quote (18 Cal.App.2d at page 725, 64 P.2d at page 773): "Eventually, however, the gradual changes continue until there appears an office in which the chief is only one of many holding salaried positions created by law, and his right to employ and terminate employment is no longer unrestricted. Under such circumstances, to make the head of the office respond in damages for the negligent discharge of duties, which he has no choice but to delegate to others, becomes 'manifestly unjust.' So Michel v. Smith, 1922, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113, and again Bower v. Davis, 1936, 13 Cal.App.2d 678, 57 P. 2d 574, find in the changed situation, particularly the restrictions placed upon the right to employ and sever the employment of assistants, a reason for differentiating the liability of the Los Angeles chief of police from that of the sheriff. So, also Lorah v. Biscailuz, 1936, 12 Cal.App.2d 100, 54 P.2d 1125, declines to follow the formula of 'personal representative' in the case of the Los Angeles county sheriff, whose deputies are to be appointed and discharged under the regulations of civil service."

The Michel case was followed with approval in Hilton v. Oliver, 204 Cal. 535, 539, 269 P. 425, 426, 61 A.L.R. 297, where the court said: "The rule laid down or approved by the decisions in this state is that an agent is not in general liable to third persons for the misfeasance or malfeasance of a subagent employed by him in the service of his principal, unless he is guilty of negligence in the appointment of such subagent, or directs or authorizes the particular wrongful act of the subagent, or improperly co-operates in the latter's acts or omissions. Dobbins v. City of Arcadia, 44 Cal.App. 181, 186 P. 190; Baisley v. Henry, 55 Cal.App. 760, 204 P. 399. The defendant trustees can be held liable under the facts shown herein only by reason of the application of the doctrine of respondeat superior. This doctrine has no application as between a public officer and his subordinates, who are likewise in the public service, unless the public officer has directed or countenanced the tortious acts to be done, or has co-operated therein. Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113; Whiteman v. [Anderson-Cottonwood] Irrigation District, 60 Cal.App. 234, 212 P. 706."

Reed v. Molony, 38 Cal.App.2d 405, 410, 101 P.2d 175, an action against the State Board of Medical Examiners for a tort of a special police officer employed by the board, followed the same rule, and in O'Brien v. Olson, 42 Cal.App.2d 449, 463, 109 P.2d 8, the court, after approving the rule of Michel v. Smith, supra, quoted with approval the language in Hilton v. Oliver, supra, which we have quoted above relating to the doctrine of respondeat superior.

[3] The true analysis of all these decisions is that, though none states the rule with all its exceptions, they concur in the approval of the principle that a public officer is not responsible for the tortious act of a subordinate who is not in his private service, but is himself a servant of the same governmental agency, unless such officer has directed or cooperated in the acts done, or unless, having unlimited power of appointment and removal, the officer has failed to use ordinary care in the selection or in the retention of the subordinate. The reason for these limitations upon the liability of a public officer is that, since the liability must be founded upon his negligence, it is unfair and unjust to hold one responsible for the negligence of another which he had no power, in the exercise of all reasonable ordinary care, to prevent.

[4, 5] The application of these principles to the city manager and chief of police seems clear. The Oakland charter provides: "The City Manager * * * subject to the civil service provisions of this Charter * * * shall have the power to appoint, discipline and remove * * * all subordinate officers and employees of the City responsible to him." Article VII, section 27, subdivision 2, Stats.1931, p. 2653. "The City Manager, among other limitations, shall have no power under this Charter * * * f. To dismiss, suspend or discharge any officer or employee in the classified civil service, except in accordance with the civil service provisions of this Charter." Article VII, section 27, subdivision 5, Stats.1931, p. 2655. The chief of police does not possess the same authority. He is appointed by the manager, subject to the civil service provisions of the charter but like all other "chief officials," has the power to suspend any subordinate temporarily for incompetency or dereliction of duty. Section 81 of the charter (Stats.1931, p. 2665) provides for the suspension, fine, and removal of all persons in the classified civil service on order of the city manager, or on his approval of the suspension made by a "chief official," but in all such cases the person affected may appeal to the civil service board which "shall fully hear and determine the matter." The finding and decision of the civil service board shall "forthwith be enforced and followed" by the board or official from which the proceedings were initiated. Section 82, Stats.1931, p. 2665.

[6, 7] We can find no essential difference between these provisions of the Oakland charter, and those of the Los Angeles charter which were before the court in Michel v. Smith, supra. And there is no essential difference in the status of the city manager here and that of the chief of police involved in that case. For these reasons we are satisfied that the questions here involved are determined by the conclusion reached in the Michel case, where the court said (188 Cal. at page 203, 205 P. at page 115): "Aside from the limitations thus placed upon the chief in the selection of his subordinates, his control over the members of the force after appointment is also subject to the limitation that while he may remove members of the force for cause, such removal is subject to review by the police commission. These provisions of the charter plainly determine the status of the chief in the police department. He is a member of the department and a public servant like every other member, but by reason of his position is charged with the supervision and control of the police force of the city. Charter, § 53. In this capacity he may not be held liable in damages for the unlawful acts and omissions of the subordinates of the department, selected pursuant to the provisions of the charter, unless it can be shown that he has directed such acts or personally co-operated therein." We have found no authority in the state taking an opposite view, and no authority disputing the brief statement in Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Los Angeles County, supra, that the superior officer is not liable for the torts of subordinates or deputies "where the latter are themselves statutory officers and not under the superior's unrestricted control or right of hiring and discharging."

[8] From our conclusion that the complaint does not state a cause of action against either the city manager or the chief of police it would follow that no cause is stated against the bonding company since the bond was given as surety that these officers would perform the duties imposed upon them by law. The complaint pleads that the bond was given to the City of Oakland to cover a specified number of officers and employees of the city named in a schedule attached, and that in said schedule appear the names of Hassler and Wallman. (The names of Pierce and Hancock do not appear upon this schedule.) The bond attached as an exhibit to the complaint recites that it shall cover losses occasioned by "any officer and/or employee listed in the schedule." Since defendants Pierce and Hancock were not listed in this schedule the appellant seeks to hold the bonding company under the theory that they were acting as deputies of Hassler and Wallman. They rely upon section 959 of the Political Code and Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Los Angeles County, supra.

[9] The code section declares that the official bond executed by any public officer shall apply to breaches committed by "his deputy, or clerk." In the case cited the supreme court held the surety company liable under this section for a default by a deputy of the county clerk. But, under the Oakland charter, there is no such relation of principal and agent, or deputy, between the city manager, the chief of police, and subordinate police officers. Section 87 of the Charter (Stats.1911, Part Two, p. 1606) provides:

"The police department shall consist of a chief of police, captain of inspectors who shall act as chief of police in the absence of the chief of police, and such captains of police, lieutenants, inspectors, assistant inspectors, sergeants, corporals and bailiffs as in the judgment of the council the needs of the service may require * * *.

"Patrolmen shall be appointed in such numbers as not to exceed one patrolman for every eight hundred inhabitants of the city."

Certainly a police officer, or a patrolman, is not a deputy city manager, or a deputy chief of police, or a clerk of either. He is a special officer of the municipality responsible as such to the municipal corporation and subject only to such supervision and control as the charter may provide.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

SELLERY et al. v. WARD et al.*

Civ. 12878.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 25, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 21, 1942.

1. Judgment ⟹16

A judgment rendered by a court without jurisdiction of the subject matter is void.

2. Appeal and error ⟹185(1)

Where superior court had been without jurisdiction of the cause, the judgment was reversed even though the question of jurisdiction had not been raised by the parties.

3. Courts ⟹24, 37(1)

Jurisdiction of the subject matter cannot be conferred by consent, agreement or waiver of the parties.

4. Courts ⟹472(6)

Under constitutional provision that superior court should have original jurisdiction in all cases except cases in which jurisdiction should be given by law to municipal courts, a case within jurisdiction of a municipal court is excluded from that of superior court, and there is no concurrent jurisdiction in the same county. Const. art. 6, § 5; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 82, 89.

5. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹75

A dismissal of some of causes of action without prejudice is substantially the same in its effect as an amendment eliminating the dismissed causes of action from the complaint.

6. Courts ⟹39

Where some of the causes of action are eliminated from complaint by an amendment, the jurisdiction of court is to be determined by consideration only of the part of complaint remaining, and the same rule applies where some causes of action are dismissed without prejudice.

7. Landlord and tenant ⟹217(1)

Where complaint alleged that plaintiffs' lots were leased by defendants who thereafter failed to pay reasonable rental value of the lots, plaintiffs' action to recover reasonable rental value was not one in equity, but was a case at law.

8. Landlord and tenant ⟹217(2)

Where plaintiffs alleged that they had leased lots to defendants, and that defendants had failed to pay reasonable rental value thereof, plaintiffs' action to recover reasonable rental value was an action on an implied contract, and would at common law have been deemed an action in assumpsit.

9. Courts ⟹472(6)

Under constitutional provision giving superior courts jurisdiction except where jurisdiction had been given by law to municipal courts and under statute giving municipal courts jurisdiction of cases at law involving less than $2,000, action to recover reasonable rental value in the amount of $800 of lots leased to the defendants was within jurisdiction of municipal court in Los Angeles County, and superior court of that county was without jurisdiction. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 82, 89; Const. art. 6, § 5.

10. Courts ⟹486

Where Supreme Court was without jurisdiction of action at law to recover reasonable rental value of leased premises, court should have proceeded under Code of Civil Procedure to transfer case to a proper court. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 82, 89, 396.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Desmond, Judge.

Action by Albert C. Sellery and another against J. E. Ward and another to recover the reasonable rental value of property owned by the plaintiffs and leased by the defendants. Judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Newton M. Todd and Fred A. Watkins, both of Long Beach, for appellants.

James E. Pawson, of Long Beach, for respondents.

SHAW, Justice, pro tem.

[1-3] The defendants Ward have appealed from a judgment against them in favor of plaintiffs for $1,016.60. On examination of the complaint on which this judgment was rendered we conclude that the case stated by it is not within the jurisdiction of the superior court, and the judgment must be reversed for that reason. This point is not made by the appellants, but it is plainly apparent to us; and since a judgment rendered by a court without jurisdiction of the subject matter is void (Cook v. Winklepleck, 1936, 16 Cal.App.2d Supp. 759, 768, 59 P.2d 463), we should reverse it even though the point is not raised by the parties. Jurisdiction of the subject matter cannot be conferred by consent, agreement or waiver of the parties. Cook v. Winklepleck, supra, 16 Cal.App.2d Supp. at page 769, 59 P.2d 463; Norton v. Baranov, 1935, 4 Cal.2d 443, 50 P.2d 67.

---

* Subsequent opinion 131 P.2d 550.

[4] By section 5, Article VI of the Constitution, as amended in 1928 and still in force, the superior courts have "original jurisdiction in all civil cases * * * (except * * * cases and proceedings in which jurisdiction is or shall be given by law to municipal * * * courts) * * *." Section 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure confers upon municipal courts jurisdiction "In all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to two thousand dollars ($2,000) or less, except cases which involve the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine." Under the constitutional provision above quoted, there can be no concurrent jurisdiction of superior and municipal courts (at least, in the same county; see section 82 of the Code of Civil Procedure); a case within the jurisdiction of a municipal court is excluded from that of the superior court. Hopkins v. Anderson, 1933, 218 Cal. 62, 66, 68, 21 P.2d 560; Norton v. Baranov, 1935, supra.

[5, 6] The complaint filed by plaintiff, as amended before the trial, contained six purported causes of action, of which two, the third and fourth, may be conceded to be within the jurisdiction of the superior court. The findings and the judgment, respectively, recite receipt of evidence on the first cause of action and that all the causes of action except the first were dismissed without prejudice. Such a dismissal is substantially the same in its effect as an amendment eliminating the dismissed causes of action from the complaint. It is settled that after such an amendment the jurisdiction of the court is to be determined by consideration only of the part of the complaint remaining. Jacobson v. Superior Court, 1936, 5 Cal.2d 170, 174, 53 P.2d 756. The same rule applies here. The action stood, after the dismissal, as if only the first cause of action had ever been stated in the complaint. If that cause of action was not within the jurisdiction of the court, no judgment could be given upon it.

The first cause of action, as amended, after alleging that the plaintiffs are husband and wife, that the defendants Ward stand in the same relation and that plaintiffs own six described lots of land in Long Beach, and stating the reasonable rental value of said lots, proceeds thus: "V. That on or about May 15th, 1937, said lots were leased and used from month to month thereafter and are still being used at the express instance and request of the defendants, and each of them, and for the use and benefit of the defendants, and each of them.

"VI. That the defendants, J. E. Ward and Cora B. Ward, have failed to pay said reasonable rental value per month and still continue to fail to pay the plaintiffs the reasonable rental value of said lots, as aforesaid.

"VII. That there is now unpaid as the reasonable rental value of said lots the sum of $800.00."

[7-10] Here is stated no case for relief like or analogous to that granted in courts of equity. The sole relief that could be granted on these allegations is damages. The answer consisted only of denials, and so could not affect the decision of the question of jurisdiction. The case is, therefore, not one in equity but is a case at law. 1 C.J.S., Actions, § 54, pp. 1153-1156; Traffic Truck Sales Co. v. Justice's Court, 1923, 192 Cal. 377, 383, 220 P. 306; Sturgeon v. Security First Nat. Bank, 1934, 139 Cal.App. 197, 199, 33 P.2d 874; Massachusetts, etc., Ins. Co. v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys., 1919, 39 Cal.App. 388, 178 P. 974. It is an action on an implied contract and would, at common law, have been deemed an action in assumpsit. 7 C.J.S., Assumpsit, Action of, § 1, p. 109; 3 Cal.Jur. 373. Since there are two municipal courts in Los Angeles County, where this action was filed, and the amount sued for is less than two thousand dollars, the superior court of that county had no jurisdiction of it upon the cause of action remaining after the dismissal, and should have proceeded under section 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure to transfer it to a proper court.

The judgment is reversed and the superior court is directed to proceed as directed by law to transfer the action to a proper court having jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 802

KUHLEMEIER et al. v. LACK.

Civ. 12849.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 27, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 8, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨184(2)

Where ten-year lease of large apartment house and furnishings required $25,000 deposit to guarantee performance by tenant without provision for forfeiture in event of any breach of lease by tenant, and applied deposit to rent principally at end of term and gave tenant power to terminate lease on 30 days' notice in which event he should "forfeit" any interest he might have in deposit, there was no attempt to determine "liquidated damages" in event of a breach since the so-called forfeiture provision would become operative only upon voluntary exercise of option by tenant which would not be a "breach" of the lease, and such provision was valid. Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Breach", "Forfeit", and "Liquidated Damages".

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨37

In construing any part of lease, entire document must be considered.

3. Contracts ⇨1

It is court's duty to sustain contracts when deliberately entered into between parties who have equality of opportunity for understanding and insisting upon their rights, and when such contracts are not clearly in violation of law or against "public policy".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

4. Damages ⇨78(6)

That word "forfeit" is used in lease is not determinative of parties' interests since in law it means to lose and surrender to an individual or the state something that belongs to one for misconduct or breach of duty and implies that there must be some person, natural or artificial, who is entitled to receive the benefit of the forfeiture when it accrues and a breach of duty on the part of the one losing his interest in the property.

5. Damages ⇨78(6)

There is no legal principle which makes void a provision in a lease that in consideration of landlord's granting to tenant right to terminate lease, tenant agrees to pay stipulated sum in event that he elects to exercise the option, and fact that tenant agreed to relinquish or "forfeit" a right to a sum of money instead of to pay a sum of money did not alter the situation as in either event payment of money or relinquishment of right to demand return of money constitutes the "consideration" for option to terminate lease.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Consideration".

6. Landlord and tenant ⇨184(2)

In action for return of deposit made by plaintiffs' predecessor as tenant to guarantee performance of lease providing for termination of lease upon 30 days' notice in which event lessee should forfeit any interest he might have in deposit, evidence showed that lease was terminated upon notice given by plaintiffs and not by mutual agreement.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Elsie Kuhlemeier and others against F. S. Lack for remainder of deposit made by plaintiffs' predecessor as lessee to guarantee the faithful performance of lease. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Hearing denied; CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

John L. Schaefer and Stephen Monteleone, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Conroy & Conroy, Edward L. Conroy, Chambers & Lyman, and Robert G. Chambers, all of Hollywood, for respondents.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

Appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the return of a deposit made by plaintiffs' predecessor, as lessee, "to guarantee the full and faithful performance of each and every term and condition herein contained incumbent upon the lessee." Lessee died shortly after taking possession under the lease and plaintiffs succeeded to his interest. Defendant is the lessor in this lease.

The property covered by the ten-year lease consists of a large apartment house with its furnishings, the minimum rental varying from $2,000 to $3,000 per month, with provision in the lease for division between lessor and lessee of the excess revenue above certain minimums. By paragraph 26 of the lease it is provided that the deposit of $25,000 made by lessee is applied upon the payment of rental in the following manner:

(a) from Nov. 15, 1936, to Nov. 15, 1937, at the rate of $400.00	$ 4,800.00
(b) from Nov. 15, 1937, to Dec. 14, 1937, at the rate of $200 per month	200.00
(c) from Dec. 15, 1944, to August 14, 1946, (the date of the termination of the lease) at the rate of $1,000 per month	20,000.00
	$25,000.00

$5,000 of the deposit was theretofore applied to the months indicated in items (a) and (b) above. No question as to the application of such sum is involved on this appeal.

The controversy before this court involves the effect of section 10 of the lease, which reads as follows:

"10. Lessee may at any time during the term of this lease, at his election, terminate this lease by giving thirty (30) days' notice in writing to Lessor of his intention to so terminate, and such termination shall be effective upon payment by Lessee of all rental due up to the effective date of said termination. Upon the expiration of said thirty-day period, Lessee shall deliver possession of said premises to the Lessor and shall thereupon be relieved of all further duties, liabilities and obligations under said lease. Upon such termination as aforesaid, Lessee shall forfeit any right, title or interest he may have in and to the deposit of $25,000 paid as aforesaid."

Some time after respondents had succeeded to the lessee's interest they gave notice to appellant of the termination of the lease, in the following language:

"Notice of Intention to Terminate Lease.

"To F. S. Lack, Los Angeles, California:

"You are hereby notified that the undersigned Lessees of that certain lease dated August 14, 1936, between F. S. Lack, as lessor, and W. H. Kuhlemeier, as lessee, and which lease by proper conveyances is now the property of the undersigned as lessees, and which lease covers the Hotel Apartment House located at No. 945 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, hereby elect to and by this Notice do terminate said lease as of the 31st day of January, 1939.

"That said lease is terminated under the provisions of paragraph No. 10, page 6, and paragraph No. 26, page 11, of said lease, and for the further reason that the Lessor failed and refused to perform that part of the lease designated as paragraph 8, page 5, relative to the furnishing of the ballroom, billiard room and penthouse of said building, on or before October 1, 1936, or at all.

"You are further notified that the lessees will at the close of the 31st day of January, 1939, deliver possession of the premises described in said lease to the Lessor or his agent.

"You are further notified that under the terms and provisions of said lease and especially under the provisions of paragraph 26, page 11, of said lease, the undersigned Lessees hereby demand payment to them of the sum of Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000) on or before February 1, 1939.

"Dated this 30 day of December, 1938."

To this notice appellant sent the following reply:

"Mrs. Elsie Kuhlemeier,

"Mr. William Kuhlemeier, Jr.,

"Mrs. Wanda Anslyn,

"Mr. J. E. Kuhlemeier,

"Conroy & Conroy, Attorneys at Law:

"You and each of you are hereby notified that, through your attorneys, Conroy and Conroy, the undersigned has been advised by his attorney, that following a reply from the undersigned to your written notice of intention to terminate the lease on the Rex Arms Apartment building, that it is your intention to terminate said lease, and that as an evidence of such termination, you are now in process of taking inventory of all of the furniture, furnishings and equipment now located in said Rex Arms Apartment building.

"The undersigned hereby recognizes your right to terminate said Rex Arms lease, but only by virtue of and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said lease.

"The undersigned hereby denies that you have any right at all to terminate said lease for your alleged reason that the undersigned lessor failed and refused to perform that part of the lease designated as Paragraph 8, page 5, of said lease.

"The undersigned hereby further notifies you and each of you that he does not recognize any right alleged by you, whether referred to by you in said lease or not, to the return to you of Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000) or any sum at all, as alleged in your notice of intention to terminate said lease, or for any reason, right, or claim whatsoever, and on the contrary hereby notifies you that pursuant to Paragraph 10 of said Rex Arms lease, upon the final termination of said lease by you, pursuant to your notice of intention to terminate said lease, you and each of you shall and will thereupon forfeit all of your right, title and interest in and to said Twenty-Five Thousand Dollars ($25,000) and/or Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000) or any and all sums referred to therein, to the undersigned.

"Upon the aforesaid termination of said lease, followed by the re-possession of said premises by the undersigned, the undersigned demands that you and each of you perform all and sundry the requirements of you as contained in Paragraph 14 of said lease, and return all furniture and fixtures as contained in Exhibit 'A' in good condition of repair, less ordinary wear and tear, as provided in Paragraph 14 of said lease, and failing to do so, to pay to the undersigned the reasonable value thereof, and to account and pay to the undersigned for all rentals due the undersigned.

"You and each of you will please govern yourselves accordingly.

"F. S. Lack,
"The Undersigned."

Thereafter possession was surrendered to appellant on February 1, 1939, and he has been in possession ever since. All rent up to that time was paid, and certain minor adjustments concerning articles of personal property were made.

The complaint contained a second cause of action based upon alleged failure of lessor to comply with requirements of the lease in connection with the furnishing of the ballroom, billiard room and penthouse, but the trial court found against plaintiffs on this cause of action and it is not involved in this appeal. The trial court also found against the contention that there was any violation of this provision which could be made the basis for termination of the lease, and this finding is amply supported by the evidence.

The real question for determination here, therefore, is whether or not the provision of section 10 of the lease, that "upon such termination as aforesaid, lessee shall forfeit any right, title or interest he may have in and to the deposit of $25,000 paid as aforesaid," constitutes a penalty or forfeiture and should be held void under the provisions of Civil Code sections 1670 and 1671.

Appellant contends that he became entitled to the deposit, not by reason of any damage or as a penalty for any breach of lessees' obligations, but as a consideration for a privilege granted to lessees which they could exercise or not at their option. He points out also that although the deposit is made as a guarantee of faithful performance by lessees, there is no provision for forfeiture in case of breach, and contends that the use of the word "forfeit" in provision 10 of the lease is in fact a misnomer, because it does not contemplate a penalty for a breach. On the other hand, respondents take the position that if the effect of the provision is to penalize the lessees for not going through with the lease, and to forfeit their rights to a large sum of money for a reason and upon a basis having no relation whatever to the damage, if any, suffered by lessor through termination of the lease, then it is void, regardless of the particular words used or the ostensible basis for it. The trial court interpreted the provision as amounting in effect to a penalty, and declared it to be void.

There can be no serious doubt about the meaning of section 10 of the lease, for the language used is plain and unambiguous. The lessee is given the right to cancel the lease at any time upon thirty days' notice, and in that event he loses any right he may have to the $25,000 deposit, or so much thereof as had not, at the time of cancellation been applied to rental in accordance with other provisions of the lease. Must this provision then, deliberately agreed upon and clearly expressed by the parties, be declared void?

[1] Section 1670 of the Civil Code provides that "Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made, for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section." It is apparent that this is not a contract by which the parties attempted to determine the amount of liquidated damages in the event of a breach. The so-called forfeiture provision came into operation solely as a result of the lessee's voluntary action in exercising the option to terminate the lease. Since the option was exercised in accordance with the terms of the contract, it cannot be considered as a breach of the contract.

The cases of Green v. Frahm, 176 Cal. 259, 168 P. 114; Webster v. Garrette, 10 Cal.App.2d 610, 52 P.2d 550; Redmon v. Graham, 211 Cal. 491, 295 P. 1031, and Bacciocco v. Curtis, 12 Cal.2d 109, 82 P.2d 385, relied upon by respondents, do not aid them, for in each of those cases the court had before it a lease which provided in effect that the forfeiture was conditioned upon the lessee's breach of the lease and was therefore held to be void under section 1670 of the Civil Code because it constituted an attempt to fix liquidated damages in anticipation of a breach.

[2] In construing any part of the lease the entire document should, of course, be considered. It should be noted that although in the preliminary recitals the deposit is said "to guarantee the full and faithful performance of each and every term and condition herein contained incumbent upon the lessee," there is nowhere any provision for forfeiture of the deposit in the event of any breach by lessee. This is a valid provision for the protection of the lessor. Green v. Frahm, supra; A-1 Garage v. Lange Inv. Co., 6 Cal.App.2d 593, 596, 44 P.2d 681.

[3] It is also provided that the deposit is (not shall be) applied to the rental for certain months, principally those at the end of the term; in other words, application of the deposit to rental is made at the time of execution of the lease. It has been held that "where rent is paid in advance the law itself, in the absence of any agreement therefor, authorizes the landlord to retain the rent so paid though he re-enter before the expiration of the term." Wetzler v. Patterson, 73 Cal.App. 527, 535, 238 P. 1077, 1080. How, then, can it be said that an agreement of the parties themselves is invalid when it provides for the same thing in consideration for a right which the lessee is free to exercise if he deems it to his interest to do so? It is the duty of the court to sustain contracts "when deliberately entered into between parties who have equality of opportunity for understanding and insisting upon their rights," and when such contracts are not clearly in violation of law or against public policy. Burns Trading Co. v. Welborn, 81 F.2d 691, 106 A.L.R. 285. A provision in a lease for payment of a lump sum by lessee as a bonus for entering into a lease (and later to be applied to rental if lessee has observed his obligations) has been held not to be in violation of section 1670 of the Civil Code. A-1 Garage v. Lange Inv. Co., supra; Parigian v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Sav. Bank, 42 Cal.App.2d 773, 110 P.2d 117. If such a payment can be upheld as a consideration for entering into a lease, it would appear equally logical to sustain it as consideration for the right to terminate the lease.

[4, 5] The fact that the parties have used the word "forfeit" in the lease is not determinative of their interest. In law the word "forfeit" means "to lose and surrender to an individual or the state something that belongs to one for misconduct or breach of duty * * *. The term implies that there must be some person, natural or artificial, who is entitled to receive the benefit of the forfeiture when it accrues, and a breach of duty on the part of the one losing his interest in the property." (Emphasis added.) 12 Cal.Jur. 632, and cases there cited. The lessee in the case under review was not to lose or forfeit his right to the money because of any misconduct or breach of duty, but was to surrender the money as consideration for the right to terminate the lease. There is no legal principle which makes void a provision in a lease to the effect that in consideration of the lessor's granting to the lessee the right to terminate a lease for a term of years the lessee agrees to pay a stipulated sum in the event that he elects to exercise the option to terminate. The fact that in the present case the lessee has agreed to relinquish or "forfeit" a right to a sum of money, instead of to pay a sum of money, does not alter the situation. In either event the payment of money, or the relinquishment of the right to demand the return of money, constitutes the consideration for the option to terminate the lease.

[6] The trial court found that "the lease was mutually terminated," but there was no evidence to sustain such a finding other than the correspondence hereinabove quoted. Such finding is not sustained by the evidence. The finding should have been that such lease was terminated pursuant to the provision thereof for such termination.

The judgment is reversed.

W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

MOORE, Presiding Justice, (concurring).

I concur. I do so with deep anxiety in view of the precise allocation of the money to the payment of the rentals for specified months of the term of the lease. Since those months had not arrived, the moneys were never earned. My hesitancy arises from a deep-seated dislike for any scheme that transfers to a person the property of his neighbor without adequate return. Defendant has the same property he had on the day he leased it to plaintiffs' predecessor, but at the same time he has also $20,000 of plaintiffs' money.

But to hold that the retention of the $20,000 by defendant would be a forfeiture were tantamount to saying that we have a contract utterly without mutuality. In view of such dilemma as would thereby be created I am persuaded that Mr. Justice STEPHENS has wisely solved the problem presented. If the balance remaining in defendant's hands at the time of the cancellation was not intended to constitute payment for the privilege of being discharged from further obligations under the lease, then plaintiffs had the right to determine at any time during the ten-year term whether they would stay in or go out without having to pay one penny for the privilege. It is an essential of a valid contract that the obligation of one party should be supported by an adequate consideration on the part of the other. Reading the lease by its four corners, it appears that a genuine attempt was made to provide for the compensation of the lessor in the event the lessee should desire to withdraw from his engagement to operate the property during the ten-year term.

Courts should, only after the exercise of due caution, approve the transfer of the title to moneys without the passing of adequate consideration therefor. It was for a long time the disposition of courts to look upon such a provision as that under consideration with disfavor and to construe it strictly in order that damages provided to be paid in the event of a breach might be treated as penalties. By such holding it was rendered difficult to recover except for only such loss as could be definitely proved. But the modern tendency is, when a contract has been deliberately conceived and executed by two mature parties with equal understanding of their respective rights, to regard such provisions as inserted for the purpose of promoting prompt performance of the contract as well as to adjust amicably in advance the settlement of a potential controversy without uncertainty, delay and expense. To this end courts now industriously seek to ascertain the true intention of the parties at the time of making provision for the payment of a designated sum upon the breach of a covenant, rather than merely to conclude that it is a penalty because of the failure of the parties to include a stipulation that it would be extremely difficult to determine the amount of damage to be suffered in the event of a breach. Wise v. United States, 249 U.S. 361, 39 S.Ct. 303, 63 L.Ed. 647.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 716

GOODERHAM & WORTS, Limited, v. COLLINS et al.

Civ. 11908.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 26, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1942.

1. Intoxicating liquors 🔑90(1)

Where order for whisky was addressed and delivered to and accepted by plaintiff in San Francisco, upon arrival of bonded car in San Francisco from Canada whisky was hauled by buyer's bonded truck and delivered aboard buyer's ship docked in San Francisco, and payment for whisky was made to plaintiff in San Francisco by check payable to plaintiff, there was a "sale" of whisky in California within statute imposing excise tax on distilled spirits sold in California. St.1935, pp. 1123, 1132, §§ 2(l), 24.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Sale".

2. Intoxicating liquors 🔑90(1)

Even if whisky shipped in bond from Canada to California could not have been used within territorial limits of United States because no federal tax had been paid on it, that fact had no bearing on question whether there was a delivery of whisky free from bond to buyer in California, and consequently a sale of whisky in California within statute imposing excise tax on distilled spirits sold in California. St.1935, pp. 1123, 1132, §§ 2(l), 24.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Gooderham & Worts, Limited, against R. E. Collins and others for the refund of excise taxes paid under protest on the sale of distilled spirits. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Richard S. Goldman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The plaintiff, Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., sued for the refund of excise taxes paid under protest on the sale of distilled spirits. The taxes were collected by the state under the authority of the 1935 Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Stats.1935, p. 1123. The total amount sued for was $1694.22, but at the trial plaintiff abandoned claim to the refund of all items except $360, the amount of tax imposed and paid on the sale of 150 cases of whiskey to the Matson Navigation Company. Judgment was given for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

By the terms of section 24 of the 1935 act an excise tax was imposed on all distilled spirits "sold in this state;" and section 2(l) declared that the words "sell" or "sale" and the phrase "to sell" as used in the act meant and included any of the following: to exchange, barter, traffic in; to solicit or receive an order for; to keep or expose for sale; to serve for a consideration with or without meals; to traffic in or deliver for value or in any other way than gratuitously; to possess with intent to sell; and that the transfer of title to alcoholic beverages unaccompanied by a transfer of possession of such beverages shall not be deemed a sale of such beverages. The trial court found that the transaction involving the sale of the whiskey to the Matson company constituted a sale by plaintiff in this state within the meaning of the terms of said act, and that therefore the plaintiff was liable for the payment of the excise tax thereon. The evidence fully supports such findings.

[1] It appears that at the time the sale in question was made there were two corporations bearing the name Gooderham & Worts, Ltd. One was the plaintiff, a Delaware corporation; and the other a Canadian corporation. All of the capital stock of the latter was owned by another Canadian corporation named Hiram Walker and Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., which owned also all of the capital stock of Hiram Walker & Sons Distilleries, Inc., a Delaware corporation, which in turn owned 75% of the corporate stock of the plaintiff company. Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., of Canada was a manufacturer of distilled spirits, and maintained its offices and distilleries in Walkerville, Ontario, Canada. It was not authorized to do business in California. The plaintiff company of the same name was a distributor of distilled spirits, and authorized to do business in California but not in Canada. It maintained offices and a warehouse at 144 Townsend Street, in San Francisco, and held a distilled spirits wholesaler's license and a distilled spirits wine importer's license issued by the state pursuant to section 5 of said act. In its warehouse it kept on hand for the purposes of distribution and sale a stock of distilled spirits, much of which it received from the Canadian company of the same name. The Matson company was operating ships for the transportation of passengers and freight in and out of the port of San Francisco, and was the holder, under said act, of an importer's distilled spirits license and distilled spirits retailer's licenses for specific boats.

In October, 1936, the Matson company mailed an order from its San Francisco offices to plaintiff at its place of business in San Francisco for the purchase of 150 cases of whiskey. The order read: "Requisition No. A-16,536. Date October 1, 1936. Gooderham & Worts, Limited, 144 Townsend Street, San Francisco, California. * * * Delivery: 480 Main Street * * * [Then follows the itemization of the whiskey as to quantity, grade and price.] 1. Prices f.o.b. Toronto, Canada, in bond. 2. Merchandise to move in pooled car and benefit of carlot rate to be obtained. 3. Payment upon presentation of necessary transfer papers to our customs brokers, H. B. Thomas & Company, San Francisco, Free of all transfer charges to purchaser. 4. * * * Vendor will supply purchaser with label approval and release if necessary to withdraw merchandise from Custom Bond. 5. Delivery as soon as possible. 6. No Federal red strip stamps are to be affixed to bottles. 7. Our customs bonded trucks to take care of cartage at San Francisco. Merchandise to be stored at Matson Bonded Warehouse at 480 Main Street, San Francisco. 8. No insurance charges to be borne by purchaser. 9. Free of California Excise tax as we hold California Importers License." (All italics ours.) Plaintiff transmitted the order to Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., of Canada at Walkerville, Ontario, and as directed in the order the whiskey was shipped in a bonded railroad car to Detroit, then placed in a pooled car with other merchandise destined for San Francisco. When the bonded car arrived in San Francisco arrangements were made by the Matson company through its customs brokers for the transfer and delivery of the whiskey to the Matson company; and thereupon the liquor was hauled from the car by a Matson company bonded truck to and delivered aboard one of its ships docked in San Francisco; and according to the stipulation of facts upon which the cause was partly tried, the whiskey was sold by the Matson company to its passengers when the ship was beyond the territorial limits of the United States. Following the delivery of the whiskey to the Matson company it paid for the same by check made out to Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., and delivered the check to plaintiff at its office on Townsend Street; whereupon plaintiff deposited the check in a bank in San Francisco in a special account of the Canadian company of the same name, and the moneys represented thereby were transmitted by the bank to the Canadian corporation.

One of the major contentions made by plaintiff is that it did not make the sale; that in fact the sale was made in Canada by the Canadian company of the same name; that plaintiff merely transmitted the order and received and deposited the check in behalf of the Canadian company and in doing so acted gratuitously for the Canadian company. The contention is without merit. To the contrary, the evidence shows that at the time of the sale plaintiff was engaged in business in San Francisco as a licensed wholesaler and distributor of distilled spirits and operated a warehouse in San Francisco for such purposes, and that all of the transactions relating to the sale except the actual shipment of the whiskey took place in San Francisco between the plaintiff company and the Matson company. The order for the whiskey was addressed and delivered to and accepted by plaintiff; upon the arrival of the whiskey in San Francisco arrangements for the transfer and delivery thereof to the Matson company were made with plaintiff, and upon the delivery of the whiskey to the Matson company in San Francisco payment therefor was made to plaintiff in San Francisco by check payable to plaintiff. True, one of plaintiff's San Francisco office employees testified that so far as he knew the plaintiff company made no profit out of the sale; but his testimony on this point was of little or no value because of his qualifying statement that the corporate records of the plaintiff company were not kept in the San Francisco office.

[2] The additional major point made by plaintiff is that in any event the sale was not subject to state taxation, it being argued in this respect that the whiskey "never came to rest" within this state, and was "never within the state" except in bond in transit through the state from Canada to some point beyond the territorial limits of the United States. One of the principal factors relied upon in support of the theory so advanced is that no federal red strip stamps were affixed to the liquor, showing that no federal tax had been paid thereon; hence that it would have been in violation of the federal law to have opened and used the liquor within the territorial limits of the United States. Conceding that to be true, that is a matter which concerned only the federal government and the Matson company, and has no bearing whatever upon the controversy existing between the State of California and the plaintiff company, with which we are here concerned, namely, whether there was a delivery of the liquor free from bond to the Matson company within this state; and the evidence clearly establishes that such delivery was made at the latest the moment the liquor was removed from the bonded truck and placed aboard the company's ship docked in San Francisco, for then and there and thereafter the liquor was in the actual and absolute possession of the Matson company and under its complete control and dominion. If as appellant seems to assume the liquor had been consigned for delivery at some designated point outside of the territorial limits of the United States and remained under government control until it was delivered at that point, a different situation would be presented. But such is not the case; the bonded car was destined for and the liquor was consigned for delivery in San Francisco and was in fact transferred and delivered to the Matson company at that point.

The remaining points made by appellant are only incidental to those already discussed and decided, and likewise are without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P.J., and B. C. JONES, Justice pro tem., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 765

RATHJEN BROS., Inc., v. COLLINS et al.

Civ. 11911.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 27, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Courts 🔑90(1)

A prior decision could not be relied on as compelling reversal of judgment on ground that findings in the two cases were identical, where the very finding lacking in prior case was made in instant case.

2. Intoxicating liquors 🔑92

Under statute creating presumption that all distilled spirits acquired by any wholesaler have been sold in California, figure resulting by deducting from total gallonage possessed or acquired during taxable year, gallonage on hand at close thereof, plus gallonage disposed of in nontaxable sales, plus reasonable loss tolerance, is presumptively gallonage disposed of in sales subject to excise tax. St.1937, p. 2145, § 24.2.

3. Intoxicating liquors 🔑92

Where large quantity of liquor is unaccounted for after deducting from total gallonage possessed or acquired by wholesaler during taxable year gallonage on hand at close thereof, plus gallonage disposed of in nontaxable sales, plus reasonable loss tolerance, wholesaler must show that it was disposed of in nontaxable transactions, and unless he does so equalization board has established a "prima facie case" with respect to gallonage disposed of in transactions subject to excise tax. St.1937, p. 2145, § 24.2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Case".

4. Intoxicating liquors 🔑92

Equalization board, in determining amount of sales made by liquor wholesaler for purpose of computing deficiency excise tax by first ascertaining quantity of liquor possessed and acquired during taxable period and deducting amount of liquor on hand and amount shown by books to have been disposed of in nontaxable transactions, complied with statute. St.1937, p. 2145, § 24.2.

5. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Under statute creating presumption that all distilled spirits acquired by any wholesaler have been sold in California, wholesaler contending that deficiency excise taxes arrived at through application of that presumption are not correct has burden of showing why figure is not correct. St.1937, p. 2145, § 24.2.

6. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Under statute creating presumption that all distilled spirits acquired by any wholesaler have been sold in California, wholesaler, contending that amount of deficiency excise taxes as computed by equalization board was incorrect, had burden of proving what happened to gallonage unaccounted for in invoices of sales to on and off sale licensees. St.1937, p. 2145, § 24.2.

7. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Where liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest contended that equalization board had to prove what became of gallonage unaccounted for in invoices of sales to on and off sale licensees, testimony that no liquor went to licensees without stamps constituted "conclusions", and, even if admissible, did not prove what happened to liquor unaccounted for. St.1937, p. 2145, § 24.2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion".

8. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

In liquor wholesaler's action to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest, evidence did not sustain finding that wholesaler purchased and delivered stamps on all sales made by it upon which excise tax was imposed. St.1937, pp. 2144, 2145, §§ 24, 24.2.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Rathjen Brothers, Incorporated, against R. E. Collins and others, as members of the State Board of Equalization, and others, to recover deficiency excise taxes collected under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended in 1937. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., not participating; SPENCE, Justice pro tem., acting.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Sefton & Quattrin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by Rathjen Bros., Inc. to recover deficiency excise taxes collected by the State Board of Equalization under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Stats. of 1935, p. 1123, ch. 330, as amended in 1937, Stats. of 1937, p. 2126, ch. 758. The plaintiff is a duly licensed distilled spirits rectifier and distributor engaged in business in California, and, as such, for the tax period commencing July 1, 1937, and ending June 30, 1938, paid to the state large sums of money under the tax statute here involved. The State Board of Equalization, pursuant to the authority conferred by the act, levied a deficiency assessment against plaintiff for that period. After a hearing, and after deducting from the original deficiency assessment a loss tolerance to which the taxpayer was entitled, the board determined there was a deficiency owing the state of $1,083.39. This sum was paid by the taxpayer under protest and this action instituted to recover the amount so paid. The trial court rendered judgment for the taxpayer, and the defendants appeal.

The act under which these taxes were paid was passed in 1935, and materially amended in 1937. The 1937 amendments are admittedly applicable to this proceeding. Generally speaking, the act imposes a stamp tax, stamps to be purchased by the wholesaler or rectifier, and such stamps must accompany delivery of the distilled spirits to the retailer, by whom they are affixed to the bottles and canceled.

The appellants contend that regardless of the other contentions made, the decision in Empire Vintage Co. v. Collins, 40 Cal. App.2d 612, 105 P.2d 391, decided by the First Appellate District, Division Two, requires a reversal. The Supreme Court denied a hearing in that case, three of the justices voting for a hearing, and two of the justices not participating. The same tax statute as that involved in the instant case was involved in the Empire Vintage Co. case, but the period in dispute was for the period July 1, 1935, to June 30, 1937. The action in the Empire Vintage Co. case, as in the instant case, was brought to recover a deficiency paid under protest by the wholesaler. On pleadings and evidence substantially similar to those here involved, the trial court rendered its judgment in favor of the taxpayer. The appellate court reversed this judgment on the sole ground that the findings did not support the judgment. The findings in that case were to the effect that the wholesaler there involved had made no sales to on- or off-sale licensees which were not tax paid. The appellate court properly held that this finding did not negative unlawful sales having been made to those who were not licensees, and, upon which unlawful sales, taxes had not been paid; that, although the wholesaler could lawfully sell only to licensees, the taxpayer could not recover a tax collected by the state on unlawful sales to non-licensees. The court also held that the findings did not negative sales having been made which were not shown on the books of the taxpayer. It is to be noted that the court did not hold that in fact unlawful sales had been made to non-licensees which were not tax paid, but simply passed upon the sufficiency of the findings to support a judgment of recovery. The exact holding of the court in that case is disclosed in the following quotation (40 Cal.App.2d at page 619, 105 P.2d at page 394): "The other findings are to the effect that the plaintiff had paid its taxes on those sales to on-sale and off-sale licensees. There is no finding that other sales, whether legal or not, were not made or that the tax had been paid thereon. But to support a judgment in favor of the plaintiff it is obvious the findings of the court should clearly show tha• the plaintiff, for the period July 1, 1935, to June 30, 1937, had paid taxes on all sales, legal or illegal, and that the defendants arbitrarily compelled it to pay the amount sued for. The findings do not make that showing."

[1] In their closing brief the appellants urge that this decision compels a reversal of the judgment in the instant case for the asserted reason that the findings in the two cases are "identical." An examination of the records in the two cases demonstrates that the findings are not only not identical, but that in the instant case there is a positive finding on the very issue that the court failed to find on in the Empire Vintage Co. case. The complaint in the present case, as in the Empire Vintage Co. case, contained in paragraph VII, this allegation: "That plaintiff above named at all times complied with and performed the provisions of the said Alcoholic Beverage Control Act as the same was then in force and effect, and purchased and delivered as required therein Excise Stamps on all sales made by it upon which the said Excise Tax was imposed." In the Empire Vintage Co. case there was no finding of the truth of this allegation, but in the instant case the court found that this allegation was true. It should be mentioned that in the opinion in the Empire Vintage Co. case there are two obvious typographical errors. After correctly setting forth the allegations of the complaint the court stated, on page 616 of 40 Cal.App.2d: "The trial court found that all the allegations of the complaint contained in paragraphs I, II, III, IV, V, and VII, are true * * *." An examination of the clerk's transcript in that case shows that the "VII" should have read "VIII." (See 105 P.2d 393) That there was no finding of the truth of paragraph VII is correctly stated on page 618 of the decision in 40 Cal.App.2d, on page 394 of 105 P.2d. On the same page appears the statement that: "In paragraph VII the plaintiff alleged that the defendant board caused an examination to be made of plaintiff's books and records * * *." The correct reference is to paragraph VIII. The major premise of the court's opinion in the Empire Vintage Co. case was that there was no finding that the taxpayer had paid all taxes due—but simply a finding that such taxes had been paid on all sales to licensees. It was for that reason alone that the judgment was reversed. But the very finding that was lacking in that case was made in the instant case. For this reason, the argument that the prior decision compels a reversal is without merit.

The appellants next urge that the evidence does not support the findings. This contention, with which we agree, requires a reference to some of the provisions of the act as originally enacted, and as amended in 1937. Section 24, as amended in 1937, provides that "An excise tax is hereby imposed upon all distilled spirits sold in this State by rectifiers or wholesalers" in amounts as therein fixed. The tax is a stamp tax (§ 33). Section 27, as amended in 1937, gives the state authority to levy a deficiency assessment where an examination of the books of the taxpayer shows that stamps purchased by wholesalers or rectifiers are not sufficient to pay the tax on spirits sold by him. Section 24.2 was added to the act in 1937. So far as pertinent here, that section provides: "It shall be presumed that all distilled spirits acquired by any rectifier or distilled spirits wholesaler have been sold in this State by such rectifier or wholesaler unless proven to the satisfaction of the board, in verified reports on forms prescribed by the board, that such distilled spirits are [here follows a list of nontaxable disposals]." The proper application of this last-quoted section presents the basic problem on this appeal.

In determining the deficiency due from respondent, the state followed the following procedure: The auditor first determined from an examination of the books of respondent the quantity of distilled spirits possessed and acquired by it during the tax period. This totaled 103,210.48 gallons. This figure is not disputed by respondent. It then determined from such books the quantity of distilled spirits on hand at the close of the tax period and those disposed of in nontaxable transactions, amounting to 5,971.46 gallons. This figure is not challenged by respondent. The remainder of 97,239.02 gallons was adopted by the state as the figure for taxable sales. The tax on that many gallons is admittedly $77,791.22. The books of respondent showed that it possessed and acquired during the tax period stamps in the amount of $77,691.62; that stamps on hand at the close of the period, stamps returned to the board, etc., were of the value of $1,061.58. Deducting that amount from the value of the stamps acquired by respondent during the period results in the figure of $76,630.04—the amount of stamps applicable to the sale of 97,239.02 gallons on which a tax of $77,791.22 should have been paid. None of these figures are challenged by respondent. These figures obviously leave $1,161.18 as the amount of the deficiency. The board thereafter made a loss tolerance allowance of $77.79, which reduced the amount of the deficiency to $1,083.39. This was the amount assessed against respondent, and the amount for which recovery was allowed to it by the present judgment after the taxpayer had paid that amount under protest.

The above figures apply only to the Oakland office of respondent. The respondent also operates a San Francisco office, but except in one particular hereafter mentioned, the tax on sales from that office is not here involved. It will be noted that the quantity of distilled spirits sold, and the amount of the tax due thereon, were determined by the board by deducting from the spirits possessed at the beginning of the tax period and acquired during the period, the quantity on hand at the close of the period and the quantity disposed of in nontaxable transactions. That is in exact accord with the provisions of section 24.2 above quoted. Under that section, the figure so computed is presumed to represent the amount of taxable sales.

In spite of the fact that the board followed precisely the procedure outlined by section 24.2, the respondent urges that the deficiency assessed against it was not levied in the manner provided by the act. Throughout respondent's argument runs the statement that the board failed to examine respondent's books to determine the amount of taxable sales shown therein. It is urged that without that figure the tax could not be computed. It is contended that under the provisions of section 27 of the act, as amended in 1937, the tax can only be computed by adding up the sales made as disclosed by the taxpayer's books. The portion of the section relied upon reads as follows: "If, after giving effect to the provisions of section 24.2, any examinations or investigations made by the board shall disclose that the amount of excise stamps purchased from the board by any rectifier or wholesaler is not sufficient to represent payment of the excise tax imposed upon the sale of distilled spirits sold by such rectifier or wholesaler, the board shall have the power, and is hereby authorized, to make a levy against such rectifier or wholesaler in the amount of the deficiency in the payment of the distilled spirits excise tax so disclosed."

[2, 3] It will be noted that the board in computing the deficiency did not examine those of respondent's books which constituted the record of sales made. It determined the amount of sales made by first ascertaining the quantity of liquor possessed and acquired during the taxable period, and deducting from that figure the amount of liquor then on hand and the amount shown by the books to have been disposed of in nontaxable transactions. This figure—97,239.02 gallons—rather than a figure taken from sales records, was adopted by the board as the quantity sold and subject to tax. It is to be noted that the taxpayer in this action to recover the deficiency did not produce its sales records. It simply relied on its point that the board, by not examining the records of actual sales, did not follow the procedure required by the act. The obvious answer to respondent's argument is that the portion of section 27 above quoted and relied upon by it does not prescribe the manner in which total sales taxable shall be ascertained. The only section that refers to that matter is section 24.2, and that section creates a presumption which applies when the procedure here adopted has been followed, and in the absence of controverting evidence. Respondent, in its argument, simply disregards the presumption created by that section. The presumption is based on common sense. If, from the total gallonage possessed or acquired during the taxable year, there is deducted the gallonage on hand at the close thereof, plus the gallonage disposed of in nontaxable sales, plus a reasonable loss tolerance, the resulting figure is presumptively the gallonage disposed of in taxable sales. If, as here, there is a large quantity of liquor unaccounted for it is up to the wholesaler to show that it was disposed of in nontaxable transactions. But, unless he does so, the board has established a prima facie case as to the gallonage disposed of in taxable transactions.

[4-8] It, therefore, follows that the procedure adopted by the board in computing the deficiency was in exact compliance with the statute. The only other question necessary to discuss is whether the respondent in this action has produced other evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption, and sufficient to show that the figure for taxable sales arrived at by the board was wrong. Stated another way, is there any evidence in the record to sustain the finding of the trial court that this taxpayer "purchased and delivered * * * Excise Stamps on all sales made by it upon which the * * * Excise Tax was imposed"? In determining this issue it must be kept in mind that the board followed the procedure set forth in the act, and that under the express terms of the act when that procedure is followed it is presumed the resulting figure correctly shows the gallonage disposed of in taxable sales. There can be no doubt that in view of the presumption created by section 24.2 of the act the burden is on the taxpayer to show why the figure arrived at through application of such presumption is not correct. The taxpayer, in trying to prove his case, did not offer any evidence to challenge the board's audit. It admitted that it had on hand during the taxable year the gallonage as fixed by the board; it admitted that the gallonage it had on hand at the close of the taxable year had been properly computed; it admitted that the quantity sold in nontaxable sales had been deducted and that a loss tolerance had been allowed, but contended that the resulting figure did not represent taxable sales. There was a certain gallonage not now in its possession that was unaccounted for in the invoices of sales to on- and off-sale licensees. The position it took was that the board had to prove what became of that unaccounted for gallonage. It did not offer any evidence as to what had become of that gallonage. It completely disregarded the presumption created by section 24.2 of the act. The real question is, who must prove what happened to the gallonage not accounted for? Obviously, under section 24.2 the taxpayer must do so. The taxpayer did not do so. It simply offered the testimony of its employees Hammerly and Pingree, persons in managerial positions in its business, to the effect that all deliveries to licensees were accompanied by stamps. For example, Mr. Hammerly was asked: "Now, during that period, did you buy sufficient stamps from the State Board of Equalization to cover all the shipments and sales to on- or off-sale distilled spirit licensees?" Over the defendants' objections that the question was incompetent, called for a conclusion, and that no proper foundation had been laid, the witness was permitted to answer, "Yes." The same witness was asked: "To your knowledge have any distilled spirits left the premises of the San Francisco Branch to on or off-sale distilled spirits retail licensees without the stamps going along, to stamp the merchandise?" Upon defendants' objection being overruled, the witness answered: "No, sir, not to my knowledge." Similarly, the witness Pingree, after first testifying that there was, according to the board's audit, an unaccounted for loss as computed by the board, was asked: "Was any merchandise represented by that amount sold or delivered to on- or off-sale retail distilled spirits licensees?" and over objection answered: "To my own knowledge, no." Both witnesses admittedly did not personally observe all liquor sale shipments that left the company's premises, and could not testify from personal observation of the facts. It is very doubtful whether such oral testimony was admissible at all to prove the ultimate fact in issue. The foundation was not laid for such testimony, and obviously it constituted nothing more than the conclusion of the witness. Moreover, even if admissible such testimony merely tended to show that on all sales to licensees the shipped liquor was accompanied by stamps. It did not prove what had happened to the liquor unaccounted for, or even that on all sales stamps were delivered. It may be that some of the sales were made to nonlicensees. The Empire Vintage Co. case, supra, properly held that the state may collect the tax on sales which are unlawful—i. e., made to non-licensees, as well as on lawful sales made to licensees. The burden was on the taxpayer to show that the deficiency computed by the board in exact accordance with the act was not correct. To do this, it would have to show what became of this unaccounted for liquor. It had full and complete books. If those books showed what became of the liquor it was the taxpayer's duty to present that evidence. If the books did not show what had become of that liquor, and there was no other evidence available on that point, it would appear that the taxpayer has no evidence to sustain its claim for a refund. The respondent simply failed to prove that it was not liable for the deficiency assessment, or that such deficiency had not been properly computed. The basic finding that the tax had been paid on all sales is unsupported by the evidence.

The respondent contends that as against the deficiency assessed against its Oakland office it is entitled to a credit of $273.04, which is the amount the board's auditor found that the San Francisco office had overpurchased stamps. All of the facts concerning this alleged overpayment do not appear in the record. Whether this sum was credited to the taxpayer is not entirely clear from the evidence. Separate board auditors examined the books of each office. They testified that they compared their analyses and reconciled the same. At any rate, inasmuch as the judgment must be reversed for reasons already set forth, this matter of the San Francisco overpayment is a matter that may properly be examined into on the new trial.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 774

RATHJEN BROS., Inc., v. COLLINS et al.

Civ. 11912.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

March 27, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Licensed liquor wholesaler suing to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest had burden of proof to sustain its contention that assessment was without authority of law. St.1935, p. 1132, § 24.

2. Intoxicating liquors 🔑92

Where equalization board, in making audit and examination for purpose of computing deficiency excise taxes owing by liquor wholesaler, determined quantity of liquor possessed and acquired by wholesaler during taxable period and deducted therefrom quantity disposed of in exempt transactions and quantity on hand, the state established a "prima facie case" that balance was disposed of in nonexempt transactions. St.1935, p. 1132, § 24.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Case".

3. Intoxicating liquors 🔑90(1)

The District Court of Appeal in interpreting statute imposing excise tax on distilled spirits sold in California must assume that the Legislature intended the tax to be paid. St.1935, p. 1132, § 24.

4. Licenses 🔑15(1)

Under statutes imposing taxes on sales with exemptions, the tax is imposed on total sales unless the taxpayer shows sales that are exempt.

5. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest had burden of showing what had become of unaccounted for gallonage if it desired to recover taxes paid thereon, as against contention that state had to show that unaccounted for gallonage had been disposed of in taxable transactions. St.1935, p. 1132, § 24.

6. Intoxicating liquors 🔑90(1)

Under statute imposing excise tax on all distilled spirits sold in California and requiring spirits delivered by wholesalers to be accompanied by stamps purchased from equalization board, wholesaler is made the "taxpayer", but, even if wholesaler is merely the statutory "agent" for collection, it would be liable for failure to collect and pay over tax. St.1935, pp. 1132, 1139, §§ 24, 33.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Agent" and "Taxpayer".

7. Intoxicating liquors 🔑92

The tax imposed on distilled spirits sold in California is an "excise tax", and no assessment or reassessment is necessary to create liability for a deficiency or to make taxpayer personally liable therefor. St.1935, pp. 1132, 1139, §§ 24, 33.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Excise Tax".

8. Intoxicating liquors 🔑92

Even if power to assess deficiency excise taxes on distilled spirits sold in California did not exist until amendment of statute in 1937, provision giving equalization board that power would apply to liabilities existing before effective date of amendment. St.1935, pp. 1132, 1139, §§ 24, 33; St.1937, p. 2147, § 27.

9. Constitutional law 🔑191

Legislation providing a new and additional procedure for the enforcement of a pre-existing tax liability enacted after time tax should have been paid is valid and proper.

10. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Where wholesaler sold liquor to dealer doing business in New York but not licensed in California, delivered it to dealer's salesman in California, and received payment by debiting its account with dealer, there was a "sale" in California to a nonlicensee, and wholesaler had burden of proving that transaction was a sale between wholesalers for resale not subject to excise tax. St.1935, pp. 1132, 1139, §§ 24, 33.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Sale".

11. Intoxicating liquors ⚷90(1), 96

Under statute imposing excise tax on all distilled spirits sold in California, every sale of spirits in California, whether legal or illegal, is subject to tax unless sale is exempt, and taxpayer has burden of showing that a particular sale is exempt. St.1935, pp. 1132, 1139, §§ 24, 33.

12. Intoxicating liquors ⚷90(1)

Where wholesaler sold liquor to steamship companies in California and made delivery to them in San Francisco, sales were subject to excise tax even though liquor was in a bonded warehouse. St.1935, pp. 1132, 1139, §§ 24, 33.

13. Intoxicating liquors ⚷90(1)

Where excise tax stamps accompanied delivery of liquor sold by wholesaler to steamship company in California, transaction should not have been included in additional deficiency assessment. St.1935, pp. 1132, 1139, §§ 24, 33.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Rathjen Brothers, Incorporated, against R. E. Collins and others, as members of the State Board of Equalization, and others, to recover deficiency excise taxes collected under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., not participating; SPENCE, Justice pro tem., acting.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Sefton & Quattrin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by Rathjen Bros., Inc., to recover deficiency excise taxes collected by the State Board of Equalization under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Stats. of 1935, p. 1123, chap. 330. The plaintiff is a duly licensed distilled spirits rectifier and distributor engaged in business in California, and, as such, for the tax period commencing July 1, 1935, to June 30, 1937, paid to the state large sums of money under the tax statute here involved. The plaintiff operates two places of business, one in Oakland and one in San Francisco, separate books being kept for each place of business. Some time after July 1, 1937, the auditors of the board made an audit and examination of each set of books. As a result of such audits and examinations, the board determined that for the period July 1, 1935, to June 30, 1937, there was due and owing from plaintiff an additional excise tax for business done in the San Francisco office, the sum of $227.63, and for business done in the Oakland office an additional tax of $1,005.24. After such determinations the taxpayer petitioned for a relevy of the tax and demanded a hearing, which was granted. After such hearing the board determined that the above-mentioned sums were due from plaintiff. These sums were paid by the taxpayer, under protest, and this action instituted to recover the amount so paid. The trial court rendered judgment for the taxpayer for the total amount of $1,232.87. Although this is the same taxpayer involved in Rathjen Bros., Inc., v. Collins, et al., Civ. 11911, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 925, this day decided, the main issues in the two cases are different. Case numbered Civ. 11911 involved the tax period July 1, 1937, to June 30, 1938, while the instant case involves the period July 1, 1935, to June 30, 1937. On July 1, 1937, the statute involved was amended, Stats. of 1937, p. 2126, Chap. 758. In case No. 11911 those amendments were admittedly applicable to the proceeding there pending. In the instant case, one of the problems argued is whether those amendments are applicable to this proceeding.

The appellants urge on this appeal one of the points made on the appeal in Civ. 11911, that is, that the findings in this case and the findings in the Empire Vintage Co. v. Collins, 40 Cal.App.2d 612, 105 P.2d 391, on all material issues are identical, and that this case must be reversed for the same reasons set forth in that case. In this case, as in Civ. 11911, the court found that the tax had been paid on all sales. It was because no such finding had been made in the Empire Vintage Co. case that the cause was reversed.

After a trial in the instant case, as to the San Francisco deficiency, the court held that as to $70.04 of that deficiency the distilled spirits represented by that item were not sold by the taxpayer to licensees but were sold to a New York corporation and delivered to a representative of that corporation; that as to $7.20 of the additional assessment the distilled spirits were sold to California licensees, but the retailer had stamps already purchased sufficient to cover the sale; that $7.68 of the additional assessment was based on three transactions; that as to the first two, the sales of distilled spirits were made while the same were in United States bonded warehouses and were sold for use on the high seas; that as to the third transaction, stamps in sufficient quantity accompanied the distilled spirits; that the balance of $142.71 of the San Francisco assessment and all of the Oakland assessment of $1,005.24 were not based on taxable sales by the plaintiff. The court did not find what happened to the distilled spirits represented by these last mentioned items.

In computing the deficiency alleged to be due from plaintiff, the board auditors proceeded precisely as they did in the other Rathjen Bros. case, Civ. 11911, that is, the auditors first determined from an examination of the books of respondent the quantity of distilled spirits possessed and acquired by respondent during the tax period; from the same source they determined the quantity of distilled spirits on hand at the close of the tax period, and the quantity disposed of in what they considered to be nontaxable transactions. All breakage claimed by respondent was allowed as a deduction. The resulting figure was adopted as the quantity of distilled spirits subject to tax. When the quantity of stamps purchased, less stamps on hand, was applied to this figure, the deficiency was computed as above-indicated. Respondent at the trial, and, on this appeal, does not challenge the above figures, except as to the gallonage disposed of in nontaxable sales which involves the several minor items above-summarized from the findings. The major portion of the deficiency is represented by unaccounted for disposals. In Civ. 11911, supra, it was held that under § 24.2 of the act as amended in 1937 a presumption arose that such disposals had been disposed of in taxable sales, and that the burden to prove otherwise rested on the taxpayer. In the present case neither the taxpayer nor the state attempted to account for this gallonage. The state took the position that it had established a prima facie case by the method above-described, and that the burden of going forward to explain the shortage rested on the respondent. The latter took the position that the tax was imposed on sales to licensees, and that the state had the burden of proving that such sales had been made before a tax could be imposed.

[1-4] It is true that before July 1, 1937, there was no statutory presumption such as that contained in § 24.2. The litigants spend a large portion of their argument on the question as to whether that amendment applies to taxes computed subsequent to July 1, 1937, but for a period prior to that date. We do not think that this is the deciding factor on this phase of the case. The real question is, did the respondent prove that it was entitled to a refund? The proper solution of this problem turns, in part at least, upon whether the state had any basis at all for the challenged assessment. It is elementary, of course, that in this proceeding to recover the portion of the tax paid under protest the burden of proof was upon respondent to sustain its contention that the assessment was without authority of law. Malley v. Walter Baker & Co., 1 Cir., 281 F. 41; Miller v. People, 76 Colo. 157, 230 P. 603, 39 A.L.R. 269; Annotation 39 A.L.R. 273. When the respondent demonstrated the manner in which the board computed the assessment did it show that the assessment was without authority of law? It is our opinion that not only did the respondent fail to sustain the burden of proof, but that the board established a prima facie case that the tax was due. Even if the evidence showed that stamps accompanied all sales to licensees that would not be sufficient to show that the tax was not due. As was held in the Empire Vintage Co. case, supra, and reaffirmed in Civ. 11911, supra, the tax was due on all nonexempt sales, and that applies to illegal as well as to legal sales. When the board, in making its audit and examination, determined the quantity of distilled spirits possessed and acquired by the respondent during the taxable period (and that computation is conceded correct) and deducted therefrom the quantity disposed of in exempt transactions and the quantity then on hand, the state established a prima facie case that the balance was disposed of in nonexempt transactions. What did the respondent show to rebut that prima facie case? It contended the computation as to exempt sales was incorrect in certain minor particulars. Those contentions will be discussed later. It offered no proof at all as to what had happened to the unaccounted for gallonage, and contended that before the tax could be lawfully collected from it the state had to show that the unaccounted for gallonage had been disposed of in taxable transactions. If this were the proper interpretation of the act, it would make the collection of a large portion of the tax very difficult, if not impossible. Obviously, in interpreting the act, we must assume that the legislature intended that the tax be paid. To interpret the statute as claimed by respondent would mean that the state would have to prove a fact that rests solely within the knowledge of the taxpayer. This respondent admittedly had on hand a certain quantity of distilled spirits. Some of those spirits were sold in nontaxable transactions. Some were broken, and allowances were made for all claimed breakage. Some were disposed of and stamps accompanied the sales. But there was a large quantity unaccounted for. Obviously, the owner of those spirits has the only facilities for knowing where those spirits went. It is for these many reasons that in every case interpreting statutes imposing a tax on sales, with exemptions, the courts have held that necessarily the tax is imposed on total sales unless the taxpayer shows the sales that are exempt. See cases collected in Annotation in 39 A.L.R. 273.

[5] We, therefore, conclude this portion of the opinion with the holding that, so far as the unaccounted for disposals are concerned, the respondent had the burden of showing what had become of those distilled spirits if it desired to recover the tax paid on them. The finding that the taxpayer paid all taxes collectible is unsupported by the evidence. This portion of the opinion is not based on the 1937 amendments to the act.

There are other contentions made by respondent relating to the question as to whether any tax at all was due from it. As already indicated, the tax statute here involved was first passed in 1935. The two sections primarily involved on this appeal are §§ 24 and 33 as enacted in that year. Section 24 then provided: "An excise tax is hereby imposed upon all distilled spirits sold in this State on and after July 1, 1935" at rates set forth in the balance of the section. In 1937 this section was amended by adding after the word "State" the words "by rectifiers or wholesalers thereof." In this case, however, we are concerned with the section as it read in 1935. Section 33, as first enacted, provided in part:

> "The tax imposed by section 24 of this act upon the sale of distilled spirits shall be collected by means of attaching to each package containing such distilled spirits a stamp or stamps of a denomination equivalent to the amount of excise tax imposed upon the sale of the contents of such package. Such stamps shall be attached by the holders of on- or off-sale distilled spirits licenses issued under this act and by the holders of on-sale licenses for liquor other than beer and wine issued under the State Liquor Control Act, immediately upon opening the original cases in which the distilled spirits were packed and in which such distilled spirits were purchased from the manufacturer, rectifier, importer or wholesaler. In the case of distilled spirits not in original cases at the time of purchase the stamps shall be attached immediately upon bringing such distilled spirits upon the premises for which such on- or off-sale licenses are issued.
>
> "Such stamps shall be sold by the board only to persons holding valid distilled spirits manufacturer's licenses, rectifier's licenses, distilled spirits and wine importer's licenses or distilled spirits wholesaler's licenses issued under this act or the State Liquor Control Act; provided, that until July 1, 1935, the board shall sell a sufficient number of such stamps, to stamp stocks of distilled spirits on hand, to persons holding valid on- or off-sale licenses for liquor other than beer and wine issued under the State Liquor Control Act; provided further, that the board may thereafter, in its discretion, sell such stamps to such holders of on- or off-sale distilled spirits licenses as it may determine.
>
> "On and after July 1, 1935, all distilled spirits delivered by any manufacturer, rectifier, importer or wholesaler of distilled spirits to any person holding an on- or off-sale distilled spirits license issued under this act or an on-sale license for liquor other than beer and wine issued under the State Liquor Control Act, must be accompanied by a sufficient number of stamps purchased from the board, to stamp the packages containing such distilled spirits. Every manufacturer, rectifier, importer or wholesaler of distilled spirits who delivers distilled spirits in violation of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *

"At the time such stamps are attached to the packages of distilled spirits, they shall immediately be canceled by indelibly writing or stamping thereon the number of the licensee attaching the stamp and the date of cancellation."

By an amendment to § 27 of the act in 1937 the board was expressly authorized to levy deficiency assessments against wholesalers who failed to pay the full amount of their tax and to collect the same.

As passed in 1935, the general plan of the statute was that the wholesaler was required to buy the tax stamps from the board; such wholesaler was then required to accompany all sales to nonexempt transferees with the requisite number of stamps; the purchaser upon opening the case was then required to attach the stamps to the bottles and to cancel the same.

[6] Respondent urges, in support of the judgment, that, under the statute as it read until the effective date of the 1937 amendments, the taxpayer was the purchaser, and that the wholesaler was not the taxpayer at all. Respondent argues that its license could be canceled for failure to accompany sales with stamps, but urges that it was not made liable for the tax until the 1937 amendment to § 24. It urges that § 24, as it read in 1935, does not state that the tax is imposed on the wholesaler. In support of this contention it relies on certain language appearing in the case of People v. Tux Winery Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 700, 67 P.2d 752. The sole problem involved in that case was whether a sale from one wholesaler to another wholesaler was taxable. The court properly held that such sales were exempt—that it was the sale from wholesaler to retailer that was taxable. In support of this holding it pointed out that the tax was not finally collected until the retailer affixed the stamps to the bottles. The court stated (page 704 of 20 Cal.App.2d, at page 754 of 67 P.2d): "While it is true that the money is paid when the stamps are purchased; nevertheless the stamps may be used for the liquor involved or they may be used to evidence the tax on other liquors, and so for all practical purposes the tax is not collected until the stamps are attached to specific packages." This was not a holding that the tax was not collectible from the wholesaler. That point was not involved nor discussed in the case.

A reading of the provisions of the 1935 act demonstrates that either the taxpayer was the wholesaler, who prepaid the tax and reimbursed himself from the retailer, or the wholesaler was the agency designated by the act to collect the tax on behalf of the state from the actual taxpayer. In either event the wholesaler is liable for the amount of the tax. The most reasonable interpretation of the act is that it is the wholesaler who was made the taxpayer. The wholesaler, in all but exceptional cases, under § 33, was the one who actually bought the stamps from the state, and distributed them to retailers. The courts have consistently held, in such cases, that it is the one who pays the state that is the taxpayer. Thus under the sales tax act, there was much more reason than exists under the statute here involved to hold that it was the consumer who was the taxpayer and that the retailer was only the agent for collection. The Supreme Court properly held that the retailer was the taxpayer. De Aryan v. Akers, 12 Cal.2d 781, 87 P.2d 695. But, even if the wholesaler was merely the statutory agent for collection it would be liable for failure to collect and pay over the tax. State of California v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 514; Miller v. People, supra. It should also be mentioned that in the Empire Vintage Co. case, supra, it was expressly held that the tax was due from the wholesaler. See, also McKesson & Robbins, Inc. v. Collins, 18 Cal.App.2d 648, 64 P.2d 469.

Respondent next urges that prior to 1937 there was no provision for collecting the tax, and certainly no provision for deficiency assessments. In the Empire Vintage Co. case, supra, 40 Cal.App.2d at page 619, 105 P.2d at page 395, the court, in response to somewhat similar contentions, held: "Again the plaintiff contends the board could not collect the alleged deficit except by making a reassessment and that under the act of 1935 it was not given power to reassess. That it was not given power to reassess is true. But bearing in mind we are dealing with an excise tax, it is obvious no assessment or reassessment is involved. Section 24 in effect was both the assessment and levy of the tax. Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 227, 86 U.S. 227, 240, 22 L.Ed. 80. He who would object to the amount of the tax was bound to present his objection to the legislature having said section under consideration. Finally the plaintiff contends that under the statute no provision is made for collecting a deficiency tax. It says the following questions must be answered: 'From whom? Under what procedure? Was there a deficiency in this case?' Of course, the answers are immediately at hand. The tax is to be collected from the wholesaler, this plaintiff (sec. 33). It is to be collected under the procedure hereinabove indicated and the amount of the deficiency is to be ascertained as the board ascertained it in the present case. Bearing in mind that the Act of 1935 was a revenue act, that the very gist of it was to collect revenue, and that efficiency was of the utmost importance, the record presents no serious questions. The statute makes no distinction between acts whether past or present. It provides one procedure. It is not even claimed that such procedure is not fair and just. The same procedure applies whether there is one violation or several violations of the statutory duty to collect and pay over the tax imposed. These conclusions find complete support in State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.App.2d 374, 42 P.2d 1076."

[7-9] It is true, as urged by respondent, that in the Empire Vintage Co. case, the procedure adopted was to determine the deficiency, as was done in the instant case, and then to proceed against the wholesaler by way of complaint to suspend or revoke its license for failure to deliver the tax stamps with all taxable sales. However, the same reasoning is applicable. As held in that case, this is an excise tax. Section 24 imposed the tax, and no assessment or reassessment was necessary to create the liability or to make the taxpayer personally liable therefor. Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, supra; United States v. Chamberlin, 219 U.S. 250, 31 S.Ct. 155, 55 L.Ed. 204. Moreover, even if the power to assess a deficiency did not exist until 1937, the provision giving to the board that power would apply to liabilities existing prior to the effective date of the statute. The tenor of the respondent's argument is that although it owed the tax the procedure followed to collect it was not proper. Even if a taxpayer could urge impropriety of the procedure adopted by the state to collect a due tax after the tax has been paid in an action to recover the tax, which is doubtful, it has been settled in this state from an early date that legislation providing a new and additional procedure for the enforcement of a pre-existing tax liability enacted subsequent to the time the tax should have been paid is valid and proper. People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332, 76 Am.Dec. 521; Moore v. Patch, 12 Cal. 265; see, also, Roth Drug, Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal.App.2d 720, 57 P.2d 1022. Under any one of these various theories the arguments advanced by respondent in this issue are unsound.

This disposes of the main points urged by respondent. In addition, however, it urges that the evidence supports the findings that certain of the transactions included within the deficiency were in fact tax exempt as found by the trial court. These transactions fall into the following classifications:

[10,11] A. The trial court found in reference to the San Francisco assessment, that distilled spirits represented by $70.04 of the assessment were not sold by the respondent to on- or off-sale licensees and never received by such licensees, but "were sold to a corporation located in the State of New York not licensed as an on- or off-sale retail distilled spirits licensee in the State of California and delivered to a representative of said corporation." According to the evidence, the facts in reference to this item were that respondent sold the distilled spirits to a distilled spirits dealer doing business in New York, but not licensed in California, and delivered the same to the New York company's salesman in California. Apparently these distilled spirits were to be used by the salesman in California as samples. The respondent had purchased liquors from the New York company, and received payment for these liquors delivered to the salesman in California by debiting its account with the New York company. Thus, there was a sale in California to a non-licensee, and the liquor left the control of respondent in California. Apparently it was the theory of the trial court, and it is the theory of respondent, that only sales to on- or off-sale retail licensees were taxable. That point has been disposed of adversely to the contentions of respondent in the Empire Vintage Co. case, supra, and reaffirmed in Civ. 11911, supra. Every sale of distilled spirits in California is subject to the tax unless the sale is exempt. The burden of showing that a particular sale is exempt rests on the taxpayer. It should be noted that this was not a sale between respondent, as a wholesaler, to the New York company as a wholesaler within the meaning of People v. Tux Winery Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 700, 67 P.2d 752. The rule of that case applies only where the purchasing wholesaler uses the purchased distilled spirits for resale. The burden to show that rested on respondent The respondent, having failed to sustain the burden resting upon it as to these sales, is not entitled to a refund.

[12] B. Sales to Steamship Companies. One of the items of the additional assessment levied on the San Francisco office of respondent amounting to $7.68, represented the tax on sales made to steamship companies. The trial court found that this sum was made up of three items. As to two of these sales the court found they were made while the distilled spirits were in a bonded warehouse and were sold for use on the high seas, and that as to the third sale the requisite tax stamp accompanied the delivery. It was the theory of the trial court that since this liquor was in a bonded warehouse its sale was not subject to tax. That factor has no relevancy to the issue. The sale was in California and delivery was made to the purchaser in San Francisco. The respondent had no further control of the merchandise after it was delivered in San Francisco. Respondent in no sense exported these distilled spirits. These points have been fully considered and passed upon in the case of Gooderham & Worts, Ltd. v. Collins, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 922. As there held, and for the reasons there stated, this type of sale is subject to the tax.

[13] As to the third item on which the stamps accompanied delivery, this transaction should not have been included in the additional assessment. On the retrial, this item should be fixed as to amount and an allowance made to respondent.

C. The auditors for the board found that certain sales made to retail licensees in admittedly taxable transactions on which the tax totaled $7.20 had not been accompanied by stamps at the time of delivery. During the trial the respondent expressly waived this item. Nevertheless, the trial court found that the board had no information that such liquor had been sold to, or received by, retail licensees, and, secondly, that the retail licensees purchased stamps for such liquor from other sources. The first part of the finding is based on a misconception of the law. As already held, the burden to show that the sales were nontaxable rested on respondent. As to the second part of the finding, neither litigant has seen fit to refer to the record where the evidence, if any, on this issue may be found. If supported by the evidence, obviously the respondent is entitled to a refund of the additional tax paid for this item. This may be clarified on the retrial.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from is reversed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 786

SAUERS WHOLESALE CO. v. COLLINS et al.

Civ. 11959.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 27, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest had burden of proving that transactions involving salesmen's samples were not taxable as representing sales between wholesaler and other wholesalers for resale. St.1935, p. 1123.

2. Intoxicating liquors 🔑90(1)

The statute imposing excise tax on distilled spirits sold in California as originally enacted did not require or contemplate that, if retailers already had stamps sufficient to cover purchases from a wholesaler, wholesaler was required to accompany delivery of liquor with more stamps. St.1935, p. 1123.

3. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest had burden of proving that sales to retail licensees not accompanied by proper amount of stamps involved sales to retailers who represented that they had stamps in their possession sufficient to cover purchases and that therefore transactions were not taxable to wholesaler. St.1935, p. 1123.

4. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

Liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest had burden of accounting for disposals of liquor not accounted for in wholesaler's books, and, if wholesaler was unable to do so, transactions were taxable. St.1935, p. 1123.

5. Intoxicating liquors 🔑96

In liquor wholesaler's action to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest, record did not support wholesaler's contention that figures testified to by auditor on direct examination showed that wholesaler had purchased more stamps than it was required to purchase during period in question. St.1935, p. 1123.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Benjamin C. Jones, Judge Assigned.

Action by Sauers Wholesale Company against R. E. Collins and others, as members of the State Board of Equalization, and others, to recover deficiency excise taxes collected under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., not participating; SPENCE, Acting Justice pro tem.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Sefton & Quattrin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by Sauers Wholesale Co. to recover deficiency excise taxes collected by the State Board of Equalization under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Stats. of 1935, p. 1123, ch. 330. The plaintiff during the period July 1, 1935, to June 30, 1937, was a duly licensed distilled spirits rectifier and distributor engaged in business in California, and, as such, for the two-year period above-mentioned paid to the state large sums of money under the tax statute here involved. Some time after July 1, 1937, the auditors of the board made an audit and examination of the books and records of the plaintiff. As a result of this audit and examination the board determined that for the two years in question there was due and owing from plaintiff an additional tax of $1,722.09. The plaintiff thereafter petitioned for a relevy of the tax and demanded a hearing, which was granted. The board thereafter determined that the above-mentioned sum was due from plaintiff. This sum was paid by the taxpayer under protest and this action instituted to recover the amount so paid. The trial court rendered judgment for the taxpayer for the total amount of $1,722.09. The trial court did not make specific findings concerning the items making up the total of the judgment. It was the theory of the trial court that prior to July 1, 1937, there was no provision of law authorizing the proceedings taken by the board against plaintiff.

On this appeal many of the points discussed are identical with those raised in the two Rathjen Bros. cases, Rathjen Bros. v. Collins, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 925, and Id., Civ. 11912, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 930; in fact, by stipulation the cases have been submitted on the same briefs. No useful purpose would be served by repeating what was said in those two opinions. For the reasons therein set forth, it is obvious that the judgment here appealed from must be reversed.

There are certain items in the alleged deficiency peculiar to this case. According to the report of the auditors the total deficiency of $1,722.09 was made up of the following items:

A.	Salesmen's Samples	$ 36.72
B.	Sales to retail licensees not accompanied by proper amount of stamps	51.32
C.	Unaccounted for disposals ..	1,634.05

[1] As to the first item—salesmen's samples—the court made no finding as to the facts, no such finding being required under its theory of the case. If these represented transactions similar to those involved in Civ. 11912, supra, they are governed by the rule therein announced, and are taxable. On the other hand, if they represented sales between plaintiff and other wholesalers or rectifiers, the purchased liquor to be used by the latter for resale, such sales are not taxable under the holding in People v. Tux Winery Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 700, 67 P.2d 752. On the new trial the exact factual background of such transactions may be ascertained, subject to the rule announced in the two Rathjen Bros. cases, supra, that the burden of proof to show that these transactions were nontaxable rests on plaintiff.

[2, 3] The second item of $51.32 represents the proper tax that should have been paid on several sales to retail licensees that were either not accompanied by any stamps or had attached to the invoices an insufficient amount of such stamps. Such transactions were admittedly taxable. In partial explanation of this item the president of plaintiff testified that some of those sales were to retailers who represented to plaintiff that they had stamps in their possession sufficient to cover the purchase. If such was the fact, such transactions were not taxable to respondent. As originally enacted in 1935 the act recognized the possibility of retailers securing the requisite stamps from others than wholesalers or rectifiers. The appellants' witnesses testified that during part of the period here involved the state permitted stamps to be sold directly to retailers. Obviously, if retailers already had stamps sufficient to cover purchases from the plaintiff, if the plaintiff had to accompany delivery of the distilled spirits with more stamps it would mean that the tax would be paid twice on the same liquor. Such double payment was, of course, not required or contemplated by the act. The trial court made no specific finding as to the quantity of distilled spirits that were involved in such transactions. Again keeping in mind the rule above-announced that the burden rests on respondent to show that any particular transaction was exempt, or did not require stamps, this is a matter which can be inquired into on the new trial.

[4] The third item of $1,634.05 represents the proper tax that should have been paid on disposals of distilled spirits where the books of respondent did not account for the disposals. As in the two Rathjen Bros. cases, supra, the respondent admits that during the taxable period it had on hand the gallonage as found by the auditors. It admits that the figures concerning the gallonage on hand at the close of the taxable period are correct, as well as the figures concerning its purchases of stamps. The only challenge of the figures of the auditors was in reference to the two items above-discussed. The respondent also concedes that all breakage shown by its books was allowed by the auditors as a deduction. In other words, there were certain disposals of distilled spirits not accounted for by the books of respondent. For the reasons set forth in full in Civ. 11912, supra, the burden was on respondent to account for these disposals. If it is unable to do so, the transactions are taxable.

[5] Respondent urges that the figures testified to by the auditor on direct examination by it showed that in fact respondent had purchased more stamps than it was required to purchase during the period in question. It is urged that because of this testimony the "auditor testified the State out of court." The contention is without merit and is based on a distortion of the record. On direct examination respondent's counsel did not bring out all the facts. He permitted the auditor to show the total stamps purchased and the total tax, and then asked no further questions on this issue. He did not ask whether, at the close of the tax period, the respondent had any of the purchased stamps on hand. This figure was correctly set forth in the audit, and brought out on cross-examination. The record is without conflict that, if the stamps on hand at the close of the tax period be deducted from the total purchases, the deficiency exists as found by the board.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 790

TONKIN DISTRIBUTING CO., Inc., v. COLLINS et al.

Civ. 11958.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

March 27, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Intoxicating liquors ⇨90(1)

If excise tax stamps were affixed to bottles by liquor retailer, subsequent breakage would not affect wholesaler's liability for taxes on broken bottles, and subsequent replacements should have been accompanied by stamps, but, if cases had not yet been broken, wholesaler could properly replace broken bottles, and stamps sent with first shipment could be used to pay tax. St.1935, p. 1123.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1008(1)

In liquor wholesaler's action to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest, whether certain sales to retail licensees were accompanied by a sufficient number and amount of stamps was for the trial court. St.1935, p. 1123.

3. Intoxicating liquors ⚷90(1)

Sale of liquor to retail licensee was not taxable to wholesaler where retailer had on hand a sufficient number of stamps purchased from another wholesaler. St.1935, p. 1123.

4. Intoxicating liquors ⚷96

Liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest had burden of proving that certain sales to retail licensees unaccompanied by stamps were exempt. St.1935, p. 1123.

5. Intoxicating liquors ⚷96

Liquor wholesaler which paid deficiency excise taxes under protest was entitled to refund with respect to sale to steamship company where sufficient quantity of stamps accompanied delivery. St.1935, p. 1123.

6. Intoxicating liquors ⚷90(1)

The statute imposing an excise tax on all distilled spirits sold in California does not exempt sales of spirits capable of use for beverage purposes, where buyer represents that they are to be used for a nonbeverage purpose. St.1935, p. 1123.

7. Intoxicating liquors ⚷96

Liquor wholesaler which paid deficiency excise taxes under protest was not entitled to refund with respect to sale of liquor to steamship companies on ground that liquor sold was not intended for beverage use. St. 1935, p. 1123.

8. Intoxicating liquors ⚷90(1)

Sales of liquor by wholesaler to steamship companies were subject to excise tax where sales were completed by wholesaler in California, and full control over liquor passed to buying companies in California. St.1935, p. 1123.

9. Intoxicating liquors ⚷96

Liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest had burden of proving that sales to nonlicensees were exempt on ground that liquor was actually exported from California and delivered for resale or consumption outside California. St.1935, p. 1135, § 30.

10. Intoxicating liquors ⚷90(1)

Under statute imposing excise tax on distilled spirits sold in California, transfers of samples directly given away by wholesaler for purpose of encouraging sale of wholesaler's product are not in the true sense "gratuitous", and the equalization board acted within its rule-making power in adopting rule requiring stamps to be attached to such samples. St.1935, pp. 1124, 1132, 1139, 1140, 1147, §§ 2(l), 24, 33, 34, 51.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gratuitous".

11. Intoxicating liquors ⚷96

Liquor wholesaler seeking to recover deficiency excise taxes paid under protest was entitled to refund with respect to assessment based on stamps returned from retailers because wholesaler had originally sent too many stamps with liquor involved when sold. St.1935, p. 1123.

12. Intoxicating liquors ⚷94

A liquor wholesaler who sends too many excise tax stamps to retailer for purchase made is entitled to a credit when stamps are returned by retailer. St.1935, p. 1123.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Action by Tonkin Distributing Company, Incorporated, a copartnership, against R. E. Collins and others, as members of the State Board of Equalization, and others, to recover deficiency excise taxes collected under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., not participating; SPENCE, Acting Justice pro tem.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Sefton & Quattrin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by Tonkin Distributing Co., Inc., a partnership, to recover deficiency excise taxes collected by the State Board of Equalization under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Stats. of 1935, p. 1123, chap. 330. The plaintiff during the period December 30, 1935, to June 30, 1937, was a duly licensed wholesaler, rectifier and importer engaged in business in California and, as such, for the year and a half period paid to the state large sums of money under the tax statute here involved. Some time after July 1, 1937, the auditors of the board made an audit and examination of the books and records of the plaintiff. As a result of this audit and examination the board determined that for the year and a half in question there was due and owing from plaintiff an additional tax of $554.27. The plaintiff thereafter petitioned for a relevy of the tax and demanded a hearing, which was granted. The board thereafter determined that the abovementioned sum was due from plaintiff. This sum was then paid by the plaintiff under protest, and this action instituted to recover the amount so paid. The trial court rendered judgment for the taxpayer for the total amount of $554.27. In addition to general findings the trial court made detailed findings concerning the respective items making up the total of the judgment. One of the theories of the trial court, and it so found, was that prior to July 1, 1937, there was no provision of law authorizing the proceedings taken by the board against plaintiff.

On this appeal many of the points discussed are identical with those raised in the two Rathjen Bros. cases, Rathjen Bros. v. Collins, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 925, and Id., Civ. 11912, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 930, and in Sauers Wholesale Co. v. Collins, Civ. 11959, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 936; in fact, by stipulation the cases have been submitted on the same briefs. No useful purpose would be served by repeating what was said in those three cases. For the reasons therein set forth it is obvious that the judgment here appealed from must be reversed.

The total alleged deficiency amounted to $554.27. This was made up of the following six items:

1.	Sales to retail licensees unaccompanied by stamps	$ 26.18
2.	Sales to steamship companies..	8.44
3.	Sales to non-licensees.........	396.30
4.	Samples	35.47
5.	Return of stamps from retailers	2.64
6.	Unaccounted for disposals....	85.24

1. Sales to retail licensees unaccompanied by stamps—total tax liability $26.18.

[1] This item involves nine different transactions. All transactions here involved were with retail licensees and were admittedly taxable. As to three of the transactions, on which the total tax was forty-eight cents, the trial court found that they involved "the replacement of broken distilled spirits bottles previously sold to retailers with deliveries of sufficient tax stamps to stamp properly said distilled spirits." The trial court did not find whether the breakage occurred before transit had ended and before the stamps were affixed, or whether the breakage occurred after the stamps were affixed by the retailer. If the stamps were affixed, the subsequent breakage would not affect the liability for taxes on the broken bottles, and the subsequent replacements should have been accompanied by stamps. Three G Distillery Corp. v. Johnson, 39 Cal.App.2d 431, 103 P.2d 429. But if the cases had not yet been broken the wholesaler may properly replace the broken goods and the stamps sent with the first shipment used to pay the tax.

[2] As to the fourth and fifth transactions, with a total tax liability of $19.30, the court found each of the sales was accompanied by a sufficient number and amount of stamps. The evidence supports the finding, and as to this item the taxpayer is entitled to a refund.

[3] As to the sixth transaction, with a tax liability of $1.92, the court found that the proper quantity of stamps were delivered to the retailer, but were returned because the retailer had on hand a sufficient number of stamps purchased from another wholesaler. Under the ruling in the case of Sauers Wholesale Co. v. Collins, Civ. 11959, supra, on this same issue this particular sale was not taxable to respondent. The respondent was entitled to a refund on this item.

[4] As to the remaining three items, the court found that the board had no evidence that the transactions were taxable. This finding is based on an incorrect theory. The burden was on the respondent in this proceeding to show that the transactions were exempt. It did not sustain this burden.

2. Sales to Steamship Companies—total tax liability $8.44.

[5] This item was made up of eight separate transactions. As to one of them, on which the tax amounted to $2.40, the court found a sufficient quantity of stamps accompanied delivery. As to this item the respondent is entitled to a refund.

[6, 7] As to the second and third transactions, on which the tax liability was seventy-two cents, the court found that the distilled spirits were not intended for beverage use. There is no exemption in the act for sales of distilled spirits capable of being used for beverage purposes where the purchaser represents they are to be used for a nonbeverage purpose. The respondent is not entitled to a refund of this item.

[8] As to the remaining five transactions, they involved situations identical with those present in Civ. 11912, supra, 123 P.2d 930, and in Gooderham & Worts, Ltd. v. Collins, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 922. For the reasons there set forth, these transactions were taxable. The evidence shows without conflict that these sales were completed by respondent in California. Full control over the distilled spirits passed to the purchaser in California.

3. Sales to Non-Licensees—total tax liability $396.30.

[9] As to this item the findings of the trial court are not entirely clear. It was found that the distilled spirits represented by this portion of the assessment were not sold for resale in California, but were actually exported from California and delivered for resale or consumption outside California. Some of the transactions involved actual deliveries to the purchaser's agent in California. If control of the liquor passed to the purchaser or his agent in California the transaction is taxable for the same reasons set forth in the discussion of sales to steamship companies. By section 30 of the act as passed in 1935 it was provided:

> "None of the provisions of this act shall apply, or be construed to apply, to commerce with foreign Nations or commerce with the several States, except in so far as the same may be permitted under the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the United States. * * *
>
> "In support of any exemption from excise taxes claimed under this section on account of the exportation of alcoholic beverage every manufacturer must execute an export certificate in such form as shall be prescribed, prepared and furnished by the board containing a sworn statement made by some person having knowledge of the fact of such exportation that the alcoholic beverage has been exported from this State, and giving such detail with reference to shipment as said board may require. All exportation certificates must be completed and on file in the office of the board within thirty days after the close of the calendar month in which the shipments were made and no certificate not completed and filed within such period shall be recognized for any purpose by the State or any agency thereof. The board may demand of any manufacturer or importer such additional data as is deemed necessary by said board in support of any such certificate and failure to supply such data will constitute waiver of all right to exemption claimed by virtue of said certificate."

The last paragraph of the section deals with how this exemption must be claimed. There is no finding as to whether compliance was had with these requirements. The burden was on respondent to show that the sale was exempt. This matter may be clarified by proper evidence and findings on the new trial.

4. Samples—total tax liability $35.47.

[10] As to this item the trial court found that the distilled spirits involved "were given away as donations or samples without any consideration of any kind being given to the plaintiff for the same; and I further find that said distilled spirits were not given away in connection with the sale of any distilled spirits." This case, unlike the problem present in Civ. 11912, supra, and in the Sauers Wholesale Co. case, Civ. 11959, supra, involves samples directly given away by the wholesaler, rather than sales of liquor to another to be used by the purchaser for samples. By board rule it is provided that such samples must be accompanied by stamps. The question as to whether samples given away by wholesalers must be accompanied by stamps is not an easy one. By section 24 of the act the tax is imposed on "distilled spirits sold" in California. Section 2 (l) defines the terms "sell" or "sale" or "to sell" very broadly, and, among other things, provides that the terms shall include: "to traffic in or deliver for value or in any way other than gratuitously." Sections 33 and 34 require the stamping of all distilled spirits not on the premises of licensed manufacturers, wholesalers, etc., and under section 51 all unstamped distilled spirits found outside the premises of licensees were made subject to seizure and forfeiture or destruction. Obviously, the use of samples is for the purpose of encouraging the sale of the product. For that reason such transfers are not, in the true sense, gratuitous. Under these circumstances, we think the board acted within its rule-making power in adopting the rule requiring stamps to be attached to samples. These transactions were therefore taxable.

5. Return of Stamps from Retailers—tax liability $2.64.

[11, 12] As to this item the trial court found that the assessment was "based on excise stamps returned from retailers to the plaintiff because the plaintiff had originally, in selling the distilled spirits involved, sent too many stamps with said distilled spirits." Obviously, if the wholesaler sends too many stamps for the purchase made, when the stamps are returned the wholesaler is entitled to a credit. The respondent was entitled to a refund on this item.

6. Undisclosed disposals—tax liability $85.24.

The problems here presented are identical with those presented in Civ. 11912, supra, 123 P.2d 930, and Civ. 11959, supra, 123 P.2d 936. For reasons there set forth the findings in reference thereto are not supported by the evidence.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from is reversed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 810

RIVES-STRONG BLDG., Inc., v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N.

Civ. 13280.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 27, 1942.

1. Arbitration and award 🔑1

The determination of values or other calculations involved in voluntary contracts, between individuals, and therein for convenience left to third persons, not being the subject of a civil action, the arbitration statute is not intended to apply to such type of agreement. Code Civ.Proc. § 1280 et seq.

2. Arbitration and award 🔑1

In determining whether there was an arbitration agreement within meaning of statute, the use of the word "arbitrator" was not controlling. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280, 1281.

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑201

In action by lessor to set aside an award under an arbitration agreement in lease, on ground that it was contrary to the provisions of statute dealing with arbitration and award, and to have court determine reasonable monthly rental to be paid by lessee, burden was on lessor to show that award was invalid. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280, 1281.

4. Landlord and tenant 🔑201

In action by lessor to set aside an award under an arbitration agreement in lease, if lessor chose to attack award for procedural defects, and trial court found that statutory processes required in cases of arbitration had not been followed, award would not be invalidated if such omitted procedure was unnecessary to validity of award. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280, 1281.

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑201

Lease provision, which was merely a method agreed on for determining rental value by arbitrators, was not an "arbitration agreement" within contemplation of arbitration statute, and hence there was no basis for declaring award made by arbitrators invalid because of their failure to observe the requirements of arbitration statute. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280, 1281.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arbitration Agreement".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court Los Angeles County; Clement L. Shinn, Judge.

Action by the Rives-Strong Building, Incorporated, against the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, to set aside an award of arbitrators and to have the court determine the fair, just and reasonable monthly rental of premises to be paid by defendant and received by plaintiff, wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking confirmation of the award. From an adverse judgment, the defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed, and judgment ordered for defendant on complaint and for cross-defendant on cross-complaint.

Edmund Nelson and William C. Day, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Vernon Bettin, L. W. Andrews, and Mortimer Kline, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

Appeal by defendant from a decree of the superior court nullifying an award made by a majority of a board designated in a lease as "arbitrators," and directing further proceedings in the trial for the purpose of determining the fair, just and reasonable monthly rental to be paid by defendant.

Appellant and the predecessor of respondent entered into a lease on October 1, 1925, by which respondent, as lessor, leased to appellant's predecessor, as lessee, the ground floor and certain other portions of a business building in Los Angeles for banking purposes, for a term of 24 years and 5 months. The lease was not introduced into evidence, but the complaint alleged and the court found "that said lease by its terms provided a fixed rental for the first four years and five months of said term, ending December 31, 1929; and that thereafter the rental for each succeeding five-year period was to be adjusted up or down as conditions warranted, so as to arrive at a fair and just rental of said premises, and in that behalf, in fixing the rental for the next five-year period,—commencing January 1, 1930, and ending December 31, 1934,—the parties, between the first day of August and the first day of October, 1929, would give consideration to the various factors and elements affecting the situation, and by mutual agreement fix the rental for such period; and if after due consideration the parties were unable to agree upon the amount of rental for such period, and there was such difference of opinion as resulted in a controversy between the parties, then that the amount of said rental for said five-year period would be determined by arbitration, and for that purpose each party to the lease should appoint one arbitrator at least eighty days prior to January 1, 1930, and notify the other party in writing of such appointment, and the two arbitrators so selected should thereupon and within the next five days name a third arbitrator, mutually agreed upon by them, and the three arbitrators so selected should proceed with the arbitration, to the end that they should, within five days thereafter, make an award determining upon a fair and just rental for the demised premises for the ensuing five-year period subsequent to January 1, 1930. Said lease further provides that the amount of rental to be paid for each ensuing five-year period, subsequent to said five years expiring December 31, 1934, should be determined between August 1st and October 1st of the last year of each such five-year period, in the same manner, by conferences and consideration of the then existing conditions and such changes as might have intervened, affecting the situation, and by agreement of the parties; and in event there was such controversy with respect to the matters, that the parties could not agree within said time upon the amount of rent to be fixed for the next five years, the same should be determined by arbitration in the manner above specified."

On April 10, 1929, a modification of the lease was entered into between the parties, fixing the rental for the five-year period beginning January 1, 1930, permitting lessee to make certain alterations, and making some minor modifications not affecting the rental, and in all other respects leaving the lease unchanged.

When the parties attempted by negotiation to fix the rental for the period commencing January 1, 1940, they were unable to agree, and thereupon, pursuant to the lease, each appointed an "arbitrator" and these two appointed a third. After making such investigation as they deemed necessary, interviewing the parties, inspecting the premises, collecting data from various sources and otherwise satisfying themselves that they had acquired all the necessary information, the three members held a final meeting and two of them agreed upon and signed an award fixing the rental for the period. No formal hearings were had at which witnesses were sworn to testify or subjected to cross-examination, and no notices of meetings were given to lessor or lessee.

Respondent (lessor) thereafter served upon appellant a written notice rejecting the award as being contrary to law and particularly to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure with respect to arbitration and award, and then brought the present action seeking to set aside the award and praying that the court "determine the fair, just and reasonable monthly rental of said premises to be paid by defendant and received by plaintiff during the five-year period commencing January 1, 1940, and ending December 31, 1944." Defendant (appellant) answered and also filed a cross-complaint seeking confirmation of the award. Upon the trial it was stipulated that the court first hear and determine the issue whether the award be vacated as prayed in the complaint or confirmed as requested in the cross-complaint, and that all other issues be reserved for future determination.

The trial court found "that the arbitrators acted in good faith but they were not informed and did not know that as arbitrators they were required to have a hearing or hearings and that the parties to the arbitration had the right to be advised in advance of the time and place of such hearings and the right to attend and offer evidence for the consideration of the arbitrators, question witnesses and respectively present their case to the arbitrators." The court also found, however, "that it is not true that said arbitrators or some of them refused to consider evidence pertinent or material to the controversy or refused to take into consideration pertinent or material facts in reaching a determination of the controversy." The court then proceeded to find that the arbitrators had failed to observe the requirements and to accord the parties the rights to which they were entitled under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure governing arbitration and award, and concluded therefrom that the arbitrators had been guilty of misconduct as defined by the statute and "that no arbitration was conducted by said arbitrators as required by law." There is nothing in the findings or decree in any way reflecting upon any of the three appointees or questioning their good faith or ability, or the thoroughness or accuracy of their work. The decree declares the award null and void and directs further proceedings to determine the fair, just and reasonable monthly rental, etc.

Appellant does not attack the findings, but contends that they do not support the conclusions of law; that a proper construction of the lease discloses that it was never intended by the parties as, and did not amount to, an agreement for formal arbitration of a controversy as contemplated by Code of Civil Procedure, section 1280 et seq., but was a simple method of determining the rental value at the beginning of each five-year period through the customary method of accepting a valuation fixed by three disinterested appraisers. It is apparent, therefore, that the determination of this appeal rests upon the question of whether or not the provisions of the lease constitute an arbitration agreement as contemplated by Code of Civil Procedure, section 1280 et seq., or possibly as recognized by common law. It should be noted that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure governing this subject have undergone substantial change since the making of the lease, and the latter should be construed in the light of the statute as it existed at that time, notwithstanding the subsequent modification which in no way affected the provision now under consideration. However, in the view we take of it this does not assume the importance accorded it in the briefs.

[1] The subject of agreements for submission of controversies to arbitration has engaged the attention of the courts since very early times. They were frowned upon by the courts as being a substitute for the established judicial machinery, and it was thought that individuals should not be deprived of the right to have their controversies heard by the courts, even by their own acts. It was well established that courts would not enforce an executory agreement to submit to arbitration. Levy v. Superior Court, 15 Cal.2d 692, 698, 699, 104 P.2d 770, 129 A.L.R. 956. In the early case of Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307, 314, 38 Am.Rep. 54, we find a quotation from Coleridge, J., in the House of Lords in which he discusses the subject and points out the recognized difference between an agreement to arbitrate an existing controversy and a provision in a contract by which valuations are to be determined by reference to third persons as appraisers. This case is also cited by the Supreme Court in Blodgett Co. v. Bebe Co., 190 Cal. 665, 668, 214 P. 38, 26 A.L.R. 1070, in which the same distinction is discussed and recognized. The general subject was incorporated in our codes (Code Civ.Proc., § 1281 et seq.), and this statute when enacted confined such contracts to controversies "which might be the subject of a civil action between" the parties thereto. As the determination of values or other calculations involved in voluntary contracts between individuals, and therein for convenience left to third persons, could not be the subject of a civil action, it seems clear that the statute was not intended to apply to this type of agreement. In other words, the statute recognized the distinction that had been long established by the courts.

In California Annual Conference of M. E. Church v. Seitz, 74 Cal. 287, 15 P. 839, defendant was the owner of a parcel of land and one Perkins, plaintiff's assignor, owned certain buildings upon it. Defendant leased to Perkins with the provision that at the expiration of the term the latter should have the option to remove the buildings or to require defendant to take them at a valuation "to be ascertained by two persons, one to be chosen by each party; and, in case the persons so chosen disagree, those two shall choose an umpire, whose decision shall be final and binding on the parties." Pursuant thereto the persons were selected and determined upon a figure, but defendant refused to pay and plaintiff sued for the amount of the award. Defendant contended that the agreement amounted to an arbitration and that the award was invalid because the arbitrators were not sworn, the parties had no notice of meetings and no opportunity to be heard. After stating that "the question presented, then, is whether the agreement amounts to a submission to arbitration," the court said:

"There are two time-honored rules in relation to arbitrators,—one that courts will not enforce an agreement to submit to arbitration, or, in other words, that it can be revoked; and the other that arbitrators must give notice of their sessions so as to afford the parties a right to be heard. These rules rest upon the same idea, viz., that an arbitration is a substitute for proceedings in court. It being considered against sound policy to allow parties to deprive themselves of their right of resort to the courts, agreements to that effect are not binding so long as they are executory; but if the parties choose to resort to other tribunals, such tribunals are held to the more important rules which govern courts in their proceedings.

"It was found, however that to apply the above rules to all agreements in which parties regulated their action by the determination of third persons would interfere with the ordinary transactions of mankind, and put unnecessary clogs upon business. Accordingly in the well-considered case of Scott v. Avery, 5 H.L.Cas. 811, it was held that a condition in a policy of insurance in a mutual company, that the loss should be 'ascertained and settled by the committee,' was not a submission to arbitration in its proper sense, but was a condition precedent to the right of action. Similar decisions have been made in this and other states. Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307 [38 Am.Rep. 54]; Loup v. [California Southern] R. R. Co., 63 Cal. [97], 103; Cox v. McLaughlin, 63 Cal. [196], 207; Old Saucelito etc., Co. v. Commercial U. A. Co., 66 Cal. 253, 5 P. 232; Adams v. [South British, etc.], Ins. Co., 70 Cal. 198, 11 P. 627; Carroll v. [Girard Fire] Ins. Co., [72 Cal. 297], 13 P. 863; [President, etc., of D. & H.] C. Co. v. [Pennsylvania] Coal Co., 50 N.Y. 250; Hudson v. McCartney, 33 Wis. [331], 344; Haley v. Bellamy, 137 Mass. [357], 359; Flint v. Pearce, 11 R.I. [576], 577; Gauche v. London Ins. Co., C.C., 10 F. [347], 355; Fox v. [Hempfield] R. Co., [Fed Cas. No. 5,010], 3 Wall. Jr. 243, 245.

"These cases hold that a contract by which the value of property or the amount of damage is, for the purpose of the contract, to be fixed by third persons, is not a submission to arbitration, and therefore to enforce it does not trench upon the jurisdiction of the courts. Now, if this is so, if such a proceeding is not analogous to the investigation by a court of a controversy between the parties, why need it be conducted according to the rules which govern courts in their investigations? We think that it need not; that the proceeding is a mere appraisement or valuation, which, although binding upon the parties, is not the submission of a controversy to arbitration, and is, therefore, not subject to the rules which govern arbitrators. And to this effect are the best-considered cases."

After reviewing and quoting from numerous cases the court then quotes from a Massachusetts case, Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 373, as follows:

" 'A reference to a third person to fix by his judgment the price, quantity, or quality of material, to make an appraisement of property and the like, especially when such reference is one of the stipulations of a contract founded on other and good considerations, differs in many respects from an ordinary submission to arbitration. It is not revocable. The decision may be made without notice to or hearing of the parties, unless such notice and hearing be required by express provision or reasonable implication; and it may be made upon such principles as the person agreed on may see fit honestly to adopt, or upon such evidence as he may choose to receive.' See, also, Garred v. Macey, 10 Mo. [161], 164; Willingham v. Veal, 74 Ga. [755] 759; Gustaveson v. McGay, 12 Daly, N.Y., [423] 427."

Following this principle, it has been held that where the parties have agreed that a valuation shall be fixed in a certain manner they are entitled to have it fixed in that manner and not by a court in lieu thereof. Hooper v. Los Angeles Valve & F. Co., 55 Cal.App. 17, 21, 202 P. 911; Luedinghaus Lbr. Co. v. Luedinghaus, 9 Cir., 299 F. 111, 115.

Applying what has been said in these cases to the matter before us, it is difficult to see any difference in principle between a reference to determine rental value for a period of five years and one for the determination of the value of land, or of buildings, or of the amount and value of standing timber.

[2] Turning to the lease itself to determine what the parties intended, we find a very simple wording, with no conditions or restrictions placed upon the persons named, no method of procedure suggested and no hearings or notices mentioned. In fact, the provision is so aptly worded for the purpose of requiring a mere appraisal or valuation that if the word "appraiser" is substituted for the word "arbitrator" in the lease no serious contention could be made that the parties intended it to be a statutory arbitration agreement. The use of the word "arbitrator" is of course not controlling. Thompson v. Newman, 36 Cal.App. 248, 251, 171 P. 982. Particularly is this true in view of the almost interchangeable manner in which these terms are commonly used in agreements.

Rental adjustments by appraisers at stated intervals are now extremely common in long term business leases, and by their very nature they require prompt action. They are usually intended to avoid, rather than invite, long hearings in the nature of court procedure. That the parties herein had this in mind is indicated by the provision that the award should be made within five days. The three persons appointed were in fact all expert realtors, experienced as appraisers. It is obvious from an examination of the transcript that they considered themselves appointed for just one purpose, viz., to determine what in their judgment was a fair and just rental for the premises for the five-year period. From their actions in interviewing the parties, requesting certain information, inspecting the premises, etc., this construction of their duties by the three appointees must have been obvious as well to the parties. It does not appear that prior to the award either party made any objection to this procedure or made any demand or even request for a formal hearing. Of course, this would not be necessary if it was in fact a statutory arbitration agreement, but it is a circumstance indicating a construction of the document acquiesced in by the parties themselves. The statement is made in respondent's brief that the appraisers refused to permit the president of respondent corporation to appear at a hearing, but no such finding is made and the only testimony in that connection was by Mr. Strong, who said, "I simply asked him [Mr. Culver, one of the appraisers] if I could be there," and "he said it was not necessary for me to be there."

Counsel for respondent strongly urge that appellant has adopted a new theory on appeal that is inconsistent with the theory upon which the case was tried, and cite authorities which undoubtedly support the general rule contended for. It is not necessary to discuss the existence of the rule, but only to determine its applicability to the present proceeding. It should be remembered that respondent here is the plaintiff, who is seeking to have the award set aside for the reason that the so-called arbitrators did not comply with the requirements of the statute governing the subject of arbitration. The pertinent provisions of the lease were before the court and are set forth in the findings. The evidence describes in great detail exactly what the "arbitrators" did in performing their duties as they understood them, all of which the trial court specifically found was in good faith. It is difficult to see how the evidence could have been more full and complete, regardless of the theory of the trial. If, then, with all the facts before us in the findings, including the wording of the document which was the basis of the award, it appears that the legal conclusions of the trial court thereon were erroneous, does the rule go so far as to require us to follow the trial court in this error merely because counsel for defendant (appellant) contended for too much? We do not think so, nor would the ends of justice be served by such application of a rule established by the courts themselves as a means of furthering justice.

[3, 4] The burden was upon plaintiff to show that the award was invalid. If it chose to attack the award for alleged procedural defects, and the trial court found that the statutory processes required in cases of arbitration had not been followed, this still does not invalidate it if, in fact and in law, such omitted procedure was not at all necessary to the validity of the award.

[5] We hold that the lease provision under consideration was not an arbitration agreement within the contemplation of the statute, but that it constituted a method devised and agreed upon by the parties for determining the rental value of the property for the period in question, and that the persons chosen had no other duty to perform than to make this valuation. There were no conditions or restrictions or procedure laid down for them, and so far as appears from the findings and the evidence they went about their duties in good faith and to the best of their abilities, in the general manner customarily followed by appraisers. We therefore find no basis for declaring the award invalid. On the other hand, no arbitration agreement being involved, there is, of course, no basis for the action requested by the cross-complaint.

The judgment is reversed and judgment is ordered for defendant on the complaint and for cross-defendant on the cross-complaint. Appellant to recover costs.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 684

HUNTON et al. v. CALIFORNIA PORTLAND CEMENT CO. et al.

Civ. 2726.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 24, 1942.

1. Automobiles 🔑145

A 17-year-old truck driver colliding with another truck was not contributorily negligent because of his failure to have a chauffeur's license. Vehicle Code, §§ 71, 258, 267, 268, St.1935, pp. 98, 130, 131.

2. Automobiles 🔑138

A 17-year-old minor occasionally assisting father in trucking business and sometimes driving truck, without being employed for particular purpose of driving truck, and receiving money for clothing and incidental expenses, was not a "chauffeur" required by statute to have a license. Vehicle Code, §§ 71, 258, St.1935, pp. 98, 130.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Chauffeur".

3. Automobiles 🔑245(17, 62, 83, 90)

Evidence whether driver of a cement truck, voluntarily parking on curve which cut down visibility, or driver of sugar truck colliding with cement truck on misty day, was guilty of negligence proximately causing collision, was for jury.

4. Automobiles 🔑172(6)

A motorist stopping on pronounced curve on paved highway should anticipate that following motorist will have obstructed vision of highway ahead, particularly where visibility is affected by atmospheric conditions.

5. Trial 🔑165, 178

A nonsuit or directed verdict may be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence value and indulging in every legitimate inference deducible therefrom, evidence is insufficient to support verdict for plaintiff.

6. Judgment 🔑199(3)

A judgment notwithstanding verdict should be granted where motion for directed verdict which should have been granted has been denied and verdict has been rendered against moving party.

7. Appeal and error 🔑930(1)

All intendments are in favor of jury's verdict if opposing inferences can be drawn from the testimony.

8. Appeal and error 🔑978(1)

The conclusions of trial court granting new trial for errors in instructions will not be disturbed in absence of abuse of discretion.

9. Appeal and error 🔑978(1)

An order granting new trial for error in not giving instruction explaining rule correctly laid down in given instruction would not be disturbed, where trial court believed there had been miscarriage of justice and justification for order was fairly debatable.

10. Automobiles 🔑246(13)

An instruction that person parking on highway prima facie violates the law, and that he must show that it was necessary to park, was not error, the word "necessary" being used as synonym for "practicable". Vehicle Code, § 582, St.1935, p. 190.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary" and "Practicable".

11. Evidence ⚷507

In action involving collision with truck parked in highway, refusal to admit expert testimony of whether shoulder was fit to carry truck was proper, where condition of shoulder was observable to anyone at scene of accident.

12. Evidence ⚷507

Where there is clear evidence as to physical condition existing, expert testimony is unnecessary, for jury is as competent to draw conclusions from physical facts as is the expert.

13. Appeal and error ⚷882(10)

Defendants objecting to expert testimony offered by plaintiff could not complain of refusal to admit expert testimony offered by defendants on same subject matter.

◆

Appeals from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

Action by G. M. Hunton and others against the California Portland Cement Company and others for damages for alleged wrongful death of Merlin Hunton, deceased, and for damage to a truck. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff. From an order granting a new trial, the plaintiff appeals, and, from an order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the defendants appeal.

Orders affirmed.

Nottbusch & Nottbusch, of San Diego, and Head, Wellington & Jacobs, of Santa Ana, for plaintiffs and appellants.

Luce, Forward, Lee & Kunzel, of San Diego, for defendants and appellants.

WEST, Justice pro tem.

There are two appeals involved in this litigation. The plaintiff instituted the action to recover damages for the alleged wrongful death of his son, Merlin Hunton, who was killed when a truck he was driving ran into a cement truck owned by the California Portland Cement Company and operated by Wise. Plaintiff also seeks to recover for damage to his truck occasioned by the same accident.

Upon the completion of testimony defendants moved the court for a directed verdict, which motion was denied. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the amount of $6,500. Thereafter, defendants made a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. This motion was also denied. Defendants moved for a new trial which was granted by the trial court specifically upon the ground of errors of law alone. From the order granting a new trial plaintiff appealed. From the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict defendants appealed.

The facts out of which the litigation arose are as follows: At about the hour of six o'clock a.m. the plaintiff's son, Merlin Hunton, aged seventeen, was driving a Ford V-8 tractor with semi-trailer loaded with ten tons of sugar in a southerly direction on U. S. Highway No. 101, in what is known as Rose Canyon, north of the city of San Diego. At the time of the accident the highway at the point where the collision occurred, and also northerly and southerly of said point, was under construction. The east side of the highway had been excavated preparatory to paving. The west side consisted of three ten-foot strips of concrete suitable for driving purposes. North of the scene of the accident, at intervals, there were a number of signs indicating that the highway was under construction. Westerly of the highway was a shoulder of the width of from six to ten feet. Sometime prior to the accident the shoulder had been scratched or scarified preparatory to oiling.

The defendant Wise was driving a truck loaded with approximately nineteen tons of cement. He stopped on the westerly lane of traffic with the idea of unloading his cement, stepped out of his truck on the left-hand side and after taking a step or two from the truck observed the sugar truck driven by deceased proceeding southerly in the lane where he was parked. He jumped back into his truck and immediately thereafter the sugar truck collided with the rear of his vehicle. According to the testimony of Wise his truck had been standing a matter of seconds, or perhaps one minute, at the time of the impact.

At the point where Wise stopped the highway curves to the right. Several witnesses testified as to the distance the rear of the cement truck could be seen by one approaching from the north in a vehicle. This distance varied from three hundred to six hundred feet. There was no question but that there remained open for traffic at least twenty feet of pavement to the left or east of the defendant's truck.

Wendell Tedrow, who was riding in the sugar truck with the deceased at the time of the accident, testified that he did not see the standing cement truck until the vehicle in which he was riding was about one hundred fifty feet northerly of the point of impact, at which time deceased was driving at about fifteen miles per hour. He further stated that when they had arrived at a point about seventy-five feet to the rear of the cement truck decedent started to turn left to go around it but that the truck did not respond to the turning of the steering wheel and was directly in the rear of the parked truck at the time of the impact, at which time decedent had slowed the sugar truck to a speed of about six miles an hour. There was testimony to the effect that it is common for vehicles of the type of plaintiff's truck to fail to respond to turning while the brakes are applied, the tendency being for such vehicles under such conditions to go directly forward in spite of the effort made to change course.

Immediately after the impact the sugar truck caught fire and plaintiff's son was cremated in the vehicle.

At the trial defendants contended that it was impracticable for their truck to have been driven off the highway onto the shoulder to park in view of the torn or scarified condition of the shoulder, which had been dug to a depth of some three inches in the scratching operation. Defendant Wise said that he had observed the shoulder and that it was wet, loose and torn up.

There was evidence that the pavement was damp due to a heavy mist and also that the shoulder was damp from the same cause, and in addition that some water had been turned on the shoulder shortly before the accident occurred.

There was some difference of opinion as to whether the mist was still heavy or had cleared before the impact. There was no traffic approaching from the south and had decedent's turn to the left been successful he had ample room to clear the standing vehicle and to continue on towards San Diego. However, it should be stated that in view of the fact that the cement truck was parked on a curve there was not a clear view of the two open lanes for any great distance south of the parked cement truck.

Skid marks for approximately one hundred feet were visible on the pavement indicating the course of the plaintiff's truck.

The foregoing statement of facts was practically agreed upon as there was very little conflict with regard to the physical facts surrounding the occurrence.

We will consider first the appeal taken by defendants.

Defendants contend that the evidence without conflict establishes that the proximate cause of the accident was not the negligence of defendants but was the negligence of plaintiff's deceased son in not avoiding the standing truck in front of him; that plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in not avoiding the truck in spite of the fact that there was ample opportunity to do so, and further because at the time of the accident the deceased was less than eighteen years of age and was operating the sugar truck without a chauffeur's license in violation of the law.

It is the contention of defendants that the negligence of defendants' driver, Wise, was in no way a proximate cause of the accident but that the negligence of decedent in failing to avoid the stopped vehicle constitutes a separate, independent, negligent act and therefore becomes the proximate cause of the accident and makes the negligent conduct of Wise remote. Under such circumstances they affirm that the trial court erred in not granting their motion for a directed verdict and their subsequent motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

In support of their contention defendants rely upon the cases of Johnson v. Union Furniture Co., 31 Cal.App.2d 234, 87 P.2d 917, and McMillan v. Thompson, 140 Cal.App. 437, 35 P.2d 419.

In the first of these cases it appeared from plaintiff's complaint that the defendant had removed a bed from the home of deceased and had agreed that it should be returned before night; that defendant failed to return the bed, which necessitated decedent sleeping on the floor, and that while so sleeping decedent contracted pneumonia, from which his death ensued. The matter came up on an appeal from an order of the trial court sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. The District Court of Appeal affirmed the action of the trial court on the ground that the wrong alleged and the resulting damages claimed were not such as would be known by common experience to be usually and naturally in sequence, and that subsequent to the initial cause, to-wit, the failure to return the bed, there was a new intervening efficient cause, to-wit, the action of decedent himself, having its origin independent of the initial cause, which intervening cause could not reasonably have been foreseen by the defendant; that therefore there was a breaking of the connection between the act of the defendant and the incurring of the pneumonia and subsequent death and thus the initial cause became remote.

In McMillan v. Thompson, supra, defendant's truck was stopped on the right-hand portion of the paved highway. Plaintiff observed the truck when he was about 450 feet away and could see that it was completely stopped. He started to pass the truck when another car proceeding in the same direction crashed into the rear of plaintiff's vehicle. It was contended that under such circumstances the negligence, if any, of defendant was not a proximate cause of the accident because of the intervening act of the third person. This court upheld such contention under the facts stating that while it was true that the driver of the stopped truck must have known that other vehicles would be likely to pass he could not have anticipated reasonably that while a car was passing his truck a third car would come from behind and crash into the passing car, and that therefore the injury resulted not only from the intervening act but from one which was not reasonably to have been anticipated by the driver of the stopped truck as the result of his own act.

We do not believe that either of the foregoing cases are determinative of the situation here. Wise stopped his truck voluntarily upon a curve and while there was evidence to indicate that a view of the rear of the cement truck was unobstructed for a distance of from 300 to 600 feet away, nevertheless it does not appear that at that distance it could have been determined whether the cement truck was on the paved portion of the highway or on the shoulder. Furthermore, there was substantial evidence in the record that there was a mist prior to and at the time of the accident and which the jury might easily have concluded prevented the deceased from determining either the position of the stopped truck or whether it was moving until he arrived at a point some 150 feet back of the stopped truck, which was the point where the witness Tedrow first observed it. In addition thereto the curve in the road obviously would interfere to some extent with a determination by deceased as to whether there was any traffic approaching from the south. As heretofore observed, both of the cases relied upon by defendants clearly point out that so far as the facts there involved were concerned there was an intervening act on the part of a third person which broke the causal connection between the alleged negligence of the defendant and the damage complained of. Here such intervening cause does not appear. Defendant stopped his truck in a matter of seconds before the impact at a point where good visibility at least was affected to some extent by the curve in the road and perhaps by the misty character of the atmosphere.

Defendants contend that the decedent driver and his father, the plaintiff, were both guilty of contributory negligence, the decedent because he was driving the sugar truck as a chauffeur, when less than eighteen years of age, and the plaintiff because he permitted such driving, knowing that decedent had no chauffeur's license, and that he was ineligible to receive one, because of the prohibition of section 258 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 130, which provides: "No chauffeur's license shall be issued to any person under the age of eighteen years."

Section 71 of the Vehicle Code provides as follows: " 'Chauffeur' is a person who is employed by another for the principal purpose of driving a motor vehicle on the highways and receives compensation therefor."

Defendants contend that since sections 267 and 268 of the Vehicle Code require careful examination of the applicant for a license before the issuance thereof that the Legislature must have intended to prevent all persons under the age of eighteen years from operating trucks as chauffeurs, upon the theory that a person of immature years should not attempt the intricate task of propelling such vehicles along the highway.

The record discloses that the deceased was the possessor of an operator's license, but defendants seek to point out some difference in theory between the provisions involving the issuance of operators' licenses and those governing the issuance of chauffeurs' licenses. As an abstract proposition it may be that more skill is required in the operation of a heavy truck than in the management of a pleasure vehicle, but it does not follow that the question of possession of a chauffeur's license is material in a particular case irrespective of causal connection between the violation of a statute in failing to have such license and the damage complained of.

[1, 2] We believe the question is disposed of in the case of Strandt v. Cannon, 29 Cal.App.2d 509, 85 P.2d 160, where the proposition was clearly laid down that the driver's negligence is to be determined by the facts of the accident, and that the failure to have an operator's license is not evidence of the driver's incompetence or negligence, or that such negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of the accident. We believe this sufficiently disposes of defendants' contention in this regard, but it may be added that the evidence presented at the time of the trial indicated that decedent was not paid compensation by his father for his services in driving the truck, but rather that he was given from time to time such amounts of money as he needed for clothing, spending money and incidental expenses. It further appears that decedent was not employed for the principal purpose of driving a motor vehicle, but that he assisted his father from time to time in the trucking business in which his father was engaged. The decedent was therefore probably not a chauffeur in the sense referred to in section 71 of the Vehicle Code.

[3-7] We are unable to say as a matter of law that there is no other reasonable conclusion deducible from the evidence than that the proximate cause of the accident was the negligence of the decedent himself.

It seems obvious that when a driver of a vehicle stops it upon a paved highway where there is a pronounced curve he must anticipate that the driver of any vehicle following him would have an obstructed vision of the highway ahead and this is particularly true under circumstances where the evidence fairly discloses that visibility is affected by atmospheric conditions.

In Re Estate of Lances, 216 Cal. 397, 14 P.2d 768, the rule with regard to directing a verdict is set down as follows: "It has become the established law of this state that the power of the court to direct a verdict is absolutely the same as the power of the court to grant a nonsuit. A nonsuit or a directed verdict may be granted 'only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given.'"

In Hubbert v. Aztec Brewing Co., 26 Cal.App.2d 664, 80 P.2d 185, 1016, it was held that a judgment notwithstanding the verdict should be granted when a motion for a directed verdict which should have been granted has been denied and a verdict rendered against the moving party.

We are of the opinion that bearing in mind that all intendments are in favor of a verdict of a jury if opposing inferences can be drawn from the testimony, that this court should not disturb the action of the trial court in denying the motion.

As heretofore stated, the trial court granted defendants' motion for a new trial on errors of law alone. These alleged errors, as reflected by the briefs, pertain to two matters: first, alleged errors in instructions to the jury; and, second, the refusal of the trial court to permit expert testimony as to the condition of the shoulder west of the highway and the safety and practicability of defendant parking his truck thereon.

The following instruction was requested by the defendants and was refused by the court: "You are further instructed that in order to warrant a finding by you that negligence or an act not amounting to wanton wrong is the proximate cause of an injury, it must not only appear that the injury is the natural and probable consequence of the negligent and wrongful act, but that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of attending circumstances."

The court, however, did instruct the jury as follows: "Negligence, to be actionable, must be a proximate cause of the accident and injuries. The proximate cause of an injury is that which in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces the injury, and without which the result would not have occurred. It is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets in operation the factors that accomplish the injuries. It may operate directly or by putting intervening agencies in motion."

Defendants contend that the instruction on proximate cause given, left out the element of foreseeableness, and that they were prejudiced by the refusal to give their instruction supplying that element. They cite in support of their position Johnson v. Union Furniture Co., supra; Newman v. Steuernagel, 132 Cal.App. 417, 22 P.2d 780, and two out-of-state cases.

It is their contention that in order for an act of negligence on the part of a defendant to be a proximate cause of an injury it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of such act of negligence and that the party committing the act ought in reason to have foreseen the consequences in the light of attending circumstances.

It is true that the instructions on proximate cause failed specifically to include foreseeableness as an element of proximate cause.

Plaintiff concedes that the refused instruction is a proper one but contends that had it been given by the court it would have been merely an explanation of the instruction which was given on the subject. In this connection they direct attention to the case of Baillargeon v. Myers, 180 Cal. 504, 182 P. 37, where a definition of proximate cause substantially identical with that given here was designated as "satisfactory" by the Supreme Court and to the case of Queirolo v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 114 Cal.App. 610, 300 P. 487, 491, where the court instructed the jury as follows: "I instruct you that the proximate cause must be understood to be that which in the natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new independent cause, produces that event and without which the event would not occur."

In the latter case an instruction was refused which stated the test by which to determine the question of proximate cause by defining natural and probable consequences of a negligent act or omission as those which ought to have been foreseen or which could reasonably have been anticipated.

In commenting upon the propriety of the court's refusal to clarify or elucidate upon the meaning of the instruction last quoted the court held that the failure to give the requested instruction was not prejudicial error and used the following language: "Appellant concedes the correctness of this instruction, but complains that another offered by it, stating the test by which to determine the question of proximate cause, was improperly rejected. To constitute proximate cause, the injury must have been the natural and probable consequence of the negligent act (Williams v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co., 6 Cal.App. 715, 93 P. 122; Marton v. Jones, 44 Cal. App. 299, 186 P. 410; and it has been held that the consequence must be one which in the light of the circumstances an ordinarily prudent man ought reasonably to have foreseen might probably occur as the result of his negligence. (Benson v. Central Pac. Co., 98 Cal. 45, 32 P. 809, 33 P. 206; Marton v. Jones, supra; Henry v. Southern Pac. Co., 50 Cal. 176.) As has been stated, the latter rule is usually given in connection with the first as explanatory of it; that is to say, the natural and probable consequences of a negligent act or omission are those which ought to have been foreseen or could reasonably have been anticipated. 45 Cor.Jur., 'Negligence,' § 483, pp. 913, 917. The instruction given has, however, been approved as a satisfactory definition (Baillargeon v. Myers, 180 Cal. 504, 182 P. 37); and, while the offered instruction correctly explained the rule and might properly have been given, we cannot say that its refusal was prejudicially erroneous."

One distinction clearly appears between the situation confronting us and the situation in the Queirolo case. Here the trial court granted a new trial and we must determine whether its action in so doing was an abuse of discretion whereas there the appeal was by the defendant from the judgment.

[8, 9] It is fundamental that where the trial court grants a new trial on the ground of errors in instructions its conclusions will not be disturbed unless it appears that its discretion has been abused. Pozzobon v. O'Donnell, 1 Cal.App.2d 151, 36 P.2d 236; Pettigrew v. O'Donnell, 32 Cal. App.2d 502, 90 P.2d 93; Nance v. Fresno City Lines, Inc., 44 Cal.App.2d 868, 113 P. 2d 244. However, here a somewhat different question is presented in that there is no contention that the instruction on proximate cause did not properly state the rule but rather that the error occurred in failure to give an instruction, the effect of which was merely to explain to the jury the rule correctly laid down in the given instruction. We must conclude, however, that the trial court was in a better position to determine whether a miscarriage of justice resulted from its failure to make the explanation and, as was said in Pettigrew v. O'Donnell, supra, "so long as the case presents an instance showing a reasonable or even fairly debatable justification for the order, such action will not be set aside on appeal."

[10] In view of the foregoing we need dwell only briefly upon the other errors of law contended for by the defendants, but since any question should be avoided on the new trial, we will briefly allude to another instruction complained of. The court instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that one who parks his truck upon the paved or main traveled portion of a highway is prima facie a violator of the law, and it is incumbent upon him to show affirmatively that it was necessary to so park it at the time and place. It is not the duty of the plaintiff in a collision under such circumstances to show that such parking was not necessary, but it is the duty of the defendant to bring himself within the exception provided by the statute, as given to you in other instructions."

We are of the opinion that this instruction properly states the rule. In Casey v. Gritsch, 1 Cal.App.2d 206, 36 P.2d 696, and Smarda v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 265, 36 P.2d 701, almost the identical language was used by the court. Defendants contend, however, that the instruction requires the defendant to prove that it was necessary for him to park on the highway whereas the statute (sec. 582, Vehicle Code) enjoins a parking on the highway when it is practicable to park off the highway. We must assume, however, that in both Casey v. Gritsch and Smarda v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., supra, the word "necessary" was used advisedly and as a synonym for the word "practicable." We can find no error in this instruction.

The last specification of error, so far as reflected in the briefs, has to do with the refusal of the trial court to permit expert testimony as to whether the shoulder on the west side of the highway could safely carry defendants' truck and furthermore whether it was practicable to drive such truck onto the shoulder at the scene of the accident.

[11-13] We believe the court's original ruling was correct. The physical conditions were such as to be observable to anyone at the scene of the accident. Whether or not the condition described was such as to render the shoulder unfit to carry the defendants' truck or made it impracticable to drive on the shoulder was a matter of such common knowledge that the question was one of fact to be determined by the jurors without the aid of expert testimony. The expert evidence, if allowed, would be tantamount to a declaration by the trial court that the jury might side-step its duty of judging an ultimate fact and accept the judgment of the expert. Where there is clear evidence as to the physical condition existing, expert testimony is unnecessary for the jury is as competent to draw a conclusion from the physical facts as is the so-called expert. Furthermore, the record before us discloses that defendants objected to expert testimony concerning the practicability of parking on the shoulder when such evidence was offered by the plaintiff, and therefore it is difficult to see how they can complain because the court ruled in accordance with their own theory. The text writer in 3 Am.Jur., p. 432, succinctly states the rule as follows: "* * * a party cannot complain of the exclusion of evidence and of a consequent defect in the proof if it was excluded at his request. Neither can he complain of the exclusion of evidence offered by himself, where he has successfully objected to the admission of evidence of the same character offered by the adverse party."

No other matters require attention.

Both of the orders appealed from are affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

124 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

IN VOLUME

124 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

20 Cal.2d 133

CHELEDEN v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

S. F. 16659.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

1. Attorney and client 🔑53(1)

In disciplinary proceeding, Supreme Court considered attorney's prior record in reviewing a recommendation of disbarment.

2. Attorney and client 🔑53(2)

Evidence showing that attorney had frequent difficulties with his clients concerning money transactions and that he failed to give reasonably prompt attention to matters confided to his care warranted disbarment.

In Bank.

Petition by Algerdas N. Cheleden to review the action of the State Bar of California in recommending petitioner's disbarment.

Ordered that petitioner be disbarred.

Carey Van Fleet and Alfred J. Hennessy, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

W. Eugene Craven, of Merced, and Joseph J. Webb, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

By this proceeding petitioner seeks to have reviewed the recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that he be disbarred from the practice of the law by reason of conduct involving moral turpitude, and of violation of his oath and duties as an attorney at law. The proceedings heretofore had were based on six separate orders to show cause, which were issued during the period from February 16, 1940, to December 9, 1940. In the aggregate eight charges were embraced therein, each containing an accusation of professional misconduct by petitioner.

On May 8, 1940, petitioner entered a plea of guilty to a charge of petty theft, a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. He was convicted, but was thereafter granted probation for the period of one year. On receipt of a certified copy of the record of conviction on such charge, this court on January 23, 1941, entered an order by which petitioner was suspended from the practice of the law until further order of the court. Following such proceeding, the State Bar conducted an independent investigation with respect to the misconduct with which petitioner was charged in the several orders to show cause. After hearings were had thereon, the examining committee found petitioner guilty of all the charges except two which were embraced in Proceeding No. 1261 and which were subsequently dismissed. Thereafter the Board of Governors adopted the findings thus made and approved the recommendation of the examining committee that petitioner be disbarred.

The factual situations on which the several charges were found to be sustained are hereinafter referred to, as follows:

S. F. No. 1246 Petty Theft Charge.

On or about December 4, 1939, petitioner obtained from one Cameron, the barkeeper of a liquor tavern in the town of San Mateo, the sum of $15, for which he gave a check in that amount signed by him as drawer. At the hearings had in these proceedings, petitioner admitted that at the time he cashed the check he had no funds on deposit in the bank on which it was drawn, and claimed it was intended to constitute merely an evidence of indebtedness in the nature of an "I. O. U." Cameron testified that such was the understanding, although he admitted the check was placed in the cash drawer with other receipts and that on the following day it was endorsed and deposited in the bank together with other currency and checks. The bank refused to honor the check and it was returned to the owner of the tavern. Petitioner was requested to repay the sum of $15, which he failed to do, and on March 16, 1940, at the instance of Cameron, who laid a complaint before the district attorney of San Mateo County, petitioner was charged with a violation of section 476a of the Penal Code. Thereafter, and on May 8, 1940, the charge was dismissed and a new complaint charging a violation of section 484 of the Penal Code (petty theft) was issued against petitioner. He entered a plea of guilty to the charge and was convicted, but was granted probation on condition that he make restitution of the sum of $15. Petitioner testified that he repaid such sum and that he had entered a plea of guilty in order to avoid being tried in the superior court. The order of suspension by this court, heretofore referred to, was based on such conviction.

S. F. No. 1246 Second Count.

On March 12, 1940, petitioner visited a restaurant and bar in Burlingame, California, and in the presence of the bartender, R. E. Burkhead, he wrote a check in the sum of $25 which he made payable to himself, signing the name of Stephen Von Nagy as the drawer thereof. He endorsed the check and presented it to Burkhead, the latter testifying that petitioner told him he was the attorney for Von Nagy, who was out of town, and that he was authorized to draw checks on Von Nagy's account. Burkhead cashed the check for petitioner and it was deposited in the bank the following day, but in due course was returned by the bank for lack of an account in the name of Von Nagy. Thereupon petitioner was requested to repay the $25 and on his failure to do so Burkhead thereafter discussed the matter with the district attorney of San Mateo County, although no charges were brought against petitioner who later redeemed the check. Petitioner testified he had received Von Nagy's permission over the telephone to use the latter's name in signing a check; that it was not intended that the check would be deposited in the bank but that it was to be held as a memorandum of indebtedness until petitioner repaid the $25. According to Von Nagy's testimony, petitioner had previously represented him in two legal matters, and on one occasion during a period of time in which he owed petitioner the sum of about $35 the latter had telephoned him and asked permission to use his name for the purpose of raising some money. He testified that he gave petitioner such permission but was not informed of the manner in which his name would be used; that at no time had he authorized petitioner or anyone else to sign his name to a check, and that he had no account in the bank on which such check was drawn.

S. F. No. 1235 The Pulley Matter.

On or about June 26, 1940, petitioner entered into an agreement to represent William C. Pulley, who was then awaiting trial in the federal court on a charge of forgery. At that time petitioner was paid the sum of $50 and, Pulley contended, it was understood he was to receive another $50 if an acquittal were secured on the criminal charges. However, on the following day petitioner asked for and received from Pulley an additional $50 which he claimed would be required for the services of a handwriting expert, one Inspector LaTulipe. Petitioner then signed a written receipt indicating he had received the sum of $50 as a retainer fee and the $50 intended for the services of the handwriting expert, also that he was to receive another $50 if Pulley were acquitted on the criminal charges. Petitioner did not engage the services of LaTulipe or of any other handwriting expert, nor did he offer to return to Pulley the $50 he had received for such purpose. Pulley testified that a few days after he had given petitioner the second $50 he asked him if LaTulipe had been engaged to do the work, to which petitioner responded in the affirmative, stating further that LaTulipe had expressed the opinion that the handwriting on the instruments assertedly forged by Pulley was not in fact his handwriting and that LaTulipe would so testify at the trial. Mrs. Pulley testified that petitioner told her he had talked with LaTulipe and had paid him the $50, but that LaTulipe had stated he was too busy to take the case. Petitioner denied having told either Pulley or his wife that he had talked with LaTulipe—contending he had ascertained the services of LaTulipe were not available, and that he therefore attempted to secure the services of another handwriting expert. He stated that he had kept the $50 which was intended to be expended for La Tulipe's services for the reason that such sum was due him as a part of his fee (which he testified was the sum of $150), although, he asserted, he had intended to advance the $50 for LaTulipe's services had he been able to secure them. He stated that the receipt which he had signed to the contrary "did not mean anything." On July 3, 1940, petitioner made another demand upon Pulley for $50, assertedly required for the purpose—as testified to by Pulley and his wife—of defraying the expenses of entertaining certain federal investigators who, petitioner stated, were acting for the government in connection with Pulley's case. Pulley refused to advance the money requested. Petitioner denied that he requested the $50 for the purpose mentioned, but stated that such sum was due him as the balance of his fee, which he claimed he was entitled to receive at that time because of certain misstatements Pulley had made to him in connection with his case. On July 11, 1940, Pulley made a complaint concerning petitioner's conduct to United States District Judge Roche, before whom his case was pending, and at a hearing held on the charges made against him petitioner agreed to withdraw as Pulley's attorney and to refund to the latter, within a stated period, the sum of $100. The money was not so refunded and on July 27, 1940, Judge Roche made an order by which petitioner was denied the right to appear in that court as an attorney until further order of the court.

S. F. No. 1201 The Ruelle Matter.

On September 15, 1939, petitioner agreed to institute an action on behalf of Mrs. Ora Ruelle, who resided in Mendocino County, to recover possession of a tractor and certain other farming equipment belonging to her, which assertedly had been wrongfully seized under judicial process. At the outset Mrs. Ruelle paid him the sum of $100, with the understanding that the action would be filed immediately. During the period from September 15, 1939, to February 1, 1940, she wrote petitioner several letters and made frequent trips to his office in San Francisco for the purpose of urging him to file her action. On December 11, 1940, upon his representation that $25 was needed in connection with bonds to be used in the action, she paid him such additional sum. The money was not so used, nor was it returned to her. Contrary to her claim in that respect petitioner testified that after he had received the $25 Mrs. Ruelle had instructed him not to file bonds in the action, but had told him he could retain the money to apply on his fee. On each of at least four occasions prior to February 1, 1940, petitioner sent a telegram to Mrs. Ruelle stating that he would file the complaint in her action on a definite date, but in each instance he failed to do so. On February 1, 1940, Mrs. Ruelle lodged charges of misconduct against petitioner with the State Bar. However, on that day petitioner filed the complaint in Mrs. Ruelle's case and thereafter, on his representation to her that he would proceed promptly with the prosecution thereof, and at his request, she withdrew the charges she had made against him. In due course, a demurrer to the complaint was sustained with leave to amend. Petitioner filed no amended complaint and a default was taken against Mrs. Ruelle. She then secured the services of another attorney, and as a result of his efforts the default was set aside. Petitioner claimed the delay in filing the complaint was due to his efforts towards securing a settlement. However, the evidence showed that on December 13, 1939, Mrs. Ruelle had instructed him to file the action immediately, and that thereafter his delay in the matter was contrary to his client's instructions. He failed to advance any meritorious reason for having permitted the default to be entered against his client—the evidence indicating that at the time the default was entered petitioner was the attorney of record for Mrs. Ruelle.

S. F. No. 1202 DeBarbe Matter.

On September 28, 1939, petitioner was paid the sum of $100 by J. J. DeBarbe of the city of Santa Rosa, under an agreement that he was to file bankruptcy proceedings in DeBarbe's behalf. There was evidence to show that on such occasion petitioner was given the names of the creditors and full information with respect to the financial status of his client, and that it was understood the necessary papers would be ready for filing within a period of two weeks. During the following four months DeBarbe made twelve trips from Santa Rosa to petitioner's office in San Francisco for the purpose of inquiring with regard to the progress of the bankruptcy matter and on each occasion, DeBarbe stated, petitioner informed him the papers would be ready for filing in about two weeks. On February 1, 1940, DeBarbe lodged a complaint against petitioner with the State Bar. On February 14, after petitioner had learned of the complaint so made, he prepared a petition in bankruptcy on behalf of DeBarbe which the latter signed. Petitioner then typed a letter to the State Bar requesting dismissal of the proceedings against him and, at petitioner's request, DeBarbe signed such letter. In defense of the charge of neglect in this matter petitioner claimed the delay in preparing the necessary papers was due to the fact that he had not been furnished with all the required information with respect to DeBarbe's financial status. Petitioner contended also that the sum of $100 which had been paid to him on September 28 was not advanced by DeBarbe but by a friend of the latter, and that such sum was intended to serve as partial payment for prior services assertedly performed by petitioner on behalf of DeBarbe. No substantial evidence was adduced to support petitioner's claims in either of those respects.

S. F. No. 1238 The Kenyon Matter.

On July 8, 1940, petitioner was engaged by Mrs. Frances Kenyon to represent her in divorce proceedings. She testified he was to prepare the necessary papers the following day; that it was agreed his fee would be $65, including costs, and on that date she paid him the sum of $25 on account of his fee (which he told her she could pay in installments); and that she thereupon signed a verification of the proposed complaint and supplied him with the facts on which she predicated her right to a divorce. Mrs. Kenyon further stated that on July 12, in response to petitioner's request, she paid him the sum of $5, and again on July 15, an additional $5, which amounts, he informed her, were required to secure a "certified decree." No action was filed, however, and on July 29, 1940, Mrs. Kenyon made a complaint against petitioner to the State Bar. When petitioner learned of such complaint he telephoned to Mrs. Kenyon and stated he would file the action without further delay. She then informed him she did not desire to have him represent her further, whereupon he promised to immediately refund the moneys paid to him in the sum of $35. However, he failed to make such repayment then or at any time thereafter. According to Mrs. Kenyon's testimony, petitioner told her it would not be necessary for her to appear at the preliminary hearing before the State Bar, and intimated that if she did appear he would cause trouble for her. Petitioner contended it was understood he was to receive the entire sum of $65 before he commenced the divorce proceedings, and that the initial payment of $25 and the additional $10 which Mrs. Kenyon later paid him were to be credited as part of his fee. He further contended he had delayed instituting the proceedings for the reason that the facts on which the action would be predicated were "vague," and that he needed additional factual data before commencing the action, in order to circumvent any possible claim of collusion between Mrs. Kenyon and her husband.

[1] Among other things, some of the matters just related indicate that during a considerable portion of his brief period of practice of the law petitioner has had frequent difficulties with his clients concerning money transactions and his failure to give reasonably prompt attention to the matters confided to his care. His prior record, which this court will consider in proceedings of this character (Hennessy v. State Bar, 18 Cal.2d 685, 117 P.2d 326; Kennedy v. State Bar, 13 Cal.2d 236, 88 P.2d 920; Petersen v. State Bar, 16 Cal.2d 57, 104 P.2d 769), indicates a history of acts and conduct growing out of the attorney and client relationship similar to those last discussed. In each of seven previous instances complaint had been made to the State Bar—although after formal proceedings were had on two such complaints the proceedings were dismissed and on the remaining complaints no formal proceedings were instituted.

[2] Petitioner is thirty-six years of age and was admitted to the practice of the law in October, 1934. He is now employed in the shipyards in the bay region. He is married and has three small children. The present record shows that during the times involved in the charges here under review his family was often in want. It may be, therefore, as is suggested by the record, that in some instances where petitioner failed to return to his clients small sums of money which he had secured from them on the representation that such moneys were needed for costs or expenses incidental to their cases but were not so used, he was motivated by the necessities of his family in retaining such sums. However, on this record such a fact, even if it were satisfactorily established, cannot operate against the making of an order of disbarment at this time where it is shown that in addition to the existing order of suspension an independent investigation by the State Bar has disclosed further acts of professional misconduct which warrant the making of such an order.

It is therefore ordered that petitioner be disbarred from the practice of the law in this state and that his name be stricken from the roll of attorneys, the order to become effective thirty days after the filing of this decision.

---

20 Cal.2d 158

PLUMMER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

S. F. 16661.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

As Corrected April 21, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Divorce 🔑269(2)

The provisions of property settlement agreement, which is complete in itself and is merely referred to in divorce decree or approved by court but not actually made a part of decree, cannot be enforced by contempt proceedings.

2. Divorce 🔑249(2)

The provisions of property settlement agreement become a part of order of court and may be enforced as such, where language of agreement discloses intent to make agreement a part of future divorce decree, and agreement is actually incorporated in decree.

3. Divorce 🔑261

Property settlement agreement provisions can be enforced only if courts, in divorce decree, have ordered performance of such provisions.

4. Divorce 🔑269(2)

Support and maintenance provisions of property settlement agreement, complete in itself, could not be enforced by contempt proceeding, where divorce decree merely recited that agreement was ratified, approved and confirmed, and did not order performance of provisions thereof.

5. Judgment 🔑21

The rights of parties under mandatory judgment, whereby they may be subjected to punishment as contemnors for violation of its provisions, should not rest on conjecture, but language declaring such rights or imposing burdens should be clear.

6. Evidence 🔑5(2)

It is common knowledge that property settlement agreements often contain provisions which cannot be specifically enforced.

7. Divorce 🔑249(2)

Where trial court and parties intend that certain provisions of property settlement agreement should constitute part of divorce decree, trial court should set forth such provisions in decree and provide for their performance.

In Bank.

Mandamus proceeding by Gertrude E. Plummer against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and I. L. Harris, Judge thereof, to compel the respondents to hear and determine a contempt proceeding instituted by the petitioner against her former husband.

Writ denied.

Rehearing denied; EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

Albert Picard, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Phillip Barnett, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Petitioner has applied for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent Superior Court to hear and determine a contempt proceeding instituted by her against her former husband.

On October 19, 1937, petitioner commenced an action for divorce against her husband, C. T. Plummer, and on the same day the parties entered into an agreement providing for the settlement of their property rights, for stipulated monthly payments to be made by petitioner's husband to her for her support and maintenance, and forever releasing him from any other claims. The agreement recited that the parties had separated about a month before. It provided that Plummer was to pay premiums on a life insurance policy in which petitioner was to have rights "Until the remarriage of first party (petitioner) * * *;" that the monthly payments were for support and maintenance of petitioner and were to continue until she died or remarried; and that neither of the parties should have any claim against the other except as set forth in the agreement and each releases the other from contributing to "her or his maintenance as a wife or husband, as the case may be, during their natural lives * * *;" that it is the intention of the parties to "forever adjust all property rights growing out of said marriage, including the right to support and maintenance." Nothing is expressly stated with reference to the agreement being subject to the approval of the court, its being made a part of a divorce decree, or that a divorce action was contemplated. Petitioner alleged in her complaint in the divorce action: "That prior to the commencement of this action, by a written agreement, plaintiff and defendant settled and adjusted between themselves their respective rights in and to all community property of said marriage, which said settlement plaintiff hereby requests the court to approve and confirm." She prayed for the approval and confirmation of the agreement. The interlocutory decree of divorce entered on November 22, 1937, provided: "It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that that certain contract dated as of the 19th day of October, 1937, a copy of which is annexed hereto and made a part hereof, wherein the parties hereto agree upon a division of all of their community property be and it is hereby ratified, approved and confirmed." The final decree stated "that that certain contract dated as of the 19th day of October, 1937, a copy of which is annexed to the Interlocutory Decree of Divorce herein, wherein the parties hereto agree upon a division of all of their community property, be and it is hereby ratified, approved and confirmed." Petitioner alleges in her petition and it is not denied that the agreement was made in contemplation of divorce.

Petitioner's husband failing to make the payments as provided in the agreement, she instituted proceedings to have him declared in contempt for such failure. The court issued an order to show cause but dismissed the same at the time fixed for hearing and refused to hear the same on the ground that it was without jurisdiction because there was no order of the court that the payments be made. The issue presented is whether the provision for the monthly payments for support of petitioner is merely a part of a contract between the parties and enforceable only by ordinary contract remedies, or is an operative part of the divorce decrees to the extent that it may be enforced by contempt proceedings.

The problem was first presented for solution by an appellate court of this state in Tripp v. Superior Court, 61 Cal.App. 64, 214 P. 252, where the agreement was made after the divorce action was commenced and recited its commencement and indicated that the agreement was subject to approval of the court. The property rights of the parties were put in issue by the pleadings. The decree stated that the agreement was incorporated therein and it was then set forth in the body of the decree. To the contention that the decree did not order the making of the payments for which provision had been made in the agreement, the court stated at page 67 of 61 Cal.App., at page 253 of 214 P.:

"It is true that neither of the decrees contained such an order in express terms, but we are nevertheless of the opinion that petitioner's contention cannot be upheld. The agreement recited the fact that a divorce action was pending between the parties, and contained a formal stipulation that it should be subject to the approval of the court and that, when so approved, it should be embodied in the decree, in the divorce action. This stipulation surely contemplated that the terms of the agreement, when it should be embodied in the decree, should have the compelling power of the court behind its every covenant. The court had full power to deal with the matters covered by the agreement and to render its judgment thereon, at least to the extent of making proper provision for the support and maintenance of the wife, provided that it were first ascertained that petitioner was guilty of the charges made against him in the divorce action. Notwithstanding this power of the court, the parties undertook to stipulate a decree as to property matters, subject, under the law as well as under the agreement, to the approval of the court. This approval was evidenced by the fact that the agreement was incorporated in terms in both the interlocutory and final decrees, preceded in each instance by the statement that the agreement was made part of the decree. Under these circumstances we are convinced that the terms of the agreement, except in so far as they were executed either before or at the time of the interlocutory decree, became enforceable as mandates of the court." That case was followed by Andrews v. Superior Court, 103 Cal.App. 360, 284 P. 494, where the agreement was made after the divorce action was commenced; the complaint said nothing concerning the agreement. The decree provided that the agreement theretofore entered into was made a part thereof. The court held that was not sufficient to make the agreement an enforceable part of the decree, stating at page 363 of 103 Cal.App., at page 495 of 284 P.:

"Before proceeding further, it is necessary to determine the legal effect or force of that part of the interlocutory judgment complained of. A close study thereof shows only that a property settlement is made a part and portion of the judgment. The phrases, 'heretofore entered into between plaintiff and defendant,' 'and providing for payments to plaintiff of two hundred ($200.00) dollars per month,' and 'and on file in this case,' clearly are matters only of identification of a certain property settlement, and in no wise state any order for the payment of any sum. The interlocutory judgment contains no order, decree, or judgment for the payment of any sum." In regard to the Tripp case the court said at page 365 of 103 Cal. App., at page 496 of 284 P.: "* * * the court, after setting forth the property settlement in full in the interlocutory judgment, ordered in said judgment 'that said plaintiff shall take all of the community property as set forth in said property settlement and agreement as aforesaid.' Therefore that case is not authority for the contention that a mere incorporation by reference of a property settlement (not set forth in any pleading) in an interlocutory judgment of divorce is equivalent to a direct order for payment in accordance with such property settlement." Next was Ex parte Weiler, 106 Cal.App. 485, 289 P. 645, 646, in which the agreement was made before the divorce action was commenced and said nothing about divorce other than that it was to be referred to in and made a part of any divorce judgment. The complaint asked for an approval of the agreement, and the decree approved it and made it "a part of this decree." The court held that the agreement was enforceable as a part of the decree by contempt proceedings. In Schnerr v. Schnerr, 128 Cal.App. 363, 17 P.2d 749, the agreement was made before the divorce action was commenced and contained no provision that it was to be approved by the court or made a part of a divorce decree. The complaint merely referred to an agreement having been made and the divorce decree approved the agreement. It was held not to be enforceable as part of the decree. In Baxter v. Baxter, 3 Cal.App.2d 676, 40 P.2d 536, 537, the agreement was made the same day the action was commenced; it mentioned a possibility of divorce but no suggestion of approval by the court appeared. The complaint did not mention the agreement; it was introduced as an exhibit. The decree approved the agreement and stated that it "is hereby * * * made a part of this * * * decree." The court held that the agreement was not an enforceable part of the decree stating at page 682 of 3 Cal.App.2d, at page 539 of 40 P. 2d:

"Where a property settlement agreement contains a provision that it shall not go into effect until it is approved by the court, and is therefore rather in the nature of a stipulation of the parties than a final agreement, and the complaint in a divorce action contains the proper allegations and prayer looking toward the settlement of the property rights of the parties, an order of the court that the terms of the contract be carried out will be implied from the incorporation of the agreement in the decree, either bodily or by reference. Tripp v. Superior Court, 61 Cal. App. 64, 214 P. 252, 253; Ex parte Weiler, 106 Cal.App. 485, 289 P. 645, 646. But if the agreement is complete in itself, without reference to action by the court, and the plaintiff does not ask for a property settlement, the court does not, by merely approving the settlement or even by incorporating it in the decree, order the performance of the contract." The agreement in Petry v. Superior Court, 46 Cal. App.2d 756, 759, 116 P.2d 954, 956, was made after the divorce was commenced, and it was introduced into evidence at a default hearing and a request was made by the plaintiff that it be incorporated into the decree. The decree expressly ordered the performance of the agreement, but the court stated the rule to be:

"The mere approval of a property settlement, with nothing further, is not such an order. Miller v. Superior Court, [9 Cal.2d 733, 72 P.2d 868]; Schnerr v. Schnerr, 128 Cal.App. 363, 17 P.2d 749. If an agreement is complete in itself, without reference to action by the court, and the plaintiff does not ask for a property settlement, the court does not, by merely approving the settlement, or even by incorporating it in the decree, order the performance of the contract. Andrews v. Superior Court, 103 Cal.App. 360, 284 P. 494; De Haven v. Superior Court, 114 Cal.App. 253, 300 P. 95. On the other hand, where a property settlement agreement contains a provision that it shall not go into effect until it is approved by the court, and is therefore rather in the nature of a stipulation of the parties than a final agreement, and the complaint in a divorce action contains the proper allegations and prayer looking toward the settlement of the property rights of the parties, an order of the court that the terms of the contract be carried out will be implied from the incorporation of the agreement in the decree, either bodily or by reference." In Miller v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 733, 72 P.2d 868, an agreement was made prior to the institution of the divorce action and contained a clause for monthly payments for maintenance. The complaint requested that the agreement be made a part of the decree; the decree approved the agreement and ordered the payment of the money. Finally, in an endeavor to reconcile and rationalize the various rules theretofore announced, this court set forth the controlling principles in Lazar v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 617, 620, 107 P.2d 249, 250, as follows:

[1-3] "If a property settlement agreement is complete in itself and is merely referred to in a divorce decree or approved by the court but not actually made a part of the decree, then the provisions of such agreement cannot be enforced by contempt proceedings. Baxter v. Baxter, 3 Cal. App.2d 676, 40 P.2d 536; Schnerr v. Schnerr, 128 Cal.App. 363, 17 P.2d 749. On the other hand, if, by the language of the agreement itself, it is shown that the intent was to make the agreement a part of a future divorce decree and, if the agreement is actually incorporated in the decree, then such provisions become a part of the order of the court and may be enforced as such." Whatever may have been the rule before the Lazar case, it is now settled that in order to authorize the enforcement of the provisions of a property settlement agreement by a contempt proceeding, the court must order the performance of such provisions.

[4] Applying the foregoing rule to the case at bar we find that, even if it be assumed that the agreement was so incorporated into the decree that an order for compliance therewith could be implied, there is nothing in the agreement which necessarily shows an intent to make it a part of a future divorce decree. Nothing is said therein regarding the approval of the agreement by the court, nor that it should become a part of a subsequent decree. The reference therein to the payments being for maintenance and support, and a release of all other claims for support are wholly consistent with the agreement being in view of separation with no divorce involved. The agreement is complete in itself. However, the divorce decrees do not order or direct either party to do or perform any act or carry out any provision or stipulation provided for in the agreement. The interlocutory decree simply by way of recital states that a copy of the contract "annexed hereto and made a part hereof * * * is hereby ratified, approved and confirmed." The final decree contains a similar recital.

In the Lazar case, supra, certain provisions of the agreement were set forth in the decree in haec verba following the words "It is ordered, adjudged and decreed" that the acts provided for therein be performed. In other words, the court expressly ordered that such provisions be performed. Such is not the case here, and it cannot be said that it was the intention of either the parties or the court that the provisions of the agreement be made a part of the decrees to the extent they were reduced to a final mandatory judgment, ordering and commanding the performance of certain acts, a failure to perform which would constitute a contempt of court.

[5] The rights of the parties under a mandatory judgment whereby they may be subjected to punishment as contemnors for a violation of its provisions, should not rest upon implication or conjecture, but the language declaring such rights or imposing burdens should be clear, specific and unequivocal so that the parties may not be misled thereby.

[6, 7] Situations may arise where a trial court may be disposed to approve a property settlement agreement in a divorce action, and for the purpose of identifying such agreement, cause the same to be annexed to the interlocutory decree of divorce, but for obvious reasons would refrain from making a mandatory order that the parties be required to perform each and every provision of such agreement or be subjected to a charge of contempt of court for failure to do so. It is a matter of common knowledge that such agreements often contain provisions which cannot be specifically enforced, and it would be idle for a court to make a mandatory order directing the performance of such provisions. In those cases where it is the intention of the parties and the court to have certain provisions of such an agreement constitute a part of the decree or judgment and made enforceable as such, the court may set forth such provisions in the decree and provide therein that the same be performed. This is the usual practice and when it is followed all doubt as to the effect of such provisions is removed.

No such intention appears from the decrees in the case at bar, and we therefore hold that the provisions of the agreement cannot be enforced by a contempt proceeding.

The peremptory writ of mandate prayed for is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, HOUSER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 82

STRACKE v. FARQUAR, City Clerk.

S. F. 16737.

Supreme Court of California.

March 31, 1942.

Mandamus 🔑16(1)

The city clerk would not be compelled by mandamus to omit names of candidates for councilman from municipal election ballot, where ballot had been printed and distributed to certain voters.

◆

In Bank.

Mandamus proceeding by Walter Stracke against Agnes S. Farquar, as city clerk, etc., to compel the omission of names from a ballot.

Writ denied.

G. H. Van Harvey, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

L. G. Hitchcock, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

De Meo & De Meo and Clarendon W. Anderson, all of Santa Rosa, Amici Curiae, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The petition for a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the respondent, as City Clerk of Santa Rosa, to omit the names of seven persons as candidates for the office of councilman from the ballot to be used at the municipal election to be held April 7, was denied in the exercise of the discretion of the court for the reason that it appeared from the answer and stipulation of the parties that the ballot already had been printed and distributed to certain voters. Such denial should not be taken or understood as an adjudication in any way of the questions of law presented by the petition.

---

20 Cal.2d 77

BECK v. SUPERIOR COURT OF MENDOCINO COUNTY et al.

Sac. 5470.

Supreme Court of California.

March 30, 1942.

1. New trial 🔑157

A motion for new trial is not a motion noticed for hearing under the practice and procedure with reference to motions made on notice by one party to another, but is set for hearing by order of court. Code Civ. Proc. § 661.

2. New trial 🔑114

The order of court setting for hearing a motion for new trial may be made either by the trial judge or a judge acting in his place subject to a continuance for the convenience of the judge who is to hear and determine the motion. Code Civ.Proc. § 661.

3. New trial 🔑155

Under the statute providing for the hearing and determination of motions for new trial, it is not necessary that such a motion be heard on the day first appointed. Code Civ.Proc. § 661.

4. New trial 🔑114

Under the statute providing for the hearing and determination of motions for new trial, where the trial judge is absent from the county on the day set for the hearing thereof, the motion may be heard by another judge qualified to preside in such court, notwithstanding that such other judge may find it necessary or desirable to continue the hearing to a later time. Code Civ. Proc. § 661.

5. New trial 🔑114

Where the trial judge was absent from the county on the day set for hearing of a motion for new trial and the judge of a neighboring county, who was qualified to preside in place of the trial judge under an assignment by the chairman of the judicial counsel, continued the hearing to familiarize himself with the evidence, he was qualified to finally determine the motion notwithstanding that the trial judge was in the county some or all of the time of the subsequent hearing. Code Civ.Proc. § 661.

◆

In Bank.

Writ of Review to Superior Court, Mendocino County; Donald Geary, Judge Assigned.

Proceedings for certiorari by Ethel Beck against the Superior Court of Mendocino County and others to review an order granting a new trial.

Order affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 115 P.2d 201.

William S. Van Dyke and W. H. Brunner, both of Ukiah, for petitioner.

Lilburn Gibson and Mannon & Brazier, all of Ukiah, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

By this proceeding in certiorari the petitioner seeks the annulment of an order granting a new trial.

In the matter of the Estate of Chris Norgard, deceased, the petitioner contested the will after probate. The contest was tried in the Superior Court in and for Mendocino County before Judge W. D. L. Held of that county sitting with a jury. A verdict in favor of the contestant was returned by the jury on October 26, 1940, and an order was entered on October 30, revoking the probate of the will. A notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed on November 7. On November 22 Judge Held made and entered in the minutes of the court an order reciting the presence of counsel for both parties and ordering that "the motion for a new trial is hereby set for December 6, 1940."

The minutes of the court of December 6, with Judge Held presiding, show the following: "said matter [Estate of Chris Norgard] is hereby continued to December 9, 1940 for hearing on motion for new trial." On December 9, Judge Donald Geary of the Superior Court in and for Sonoma County was presiding in the Superior Court in Mendocino County in the place of Judge Held, and in turn Judge Held was presiding on the same day in Sonoma County in Judge Geary's place. When the motion for a new trial was called by Judge Geary on December 9, both parties were represented by counsel. The minutes of the court for that day show: "This matter came on for hearing on motion for new trial * * * upon the statement of Judge Geary that Judge Held was supposed to be holding court in Sonoma County, it was stipulated that Judge Held is out of the County. Hearing is hereby continued by consent to December 18, 1940, in order that Judge Geary may read the transcript prepared in this matter." The minutes of December 18 show: "This matter came regularly on for hearing of motion for new trial. * * * Respective counsel stipulated that trial Judge Hon. W. D. L. Held is at this time absent from the County of Mendocino." After argument on that day the motion was submitted for decision. On December 28, Judge Geary signed an order granting a new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence and other grounds, which order was filed on December 30, 1940. No appeal was taken from this order.

On February 5, 1941, the contestant, petitioner here, filed a notice of motion to vacate the order granting a new trial on the ground "that said order granting a new trial is void as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the Hon. Donald Geary, the Judge who made and entered the same." In his affidavit which accompanied the notice of motion petitioner's counsel alleged that Judge Held was not absent from the County of Mendocino on December 18, 1941, but was merely absent from the city of Ukiah, the county seat, during the morning of that day. On February 10, 1941, the motion to vacate was heard by Judge Geary, affidavits and oral testimony were introduced and received on behalf of the respective parties, and an order was made denying the motion. The present proceeding was then commenced by the petitioner and the writ of certiorari issued.

It further appears from the petition and the return to the writ that when Judge Held called his calendar on December 6, 1940, he did not hear or otherwise entertain the motion for a new trial except to make an order continuing the same to December 9, 1940; that when the motion was called for hearing by Judge Geary on December 9, 1940, the transcript of the evidence taken at the trial was presented to the court for consideration on the motion; that Judge Geary then took note of the size and extent of the transcript so presented and stated that he wanted to read the transcript before he made a ruling on the motion; that in order that he might read the transcript in the meantime the further consideration of the motion was continued to December 18, 1940; that on the latter date Judge Geary heard the argument on the motion and made an order of submission; that counsel for the petitioner saw Judge Held at Ukiah, the county seat of Mendocino County, on that day after the motion for a new trial was submitted for decision to Judge Geary and suspected that Judge Held had been in Mendocino County when the motion was argued and submitted but had no definite information on that subject until January 23, 1941.

The petitioner relies on section 661 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides in part as follows: "The motion for a new trial shall be heard and determined by the judge who presided at the trial; provided, however, that in case of the inability of such judge or if at the time noticed for hearing thereon he is absent from the county where the trial was had, the same shall be heard and determined by any other judge of the same court. Upon the expiration of the time to file counter-affidavits the clerk forthwith shall call the motion to the attention of the judge who presided at the trial, or the judge acting in his place, as the case may be, and such judge thereupon shall designate the time for oral argument, if any, to be had on said motion."

It is the contention of the petitioner that on the record here presented Judge Geary was not qualified to hear and pass upon the motion for a new trial. In disposing of the contention it is of course taken as a fact that Judge Held was in Mendocino County on December 6, and it will be assumed, notwithstanding the stipulation to the contrary made by counsel for petitioner in open court on December 18, 1940, that Judge Held was not absent from the County of Mendocino on that day. With those facts in view counsel for petitioner insists that under the provisions of section 661 above quoted, Judge Geary had no power to hear and determine the motion.

[1-5] In the consideration of the meaning and effect of the quoted language of section 661 it is at once observed that a motion for a new trial is not such a motion as is "noticed for hearing" under the practice and procedure with reference to motions made on notice by one party to another. Such a motion is not set for hearing on such a notice but is set for hearing by order of court. This order need not be made by the judge who tried the case but may be made by a "judge acting in his place." Whether made by the judge who presided at the trial or the judge acting in his place the time so appointed may not suit the convenience of the judge who is to hear and determine the motion and a continuance may be necessary. There is nothing in the section which requires that the motion be heard on the day first appointed. In other words, as applied to the present proceeding, there is nothing in the section which could have prevented Judge Held from making the order, as he did on December 6, continuing the motion to a later date, and the motion would come on regularly for hearing on such later date before any judge qualified to hear the same. The date to which the motion was continued was December 9. Judge Geary was qualified to preside in the Superior Court in and for Mendocino County on that day under an assignment by the chairman of the Judicial Council. Judge Held was admittedly absent from the county on that day. Judge Geary was therefore qualified to hear the motion on that day and if he had both heard and determined the same on that day no question of his qualifications to do so could properly have arisen. Likewise if Judge Geary actually entered upon the hearing of the motion on that day he had the right to conclude the hearing at a later time even though a continuance for that purpose was found to be necessary or desirable.

The record shows that the hearing on the motion commenced on December 9. The motion was called on that day. The transcript of the evidence taken at the trial was thereupon submitted to the court, and was partially examined by Judge Geary. Because of the rather voluminous record and the fact that the main ground of the motion was the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict it was appropriate that the judge should desire to familiarize himself with the record before disposing of the motion. The consideration of the record so submitted to the court on December 9 should be deemed as much a part of the hearing on the motion as the subsequent argument on December 18 to which date the motion was continued for further hearing.

Since, therefore, the hearing on the motion had commenced on December 9, Judge Geary unquestionably had the right to continue the same for further hearing without affecting his qualifications to finally determine the motion notwithstanding the fact that Judge Held might have been within the county during some or all of the time of the subsequent hearing.

The order is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 124

In re WEAR'S ESTATE.

MILLER et al. v. ROLKIN et al.

S. F. 16301.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑513(9)

The final settlement of an account is conclusive as to all matters necessarily involved therein against all persons interested in the estate, except those under a legal disability. Probate Code, § 931; Code Civ. Proc. § 1911.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑513(9)

Where executor while acting as special administrator pending will contest reported that he and estate each had an interest in the unpaid balance on a note, the decree settling his final account as special administrator was "res judicata" and binding upon all persons concerned in the estate, of the respective interests of executor and estate in the note precluding subsequent dispute of executor's right to withhold his share of the payments on the note as received. Probate Code, § 931; Code Civ.Proc. § 1911.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

3. Executors and administrators 🔑510(13)

Where reversal by District Court of Appeal of order settling executor's account contained no instructions to trial court, the case was returned to that court for a new trial on all issues that might be raised, as though case had never been tried before.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑510(13)

Where decree settling executor's account was reversed without instructions requiring a new trial on all issues that might be raised, executor was not "estopped" from raising plea of res judicata to objections to his account for the first time on such new trial by his acquiescence to appointment of referee in first trial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

5. Executors and administrators 🔑510(13)

Where settlement of final account of special administrator determined interest of executor and estate in a note, executor's valid plea of res judicata rendered unnecessary consideration of objections to account of executor on ground that executor had filed no claim against estate with reference to the note. Probate Code, § 703.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Katie Richards Wear, deceased. From an order and decree settling the first account of Edward Rolkin as executor of the deceased's will contested by Theodore J. Miller and others, the executor appeals, and after his death pending appeal, Arline M. Rolkin and another, executors of his estate, were substituted as appellants.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 113 P.2d 732.

Frank J. Mahoney, of San Francisco, for appellants.

James M. Hanley, William B. Hornblower, and Herbert Chamberlin, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Mrs. Katie Richards Wear owned certain real property in Sonoma County encumbered by deeds of trust securing promissory notes for $27,800 and by a mortgage securing a note for $3,525. In 1920 she entered into a written contract with Edward Rolkin providing that he would advance the money to purchase these notes and the instruments securing them; that she would sell her property in Sonoma County and apply the money received from the sales in payment of the notes to him; that upon payment of the notes he would receive 25% of all additional proceeds from the sale of the lands, and that she would convey a one-fourth undivided interest to him in any lands that might remain unsold after six years. Pursuant to the agreement, Rolkin purchased the notes and the instruments securing them. In 1922, Mrs. Wear sold certain property in Sonoma County to Thomas H. Corcoran and his wife for $49,000. The purchasers paid $9,000 down and gave a note of $40,000 for the balance, secured by a mortgage and deed of trust. The note, mortgage, and deed of trust were made out and delivered to Rolkin. He in turn executed and delivered to Mrs. Wear a declaration of trust, subsequently recorded, that he held them only as security for the money owed to him by Mrs. Wear. In 1927, according to Rolkin, he entered into an oral agreement with Mrs. Wear whereby she assigned to him a portion of the balance due on the Corcoran note in payment of her indebtedness, and from that time, with her consent, he gave her credit for only her portion of the payments on the note.

Mrs. Wear died in 1930. Her will named Rolkin as executor, and pending a contest of the will, he was appointed special administrator. When the will was admitted to probate in 1932 he was appointed executor. In his final account as special administrator he reported receipts of $5,212.78, disbursements of $2,768.35, and cash on hand of $2,829.43. He also reported that the estate had an interest in the promissory note of Thomas Henry Corcoran and Emily C. Corcoran payable to Edward Rolkin for $40,000; that at the time of decedent's death this note had been reduced by payments on the principal to $26,000, of which $11,954.39 represented decedent's share; and that $3,220 belonging to the estate had been collected since her death. Only the estate's proportionate share of the payments on the note was reported under the purported oral agreement of 1927. All payments from other sources were reported in full. Following a hearing at which respondents Theodore Miller and Harry Miller were represented by one of the attorneys now appearing for them, the probate court found the account to be a full and correct accounting of all money received by Rolkin as special administrator, and of all property of the estate that had come into his possession. It entered a decree approving and settling the account as rendered and ordered that the residue of the estate, remaining in the hands of the special administrator after the payment of fees amounting to $1,300, be distributed to Edward Rolkin, executor. No appeal was taken from the decree.

In 1934 Rolkin filed his first account as executor. He reported the cash on hand belonging to the estate as $1,677.32 and the interest of the estate in the Corcoran note as $8,740. Respondents, legatees under the will, objected to this account contending that the entire balance of the Corcoran note and all payments received thereon belonged to the estate, that Rolkin had previously been paid in full for his indebtedness by Mrs. Wear and therefore had no further interest in the note, and that his failure to file a claim against the estate precluded him from asserting any other indebtedness. Rolkin denied having received any payment for the indebtedness other than Mrs. Wear's oral assignment to him of a portion of the Corcoran note, and contended that under this assignment his share of the payments and unpaid balance did not belong to the estate. An order sustaining the objections to this account was reversed on appeal. In re Wear's Estate, 17 Cal.App.2d 703, 62 P.2d 779.

At the second trial Rolkin contended for the first time that the question of the estate's interest in the Corcoran note and payments thereon was res judicata by virtue of the order settling his final account as special administrator, and objected to the introduction of evidence on the matter on this ground. This objection was overruled. It was then stipulated that the case should be submitted upon the evidence contained in the record on appeal from the order that was reversed, together with the referee's reports made at the first hearing; that the executor had testified that his account was correct; that no claim against the estate had been filed by appellant; and that the plea of res judicata was not prejudiced by the foregoing stipulations.

The lower court decided that the executor's account was incorrect and that an additional $5,773.34 received by him as payment on the Corcoran note and the entire unpaid balance of the note were assets of the estate. It then issued an order settling the account on this basis. The executor appeals from this order on the grounds that the court erroneously rejected the plea of res judicata. Because of his death pending the appeal his executor and executrix have been substituted as appellants in his place.

[1, 2] The final settlement of an account is conclusive as to all matters necessarily involved therein against all persons interested in the estate, except those under a legal disability. Prob.Code, sec. 931; Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1911; In re Rider's Estate, 199 Cal. 742, 251 P. 805; In re Grant's Estate, 131 Cal. 426, 63 P. 731. The respondents contend, however, that the settlement of Rolkin's account as special administrator did not involve a consideration of the rights of the parties under the agreement of January 31, 1920, or of the accounts of Rolkin as trustee, and that these matters were therefore not concluded by the first settlement. They were necessarily decided, however, by the settlement of the earlier account. In that account Rolkin stated that he was the payee of the Corcoran note and indicated that both he and the estate had an interest therein. He set out that at the time of Mrs. Wear's death, only $11,954.39 of the $26,000 balance unpaid on the Corcoran note belonged to her. In the hearing on that account the court had to determine the amount received by Rolkin in payment on the Corcoran note, the amount of these payments to be credited to the estate under his agreement with Mrs. Wear, and the interest of the estate in the unpaid balance of the note. The decree settling the account fixed the interest of the estate in the note, and adjudged the credits given the estate for payments made on this note before the filing of the administrator's account to be correct. The decree therefore involved a determination, binding upon all persons concerned in the estate, of the respective interests of appellant and the estate in the note. In re Hall's Estate, 154 Cal. 527, 533, 98 P. 269; In re Simonton's Estate, 183 Cal. 53, 56, 190 P. 442; Security-First Nat. Bank v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 749, 755, 37 P.2d 69; In re Grant's Estate, supra, 131 Cal. at page 429, 63 P. 731. It necessarily determined that Rolkin had a right to a portion of the payments and unpaid balance separate from the interest of the estate. Since this determination is conclusive, respondents cannot now dispute Rolkin's right to withhold his share of the payments as they are received.

[3-5] Since reversal by the District Court of Appeal of the first order settling the executor's account contained no instructions to the trial court, the case was returned to that court for a new trial on any and all issues that might be raised, just as if it had never been tried before. In re Pusey's Estate, 177 Cal. 367, 370, 170 P. 846; Glassell v. Hansen, 149 Cal. 511, 514, 87 P. 200; Goss v. Security Insurance Co., 2 Cal.App.2d 459, 462, 38 P.2d 188. The appellant was therefore free to raise the issue of res judicata for the first time at the second trial (Ibid.), and was not estopped from asserting the plea by acquiescing in the appointment of a referee in the first trial. Respondents do not claim to have suffered any disadvantage on the retrial by reason of the referee's appointment at the first trial, and the parties stipulated in the second trial that the evidence before the court would not prejudice appellant's plea of res judicata. Since appellants' plea of res judicata is valid, it is unnecessary to consider respondents' contention that appellant could not assert any right to the principal and interest of the Corcoran note without filing a claim against the estate under section 703 of the Probate Code.

The order and decree appealed from are reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 129

BURNS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

S. F. 16643.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

1. Mandamus ⟹4(4)

Where court had denied petitioner's motion to set aside a portion of an order revoking letters of guardianship of the guardian of petitioner's testatrix after court had expressed an opinion that petitioner's pending action against guardian's surety for sums allegedly converted from the estate was barred by limitations, petitioner was not entitled to mandamus to compel court to set the disputed order aside, but was required to await an adverse judgment and prosecute an appeal therefrom. Probate Code, § 1487.

2. Mandamus ⟹4(1)

The proceeding in mandamus may not be employed to review error.

In Bank.

Original application by May G. Burns, as executrix of Mary O'Connor, deceased, for a writ of mandamus to be directed against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, Franklin A. Griffin, Judge, to compel respondent to set aside a portion of an order in a guardianship matter.

Writ denied.

Jewell Alexander, James M. Thomas, and Redman, Alexander & Bacon, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Thomas E. Davis, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent Superior Court to set aside an order theretofore made by it "revoking" letters of guardianship of the person and estate of Mary O'Connor, duly issued to her brother Joseph P. Donahue.

Joseph P. Donahue was appointed guardian of the person and estate of Mary O'Connor, an incompetent, on May 21, 1930. He filed a bond in the sum of $17,000, executed by the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company as surety. The estate was valued at $60,567.98. He filed four annual accounts and a final account. During the guardianship proceedings he converted to his own use property belonging to the incompetent. In re Estate and Guardianship of O'Connor, 28 Cal. App.2d 527, 83 P.2d 65. On June 29, 1935, he filed a petition praying that Mary O'Connor be restored to competency. The court granted the petition and on July 16, 1935, ordered that "said Mary O'Connor be, and she is hereby, restored to capacity, and that the guardianship of said Mary O'Connor cease." The court also included in the order the following: "that the order heretofore made appointing Joseph P. Donahue guardian of the person and estate of said Mary O'Connor be, and is hereby set aside; that the letters of guardianship issued to said Joseph P. Donahue be and they are hereby revoked, and that said Joseph P. Donahue surrender to the said Mary O'Connor all the estate of said Mary O'Connor, and file herein an account of said estate."

On September 11, 1935, Mary O'Connor filed exceptions to the five accounts claiming that property of the value of $24,185.17 had been misappropriated. A hearing on the accounts was conducted by a referee appointed by the court. The court confirmed the referee's report in part and decreed that Mary O'Connor was entitled to the additional sum of $15,152.70. The court denied her claim for interest. She appealed from that part of the order which denied interest on the additional sum found to be due to her. On appeal it was held she was entitled to interest compounded, and the portion of the order refusing to allow interest was reversed. In re Estate and Guardianship of Mary O'Connor, supra.

The order settling the guardian's final accounts was made on July 1, 1937. That order contained the following provision: "It is also further ordered, adjudged and decreed that * * * upon the filing of vouchers, release or satisfaction therefor, the said guardian be discharged from further liability on his bond given in this proceeding." The guardian appealed from the whole of said order. The order was affirmed on January 31, 1940. In re Estate and Guardianship of Mary O'Connor, 37 Cal.App.2d 63, 98 P.2d 769.

Mary O'Connor died on October 13, 1938. The petitioner is the executrix of her will. On May 3, 1940, the executrix commenced an action in the same court against the Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance Company to recover the principal of the guardian's bond in the sum of $17,000 and interest. That action came on for trial on October 29, 1940. On January 30, 1941, the trial judge announced an opinion that the cause of action of the plaintiff, petitioner herein, was barred by the terms of section 1487 of the Probate Code. On February 27, 1941, the petitioner moved the respondent court in another department and before another judge to set aside that portion of the order of July 16, 1935, which purported to terminate as of that date the entire guardianship proceeding and thus purport to effect a discharge of the guardian as contemplated by section 1487 of the Probate Code, on the ground that the same was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court and void. Counsel for the petitioner notified the trial judge of the pendency of said motion with the request that he defer the making of findings of fact and conclusions of law and the entry of judgment until after the other judge had passed upon the motion. The request was granted. The other judge denied the motion on June 23, 1941. On July 25, 1941, the present proceeding was commenced.

The return to the alternative writ, filed December 2, 1941, discloses that findings of fact and conclusions of law have not been made and filed in the action on the bond, and there is no showing that findings have been waived or judgment entered. Section 1487 of the Probate Code provides: "No action may be maintained against the sureties on a bond given by a guardian unless commenced within three years from the discharge or removal of the guardian * * *."

It is the petitioner's contention that although the order of July 16, 1935, was effective to restore Mary O'Connor to capacity it did not and could not finally discharge the guardian for the reason that the accounts of the guardian had not then been settled; that insofar as said order purported to discharge or remove the guardian as of that date, as contemplated by section 1487, the order to that extent was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court; that the order of July 1st, 1937, which settled the guardian's accounts very properly provided in effect that the guardian should not be discharged until he has filed his "vouchers, release or satisfaction," and that there is no showing that he has ever complied with that part of the order; that the portion of the order of July 16, 1935, which purported to terminate the guardianship proceeding ab initio is void on its face and should be stricken from the order; that the order of the respondent court refusing to strike it is not an appealable order, and that she has no plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.

It is the position of the respondents that it is the purpose of the petitioner in this proceeding to have this court construe the portion of the order of July 16, 1935, to which she objects contrary to the construction placed thereon, at least tentatively, by the trial court in the pending action on the bond; that the same question sought to be adjudicated in this proceeding is involved in the action on the bond and that the petitioner's remedy under the authorities is by appeal from any judgment in that case concerning which the petitioner may feel aggrieved.

A case involving a similar situation was recently decided by this Court. Maloney v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., 20 Cal.2d 1, 123 P.2d 449. It was there held in effect that a guardian should not be deemed "discharged" or "removed" as contemplated by section 1487 of the Probate Code except by a plain and unequivocal order of the court for that purpose; that later proceedings to settle the guardian's accounts made it clear that orders theretofore made did not in terms effect a discharge or removal of the guardian, and that such orders should be strictly construed to the end that the remedy of the ward for breach of conditions of the guardian's bond be not defeated by lapse of time where final approval of the guardian's accounts within the statutory period showed the default of the guardian and disclosed for the first time that a right of action on the bond had accrued pursuant to section 1486 of the Probate Code.

[1] The contention of the respondents that the remedy of the petitioner is by way of an appeal in the pending action and that she is not, on the facts disclosed, entitled to relief in mandamus must be sustained. The obvious purpose of this proceeding is to obtain a ruling by this court that the order of July 16, 1935, should be so construed as not to be effective as a bar to the cause of action in the suit on the bond, and to compel the elimination therefrom of that portion of the order to which the petitioner objects. The construction of that order and the effectiveness of the objectionable portion thereof are directly involved in that action. A ruling thereon at this time would be a ruling on the precise issue involved in the pending action and, if permitted would, as the petitioner unquestionably desires, necessarily influence any subsequent action of the trial court in said action.

[2] The proceeding in mandamus may not properly be employed to review error. Dankert v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., 211 Cal. 87, 293 P. 785; Grivi v. Superior Court, 3 Cal.2d 463, 45 P.2d 181. Here the trial court has not finally acted in the suit on the bond. Error in that case will not now be anticipated and even if findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment be made and entered in accordance with the forebodings of the petitioner her appropriate remedy will be by an appeal from that judgment. Petaluma, etc., Water, etc., Dist. v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 183, 228 P. 24.

The peremptory writ is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

EDMONDS, J., concurred in the judgment.

* * *

20 Cal.2d 118

GORE et al. v. BINGAMAN et al.

S. F. 16287.

Supreme Court of California.
April 2, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑14(2)

A final judgment of a superior court under an appellate court's direction is appealable.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1099(1)

Questions of law determined on prior appeal cannot be presented for redetermination on a subsequent appeal.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1096(1)

A second appeal must be limited to questions arising from trial court's actions which were not involved in a prior appeal.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1097(1)

Where a question of law once determined is sought to be relitigated on a second appeal to the same appellate court, the first determination is the "law of the case" and will not be re-examined, in absence of unusual circumstances leading to injustice, even though issue sought to be raised involved jurisdiction of court on prior appeal.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Law of the Case".

5. Appeal and error 🔑1097(1)

Generally, questions determined by an intermediate appellate court constitute the "law of the case" after the judgment becomes final, if the party seeking the second appeal failed to challenge the prior determination in the court of last resort, or if the court of last resort refused to review the prior determination of the intermediate appellate court.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1097(1)

The doctrine of the "law of the case" will be applied to decisions of District Courts of appeal after those decisions have become final.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1097(1)

Where defendants permitted District Court of Appeal's decision to become final, without raising a jurisdictional question, determination was the "law of the case" and could not be considered by the Supreme Court on subsequent appeal from judgment of the trial court entered pursuant to remittitur of the District Court of Appeal.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1097(1)

The "law of the case" doctrine is a procedural rule generally followed, not because the court is without power to consider a former determination, but because the orderly processes of judicial procedure require an end to litigation.

9. Courts 🔑486

Where the Supreme Court determined that the law of the case, as laid down by the District Court of Appeal on first appeal, was controlling, appeal from trial court's judgment entered pursuant to remittitur of the District Court of Appeal was transferred by the Supreme Court to the District Court of Appeal. Const. art. 6, § 4a; Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 32.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Eva Gore and others against Joseph W. Bingaman, trustee, etc., and others to quiet title to a share of income from trust property and for a declaratory judgment to establish plaintiffs' rights under a trust. From a judgment of the Superior Court entered pursuant to a remittitur of the District Court of Appeal, the defendants appeal.

Appeal transferred to District Court of Appeal. See 126 P.2d 462.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, C. A. Beardsley, and Clark & Heafey, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Weinmann, Quayle & Berry, of Oakland, and George Olshausen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Plaintiffs brought this action to quiet title to a share of the income from certain trust property and for a declaratory judgment to establish their rights under the terms of the trust, as set forth in a decree of distribution. The trial court rendered a judgment in favor of defendants, and plaintiffs appealed to the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District. That court reversed the judgment, and thereafter a hearing was denied in this court. See Gore v. Bingaman, 29 Cal.App.2d 460, 85 P.2d 172. The trial court thereupon entered judgment for plaintiffs in accordance with the decision of the District Court of Appeal. Defendants now prosecute this appeal from the judgment of the superior court entered pursuant to the remittitur of the District Court of Appeal.

[1-3] This court has hitherto denied petitions for writs of certiorari and prohibition both of which challenged the judgment of the superior court entered after the remittitur. The denial of these writs was based, in part, upon the ground that defendants had a remedy by appeal. A final judgment entered by a superior court under the direction of an appellate court is appealable. Lambert v. Bates, 148 Cal. 146, 148, 82 P. 767; Randall v. Duff, 107 Cal. 33, 36, 40 P. 20; Klauber v. San Diego St. Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 109, 32 P. 876. It is true that this right may be a mere naked right of appeal where every issue which might be presented has been determined upon the previous appeal. Lierly v. McEwen, 208 Cal. 645, 646, 283 P. 943. Thus, questions of law which were determined upon the first appeal cannot be presented for a redetermination. Lambert v. Bates, supra; Security-First National Bank v. Marxen, 19 Cal.2d 100, 119 P.2d 131. The second appeal must be limited to questions arising from the action of the trial court which were not involved in the prior appeal. Klauber v. San Diego St. Car Co., supra; Harris v. Hensley, 214 Cal. 420, 422, 6 P.2d 253; Phillips v. Patterson, 34 Cal.App.2d 481, 487, 93 P.2d 807. In this case no claim is made that the superior court did not follow the remittitur. Defendants, appellants herein, contend that the judgment of the superior court is void because it was based solely upon the decision of the District Court of Appeal. That decision, it is contended, was a nullity because the action is a case in equity which should have been appealed directly to the Supreme Court under the constitutional provision conferring exclusive appellate jurisdiction over cases in equity upon this court.

The question thus presented is whether this action is legal or equitable in character within the meaning of the constitutional provision. Where a statutory remedy is involved which was created long after the historic distinctions between actions at law and cases in equity were formulated, there is extreme difficulty in applying the sections of the Constitution basing the division of appellate jurisdiction between the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal upon that distinction. We have recently referred to the unfortunate aspects of this constitutional requirement. De Garmo v. Goldman, 19 Cal.2d 755, 123 P.2d 1. Similar considerations make it difficult to determine whether an action for declaratory relief is to be classified as legal or equitable for the purposes of appellate jurisdiction. The code provisions do not characterize the remedy as legal or equitable in this state (Code Civ.Proc., §§ 1060 et seq.), and while authorities agree that its historical sources are almost exclusively equitable, the remedy has been stated to be sui generis rather than strictly legal or equitable. Borchard, Declaratory Judgments [2d ed. 1941], pp. 238, 248, 399, 439. Thus, it has been suggested that where it becomes important under constitutional provisions to classify a particular action for declaratory relief as legal or equitable, the determination should depend upon the issues involved in the particular action. See 13 So.Cal.L.Rev. 170, et seq.; 28 Cal.L.Rev. 638.

[4] The issue sought to be raised upon this appeal, however, is no longer open for determination in this case. Although it may have been decided erroneously, the question whether the present action is legal in nature and properly appealable directly to the district court of appeal is one which was determined by that court upon the prior appeal. As the court said in Clary v. Hoagland, 6 Cal. 685, 688: "The first point decided by any Court, although it may not be in terms, is, that the Court has jurisdiction, otherwise it would not proceed to determine the rights of the parties." See, also, Scrimsher v. Reliance Rock Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 382, 393, 36 P.2d 688. Where a question of law once determined is sought to be relitigated upon a second appeal to the same appellate court it is clearly established that the first determination is the law of the case and will not be re-examined in the absence of unusual circumstances leading to injustice or unfairness even though the issue sought to be raised involves the jurisdiction of the court on the prior appeal. Clary v. Hoagland, supra; Scrimsher v. Reliance Rock Co., supra; Washington Bridge Co. v. Stewart, 44 U.S. 413, 3 How. 413, 424, 11 L.Ed. 658; Lincoln Joint Stock Land Bank v. Brown, 224 Iowa 1256, 278 N.W. 294; Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Stanley, 190 Ky. 762, 228 S.W. 691; Grand Cent. Mining Co. v. Mammoth Mining Co., 36 Utah 364, 104 P. 573, Ann. Cas.1912A, 254; 3 Am.Jur. 552; 5 C.J.S., Appeal and Error, § 1834, p. 1290; Black, Law of Judicial Precedents, p. 278. This is so, even though it is contended that absence of jurisdiction renders the decision on the prior appeal a nullity and ineffective as a determination of any question. See Clary v. Hoagland, supra, 6 Cal. at page 688.

[5] Where the first appeal was decided by an intermediate appellate court and the second appeal is taken to the court of last resort, there is a variance among the courts of different states as to whether the doctrine of law of the case is applicable to the decision of the intermediate appellate court. See, 41 A.L.R. 1078, 118 A.L.R. 1286. In certain states if there is no opportunity to challenge the intermediate appellate court's determination of the first appeal in the higher court, the court of last resort will not consider itself bound by the first decision when the case finally reaches that court. Cf. Wright v. Risser, 378 Ill. 72, 37 N.E.2d 778; Weiner v. Pictorial Paper Package Corp., 303 Mass. 123, 20 N.E.2d 458. It is generally held, however, that questions determined by an intermediate appellate court constitute the law of the case after the judgment becomes final if the party seeking the second appeal failed to challenge the prior determination in the court of last resort (Chandler v. Lafferty, 282 Pa. 550, 128 A. 507; State ex rel. Anderson Motor Serv. Co. v. Public Serv. Comm., 234 Mo.App. 470, 134 S.W.2d 1069, affirmed Mo.Sup., 154 S.W.2d 777) or if the higher court refused to review the prior determination of the intermediate appellate court. Life & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Jett, 175 Tenn. 295, 133 S.W.2d 997; Huntington v. Westerfield, 119 La. 615, 44 So. 317; Adams Express Co. v. Hoeing, 88 Ky. 373, 11 S.W. 205; South Bend Home Tel. Co. v. Beaning, 181 Ind. 586, 105 N.E. 52; 41 A.L.R. 1078; 118 A.L.R. 1286; 5 C.J.S., Appeal and Error, § 1829, p. 1285.

[6, 7] Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions it is established in this state that the doctrine of law of the case will be applied to decisions of the District Courts of Appeal after those decisions have become final. Otten v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 252, 191 P. 11; United Dredging Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 208 Cal. 705, 284 P. 922; Hill v. Maryland Casualty Co., 28 Cal.App. 422, 152 P. 953. "Conceding the doctrine that the law of the case applies only to decisions of a court of last resort, we are nevertheless of the opinion that as to the decision on the former appeal, this court was the court of last resort. While appellant, which was respondent in the former appeal, might have applied to the Supreme Court for a transfer of the case after the rendition of the decision, it did not do so, but rested upon the decision as final." Hill v. Maryland Casualty Co., supra, 28 Cal.App. at page 426, 152 P. at page 955. In this case the question whether the District Court of Appeal had jurisdiction on the prior appeal was not raised. Defendant could have made a motion for a transfer of the case upon the ground that the District Court of Appeal lacked jurisdiction while the appeal was pending in that court. Also, defendant might have based his petition for a hearing in this court upon the ground that no appellate jurisdiction was vested in the District Court of Appeal. Instead, defendant permitted the District Court of Appeal's decision to become final, without raising the jurisdictional question. Under such circumstances, we think the rule discussed above is applicable and the prior determination of the very question sought to be raised here constitutes the law of the case.

[8] It is true that the law of the case doctrine is a procedural rule which is generally followed, not because the court is without power to reconsider a former determination, but because the orderly processes of judicial procedure require an end to litigation. In the absence of exceptional circumstances of hardship and injustice the need for attributing finality to considered judicial determinations compels adherence to the previous decision. But the rule should never be made the instrument of injustice. Thus, where the controlling rules of law have been altered or clarified in the interval between the first and second appeal and adherence to the previous decision would result in defeating a just cause, it has been held that the court will not hesitate to reconsider its prior determination. See England v. Hospital of Good Samaritan, 14 Cal.2d 791, 795, 97 P.2d 813; 42 Harv.L.Rev. 938. No comparable situation is present in this case. The only ground upon which a re-determination of the jurisdictional question is sought is that if defendant's contentions are sustained upon the second appeal, the case should have been appealed directly to the Supreme Court in the first place. In view of the distribution of appellate jurisdiction in this state, such an argument does not present any element of injustice which impels us to reconsider the prior determination of the issue made by the district court of appeal. This is especially true since appellate jurisdiction may be conferred upon the Supreme Court, where it improperly assumes to hear a law case, or upon a district court of appeal, where it improperly assumes to hear an equity case by the mere procedural formality of an order transferring the cause to the proper court followed by an order transferring the case back to the first court. Constitution, art. VI, §§ 4, 4b, 4c. Under such circumstances there is no fundamental injustice present which requires a re-examination of the decision reached upon the first appeal. Defendants have been deprived of no fundamental rights. As was said in Scrimsher v. Reliance Rock Co., supra, 1 Cal.App.2d at page 393, 36 P.2d at page 693, in holding that the determination of jurisdiction reached upon the first appeal constituted the law of the case, "To hold otherwise * * * would be lending encouragement to a dilatory and highly technical procedure subversive of an effective disposition of an appeal fully briefed and decided on the merits. It would give encouragement to a respondent to await the event of an appeal by arguing the substantive questions involved, and, if dissatisfied with the decision of the court * * * for the first time, raise the question of the jurisdiction of the court of review to entertain the appeal in the first instance. This would certainly give rise to a most chaotic procedure and constitute a stumbling block to the orderly and speedy administration of justice." The merits of defendant's case are not involved and the issue which he seeks to raise concerns nothing more than the proper distribution of appellate business among the courts of the state. See, 2 Am.Jur. 851.

[9] The conclusions which have been reached in this case require us to transfer this appeal to the District Court of Appeal. While examination of the record convinces us that there is no longer any substantial question presented, the conclusion that the law of the case as laid down on the first appeal is controlling means that the second appeal should also have been taken to the District Court of Appeal. Since this appeal is taken to the wrong court, we are required to transfer the cause to a court which does have jurisdiction over the appeal. Constitution, art. VI, § 4a; Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, XXXII.

The appeal in this case is hereby transferred to the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division One, in order that the appeal may be disposed of by the proper court.

SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 894

In re Joseph P. LACEY.

S. F. 16221.

Supreme Court of California.
April 2, 1942.

In Bank.

Application for readmission to practice law in this state after disbarment. Granted.

See, also, 11 Cal.2d 699, 81 P.2d 935.

PER CURIAM.

In accordance with the report and recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California, it is ordered that Joseph P. Lacey be reinstated as a member of the State Bar of California, upon payment of the fees and taking the oath required by law.

---

20 Cal.2d 150

SALOPEK v. SCHOEMANN et al.

S. F. 16285.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

1. Attorney and client 🔑134(1)

An attorney, discharged by client for sufficient cause, is entitled to no more than reasonable value of services rendered before discharge.

2. Attorney and client 🔑77

While procedure to protect client's interest is generally for attorney to decide, client is not without control over objectives to be attained thereby.

3. Attorney and client 🔑76(1)

Where attorney, directed by client to do nothing jeopardizing legacies of client's son under will, procured client's signature to contract obligating attorney to take steps necessary to invalidate will by advising client that son's legacies would not be affected by successful contest of will, client was justified in discharging attorney.

4. Attorney and client 🔑76(1)

Where attorney misstates legal effect of facts or procedure to his client through ignorance, carelessness or mistake and indicates by his advice and pursues course of action which will lead unquestionably to results contrary to client's declared and proper objectives, client is not bound to continue attorney's employment.

5. Attorney and client 🔑76(1)

A client may discharge his attorney at any time, unless attorney's power is coupled with an interest. Code Civ.Proc. § 284.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1122(4)

In action to enforce attorney's lien for services after discharge by client, where facts found supported only a finding that there was sufficient cause for discharge, but trial court's finding was construable as stating that attorney's discharge was without sufficient cause, Supreme Court's conclusion that attorney's discharge was justified could serve as a finding contrary to the trial court's finding. Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ.Proc. § 956a.

7. Attorney and client 🔑185

An assignee of attorney, justifiably discharged by his client, was entitled to enforce attorney's lien to extent of reasonable value of services performed before discharge.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by E. C. Salopek against Robert Schoemann and others to foreclose a lien for legal services performed by plaintiff's assignor. From a judgment for plaintiff in less than the amount claimed, he appeals.

Affirmed.

Torregano & Stark, August B. Rothschild, and M. C. Symonds, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. N. Vavuris and A. G. Simi, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiff, as assignee of J. Maxwell Peyser, an attorney, commenced this action to foreclose a lien asserted under the written agreement of the defendant Robert Schoemann to pay for legal services. The attorney was discharged by his client on the same day the agreement was signed. The court decreed the enforcement of the lien to the extent of the reasonable value of the services performed to the time of discharge. On appeal by the plaintiff it is contended that the attorney was entitled to the enforcement of the lien to the full amount of the contract.

With one exception the correctness of the trial court's findings on material issues is not in dispute. The record shows that Max Schoemann died testate on June 2, 1937, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, leaving no wife or issue. His next of kin were two brothers, the defendant, Robert Schoemann, who resided in New York; Otto Schoemann, who resided in Switzerland; and a sister Gertrude Horn, who resided in Germany. The will was holographic and was executed on December 13, 1934. It showed that as of that date the decedent was married, and in the will provision was made for a bequest to the wife. By its terms the residue was to be distributed, 10 percent to the brother Otto; 20 percent to the brother Robert; 10 percent to the sister Gertrude; 30 percent to children of Otto; ten percent and fifteen percent respectively to James and Eugene Schoemann, children of Robert Schoemann. Sam M. Schoemann, a cousin, who lived in California, was designated as executor and was left 5 percent of the estate for his services. The will offered for probate disclosed certain interlineations and alterations in pencil. The declaration of the marital status was stricken. The bequest to the wife was marked out with the notation, "Jennie died July 7, 1935." The words and figures "(20%) Twenty percent" in the bequest to Robert Schoemann were drawn through, without the insertion of any substituted figures. The bequest to the sister was apparently raised by alteration to 30 percent of the residue. The testator did not initial or sign the alterations.

The trial court in the present action found that on June 8, 1937, defendant Sam M. Schoemann filed a petition for probate of the will and for the issuance to him of letters testamentary; that on or about June 16, the defendant Robert Schoemann retained J. Maxwell Peyser as his attorney and by contract in writing dated June 21, 1937, agreed to pay him 33⅓ percent of his share of the estate in the event of settlement or 40 percent in the event of trial. A contest of the will was filed by Peyser in the name of Robert Schoemann on June 21, 1937. On that day Robert Schoemann by written notice to Peyser, rescinded the retainer agreement and substituted another attorney in the probate proceedings. The hearing on the petition for probate was noticed for June 22, 1937, and on that day Robert Schoemann filed his consent to the probate of the will reserving the right to apply to the court for "a construction of the erasures, alterations and interlineations" in the will. On July 2, 1937, the will was admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to Sam M. Schoemann. On July 14, 1937, the executor filed a petition for instructions as to the correct construction of the will for the purpose of computing inheritance taxes and the proper administration of the estate. On January 19, 1938, an agreement was filed that Gertrude Horn should receive 16 percent of the estate, and that Otto and Robert Schoemann should each receive 12 percent of the estate. An order on the petition for instructions was based on this agreement. On February 23, 1938, the plaintiff, assignee of Peyser, commenced the present action to foreclose the lien on 33⅓ percent of Robert Schoemann's interest and obtained an order restraining the distribution of that interest. On February 28, 1938, a decree was entered ordering distribution to Robert Schoemann subject to the action herein and the restraining order. The 12 percent interest of Robert Schoemann amounts to approximately $15,000.

In addition to the foregoing the court found that there were no "false, negligent or fraudulent representations or statements to defendant Robert Schoemann as to the law or facts involved in said defendant's claim to receive a share of the estate of Max Schoemann, deceased, for the purpose of inducing said defendant to retain said J. Maxwell Peyser as his attorney or for any other purpose or at all." The court declared a lien on the funds held by the defendant Sam M. Schoemann for distribution to Robert Schoemann, to the extent of $300 which the court found to be the reasonable value of the services of Peyser to the time of his discharge. The percentage provided by the contract of employment amounts to $5,000.

It is the plaintiff's contention that the foregoing quoted finding is entirely in the attorney's favor and that the only conclusion that can be drawn therefrom is that there was no justification for the rescission of the contract of employment; consequently that he was discharged without cause and was entitled to recover the full amount of the agreed fee (citing Baldwin v. Bennett, 4 Cal. 392; Webb v. Trescony, 76 Cal. 621, 18 P. 796; Bartlett v. Odd Fellows Savings Bank, 79 Cal. 218, 21 P. 743, 12 Am.St.Rep. 139; Kirk v. Culley, 202 Cal. 501, 261 P. 994; Elconin v. Yalen, 208 Cal. 546, 549, 282 P. 791; Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co., Ltd., v. Kinsler, 12 Cal.2d 98, 81 P.2d 913; Echlin v. Superior Court, 13 Cal.2d 368, at page 375, 90 P.2d 63, 124 A.L.R. 719. The defendants contend that the quoted finding is not supported by the evidence; that the record discloses ample justification for the attorney's discharge, in which event the only question is the reasonable value of his services to the time of discharge.

[1] There seems to be no divergence of authority to the effect that if an attorney is discharged for sufficient cause he is entitled to no more than the reasonable value of his services rendered prior to his discharge. The important and controlling question on the appeal is whether the quoted finding is supported by the evidence. When considered as a finding absolving the attorney of any fraudulent purpose or intent in inducing the contract, it is supported by the evidence; but if it be deemed a finding that his conduct would not justify his discharge it is unsupported.

[2-5] Peyser testified that when Robert Schoemann consulted him and submitted the will to him he advised that the proper procedure would be to file a contest of the will; that if the contest was successful Schoemann would be entitled to one-third of the estate, but that if the contest was unsuccessful and the court determined that the alterations should stand as in accordance with the intention of the testator to cancel the bequests stricken out, 40 percent of the estate would go into the residue and he would still have 13 percent of the estate. He testified that he also advised Robert Schoemann that if the contest was successful his sons' bequests would not be affected. It appeared that before Robert signed the agreement he informed Peyser that he would "rather be killed" than see his boys lose the money left to them by the will. Peyser also testified that his intention was to file the contest as a preliminary step and later to ask for an interpretation of the will. However the agreement signed by Robert Schoemann contained the following: "Second party [Peyser] agrees to institute and prosecute to final judgment all actions and proceedings necessary to declare invalid and to defeat the will of Max Schoemann, deceased, and to recover for First Party all of the estate of Max Schoemann to which he is legally entitled."

It appears beyond dispute that when Peyser became acquainted with the facts and with his client's purpose to do nothing which would prevent his two sons from receiving their legacies, he prepared a contract in which he agreed to prosecute to final judgment all proceedings necessary "to declare invalid and to defeat the will of Max Schoemann, deceased." Peyser knew or should have known that if the will were declared invalid the sons would receive nothing thereunder. Peyser also advised Robert Schoemann that he would have him appointed administrator of the estate, when he knew that Robert was not a resident of the State of California. Peyser also prepared and filed the contest on behalf of Robert Schoemann in which the grounds of contest were alleged to be unsoundness of mind, infirmity of mind and body, lack of due execution, and "that said document by striking a line through the words and figures: '(20%) Twenty percent' in violation of law and not witnessed by the said testator; that said alteration purporting to be a bequest to the petitioner, Robert Schoemann was not the legal act of the said deceased, but was the result of undue influence of certain persons whose names are unknown to this contestant."

On the day the employment agreement was signed and the contract filed, Robert Schoemann showed the document to his sons. They told him that he had been misinformed by Peyser; that if the will were defeated they would receive nothing, and that he could not be appointed administrator because he resided in New York. That same day Robert Schoemann consulted another lawyer to verify these statements and was advised that Peyser had misinformed and misguided him. He immediately gave the notice of rescission.

It is true that the procedure to be pursued in protecting his client's interest is generally for the attorney to decide. Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co., Ltd., v. Kinsler, supra. But this does not mean that the client has no control over the objectives to be attained by the procedure to be adopted. As applied to the present case Robert Schoemann could properly and did in effect direct the attorney to do nothing which would jeopardize the legacies of his sons under the will. Notwithstanding this declared purpose on the part of the client, Peyser charted a course whereby he bound himself and his client to a procedure which if carried to a successful conclusion would defeat that purpose. The contract obligated the attorney to take the steps necessary to have the will invalidated. In this respect he had misinformed and misdirected his client concerning the legal effect of the facts and of the procedure which he had adopted. At the trial Peyser testified that in prescribing the procedure and in filing the contest his intention was merely "to make an appearance in court" or "to force a settlement." But this intention would not excuse the obvious appearances to the contrary resulting from the advice and course of conduct of the attorney. The fact that a different course may have been decided upon at a later date if Peyser's employment had continued would not affect the right of the client to rescind at once. He had the right to act immediately and did so act upon being properly advised that if the will were declared invalid, as contemplated by the contract of employment and the contest just filed, his rights and the rights of his sons would be jeopardized. If an attorney misstates the legal effect of facts or of procedure to his client either through ignorance, carelessness or by mistake, and by his advice indicates and then pursues a course of action which would lead unquestionably to results contrary to the client's declared and proper objectives, the client is not bound to continue the attorney's employment. Indeed, the client may discharge his attorney at any time unless the attorney's power is coupled with an interest. No such interest appears here. § 284, Code Civ. Proc.; Gage v. Atwater, 136 Cal. 170, 68 P. 581; Todd v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 406, 184 P. 684, 7 A.L.R. 938. But if, as here, he has entered into a contract to compensate the attorney on a contingency basis and discharges him before the services have been completed, he takes the chance that the attorney may claim and establish that he was discharged without sufficient cause. On the other hand if, as here, it develops that the discharge was justified, the attorney has no cause to complain and is fully protected by payment of the reasonable value of his services rendered prior to his discharge.

[6, 7] The finding in question when taken as a finding which would lead to the conclusion that the discharge of the attorney was without sufficient cause is incompatible with the facts as established without conflict in the evidence. Those facts support only a finding that there was sufficient cause for the discharge. Our conclusion in this respect may properly serve as a finding contrary to the finding of the trial court. Const. Art. VI, § 4¾; § 956a, Code Civ.Proc. The trial court, however, correctly concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the lien to the extent of the reasonable value of the services performed by the attorney to the date of his discharge.

The judgment is affirmed.

CURTIS, EDMONDS, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

GIBSON, Chief Justice (concurring).

The judgment of the trial court should be affirmed on the ground that the compensation of an attorney employed under a contingent fee contract and discharged without cause should be measured by the reasonable value of the services performed, not by the fee fixed in the contract. The cases in this state allowing recovery of the full contract fee under such circumstances should be overruled. Webb v. Trescony, 76 Cal. 621, 18 P. 796; Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co., Ltd., v. Kinsler, 12 Cal.2d 98, 102, 81 P.2d 913. It is true that a majority of jurisdictions permit such recovery. See cases collected in 136 A.L.R. 242. But a strong and growing minority hold that under a contingent fee contract an attorney may recover only the reasonable value of services rendered by him prior to discharge. Cole v. Myers, 128 Conn. 223, 21 A.2d 396, 136 A.L.R. 226; Hubbard v. Goffinett, 253 Ky. 779, 70 S.W.2d 671; Pye v. Diebold, 204 Minn. 319, 283 N.W. 487; Krippner v. Matz, 205 Minn. 497, 287 N.W. 19; Martin v. Camp, 219 N.Y. 170, 114 N.E. 46, L.R.A. 1917F, 402; Wright v. Johanson, 132 Wash. 682, 233 P. 46; Id., 135 Wash. 696, 236 P. 807; Cavers v. Old Nat. Bank & Union Trust Co., 166 Wash. 449, 7 P.2d 23, and other cases cited 136 A.L.R. 254. Sound reasons of policy and justice support the minority rule and it should be followed by this court. It is recognized as a part of the ethical rules governing the legal profession that an attorney will not sue a client for a fee except to prevent injustice, imposition or fraud. See American Bar Association, Canons of Professional Ethics, Canon 14.

The relation of attorney and client is one of special confidence and trust and the dignity and integrity of the legal profession demand that the interests of the client be fully protected. Tomblin v. Hill, 206 Cal. 689, 693, 275 P. 941; 1 Thornton, Attorneys at Law, 238. Without public confidence in the members of the legal profession which is dependent upon absolute fairness in the dealings between attorney and client, courts cannot function in the proper administration of justice. And inherent in the relationship between attorney and client is the fact that the client must rely almost entirely upon the good faith of the attorney who alone can make an informed estimate of the value of the client's legal right and of the expense and effort necessary to enforce it. These considerations have given rise to the generally accepted rule that a client may discharge his attorney at any time with or without cause. See Gage v. Atwater, 136 Cal. 170, 68 P. 581; Estate of Cazaurang, 1 Cal.2d 712, 36 P.2d 1069; 7 C.J.S., Attorney and Client, § 109, p. 941. But that is not enough. The right to discharge is of little value if the client must risk paying the full contract price for services not rendered upon a determination by a court that the discharge was without legal cause. The client may frequently be forced to choose between continuing the employment of an attorney in whom he has lost faith, or risking the payment of double contingent fees equal to the greater portion of any amount eventually recovered. See Estate of Cazaurang, supra. The uncertain position of the client in such circumstances is illustrated by the record in the present case where the trial court found the discharge was without cause and this court has made a contrary finding and concluded the discharge was justified. Unless a rule is adopted allowing an attorney as full compensation the reasonable value of services rendered to the time of discharge, clients will often feel required to continue in their service attorneys in whose integrity, judgment or capacity they have lost confidence.

The principles involved are well stated in the recent case of Cole v. Myers, 128 Conn. 223, 21 A.2d 396, 399, 136 A.L.R. 226: "An attorney at law is an officer of the court; a minister of justice. He is entitled to fair compensation for his services, but since, because of the highly confidential relationship, the client may discharge him even without just cause, he should receive reasonable compensation for the work he has done up to that point, and not the agreed fee he probably would have earned had he been allowed to continue in his employment. This rule is not unfair to the attorney. He will receive fair compensation for what he has done; his position as an officer of the court does not entitle him to receive payment for services he has not rendered." These considerations are compelling in their application to the case at bar where under the rule of the Zurich case, upon the finding of the trial court that the discharge was without cause, the attorney would recover $5,000 for a few hours' work found to be of the reasonable value of only $300.

TRAYNOR, J., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 101

NATURAL MILK PRODUCERS ASS'N et al. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

S. F. 16105.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

As Modified April 21, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑592(1)

Generally, local police regulation in conflict with general police regulation is invalid if passed after general regulation, and is superseded if followed by general regulation, except in case of local law of chartered city dealing with purely municipal affairs. Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 11.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑592(1)

Generally, as respects conflict between general and local law, where Legislature has regulated course of conduct by prohibitory enactments, municipality with subordinate power to act, can make such additional regulations as are appropriate to necessities of locality and are not unreasonable.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑592(1)

Generally, where state law so covers entire field that there is no room for municipal regulation, municipal regulations are necessarily in conflict with state law.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑592(1)

The San Francisco ordinance requiring pasteurization of all except "certified" or "raw" milk is not violative of Agricultural Code permitting both raw and pasteurized Grade A and certified guaranteed milk, since ordinance merely imposes additional restrictions and higher standards. St.1933, pp. 136–139, 149, 150, §§ 484, 487, 488, 490, 585, 587.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Certified Milk" and "Raw Milk".

5. Municipal corporations 🔑592(1)

A provision in Agricultural Code regulating milk, authorizing municipality to provide nonconflicting additional regulations imposing higher standards will not validate conflicting ordinance, but indicates legislative intent not to occupy the field to exclusion of municipalities. St.1933, p. 130, § 451.

6. Constitutional law 🔑48

A wide discretion is vested in legislative body with respect to whether classification is reasonable and proper, and every presumption is in favor of validity of such a statute.

7. Constitutional law 🔑208(1)

The San Francisco Milk Ordinance is not invalid as making arbitrary and unreasonable distinction between certified milk and guaranteed or Grade A raw milk. St. 1933, p. 136, § 484; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 21; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

8. Food 🔑1

The sale and distribution of milk is a lawful business protected by Constitution, but, being vital to public welfare and susceptible of being disease carrier, production and distribution and sale can be strictly regulated under police power.

9. Food 🔑1

The requirement that all milk for human consumption be pasteurized is a proper police regulation.

10. Constitutional law 🔑278(4)

The San Francisco Ordinance requiring pasteurization of all except "certified milk", which is milk in which especial precautions are taken to insure absence of disease and contamination and supervision is by especially qualified experts, is not violative of "due process of law". U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1; Cal.Const. art. 1, § 13.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

11. Constitutional law 🔑45

Legislation with respect to preservation of public health will not be set aside unless legislative discretion is palpably wrong.

12. Food 🔑3

The Milk Commission of San Francisco County Medical Society, which was required to certify raw milk under San Francisco Milk Ordinance, was not "administrative agency" of San Francisco or the state.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Administrative Agency".

13. Constitutional law 🔑48

A statute should be interpreted in a manner that will avoid its being declared unconstitutional.

14. Constitutional law 🔑60

The San Francisco Milk Ordinance defining certified milk as milk conforming to standards of American Association of Medical Milk Commissioners and bearing certificate of Milk Commission of San Francisco County Medical Society, did not unconstitutionally "delegate legislative powers".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Delegation of Legislative Power".

15. Food 🔑3

Under San Francisco Milk Ordinance defining certified milk as milk conforming to standards of American Association of Medical Milk Commissioners, standards promulgated by association are presumably established by medical experts.

16. Municipal corporations 🔑121

The authority of Milk Commission of San Francisco County Medical Society to demand and collect inspection fees in connection with certification of milk would not be determined in suit to enjoin enforcement of San Francisco Milk Ordinance, instituted by persons who had not applied for permit to sell certified milk.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the Natural Milk Producers Association of California and others against the City and County of San Francisco and others to enjoin enforcement of ordinance regulating sale and distribution of milk. From a judgment for the defendants, the plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 112 P.2d 930.

Rehearing denied; EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

Philip S. Ehrlich, Albert A. Axelrod, and Julien R. Bauer, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

Sullivan, Roche & Johnson, Eustace Cullinan, Jr., Bartley C. Crum, and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, all of San Francisco, as amici curiae, on behalf of respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment for defendants in an action to have enjoined the enforcement of an ordinance of the City and County of San Francisco regulating the sale and distribution of milk in that city and county.

Plaintiff's attack on the ordinance is based upon their claim that it is arbitrary and unreasonable, in contravention of their constitutional rights and is in conflict with the state law on the subject covered thereby.

The ordinance contains comprehensive regulations for the sale and distribution of milk for human consumption in the city and county of San Francisco and imposes a penalty for a violation of its provisions. In the prayer of their complaint, plaintiffs ask for an injunction restraining the enforcement of subdivisions 1, 2, 3, 4, 7 and 12 of section 3 of the ordinance, and from preventing them from selling and distributing "guaranteed raw milk." Section 1 of the ordinance authorizes one of the defendants, the Director of Public Health of the City and County of San Francisco, to enforce the ordinance. Section 2 defines the various terms used in the ordinance. Market milk is defined as milk or cream in their natural fluid state as prepared for human consumption. Adulterated, impure, unhealthy and unwholesome milk is defined in part as milk from cows which have not passed the tuberculin test. Section 3 provides in part:

"Market milk for sale and distribution for human consumption in the City and County of San Francisco shall consist of the following grades of milk: (a) certified milk, (b) guaranteed pasteurized milk, (c) Grade A pasteurized milk, and (d) Grade B pasteurized milk, and no other milk shall be sold, offered or exposed for sale, exchanged or delivered for human consumption within the City and County of San Francisco. Provided, that Grade B pasteurized milk shall be sold, offered or exposed for sale, delivered or exchanged only for cooking and baking purposes. Provided further, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the delivery and sale of Raw Guaranteed Milk, Raw Grade A Milk or Raw Grade B Milk to wholesalers or to pasteurization plants for the purpose of pasteurizing the same.

"Subdivision 2. Certified Milk: Certified milk is market milk which conforms to the rules, regulations, methods and standards for the production and distribution of certified milk adopted by the American Association of Medical Milk Commissions and must bear the certification of the Milk Commission of the San Francisco Medical Society. Certified milk must be the produce of a dairy herd that shall consist solely of cows which have passed the tuberculin test in the manner prescribed by said Milk Commission. It must not contain more than 10,000 non-pathogenic bacteria per milliliter of milk, which standard must be attained solely by measures directed towards cleanliness, proper cooling and prompt delivery. Certified milk must contain not less than three and five-tenths (3.5) per cent of milk fat and a minimum of solids not fat of eight and five-tenths (8.5) per cent. Certified milk must be handled and delivered in sealed containers and on ice within thirty hours after its production and in the manner directed by said Milk Commission. The dairy farm milk room, milkers and dairy utensils, etc., must all conform to the requirements of the said Milk Commission.

"Subdivision 3. Guaranteed Milk Pasteurized: Guaranteed pasteurized milk shall conform to the following requirements as a minimum. The health of the cows shall be determined by physical examination at least once each month by an official representative of an approved milk inspection service and by a tuberculin test. It shall be produced on dairies which score not less than ninety per cent on the dairy farm score card adopted by the Department of Agriculture of the State of California. It must be delivered in containers having the pouring lip completely protected from contamination and shall be cooled immediately after being drawn from the cow to fifty degrees Fahrenheit or less, and so maintained until delivered for pasteurization, when it shall contain not more than fifteen thousand non-pathogenic bacteria per milliliter, and not less than three and one-half per cent of milk fat. It must be sold to the consumer within thirty hours after production and shall be labeled to indicate the date of sale to the consumer. All persons who come in contact with the raw guaranteed milk must exercise scrupulous cleanliness and must not be afflicted with any communicable disease or in a condition to disseminate the germs of typhoid fever, tuberculosis, diphtheria or other communicable disease liable to be conveyed by the milk. The absence of such germs in all such persons shall be determined by bacteriological and physical examination under the direction of the Department of Public Health of the City and County of San Francisco, conducted at the time of employment and every six months thereafter in a manner approved by the Department of Agriculture and the Director of Public Health. When pasteurized it shall contain not more than three thousand non-pathogenic bacteria per milliliter at the time of delivery to the consumer.

"Guaranteed milk when raw shall be delivered in sterile containers to pasteurizing plants located in the City and County of San Francisco, to be there pasteurized and thereafter distributed in the manner provided by the regulation of the Director of Health of the City and County of San Francisco.

"Subdivision 4. Grade 'A' Pasteurized Milk: Grade 'A' Pasteurized Milk shall conform to the following requirements. It shall be the produce of healthy cows as determined by physical examination at least once in two months by a veterinarian under the supervision of the Director of Public Health of the City and County of San Francisco and by the tuberculin test by such veterinarian, or by a veterinarian approved by the State Department of Agriculture, and from dairy farms scoring not less than 75 per cent on the score card approved by the Director of Public Health of the City and County of San Francisco. The tuberculin test must be repeated annually if no reacting animals are found in the herd. If reacting animals are found, they must be removed from the herd immediately and the tuberculin test repeated in six months, provided that in the first test the percentage of reacting animals found is less than 10 per cent of the herd. If the percentage of reactors found is greater than 10 per cent, the tuberculin test must be repeated in ninety days.

"All cows are to be fed, watered, housed, and milked under conditions approved by the Director of Public Health.

"All persons who come in contact with the milk must exercise scrupulous cleanliness and must not harbor the germs of typhoid fever, tuberculosis, diptheria or other communicable diseases transmissible in milk. Absence of such diseases shall be determined by bacteriologic and physical examination to the satisfaction of the Director of Public Health.

"Grade 'A' Raw Milk from the dairy farm shall be delivered in sterile containers to the pasteurizing plants located in the City and County of San Francisco, and is to be kept at a temperature of fifty degrees Fahrenheit, or below, until it reaches the pasteurizing plant when it must not contain more than fifty thousand (50,000) non-pathogenic bacteria per milliliter and rapidly cooled after pasteurization to a temperature of fifty (50) degrees Fahrenheit or below, and so maintained to the time of delivery to the ultimate consumer.

"Grade 'A' Pasteurized Milk must not contain more than fifteen thousand (15,000) non-pathogenic bacteria per milliliter at the time of delivery to the ultimate consumer. * * *

"Subdivision 7. Method of Pasteurization: Pasteurizing milk consists of the heating of every portion of the milk to not less than one hundred and forty (140) degrees Fahrenheit nor more than one hundred and forty five (145) degrees Fahrenheit and maintaining same at that temperature for thirty (30) minutes, and immediately cooling thereafter to a temperature of fifty (50) degrees Fahrenheit.

"All milk except certified milk intended for human consumption in San Francisco shall be pasteurized in San Francisco in accordance with the method set forth herein.

"Each pasteurizing plant shall be equipped with a sufficient number of self-registering devices to accurately record the temperature to which and the length of time for which the pasteurized product has been heated. Such record shall be kept for two months and be available for inspection by the Director of the State Department of Agriculture or any of his agents, and also by the Director of Public Health or his representative. * * *

"Subdivision 12. Methods of Serving Milk: When served in any hotel, boarding house, lunch counter, restaurant or other place of public entertainment, market milk shall be served in the original bottle in sizes ½ pints, pints, ⅙ quarts and quarts only, the cap of which shall not be removed except in the presence of the customer or patron; provided, however, that this provision shall not apply to cream so served.

"The bottling of all milk except certified milk is prohibited except in regularly approved and authorized pasteurizing plants.

"It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to sell, exchange, offer or expose for sale or exchange, or have on hand for sale or exchange or serve in any hotel, boarding house, restaurant, saloon, lunch counter or other place of public entertainment any milk or cream to which any gelatin or other substance, except as provided in the general dairy law of California, has been added to increase the consistency of such milk or cream so as to make it appear richer or of better quality; provided, however, that nothing in this ordinance shall be construed as prohibiting the standardization of milk and cream as provided in this ordinance."

Plaintiff Natural Milk Producers Association of California is a nonprofit cooperative corporation. It is not now engaged in and does not intend to engage in the production or sale of milk, though its members are engaged in that pursuit in California. Plaintiff C. B. Clowes is producing and selling milk in San Joaquin County. Plaintiff R. W. Krobitzsch, now deceased, his legal representatives having been substituted herein in his place, was formerly engaged in selling and distributing guaranteed raw milk in San Francisco, but has sold his business. Clowes, and the successors of Krobitzsch, state that they are desirous of selling and distributing guaranteed raw milk in San Francisco. The latter are fostering a dairy herd for that purpose.

Plaintiff's first contention is that the ordinance conflicts with the state law as embodied in the Agricultural Code and is therefore invalid. That Code contains a comprehensive plan for the regulation of the production, sale and distribution of milk and other dairy products in the state of California. (Agricultural Code, secs. 451–734, St. 1933, pp. 130–167, as amended.)

[1] It is conceded that the city and county of San Francisco possesses power to make and enforce within its limits all such local police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws. (Cal.Const., Art. XI, sec. 11.)

It is true, as a general rule, that when there is a conflict between the local police regulations and the general police regulations of the state, the former is invalid if passed after the general law or is superseded if followed by the latter. In either case the result is the same, the local law has no effective force. There is of course the qualification with respect to chartered cities in regard to local laws dealing with purely municipal affairs, with which we are not here concerned; then the local law prevails. (18 Cal.Jur. 831 et seq.; Cal. Const., Art. XI, secs. 6 and 11.)

Turning to the specific claims of conflict made by plaintiffs, they assert that the Agricultural Code permits the sale and distribution of five grades of market milk, namely, certified, guaranteed raw, guaranteed pasteurized, grade A raw, and grade A pasteurized (Agricultural Code, secs. 484, 487, 488); that the ordinance while permitting the sale and distribution of some of those grades prohibits the sale and distribution of two grades, that is, guaranteed raw milk and grade A raw milk; that therefore there is a conflict in that under the state law all of the grades may be sold, but on the contrary the ordinance forbids the sale of some of those grades; and that section 451 of the Agricultural Code does not negative such a conflict by permitting municipal regulations to impose higher standards only for the individual grades because it does not authorize the absolute prohibition of the sale of any of the grades.

[2] Independent of section 451 of the Agricultural Code, which we will hereinafter discuss, it has long been the established general rule, in determining whether a conflict exists between a general and local law, that where the legislature has assumed to regulate a given course of conduct by prohibitory enactments, a municipal corporation with subordinate power to act in the matter may make such additional regulations in aid and furtherance of the purpose of the general law as may seem appropriate to the necessities of the particular locality and which are not in themselves unreasonable. In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 P. 517, 132 Am.St.Rep. 75; Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 182 P. 281;

In re Iverson, 199 Cal. 582, 250 P. 681; Borum v. Graham, 4 Cal.App.2d 331, 40 P.2d 866; Witt v. Klimm, 97 Cal.App. 131, 274 P. 1039.

In the instant case the requirement of the ordinance is, in effect, that no milk for human consumption may be sold in the area, unless it is pasteurized with the single exception of certified milk; certified milk is raw milk. That requirement is clearly an additional regulation relating to the sale and distribution of milk inasmuch as the Agricultural Code provides for the sale of guaranteed raw milk and grade A raw milk. (Agricultural Code, secs. 484, 487, 488.)

[3] Plaintiffs contend, however, that the Agricultural Code so completely occupies the field of regulation relating to the production, sale and distribution of milk for human consumption, that there is no room for the operation of an ordinance of a municipality on the subject. It is the general rule that where the state law so covers the entire field that there is no room for municipal regulation, the latter regulations are necessarily in conflict with the state law. See Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172; Atlas Mixed Mortar Co. v. City of Burbank, 202 Cal. 660, 262 P. 334; Ganley v. Claeys, 2 Cal.2d 266, 40 P.2d 817; Ex parte Grey, 11 Cal.App. 125, 104 P. 476; In re Murphy, 190 Cal. 286, 212 P. 30; In re Mingo, 190 Cal. 769, 214 P. 850, and In re Iverson, supra. The case most closely allied to the instant case is In re Iverson, supra, in which the state prohibition act, containing comprehensive regulation with regard to the sale of intoxicating beverages, provided that prescriptions for the sale of liquor may be filled in quantities not exceeding sixteen ounces of alcoholic liquor. The municipal ordinance in question limited the quantities per prescription to eight ounces. This court held there was no conflict and that the state did not intend to completely occupy the entire field. At page 586 of 199 Cal., at page 682 of 250 P., it stated the rule to be: "The only way the Legislature can inhibit local legislative bodies from enacting rules and police regulations is by the state itself occupying the same legislative field so completely that legislation on the subject by local legislative bodies will necessarily be inconsistent with the state act. It does not follow that because the Legislature has seen fit to make certain general rules applicable in all the cities and elsewhere in the state it has thereby impliedly prohibited the enactment of additional local regulations by municipalities in keeping with the purpose of the general law. So long as the requirements of the municipal ordinance are not in themselves pernicious as being unreasonable or discriminatory, both may stand. There may be different regulations without a conflict. [Cases cited.] Where the Legislature has assumed to regulate a given course of conduct by prohibitory enactments, a municipality with subordinate power to act in the matter may make such new and additional regulations in aid and furtherance of the purposes of the general law as may seem fit and appropriate to the necessities of the particular locality and which are not in themselves unreasonable. * * * Whether the Legislature has undertaken to occupy exclusively a given field of legislation is to be determined in every case upon an analysis of the statute and of the facts and circumstances upon which it was intended to operate."

[4] In the instant case the requirement in the ordinance that only pasteurized (certified excepted) milk may be sold is nothing more than a different and additional regulation. The Agricultural Code permits certified guaranteed milk, both raw and pasteurized, and grade A, both raw and pasteurized. The ordinance merely imposes the additional restriction that the milk, whether it be guaranteed or grade A, must be pasteurized.

[5] Furthermore, that the legislature did not intend to so completely occupy the field that no room was left for municipal regulation is evidenced by section 451 of the Agricultural Code. It provides in part: "No provision of this division, except subdivision (b) of section 458.1, or any rule and regulation of the director is a limitation on the power of a municipality or county to provide for reasonable additional regulations not in conflict therewith requiring standards higher than the minimum requirements for the grades of market milk established in this division." While such a provision will not validate an ordinance if it in fact conflicts with the state law, it is available as an indication that the legislature did not intend to completely occupy the field to the exclusion of municipalities. In re Iverson, supra. Plaintiffs assert, however, that the sole field of operation left by that provision to municipalities is to impose stricter requirements upon the various grades of milk as established by the Agricultural Code, but does not permit the complete prohibition of the sale of any one of the grades; that the ordinance prohibits the sale of two of the grades of milk set forth in the Agricultural Code, namely guaranteed raw milk and grade A raw milk, which creates a conflict with the provisions of that Code. That argument is very tenuous. We do not believe that that section may be given such a narrow interpretation. It is doubtful that there are more than three grades of milk for human consumption specified in the Agricultural Code, namely, certified, guaranteed and grade A. The latter two grades might be said to be divided into two kinds, raw and pasteurized, the main distinction between grade A raw and grade A pasteurized, for illustration, being the pasteurization. It is true that there is some difference in the requirements between the raw and the pasteurized milk other than pasteurization, but those differences appear to concern matters which have a direct relation to the results accomplished by pasteurization, such as the more frequent examination of the cows in case of raw milk when there is no process by which any bacteria are destroyed. Essentially, the requirement in the ordinance of pasteurization for both the guaranteed and grade A milk is merely a higher standard for the grades which is not in conflict with the state law. That interpretation finds support in sections 490, 585, 587 of the Agricultural Code, which refer to the various grades of milk established. Section 490 provides: "It is unlawful to sell any milk as, or under the representation of, guaranteed or grade A milk, except under the supervision of a milk inspection service approved by the director or established and conducted by the director." (Emphasis added.) No mention is made of pasteurized grade A and pasteurized guaranteed milk as being grades of milk. Section 585 dealing with the labeling of milk containers reads: "The class or grade of all market milk sold, except in bulk to distributors, the word 'raw' or 'pasteurized,' as the case may be, and the name and address of the producer or original bottler shall at all times appear plainly and in a conspicuous place on, or be securely attached to, every cap, bottle, can or other container." (Emphasis added.) The intimation is clear that pasteurization is an additional requirement within a grade, rather than a designation for an independent grade. Section 587 provides: "Where an approved milk inspection service is maintained as provided in this code, market milk shall be graded and designated as follows: 'certified milk,' 'guaranteed milk,' 'grade A milk.'" (Emphasis added.) Note there is no provision that pasteurized and raw guaranteed or grade A milk are separate grades.

Plaintiffs rely upon LaFranchi v. City of Santa Rosa, 8 Cal.2d 331, 65 P.2d 1301, 110 A.L.R. 639. In that case this court gave consideration to an ordinance prohibiting the sale of milk in Santa Rosa unless it was pasteurized in that city. There was a milk inspection service established (with the approval of the state) which embraced within its jurisdiction, that city, also the milk producer's facilities. The producer pasteurized his milk in his own approved plant. It was contended that there was a conflict between the ordinance and the state law, and the court so held but it was primarily concerned with the traffic barrier erected by the restriction on the place of pasteurization and it pointed out that the requirement that the pasteurization be done within the city, was not a higher standard for milk, conceding at page 336 of 8 Cal.2d, at page 1303 of 65 P.2d, 110 A.L.R. 639, however, that: "In considering this phase of the case, however, we may first assume that the municipality may adopt reasonable requirements with regard to the standards of the products which are not inconsistent with the Agricultural Code; that is to say, that the municipality may provide for standards higher than those fixed by the Agricultural Code, although it may not provide for standards below those fixed by the Agricultural Code. In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 P. 517, 132 Am.St.Rep. 75, and In re Iverson, 199 Cal. 582, 250 P. 681. It must also be taken for granted that the municipality may adopt zoning ordinances. Under the allegations of the complaint in the instant cause it appears that the ordinance here in question does not purport to increase the standards of the product nor relate to a particular portion of the city in which pasteurization plants may be located." (Emphasis added.) Such cases as In re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 P. 405, In re Mingo, supra, and Ex parte Daniels, supra, were distinguished by this court in Re Iverson, supra.

[6, 7] Plaintiffs contend that the ordinance is void on the ground that it discriminates in its operation without any reasonable basis for such discrimination contrary to the constitutional inhibitions (U.S. Const., 14th Amend.; Cal.Const., Art. I, sec. 21.) Their attack is specifically aimed at that part of the ordinance which prohibits the sale of any milk for human consumption in San Francisco other than pasteurized milk with the single exception of certified milk, and imposes penalties for the violation thereof. Certified milk is raw milk and it may be sold under the ordinance. Plaintiffs assert that there is no substantial difference between guaranteed raw milk as defined in the Agricultural Code and certified milk as defined in the ordinance and therefore there is no reasonable basis for forbidding the sale of one and not the other. They concede, however, that if there is a difference then their contention must fail. A comparison of the two standards reveals without doubt that there is a substantial and reasonable difference which is directly related to the public health. To qualify as guaranteed raw milk, the health of the cows must be determined once a month, the milk must be produced on dairies having a score of 90%, it must be bottled on the premises, it must be cooled immediately after being drawn to 50 degrees Fahrenheit or less and so maintained until delivered to the consumer at which time it shall have not more than a 10,000 bacteria count per milliliter, and must be sold within 30 hours and the handlers thereof must be free from disease. The standards for certified milk are quite similar but in addition it is required in the ordinance that it conform "to the rules, regulations, methods and standards for the production * * * of certified milk adopted by the American Association of Medical Milk Commissions and must bear the certificate of the Milk Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society." It would seem that, whatever may be the rules and regulations of the association, certified milk may be said to be subjected to a more rigid inspection than guaranteed raw milk by persons exceptionally well qualified therefor, that is, physicians and surgeons. Furthermore, the Agricultural Code recognizes certified milk as being in a class by itself. (Agricultural Code, sec. 484.) It must be remembered that a wide discretion is vested in the legislative body with respect to whether a classification is reasonable and proper and every presumption is in favor of the validity of such a statute. 5 Cal.Jur. 832 et seq. We cannot say that the ordinance here is invalid as making an arbitrary and unreasonable distinction between certified milk and guaranteed or grade A raw milk.

[8-11] Plaintiffs invoke the due process clause in their attack upon the ordinance (U.S.Const., 14th Amend., sec. 1; Cal. Const., Art. I, sec. 13.) It is true that the sale and distribution of milk is a lawful business which is protected by the Constitution, both federal and state. But it cannot be doubted that as milk is vital to the welfare of the nation and is susceptible of being a carrier of disease, the production, distribution and sale thereof may be strictly regulated under the police power to safeguard the public health. In re Hoffman, supra; Witt v. Klimm, supra. It has been held repeatedly that it is within the scope of the police power to require, for the protection of the public health, that all milk for human consumption must be pasteurized. Witt v. Klimm, supra; Koy v. Chicago, 263 Ill. 122, 104 N.E. 1104, Ann.Cas. 1915C, 67; City of Phœnix v. Breuninger, 50 Ariz. 372, 72 P.2d 580; Pfeffer v. Milwaukee, 171 Wis. 514, 177 N.W. 850, 10 A. L.R. 128; People v. McGowan, 118 Misc. 828, 195 N.Y.S. 286, 289; Lang's Creamery v. City of Niagara Falls, 224 App.Div. 483, 231 N.Y.S. 368; State v. Edwards, 187 N. C. 259, 121 S.E. 444; Moll v. City of Lockport, 118 Misc. 573, 194 N.Y.S. 250; 18 A. L.R. 246; 42 A.L.R. 558. It cannot be doubted therefore that the requirement that all milk for human consumption be pasteurized is a proper police regulation. The fact that here an exception is made with reference to certified milk does not alter the situation. Certified milk has long been established as milk in which especial precautions are taken to insure absence of disease and contamination, and the supervision is by especially qualified experts. Legislation with respect to preservation of the public health will not be set aside unless the legislative discretion is palpably wrong; this court said in Jardine v. City of Pasadena, 199 Cal. 64, 72, 248 P. 225, 227, 48 A.L.R. 509: " 'Every intendment is to be indulged in, and all doubts resolved in favor of the validity of its action.' The legislative determination of the facts which warrant the action of the legislative body will not be set aside or disregarded by the court unless the legislative discretion is clearly and palpably wrong and such appears to be and is found to be the fact from the evidence educed before the trial court. In re Miller, 162 Cal. 687, 124 P. 427; Stockton, etc., Co. v. [Common Council of City of] Stockton, 41 Cal. 147; Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 589, 27 P. 933; In re Spencer, 149 Cal. 396, 86 P. 896, 117 Am.St.Rep. 137, 9 Ann.Cas. 1105. Ex parte King, 157 Cal. 161, 106 P. 578." It cannot be said that the city and county of San Francisco had no reasonable grounds for requiring all milk sold therein to be either pasteurized or certified. That other less stringent or different regulations might have sufficed is not our concern; that is a matter lying within the discretion of the legislative body. The ordinance does not prohibit the sale of milk for human consumption in San Francisco, it merely sets forth standards or requirements as to quality that must be met by the milk producers before it may be sold.

[12-15] Plaintiffs urge that there is an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power in that portion of the ordinance dealing with certified milk. Subdivision 2 of section 3 hereinabove set forth is the particular provision which plaintiffs attack. Specifically they assert that the provision "certified milk is market milk which conforms to the rules, regulations, methods and standards * * * adopted by the American Association of Medical Milk Commissions and must bear the certificate of the Milk Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society" is vulnerable. The American Association of Medical Milk Commissions is a corporation with its principal place of business in New York whose members are the various local milk commissions throughout the nation. The Milk Commission of San Francisco County consists of five members appointed by the County Medical Society, the latter being composed of physicians and surgeons licensed to practice medicine in this state. A fee is charged to those desiring to produce and sell certified milk to cover the costs of inspection, and to purchase the caps from the American Association of Medical Milk Commissions with the trade marked word "certified" thereon to be used on the containers. The Commission legally is not an administrative agency of San Francisco or the state. In conformity with the rule that when it may reasonably be done, a statute should be interpreted in a manner that will avoid its being declared unconstitutional, we believe that the requirement in the ordinance may be said to merely require that certified milk must meet standards established by a private corporation or group who are experts in the field, and that the legislative body was aware of those regulations and standards and by the ordinance merely made them a part thereof. Under that view there is no unlawful delegation of legislative power. The ordinance is not essentially different from the statute requiring that to obtain a license to practice medicine the applicant must produce a diploma from a medical school whose requirements are in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges, a private organization, which was declared to be not an unlawful delegation of power in Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412, 77 P. 166, 66 L.R.A. 249, and Arwine v. Board of Medical Examiners, 151 Cal. 499, 91 P. 319. It comes within the rule announced in Ex parte Gerino, supra, 143 Cal. at page 418, 77 P. at page 168, 66 L.R.A. 249, as follows: "It being proper for the Legislature to demand some standard of efficiency, as we have seen, we think it is equally within its powers to declare that it shall be the same as that prescribed from time to time by an association composed of colleges devoted to the work of preparing persons for the profession. Evidently the standard of proficiency in scholarship as a preparation, and the particular studies necessary to secure a fair preparation, must change as the discoveries in natural science open new fields of investigation, and suggest or reveal new curative agencies. The Legislature cannot successfully prescribe in advance a standard to meet these new and changing conditions. The method adopted appears to be sufficiently definite to enable all colleges to reach the required standard, when in good faith they desire to do so. The law is as fixed, definite, and certain in this respect as the nature of the subject and the object to be attained will permit; and we do not think it should be held void because it adopts the standard fixed from time to time by those who, it will be presumed, are the most eminent in the profession which it attempts to regulate, and who should be the most interested in maintaining the highest degree of professional proficiency, skill, and training." The standards promulgated by the American Association of Medical Milk Commissions are presumably established by medical experts. See, also, St. Louis, Iron Mountain & S. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U.S. 281, 28 S.Ct. 616, 52 L.Ed. 1061. The cases of Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837, 79 L.Ed. 1570, 97 A.L.R. 947, and Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388, 55 S.Ct. 241, 79

L.Ed. 446, are not in point inasmuch as no standard whatsover was there given by the statute for guidance of those to whom authority was delegated. The regulations and standards provided here for certified milk must be aimed at the procurement of milk free from contamination or other conditions detrimental to health.

[16] It appears from the evidence that in order for a producer to obtain a permit from the Milk Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society authorizing the sale of certified milk in said city and county, he must permit said Commission to make an inspection of his facilities and the milk produced therefrom and pay certain inspection fees which said Commission has fixed to cover the cost of such inspection. It is contended by plaintiffs that such procedure constitutes a violation of the charter of the City and County of San Francisco, in that section 24 thereof specifically defines the manner of collection of inspection fees and the issuance of permits, and that the Milk Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society being a nongovernmental body has no authority to collect such fees or issue permits authorizing the sale of certified milk. However, it must be noted that the ordinance here in question contains no provision requiring the payment of fees or other charges to said Milk Commission or any other nongovernmental body. While it does appear from the evidence that fees have been demanded by and paid to said Milk Commission, plaintiffs have not been required to pay any such fees as they have not made application for a permit to sell certified milk in San Francisco. The authority of the Milk Commission to demand and collect inspection fees in connection with the certification of milk is not necessarily involved in this case, as plaintiffs did not apply for a permit or certificate authorizing them to sell certified milk, but by their action they seek to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance which prevents them from selling and distributing "guaranteed raw milk" in the City and County of San Francisco.

In view of what we have said in the foregoing opinion, it necessarily follows that the ordinance in question is a valid exercise of the police power of the respondent City and County, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

SHENK, CURTIS, HOUSER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 83

MILLER v. McKINNON et al.

S. F. 16023.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

As Corrected April 20, 1942.

1. Counties 🔑116

Ordinarily, compliance with terms of statute requiring public agency, such as a county, to let certain contracts by competitive bidding, is "mandatory" as to contracts within such terms, and contract made without compliance therewith is void and unenforceable as in excess of agency's power. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory".

2. Counties 🔑125
Municipal corporations 🔑249

Though a person to whom public agency, such as municipal corporation or county, illegally lets contract without competitive bidding, has supplied labor and materials in performance of contract and such agency has received benefits thereof, he has no right of action to recover reasonable value thereof in quantum meruit. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

3. Counties 🔑116
Evidence 🔑65

Persons dealing with public agency, such as county, are presumed to know law requiring competitive bidding before letting of certain contracts by such agency, and act at their peril in making such contracts without such bidding. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

4. Counties 🔑196(4)

A county taxpayer has right of action to recover moneys paid to contractor for work and materials furnished county in contravention of statute requiring competitive bidding before letting of contract therefor. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

5. Estoppel 🔑62(3)

"Estoppel" is not available against a county to defeat recovery from contractor of moneys paid for work and materials furnished county in contravention of statute requiring competitive bidding before letting certain contracts. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel"

6. Counties 🔑196(7)

In taxpayer's action to recover money paid by county for repairs and alterations of quarry buildings, allegations of amended complaint that plans and specifications designated such work as one project, including "repairing bunkers, moving and repairing hoists, extending power line", etc., were sufficient to bring work within statute requiring that construction and repair of designated public buildings "or other public buildings" be done under contract let by competitive bidding, as term "public buildings" is not limited to places where public assembles. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Building".

7. Statutes 🔑225

The statute providing for letting of contracts by county boards of supervisors for construction and repair of public buildings by competitive bidding, and statute authorizing counties to acquire and operate quarries, must be construed together in determining whether contract for repairs and alterations of county quarry buildings must be so let, and competitive bidding statute is limitation on such other statute. Pol.Code, §§ 4041.18, 4041e.

8. Counties 🔑116

The words "other public buildings" in statute requiring that contracts for construction of wharves, chutes, hospitals, courthouses, jails, etc., "or other public buildings", be let by competitive bidding, if cost thereof exceeds $500, do not refer only to structures of character of those in preceding list. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

9. Counties 🔑196(7)

In taxpayer's action to recover money paid by county for repair and alteration of quarry buildings and appliances, complaint alleging that plans and specifications designated work as one project stated case within statute requiring that contracts for construction or repair of public buildings be let by competitive bidding, if cost exceeds $500, though it alleged that work was done over period of years, during which numerous items of labor and material were furnished. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

10. Counties 🔑116

The salutary public policy, declared by statute requiring that construction and repair of county buildings be done by contracts let by competitive bidding when cost exceeds $500, may not be thwarted by splitting a job into many items, each of which calls for expenditure below such amount. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

11. Counties 🔑196(6)

An action to recover money, paid to partnership by county for repairing bunkers, hoists, etc., in county quarry, on ground of noncompliance with statute requiring that contracts for such work be let by competitive bidding, was properly brought by resident citizen and taxpayer of county on county's behalf against partnership, county, and officers thereof after district attorney's refusal to bring such action, and it was not necessary to prosecute action in county's name. Pol.Code, §§ 4005b, 4041.18.

12. Counties 🔑196(4)

Where a statute makes it imperative duty of specified officer to maintain actions to recover money illegally expended by county officers, refusal or inability of such officer to bring action must be shown before taxpayer's suit for recovery of such money is proper.

13. Pleading 🔑18

In taxpayer's action to recover money illegally paid by county to partnership for repairs and alterations of county rock quarry buildings without letting of contract therefor by competitive bidding, complaint alleging that repairs and alterations constituted one job, cost of which exceeded $500, showed on its face that competitive bidding was necessary and was sufficiently certain. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

14. Parties 🔑50

In taxpayer's action to recover money illegally expended by county, plaintiff, naming four of five county supervisors as defendants in fourth amended complaint, and alleging therein that named supervisors voted for issuance of county warrants referred to in third amended complaint, substantially complied with condition, imposed by court on plaintiff's right to amend third amended complaint in sustaining demurrers thereto, that plaintiff join as defendants all supervisors who voted for any motion to issue any of such warrants, though third amended complaint alleged that all supervisors voted therefor.

15. Counties 🔑196(6)

All members of county board of supervisors are not "necessary parties defendant" in taxpayer's action to recover county funds illegally expended, as for repairs and alterations of county quarry buildings without letting of contract therefor by competitive bidding. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Parties Defendant".

16. Pleading ⚿18

In taxpayer's action to recover money illegally expended by county for repairs and alterations of county quarry buildings, count of complaint, alleging that contractor's bills were padded and included charges for labor and material never performed or furnished, as defendant's contractor and county officers knew, and that claims, on which warrants specifically set forth were based, were not itemized, was not uncertain as not showing which charges were claimed to be exorbitant.

17. Pleading ⚿193(6)

In taxpayer's action to recover money illegally expended by county for repair and alteration of county quarry buildings without letting of contract therefor by competitive bidding, complaint, alleging that all warrants for such expenditures and resolutions authorizing them were part of one transaction, was not demurrable as improperly uniting several causes of action not separately stated, though warrants were issued on 13 different dates. Pol.Code, § 4041.18.

18. Counties ⚿196(7)

In taxpayer's action to recover money illegally expended by county, complaint was not demurrable because demand for repayment of amount expended was not first submitted to Attorney General, with request that he act thereon, as no express imperative duty is imposed on such officer to recover funds illegally expended by county, but such duty is placed on district attorney of county. Pol.Code, §§ 470, 4005b; Const. art. 5, § 21.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge Assigned.

Action by J. Lester Miller, as a citizen resident and taxpayer of Santa Clara County, against J. M. McKinnon, a member of the Board of Supervisors of such county, and others, to recover county funds alleged to have been illegally expended. From a judgment of dismissal after sustaining of demurrers to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint without leave to amend, he appeals.

Reversed, with directions.

For prior opinion, see, Cal.App., 115 P. 2d 842.

George F. Sharp, of Oakland, for appellant.

Louis Oneal, Maurice J. Rankin, Duncan Oneal, Bohnett, Hill, Cottrell & Boccardo, Peckham & Peckham, and C. C. Coolidge, all of San Jose, for respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiff, as a citizen resident and taxpayer of Santa Clara County, commenced in his name on behalf of the county, an action against a partnership doing business under the name of Nash Englehardt Silva Mfg. Co., and the members thereof, and certain county officers to recover money claimed by him to have been illegally expended by the county and received by the partnership. He also named the county as a defendant. He appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered after demurrers to his fourth amended complaint were sustained without leave to amend.

Plaintiff's fourth amended complaint contains two counts. In the first count, which was directed against the partnership defendant, he alleged that he is a citizen resident and taxpayer of the county; that the county owned real property upon which was situated "certain buildings or structures and a rock quarry"; that as a part of the buildings and attached thereto were "bunkers, hoists, motors, conveyors, crushers, screens, electrical appliances and a steel tower"; that in June, 1934, the board of supervisors of Santa Clara County authorized one of their members, J. M. McKinnon, to obtain assistance from the State Emergency Relief Administration for a project of repair and alteration of said quarry; that plans and specifications were approved by the board for that project of "repairing bunkers, moving and repairing hoists, extending power line, repairing motor, making tunnel and foundation, constructing 140′ x 32″ conveyor and erecting new steel tower," the estimated cost of which was $15,119, the labor cost to be furnished by SERA constituting $8,130 thereof; that thereafter such work was commenced; that the board did not adopt a resolution authorizing the performance of the work, and no bids therefor were called for; that between January 28, 1935, and January 13, 1936, there were issued warrants to the partnership defendant for a part of said work in the sum of $42,151.90; and that the district attorney of Santa Clara County knew of all of these facts but refused to bring an action for the recovery of the money so expended. The prayer of said count is for judgment in the sum of $42,151.90 against the partnership defendant. Thus, in essence this cause of action is one by a taxpayer in his own name on behalf of the county to recover moneys illegally expended, the illegality consisting of the failure to advertise for bids on the work to be performed on behalf of the county.

The second count adopts the foregoing allegations, and further alleges that the county purchasing agent, and quarry superintendent, some of the supervisors, and the partnership defendant conspired to do said work without calling for bids; that the bills of the partnership defendant that were paid were padded and included charges for labor and material in the sum of $17,847.68 which were never performed or furnished, all of which was known by the purchasing agent, superintendent of the quarry, the partnership defendant and supervisor McKinnon but was not known to the other supervisors who relied upon McKinnon's assurance that the claims were proper and voted to issue the warrants; that the district attorney with knowledge of those facts refused to take action to recover the money illegally expended.

Separate special and general demurrers to the plaintiff's third amended complaint were filed by Allegrini, McKinnon, Flood, and the partnership defendant. In the order sustaining those demurrers, leave to amend was conditioned upon plaintiff's joining as defendants the supervisors of Santa Clara County who voted for the issuance of the warrants. Demurrers were likewise interposed to the fourth amended complaint, but it does not appear what ruling was made thereon except the recital in the judgment of dismissal that the demurrers were sustained on December 28, 1937. The judgment of dismissal is dated January 12, 1938.

[1, 2] Ordinarily, compliance with the terms of a statute requiring the letting of certain contracts by a public agency such as a municipal corporation or county by competitive bidding and the advertising for bids is mandatory with respect to those contracts coming within the terms of the statute; a contract made without compliance with the statute is void and unenforceable as being in excess of the agency's power. This court stated in Los Angeles Dredging Co. v. Long Beach, 210 Cal. 348, 353, 291 P. 839, 842, 71 A.L.R. 161, in considering a competitive bidding requirement: "Certain general principles have become well established with respect to municipal contracts, and a brief statement of these principles will serve to narrow the field of our inquiry here. The most important one is that contracts wholly beyond the powers of a municipality are void. They cannot be ratified; no estoppel to deny their validity can be invoked against the municipality; and ordinarily no recovery in quasi contract can be had for work performed under them. It is also settled that the mode of contracting as prescribed by the municipal charter, is the measure of the power to contract; and a contract made in disregard of the prescribed mode is unenforceable." See, also, Reams v. Cooley, 171 Cal. 150, 152 P. 293, Ann.Cas.1917A, 1260; Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 96, 81 Am.Dec. 96; Murphy v. Napa County, 20 Cal. 497; Jones v. Southern Pacific Co., 34 Cal.App. 629, 168 P. 586; Matthews v. Town of Livermore, 156 Cal. 294, 104 P. 303; Foxen v. City of Santa Barbara, 166 Cal. 77, 134 P. 1142; Santa Cruz Rock Pavement Co. v. Broderick, 113 Cal. 628, 45 P. 863; City Improvement Co. v. Broderick, 125 Cal. 139, 57 P. 776; Gamewell Fire Alarm Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles, 45 Cal.App. 149, 187 P. 163; Strauch v. San Mateo Junior College Dist., 104 Cal.App. 462, 286 P. 173; Brown v. Bozeman, 138 Cal.App. 133, 32 P.2d 168; Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co. v. Williams, 182 Cal. 691, 189 P. 838. And even though the person with whom the contract was made has supplied labor and materials in the performance of the contract and the public agency has received the benefits thereof, he has no right of action to recover in quantum meruit the reasonable value thereof. Reams v. Cooley, supra; Zottman v. San Francisco, supra; Gamewell Fire Alarm Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles, supra. The competitive bidding requirement is founded upon a salutary public policy declared by the legislature to protect the taxpayers from fraud, corruption, and carelessness on the part of public officials and the waste and dissipa-

tion of public funds. This court stated in Reams v. Cooley, supra, at page 157 of 171 Cal., at page 295 of 152 P., Ann.Cas. 1917A, 1260: "It is urged in this case, as it invariably is in all such cases, that the application of this rule works a great hardship if the school district may retain the benefit of the work of the contractor and be relieved of liability to compensate him therefor. But the provision of the law limiting the power of school boards to validly contract, except in a prescribed mode, proceeds from a consideration of public policy not peculiar to such boards, but adopted as the policy of the state with reference to inferior boards and public bodies, and it would be difficult to perceive what practical public benefit or result could accrue by legislative limitation or prohibition on the power of such bodies to contract if courts were to allow a recovery where the limitation or prohibition is disregarded; in fact, the plea of hardship urged here was answered in the Zottman case by language as pertinent now as it was then, where the court said: 'It may sometimes seem a hardship upon a contractor that all compensation for work done, etc., should be denied him; but it should be remembered that he, no less than the officers of the corporation, when he deals in a matter expressly provided for in the charter, is bound to see to it that the charter is complied with. If he neglect this, or choose to take the hazard, he is a mere volunteer, and suffers only what he ought to have anticipated. If the statute forbids the contract which he has made, he knows it, or ought to know it, before he places his money or services at hazard.'"

[3] Persons dealing with the public agency are presumed to know the law with respect to the requirement of competitive bidding and act at their peril. (See cases cited supra.)

[4] With the principles being as above stated, it inescapably follows that a right of action exists to recover moneys paid to a contractor for work and materials furnished the public agency where they were furnished in contravention of a statute requiring competitive bidding. If, as we have seen, the contract is absolutely void as being in excess of the agency's power, the contractor acts at his peril, and he cannot recover payment for the work performed, it necessarily follows that any payments made to him for the work are illegally made and may be recovered. If that were not true the competitive bidding requirement would be completely nullified because the agency could have the work done, pay the charges therefor, and the taxpayers would be helpless to compel observance of the law. The only event preventing that result in any case would be whether some taxpayer acted soon enough to forestall the payment by injunction proceedings. The effective operation and enforcement of the public policy declared in the statute cannot be dependent upon such an uncertainty. The temptation on the part of officials and the persons contracting with the agency desiring to evade the law would be to act quickly and secretly in order that the taxpayers would be caught off guard. Such a condition is manifestly undesirable.

It has been held that recovery may be had of payments made to a public official who was interested in the transaction for the furnishing of supplies for which the payments were made. County of Shasta v. Moody, 90 Cal.App. 519, 265 P. 1032.

[5] The case of Sacramento County v. Southern Pacific Co., 127 Cal. 217, 59 P. 568, 825, denies the right of recovery from the contractor, but as pointed out in the dissenting opinion in that case and under the foregoing principles, such a rule cannot stand; it ignores those principles and must be overruled. It is founded wholly on estoppel which it assumes to be available against a municipality. That assumption is incorrect where compliance has not been had with the statute, which is the measure of the power. See Hall v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 198, 120 P.2d 13; Kline v. San Francisco Unified School Dist., 40 Cal.App.2d 174, 104 P.2d 661, 105 P.2d 362; cases cited supra. For the same reasons the apparent holding contrary to the views herein expressed in Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 45 P. 824, 50 P. 670; Contra Costa Water Co. v. Breed, 139 Cal. 432, 73 P. 189; Warren Bros. Co. v. Boyle, 42 Cal.App. 246, 183 P. 706, must not prevail. Furthermore, the language in the Contra Costa Water Company case appears to be dictum. See dissenting opinion, Beatty, C. J. The same is true of Miller v. Boyle, 43 Cal.App. 39, 184 P. 421. The case of McCormick Lumber Co. v. Highland School Dist., 26 Cal. App. 641, 147 P. 1183, involved a situation where there was a compliance with the statutory requirements but they were merely insufficient. Under the complaint here involved no advertisement for bids was made in proper form, defective form, or any form. A similar comment is applicable to Clark v. Conley School District, 86 Cal.App. 527, 261 P. 723. Some of those cases were strictly limited by Reams v. Cooley, supra, in which a contractor was not permitted to recover in quantum meruit for labor and materials furnished to a school district because the contract was not let on competitive bids, where the court said at page 153 of 171 Cal., at page 294 of 152 P., Ann.Cas.1917A, 1260: "Undoubtedly a school board, like a municipal corporation, may, under some circumstances, be held liable upon an implied contract for benefits received by it, but this rule of implied liability is applied only in those cases where the board or municipality is given the general power to contract with reference to a subject-matter, and the express contract which it has assumed to enter into in pursuance of this general power is rendered invalid for some mere irregularity or some invalidity in the execution thereof, and where the form or manner of entering into a contract is not violative of any statutory restriction upon the general power of the governing body to contract nor violative of public policy. In the absence of such restriction on the mode or manner of contracting, the same general rule applies to such inferior political bodies as to individuals, and the former will be held responsible on an implied contract for the payment of benefits it receives under an illegal express contract not prohibited by law. This is the effect of the cases cited by appellant and relied on by him, notably Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 45 P. 824, 50 P. 670; Sacramento [County] v. Southern Pacific Co., 127 Cal. 217, 59 P. 568, 825; and Contra Costa Water Co. v. Breed, 139 Cal. 432, 73 P. 189. But, while the doctrine of implied liability applies where general power to contract on a subject exists and the form or manner of doing so is not expressly provided by charter or statute, the decided weight of authority is to the effect that, when by statute the power of the board or municipality to make a contract is limited to a certain prescribed method of doing so, and any other method of doing it is expressly or impliedly prohibited, no implied liability can arise for benefits received under a contract made in violation of the particularly prescribed statutory mode. Under such circumstances the express contract attempted to be made is not invalid merely by reason of some irregularity or some invalidity in the exercise of a general power to contract, but the contract is void because the statute prescribes the only method in which a valid contract can be made, and the adoption of the prescribed mode is a jurisdictional prerequisite to the exercise of the power to contract at all, and can be exercised in no other manner so as to incur any liability on the part of the municipality. Where the statute prescribes the only mode by which the power to contract shall be exercised, the mode is the measure of the power. A contract made otherwise than as so prescribed is not binding or obligatory as a contract, and the doctrine of implied liability has no application in such cases."

The statute with respect to competitive bids here involved is section 4041.18 of the Political Code. It provides in part:

"Under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law, and in addition to jurisdiction and powers otherwise conferred, the board of supervisors, in their respective counties, shall have the jurisdiction and powers to construct or lease, build or rebuild, furnish or refurnish or repair hospital and almshouse, courthouse, jail, historical museum, aquarium, county free library building, branch library building, art gallery, art institute, exposition building or buildings for exhibiting and advertising farming, mining, manufacturing, live stock raising, and other resources of the county, stadium and such other public buildings as may be necessary to carry out the work of the county government, and to provide all necessary officers, employees, attendants, and supplies for the proper maintenance of the same. * * *

"Whenever the cost of construction of any wharf, chute, or other shipping facilities, or of any hospital, almshouse, courthouse, jail, historical museum, aquarium, county free library building, branch library building, art gallery, art institute, exposition building or buildings, stadium or other public buildings, or the cost of any repairs thereto or furnishing thereof shall exceed the sum of five hundred dollars, such work shall be done by contract, and any contract therefor shall be void unless the same shall be let as hereinafter provided.

"The board of supervisors shall adopt plans and specifications, strain sheets and working details therefor, and must advertise for bids for the performance of the said work in a newspaper of general circulation published in the county. * * *

"Provided, however, that in counties employing a purchasing agent, furnishings, materials and supplies used in the work mentioned in this subdivision costing not more than two thousand dollars, may be purchased by said purchasing agent in accordance with the provisions of section 4041.13 of this code without the formality of obtaining bids, letting contracts, preparing specifications and doing the other things required by this section for purchases costing more than five hundred dollars."

[6] From the allegations in the fourth amended complaint with regard to the work performed, it appears that the county of Santa Clara owns a parcel of real property and that there is situated thereon and "attached thereto, as part of said real property, certain buildings or structures and a rock quarry; that as a part of said buildings or structures and attached thereto there were bunkers, hoists, motors, conveyors, crushers, screens, electrical appliances and a steel tower; that said buildings or structures at all times herein mentioned were used to operate said quarry and extract rock therefrom"; that it was determined by the board of supervisors that the repairs and alterations to said quarry were necessary and plans and specifications therefor were filed and "that said plans and specifications designated said repairs and alterations as one project or one job, including 'repairing bunkers, moving and repairing hoists, extending power line, repairing motor, making tunnel and foundation, constructing 140' x 32" conveyor and erecting new steel tower'. That said plans and specifications of said County Surveyor included an estimate of the total cost of said job or project at Fifteen Thousand One Hundred Nineteen Dollars ($15,119.00), Eight Thousand One Hundred Thirty Dollars ($8,130.00) thereof estimated as labor to be furnished by SERA and the balance covering materials to be furnished by the County of Santa Clara". We believe those allegations are sufficient to bring the work performed within the terms of section 4041.18 of the Political Code; the only item that might possibly be excluded would be the "repairing motor". The terms "other public buildings, or the cost of any repairs thereto or furnishing thereof" appearing in section 4041.18 are sufficiently comprehensive to include the bunkers, tunnel, hoists, power line, conveyor and tower.

Plaintiff alleged that the various items were attached to and a part of the structures and buildings at the rock quarry. The term "public buildings" is obviously not limited to places where the public assembles. A jail would clearly be a public building; yet it is not ordinarily a place of public assemblies. See Swasey v. County of Shasta, 141 Cal. 392, 74 P. 1031. For illustration it has been held that the term building includes a sandhopper, Wilbur v. City of Newton, 307 Mass. 191, 29 N.E.2d 689; a spur track, Saulsberry v. North American Refractories Co., 278 Ky. 808, 129 S.W.2d 525; and that the terms "structures" and "public buildings" are synonymous, Saulsberry v. North American Refactories Co., supra. There is no policy of law which requires that a restricted or narrow meaning be given to the term building as here used in the statute. The manifest policy of the law is to require competitive bidding when the county engages in the construction or repair of improvements costing more than the named amount.

[7, 8] The fact that a county's authority for acquiring and operating a quarry is particularly set forth in a separate code section (Political Code, sec. 4041e) is of little significance in determining the scope of section 4041.18. Section 4041e does not purport to touch upon the subject of the manner of construction of quarry facilities, and it may be said of some of the other structures specifically mentioned by name in section 4041.18, that they find specific authorization in other sections or statutes. Sections 4041.18 and 4041e must be construed together and the former is a limitation on the latter. See Matthews v. Town of Livermore, supra. Nor may it be successfully urged that by reason of the listing of various public buildings, the words "other public buildings" refer only to structures of the character in the preceding list, because that list includes a wide variety of works with no common characteristic such as a "chute and wharf" as compared with a library.

[9, 10] Defendants assert that there were numerous items furnished over a period of a year and that one furnishing various items of labor or material cannot be expected to ascertain each time whether the items are a part of one project and thus requiring bids. It is true that it is alleged that the work was done over a period of a year, but it is also alleged: "That said plans and specifications designated said repairs and alterations as one project or one job." (Emphasis added.) The allegations hereinbefore quoted are sufficient to state a case coming within the terms of section 4041.18 of the Political Code. Defendants are not foreclosed from furnishing proof that the labor and materials furnished by them did not in fact come within the purview of that section. It must be true that the salutary public policy declared by that section may not be thwarted by the device of splitting a job into many items, each calling for an expenditure below the prescribed amount in excess of which competitive bidding is required.

[11, 12] As we have seen, the demurrer to the first count in the complaint was general and also claimed lack of legal capacity on plaintiff's part to maintain the action. It is defendants' position that plaintiff's first cause of action, that is, the action to recover the money paid to the partnership on the ground that the payment was illegal as there was no compliance with the competitive bidding requirement, is founded upon a liability created by section 4005b of the Political Code, and the action thereunder must be prosecuted in the name of the county. Plaintiff alleged that he is a resident citizen and taxpayer of Santa Clara County; that the action is brought on behalf of the county, and that the district attorney of the county has refused to bring it. He named the county as a party defendant. Such procedure is proper. See Osburn v. Stone, 170 Cal. 480, 482, 150 P. 367. Section 4005b provides: "Whenever any board of supervisors shall, without authority of law, order any money paid as salary, fees, or for any other purposes, and such money shall have been actually paid; or whenever any county officer has drawn any warrant or warrants in his own favor, or in favor of any other person, without being authorized by the board of supervisors, or by the law, and the same shall have been paid, the district attorney of such county is hereby empowered, and it is hereby made his imperative duty, to institute suit, in the name of the county, against such person or persons, to recover the money so paid, and twenty per cent damages for the use thereof; and no order of the board of supervisors therefor shall be necessary to maintain such suit. When the money has not been paid on such order or warrants, it is hereby made the imperative duty of the district attorney of such county, upon receiving notice thereof, to commence suit, in the name of the county, to restrain the payment of the same; and no order of the board of supervisors shall be necessary in order to maintain such suit." Section 526a of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes a citizen resident to bring an action against a county officer to restrain the illegal expenditure of money. It has been intimated either directly or indirectly that section 4005b in effect creates a cause of action for money illegally expended against the person to whom paid. Calaveras County v. Poe, 167 Cal. 519, 140 P. 23; County of Santa Barbara v. Janssens, 177 Cal. 114, 169 P. 1025, L.R.A.1918C, 558; County of Santa Barbara v. Rucker, 35 Cal.App. 676, 170 P. 860; Burr v. Board of Supervisors, 96 Cal. 210, 31 P. 38; Hansen v. Carr, 73 Cal.App. 511, 238 P. 1048; County of Shasta v. Moody, supra; County of Marin v. Messner, 44 Cal.App.2d 577, 112 P.2d 731; Contra dictum, Miller v. City of Martinez, 28 Cal. App.2d 364, 82 P.2d 519. It cannot be doubted that unless some substantive right is established by section 4005b then there is no basis for the recovery of the 20 per cent penalty in addition to the money illegally received, provision for which is made in that section. We believe that it must be conceded that that section at least recognizes the existence of such a cause of action. As heretofore pointed out, however, a cause of action exists to recover from the person receiving the money illegally paid, independent of any statute, and it is also clear that the action may be prosecuted by a taxpayer in his name on behalf of the public agency. See Mock v. City of Santa Rosa, 126 Cal. 330, 58 P. 826; Osburn v. Stone, supra; Hansen v. Carr, supra; Newton v. Brodie, 107 Cal.App. 512, 290 P. 1058; Briare v. Matthews, 202 Cal. 1, 258 P. 939. Where a statute makes it the imperative duty of a specified officer to maintain actions to recover money illegally expended by county officers, there must be a showing that such officer refuses to or for some reason cannot act before a taxpayer's suit is proper. Hansen v. Carr, supra. There is a statute here imposing such duty on the district attorney, Pol.Code, sec. 4005b. The plaintiff alleged that the district attorney refused to act. While it is true that plaintiff states in his brief that his action is based upon section 4005b, nevertheless, it follows from the foregoing that plaintiff has adequately stated a cause of action in his first count against the partnership for the recovery of the sums illegally expended which arose independent of statute. It was not therefore necessary that such action be prosecuted in the name of the county because it is not affected by the statute.

However, if plaintiff is to recover the penalty of 20 per cent in addition to the money received by defendant partnership, he must necessarily rely upon section 4005b, assuming a substantive right of action is created by that section. Even so, the demurrer, both general and for defect of parties plaintiff was improperly sustained. We see no valid reason why the action must be brought in the name of the county. Section 4005b merely requires the district attorney to bring the action in the name of the county when he prosecutes it. Naturally, he would bring the action in the county's name as attorney for the county. When he is not prosecuting the action because of his refusal to do so, the requirement that it be in the name of the county is no longer of any consequence. The action then is on behalf of the county by a taxpayer who in reality is representing the taxpayers generally. He in fact has no authority to sue in the name of the county. The case of Gray v. White, 5 Cal.App.2d 463, 43 P.2d 318, is not contrary to this view. There the action was by a taxpayer in his name against the supervisors and other officers of a county to recover money illegally expended. The court held a demurrer to the complaint properly sustained because plaintiff failed to allege the refusal on the part of the district attorney to bring the action. The statements there made with reference to the necessity of the action being in the name of the county and that the county was improperly joined as defendant are dictum.

[13] Defendants claim that the complaint is uncertain because it cannot be ascertained that the work and labor furnished by defendant partnership was a part of one job. We have heretofore quoted the allegation to the effect that the repairs and alteration to the rock quarry buildings was one job. It therefore appears on the face of the complaint that competitive bidding was necessary. The complaint is sufficiently certain to meet the requirement of a pleading of this character.

[14] In regard to the second cause of action, it is plaintiff's position that the gravamen thereof is the same as the first cause of action, that is, the failure to call for bids, and that the other allegations with respect to padding of bids, failure to supply the materials claimed, and knowingly causing the illegal payments to be made, were made to establish the participation of the defendants supervisor J. M. McKinnon, purchasing agent Emma Allegrini, and E. P. Flood, the superintendent of the county quarry, in a conspiracy to make the illegal expenditures. However, it should be mentioned that plaintiff prays for only $17,847.68 against the above defendants, the amount of claimed excessive payment for the material. The court ruled with regard to the demurrer to the third amended complaint as follows:

"It is hereby ordered That said demurrers, and each of them, be sustained and plaintiff granted fifteen (15) days from date hereof to file an amended complaint, on condition that in said amended complaint he join as defendants all members of the Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County who voted in favor of any motion to issue any of the County Warrants referred to in plaintiff's amended complaint.

"In the event that plaintiff shall fail to join as defendants herein all Supervisors of Santa Clara County who voted for any of said warrants by filing a further amended complaint within said period of fifteen (15) days,

"It is ordered that said demurrers, and each of them, be sustained without leave to amend." (Emphasis added.)

Thereafter, plaintiff filed his fourth amended complaint in which he named as defendants, Hecker, Ayer and Cooley, they being three supervisors in addition to supervisor McKinnon theretofore named as defendant; the fifth supervisor was not named. Plaintiff alleged in his fourth amended complaint "that all of the members of the Board of Supervisors named herein as defendants voted for the issuance of each warrant"; the named defendants were the above-mentioned four supervisors; the warrants were for the sum of $42,151.90 paid to defendant partnership. One of the grounds of the demurrer to the fourth amended complaint was a defect of parties in that all of the members of the board of supervisors were not made defendants; the demurrer also specified all the grounds theretofore stated in the former demurrers to the third amended complaint. As far as appears from the record, the court made no order in regard to the demurrer to the fourth amended complaint. The only document with reference thereto is the judgment dismissing the action dated January 12, 1938, in which it is recited that defendants "having appeared and demurred to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint herein and the issue of law therefrom arising having been duly submitted to the court for its decision and the court being fully advised in the premises and having, by its order duly given and made on the 28th day of December, 1937, sustained the demurrer of said defendants to plaintiff's said fourth amended complaint without leave to amend the same." (Emphasis added.) Regardless of whether the requirement that plaintiff name all of the supervisors who voted for the issuance of the warrants, as defendants, set forth in the order sustaining the demurrers to the third amended complaint, was proper as a condition to plaintiff's right to amend, it seems that the plaintiff substantially complied with that condition. He alleged that the four supervisors named voted for the issuance of the warrants. The fact that he had alleged in the third amended complaint that all of the supervisors voted for the warrants does not mitigate against this allegation inasmuch as we must look at the final allegation in the last amended complaint. Therefore defendants cannot successfully assert that plaintiff failed to comply with the condition imposed by the court on his right to amend.

[15] However, inasmuch as the demurrer to the fourth amended complaint, raised the issue of the necessity of all the supervisors being named as defendants, and the demurrer was apparently sustained on all grounds, it becomes necessary to consider whether all the members of the board were necessary parties. We have seen that the first cause of action was directed at defendant partnership, the party who received the payments from the county, to recover the money illegally paid to it. It has been held that a demurrer for defect of parties, that is, that parties have not been joined, should be sustained only if the parties are necessary parties as distinguished from proper parties. Tregear v. Etiwanda Water Co., 76 Cal. 537, 18 P. 658, 9 Am.St.Rep. 245; De Leonis v. Hammel, 1 Cal.App. 390, 82 P. 349. The court may, of course, order proper parties to be brought in if expedient for a complete determination of the controversy. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 389. It has been said that the proper procedure to follow when a demurrer for defect of necessary parties is meritorious, is to order the parties brought in rather than to sustain the demurrer. Hughson v. Crane, 115 Cal. 404, 47 P. 120. We have seen that plaintiff substantially complied with the order of the court to bring in the other supervisors who voted for the issuance of the warrants, if we treat the order sustaining the demurrer to the third amended complaint as embodying such order. No order other than that was made. In any event, all of the members of the board of supervisors are not necessary parties defendant in an action against such officers to recover funds illegally expended. An analogous situation exists in an action by stockholders to recover on behalf of a corporation from the directors thereof, corporate funds unlawfully diverted. In such a case all of the guilty members of the board of directors need not be named defendants, their liability being joint and several. Curtis v. Metcalf, D.C., 265 F. 293; Baker v. Baker, 122 Misc. 757, 204 N.Y.S. 11; Brennan v. Barnes, 133 Misc. 340, 232 N.Y.S. 112; Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations (Perm. Ed.), vol. 3, sec. 1314; see, also, Reetz v. Kitch, 230 Wis. 1, 283 N.W. 348. Harvey v. Meigs, 17 Cal.App. 353, 119 P. 941, and Fornaseri v. Cosmosart Realty, etc., Corp., 96 Cal.App. 549, 274 P. 597, cited by defendants are not contrary to the views above expressed. The statement in the Harvey case that the directors of the corporation should have been made parties is dictum, and if anything, merely indicates that they would be proper parties. In the Fornaseri case the statement was made with reference to a creditor's suit against a corporation for fraud that the delinquent officers must be made parties.

[16] Defendants urge that the second cause of action is uncertain in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom "which of the charges for labor or materials it is claimed were exorbitant." We cannot agree. The particular materials and labor that were exorbitant or not furnished were peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendants. The plaintiff specifically sets forth the warrants that were issued, and alleges that the claims upon which they were based were not itemized. Under those circumstances the records of the county would not show the precise materials and labor which were questioned. Therefore, the case of Hansen v. Carr, supra, cited by defendants, dealing with the necessity of pleading matters of record is not in point. Furthermore, it must be remembered that the gist of plaintiff's second cause of action may be said to be the violation of section 4041.18 of the Political Code, rather than the payment of claims for materials which were not furnished.

[17] Defendants argue that several causes of action were improperly united and not separately stated; that is, that each warrant, or at least each resolution of the board for the issuance of the several warrants, is a separate and illegal expenditure giving rise to a separate cause of action. Warrants were issued on thirteen different dates. This contention is untenable. According to the allegations of the complaint, all of the warrants and the resolutions authorizing them were a part of one transaction; that is, for the one job of repairing and altering the buildings at the county quarry, and against the same defendants. There was one wrong manifested by several incidents, and therefore one cause of action accrued. See Covey v. England & McCaffrey, 233 App.Div. 332, 253 N.Y.S. 340; Broderick v. Marcus, 146 Misc. 240, 261 N.Y.S. 625.

[18] Finally, it is asserted by defendant Flood, that the demurrers were properly sustained because the demand for the repayment of the amounts illegally expended was not first submitted to the attorney general with the request to him to act thereon. This contention is clearly without merit as there is no express imperative duty imposed upon the attorney general to recover funds illegally expended by a county. Cal.Const., art. V, sec. 21; Pol.Code, sec. 470. That duty is placed upon the district attorney. Pol.Code, sec. 4005b. The policy that it is preferable to have such cases prosecuted by the district attorney, a representative of the county, is satisfied when there is a request that he act followed by his refusal to do so.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court directed to overrule the demurrers and permit defendants to answer if they be so advised.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, and HOUSER, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 165

PEOPLE v. GONZALES et al.

Cr. 4382.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing May 1, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⚿394

Under Fourth Amendment prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures by federal officers, the federal courts forbid introduction of evidence obtained by an illegal search or seizure if a timely motion for its exclusion is made. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4.

2. Criminal law ⚿394

Under provision of California Constitution prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures, the introduction of improperly obtained evidence is permitted on ground that illegality of the search and seizure does not affect admissibility of the evidence. Const. art. 1, § 19.

3. Criminal law ⚿394

Under provision of California Constitution prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures, a defendant may have civil and criminal remedies against officers for their illegal acts, but state is not precluded from using the evidence obtained thereby. Pen. Code, § 146; Const. art. 1, § 19.

4. Searches and seizures ⚿7(2)

The Fourth Amendment prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures is not a limitation upon the states. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4.

5. Constitutional law ⚿268

A criminal trial does not constitute a denial of "due process of law" so long as it is fair and impartial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

6. Constitutional law ⚿266

In criminal prosecution, use of evidence obtained through an illegal search and seizure of apartment of one of defendants did not constitute a denial of "due process of law". Pen.Code, § 146; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4, 14; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 19.

7. Criminal law ⚿394

The admissibility of evidence is not affected by illegality of means to which the party has been enabled to obtain the evidence.

8. Witnesses 🔑35

In criminal prosecution, trial court properly permitted officer to testify despite a temporary injunction obtained in a separate proceeding purporting to restrain the officer from testifying with regard to entry into apartment of one of defendants, since objections to testimony of a witness should be made to court before which witness was testifying.

9. Witnesses 🔑21

Provisions of statutes requiring any competent person who is properly subpœnaed and who is not privileged to appear in court and answer questions pertinent to matter in issue, and providing that if he refuses to testify he may be punished for contempt and that no one may lawfully prevent him from testifying, have for their objective the prevention of interference with testimony of witnesses. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 128, 177, 1985, 1986, 1990–1993; Pen.Code, §§ 136, 166, 1331.

10. Criminal law 🔑1170½(1)

In criminal prosecution, even if trial court erred in permitting officer to testify despite a temporary injunction obtained in a separate proceeding purporting to restrain officer from testifying with regard to his entry into apartment of defendant, error was not prejudicial to defendants, where such testimony could not be excluded on a new trial in view of Supreme Court holding that testimony was admissible.

11. Witnesses 🔑372(2)

In criminal prosecution, sustaining of objection to question asked witness by defendants' attorney on cross-examination as to whether witness had been enjoined from testifying concerning anything he had learned as result of his illegal search of apartment of one of defendants, was proper, as against defendants' contention that they had a right to ask the question for purpose of impeaching credibility of witness by showing bias.

12. Criminal law 🔑1172(2)

In prosecution of two defendants for conspiracy to commit grand theft, instructions telling jury that evidence admitted against one defendant could not be used against other defendant, although ambiguous in failing to indicate what evidence was admitted against each of defendants, were not prejudicial, in view of trial court's statements during trial indicating what evidence was admitted against each of defendants.

13. Conspiracy 🔑47

Participation in a conspiracy can be shown by circumstantial evidence.

14. Conspiracy 🔑47

Evidence supported conviction of both defendants for a conspiracy to steal money from a third party by use of a pretended money making machine.

15. Criminal law 🔑1171(1)

In prosecution of two defendants for conspiracy to steal money from a third party by use of pretended money making machine, argument to other bunco cases and bunco games, if misconduct, was not sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal, particularly where trial court refused to grant a new trial on such ground.

CARTER and HOUSER, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Alfred J. Fritz, Judge.

John Gonzales and another were convicted of conspiracy to commit grand theft, and they appeal.

Affirmed.

Leo R. Friedman, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., J. Albert Hutchinson and David K. Lener, Deputies Atty. Gen., and Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., and Joseph A. Garry, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

On June 17, 1940, an indictment was filed charging defendants Gonzales and Chierotti with having conspired together on May 25, 1940, to commit grand theft by fraudulent representations to Secundo Valenzano regarding a machine that purportedly could reproduce United States currency, with the use of certain chemicals. The evidence showed that defendant Gonzales, after striking up an acquaintance with Secundo Valenzano, told Valenzano that a rich man had the machine, that real currency was necessary in making the reproductions, and that he would surreptitiously get possession of the machine and bring it to Valenzano's saloon. He brought the machine there, put some real bills into it, used the chemicals, and when the machine was opened, there were two bills for each one originally inserted. Thereupon Gonzales told Valenzano that if he could get several thousand dollars in new bills, equal to an amount to be furnished by Gonzales, each could double his money by using the machine. Valenzano put up no money but notified the police who arrested both Gonzales and Chierotti.

Valenzano was the only witness who testified to the foregoing events. Police Officer Iredale testified that on June 6, 1940, he and Police Officer Linss, without any warrant, authority, or permission, entered the apartment of defendant Chierotti in the latter's absence and took therefrom a black case containing not only bottles of liquid but a machine, subsequently identified by Valenzano as that used by Gonzales. Chierotti and Gonzales objected to any testimony by Officer Iredale regarding the entry and search of Chierotti's apartment and the seizure of the case and contents, as well as to the introduction and use of the latter as evidence, on the ground that the entry, search, seizure, and use of the property violated the rights guaranteed to Chierotti by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the search and seizure and due process clauses of the Constitution of California. Cal.Const. Art. I, secs. 19, 13.

Before the commencement of the trial Chierotti sought an injunction in an independent proceeding against the San Francisco Police Department and Officer Iredale to enjoin the use of the case and contents at the trial and to restrain Officer Iredale from testifying to anything he saw, did or heard while engaged in his search and seizure. The court denied the injunction and Chierotti appealed to this court. Pending determination of the appeal, the lower court granted a temporary injunction restraining Officer Iredale from testifying with regard to the entry into Chierotti's apartment. Many months before the trial Chierotti filed a written motion for an order directing the return to him of the case and contents, and the exclusion from evidence, not only of this property, but of any testimony of the officers regarding the search and seizure or based on information acquired as a result thereof. The motion was denied. At the trial the court refused to enforce the temporary injunction, allowing Officer Iredale to testify in direct defiance thereof. The defendants were found guilty by the jury. After judgment was pronounced each defendant appealed to this court from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment.

[1-3] The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures by federal officers. Pursuant to this mandate the federal courts forbid the introduction in court of evidence obtained by an illegal search or seizure if a timely motion for its exclusion is made by the accused. Byars v. United States, 273 U.S. 28, 47 S.Ct. 248, 71 L.Ed. 520; Go-Bart Importing Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 344, 51 S.Ct. 153, 75 L.Ed. 374; Gouled v. United States, 252 U.S. 298, 302, 41 S.Ct. 261, 65 L.Ed. 647; Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States, 251 U.S. 385, 40 S.Ct. 182, 64 L.Ed. 319; Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746; Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 34 S.Ct. 341, 58 L.Ed. 652; Nardone v. United States, 308 U.S. 338, 60 S.Ct. 266, 84 L.Ed. 307; Ex parte Jackson, 96 U.S. 727, 733, 24 L.Ed. 877; Amos v. United States, 255 U.S. 313, 41 S.Ct. 266, 65 L.Ed. 654; Agnello v. United States, 269 U.S. 20, 46 S.Ct. 4, 70 L.Ed. 145. The California Constitution contains an identical provision (Cal.Const. Art. I, sec. 19), but the accepted rule in this state, as in many others, permits the introduction of improperly obtained evidence on the ground that the illegality of the search and seizure does not affect the admissibility of the evidence. People v. Mayen, 188 Cal. 237, 205 P. 435, 24 A.L.R. 1383; In re Polizzotto, 188 Cal. 410, 205 P. 676; People v. Le Doux, 155 Cal. 535, 102 P. 517; Herrscher v. State Bar, 4 Cal.2d 399, 49 P.2d 832. See cases cited in 88 A.L.R. 348. The defendant may have civil and criminal remedies against the officers for their illegal acts (see Cal.Pen.Code, sec. 146; Silva v. MacAuley, 135 Cal.App. 249, 26 P.2d 887, 27 P.2d 791; Ryan v. Crist, 23 Cal.App. 744, 139 P. 436; 15 So.Cal.L.Rev. 139, 141 et seq.), but the state is not precluded from using the evidence obtained thereby.

[4-7] The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is not a limitation upon the states (National Safety Deposit Co. v. Stead, 232 U.S. 58, 34 S.Ct. 209, 58 L.Ed. 504; State of Ohio v. Dollison, 194 U.S. 445, 24 S.Ct. 703, 48 L.Ed. 1062),

and California is free to interpret its own constitution. Defendants contend, however, that the prohibition in the Fourth Amendment of unreasonable searches and seizures is included in the provision of the Fourteenth Amendment that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and therefore that under the interpretation given to the Fourth Amendment by the federal courts the introduction of evidence obtained by an illegal search and seizure constitutes a denial of due process of law. Not all of the first ten amendments to the federal constitution, however, fall within the concept of due process of law. Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 58 S.Ct. 149, 82 L.Ed. 288; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U.S. 78, 29 S.Ct. 14, 53 L.Ed. 97; Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 54 S.Ct. 330, 78 L.Ed. 674, 90 A.L.R. 575. See 39 Harv.L.Rev. 431; 24 Harv.L.Rev. 366. In the determination of whether the prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures is included within this concept, the unlawful search and seizure must be distinguished from the introduction in court of the evidence obtained as a result thereof. "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures" may be so fundamental as to make any unreasonable search and seizure by a public officer a violation of due process of law. It does not necessarily follow, however, that the use in a court of law of evidence thus obtained is so contrary to fundamental principles of liberty and justice as to constitute a denial of due process of law. A criminal trial does not constitute a denial of due process of law so long as it is fair and impartial. See cases cited in 16 C.J.S., Constitutional Law, § 591, p. 1185 et seq. There is a failure to observe "that fundamental fairness essential to the very concept of justice" when a trial is but a pretense (Lisenba v. California, 62 S.Ct. 280, 290, 86 L.Ed. 166), as a trial dominated by a mob (Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U.S. 86, 43 S.Ct. 265, 67 L.Ed. 543), or when the defendant is denied the right to counsel (Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 58 S.Ct. 1019, 82 L.Ed. 1461), or when his conviction results from testimony known by the prosecution to be perjured (Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U.S. 103, 55 S.Ct. 340, 79 L.Ed. 791, 98 A.L.R. 406), or from an involuntary confession obtained through coercion or torture. Chambers v. Florida, 309 U.S. 227, 60 S.Ct. 472, 84 L.Ed. 716; Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U.S. 278, 56 S.Ct. 461, 80 L.Ed. 682. While the United States Supreme Court has held that the due process clause includes the guarantee of the Fifth Amendment against compulsory self-incrimination to the extent that the Amendment forbids the use of a confession obtained by coercion or torture (Chambers v. Florida, supra; Brown v. Mississippi, supra; Lisenba v. California, supra. See Bram v. United States, 168 U.S. 532, 18 S.Ct. 183, 42 L.Ed. 568), it has done so because a confession obtained by coercion or torture is so unreliable that its use violates all concepts of fairness and justice. Chambers v. Florida, supra; Brown v. Mississippi, supra; Lisenba v. California, supra; cf. Twining v. New Jersey, supra. The use of evidence obtained through an illegal search and seizure does not violate due process of law for it does not affect the fairness or impartiality of the trial. People v. Defore, 242 N.Y. 13, 150 N.E. 585; People v. Mayen, supra; Com. v. Donnelly, 246 Mass. 507, 141 N.E. 500; Johnson v. State, 152 Ga. 271, 109 S.E. 662, 19 A.L.R. 641. The fact that an officer acted improperly in obtaining evidence presented at the trial in no way precludes the court from rendering a fair and impartial judgment. It has long been an established rule of evidence that "the admissibility of evidence is not affected by the illegality of the means through which the party has been enabled to obtain the evidence." 8 Wigmore, Evidence, 3d Ed., sec. 2183, p. 5, and cases there cited.

[8-10] Defendants contend that the trial court should not have permitted Officer Iredale to testify in view of the temporary injunction restraining him from testifying with regard to the entry into Chierotti's apartment. Objections to the testimony of a witness, however, should be made to the court before which he testifies and have no place in an injunction proceeding in another court. Any competent person who is properly subpoenaed, and who is not privileged, must appear in court and answer questions pertinent to the matter in issue. If he refuses to testify he may be punished for contempt of court, and no one may lawfully prevent or dissuade him from testifying. Code Civ.Proc. secs. 128, 177, 1985, 1986, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993; Pen.Code secs. 136, 166, 1331. See cases cited in 8 Wigmore, Evidence, 3d Ed., secs. 2190-2195; 27 Cal.Jur. p. 9 et seq. Clearly it is the objective of these provisions to prevent interference with the testimony of witnesses and the issuance of the temporary injunction was therefore improper. Even if it were error for the trial court to permit Officer Iredale to testify despite the temporary injunction it was in no way prejudicial to defendants, for such testimony could not be excluded on a new trial in view of the holding herein that the testimony was admissible and the affirmance of the order denying an injunction in Chierotti v. San Francisco Police Department, 20 Cal.2d 895, 124 P.2d 51, this day decided.

[11] On cross-examination defendants' attorney asked Officer Iredale if he had not been enjoined from testifying concerning anything he had learned as a result of his illegal search of Chierotti's apartment. Defendants contend that they had a right to ask this question for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of the witness by showing interest, bias, or prejudice and that the trial court therefore erred in sustaining an objection to it. It does not follow, however, that a witness would be inclined to testify falsely because he testified in the face of an injunction. On the contrary, in the words of the trial court, "the jury would be more inclined to believe the police officer who testified, if he testified despite the injunction and order. They would believe he was doing his duty." The question was immaterial and the objection to it was properly sustained.

Defendants have also objected to the refusal of the trial court to give certain instructions to the jury. Proposed instruction No. 30 stated: "* * * It is the law of this state, that in determining whether any such conspiracy existed of which the defendant Chierotti was a party, that testimony of the acts or declarations of the defendant Gonzales cannot be considered by you, and it your duty to disregard all evidence as to any acts or declarations of the defendant Gonzales, and to determine the existence or non-existence of such conspiracy so far as defendant Chierotti is concerned, from such other evidence as may be in the case against him. The fact that an unlawful conspiracy existed of which the defendant Chierotti was a member and the unlawful purpose of such conspiracy, must be established by evidence, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, separate and apart from and independent of any testimony as to any declarations that were made by the defendant Gonzales. In other words, in determining whether defendant Chierotti was a member of the conspiracy charged you cannot consider any declaration or act that the defendant Gonzales said or did." Proposed instruction No. 31 is the same as No. 30 except that it applies to defendant Gonzales instead of defendant Chierotti. Proposed instruction No. 32 stated: "You are instructed that a conspiracy cannot be proven merely by the acts or declarations of an alleged conspirator and that you may not consider such acts or declarations unless you are first convinced beyond a reasonable doubt by entirely independent evidence that a conspiracy existed."

[12] The trial court instructed the jury on the subject of these instructions as follows: "The first fundamental question that you should determine in this case is: Was there in fact a conspiracy formed as charged in the indictment. If you answer that question in the negative, you are at an end of the case and your verdict should be not guilty. If, on the other hand, you answer that question in the affirmative, you should then determine the question whether these defendants actively participated and entered into such conspiracy or scheme. In deciding the issues in this case you should take into consideration all the evidence admitted in the case, both for the State and for the defendant. * * * In considering the guilt or innocence of the defendant Chierotti you must consider only the evidence that has been admitted against him and cannot consider any evidence that has been admitted only as evidence against the defendant Gonzales. In considering the guilt or innocence of the defendant Gonzales you must consider only the evidence that has been admitted against him and cannot consider any evidence that has been admitted only as against the defendant Chierotti. You cannot return a verdict finding one of the defendants guilty solely on the ground that you find the evidence sufficient to establish the guilt of the other defendant."

These instructions told the jury that evidence admitted against Chierotti could not be used against Gonzales and that evidence admitted against Gonzales could not be used against Chierotti. They are ambiguous in failing to indicate to the jury what evidence was admitted against Gonzales and what evidence was admitted against Chierotti. The record, however, reveals that at the time evidence as to the acts and declarations of Gonzales was introduced, the court stated in the presence of the jury that the evidence was admitted against Gonzales and not against Chierotti, and that at the time evidence as to the acts and declarations of Chierotti was introduced the court stated that it was admitted against Chierotti and not against Gonzales. The instructions, therefore, read in conjunction with the statements of the court during the trial indicated to the jury that the acts and declarations of Gonzales could not be used to prove Chierotti a party to the conspiracy and that the acts and declarations of Chierotti could not be used to prove Gonzales a party thereto. Any error in the instructions because of their ambiguity was therefore not prejudicial to defendants.

[13, 14] Defendants contend the evidence is insufficient to establish that Chierotti participated in the conspiracy. Participation in a conspiracy, however, can be shown by circumstantial evidence. See cases cited in 5 Cal.Jur. 521. The evidence shows that a bag containing the money making machine and bottles of liquid were in Chierotti's apartment, that Chierotti had possession of the key to the lock on the bag, that Chierotti knew Gonzales, that Gonzales had been to Chierotti's apartment and was there on the Monday before the arrests were made, that Chierotti was seen leaving his apartment house with Gonzales carrying a bag, that Gonzales met with Chierotti shortly after leaving Valenzano's tavern, that Gonzales exhibited to Valenzano a large roll of bills but when Gonzales and Chierotti were arrested together shortly thereafter Chierotti had possession of a large roll of bills but Gonzales did not. This evidence is sufficient to justify the jury's conclusion that Chierotti participated with Gonzales in a conspiracy to steal money from Valenzano by use of the pretended money making machine.

[15] Any misconduct that may have existed on the prosecutor's part in referring to other bunco cases and bunco games during the course of his argument to the jury is not sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal, particularly since the trial court refused to grant a new trial on this ground. See Imlay v. California Cab Co., 124 Cal. App. 68, 11 P.2d 1116; Alberts v. Lytle, 1 Cal.App.2d 682, 37 P.2d 705.

The judgment of conviction and orders denying a new trial are affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, and EDMONDS, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

The rule followed by the majority opinion seriously impairs the efficacy and sanctity of the constitutional guarantee against unlawful searches and seizures. Cal.Const. Art. I, sec. 19. The particular issue is the competency of evidence in a criminal proceeding which has been obtained from defendant in violation of that constitutional prohibition. Although it is my opinion that the same constitutional guarantee appearing in the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is applicable to states as well as federal agencies because it is one of the fundamental liberties embraced in the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, I will limit my discussion to the proposition that even if the right to be secure against unlawful searches and seizures is not protected by the federal Constitution with reference to state agencies, the provision in our state Constitution compels the rule that evidence obtained in contravention thereof shall not be competent or admissible.

It cannot be seriously questioned that to permit the use of evidence obtained in violation of the constitutional provision at least to some extent infringes upon the field of liberty secured by the inhibition against unlawful searches and seizures. But it goes beyond a mere partial invasion. It in effect practically destroys the right. That is true for the reason that the value of any right varies in direct proportion to the means afforded for the protection of the right; the realization of any benefit from the right is wholly dependent upon the existence of instruments for that purpose. If it may be violated and the fruits of the violation directed against the possessor of it, the fruits of it are lost, and it is no more than a bare abstraction.

I take it that a person in preserving the right here involved is justified in committing homicide. However, if he does not adopt that extreme measure, and in a well-ordered social system that should be discouraged, he is faced with possibility that evidence obtained may be used against him. Certainly he should be given credit and security rather than being penalized for failing to pursue such an extreme course.

Permitting such evidence to be used is an invitation and encouragement to law-enforcing officials to violate the Constitution. It gives them free reign to act upon mere suspicion and conjecture, to the harassment of the persons offended and to the end that the sanctity of his home or depository of his papers and effects is destroyed. It is of small comfort to say that he has an action against the officers. In most instances the amount of recovery would be negligible and the process costly.

In Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 34 S.Ct. 341, 343, 58 L.Ed. 652, it was stated with respect to this issue:

"Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, pp. 425, 426, in treating of this feature of our Constitution said: 'The maxim that "every man's house is his castle" is made a part of our constitutional law in the clauses prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures, and has always been looked upon as of high value to the citizen.' 'Accordingly,' says Lieber in his work on Civil Liberty and Self-Government, 62, in speaking of the English law in this respect, 'no man's house can be forcibly opened, or he or his goods be carried away after it has thus been forced, except in cases of felony; and then the sheriff must be furnished with a warrant, and take great care lest he commit a trespass. This principle is jealously insisted upon.' In Ex parte Jackson, 96 U.S. 727, 733, 24 L.Ed. 877, 879, this court recognized the principle of protection as applicable to letters and sealed packages in the mail, and held that, consistently with this guaranty of the right of the people to be secure in their papers against unreasonable searches and seizures, such matter could only be opened and examined upon warrants issued on oath or affirmation, particularly describing the thing to be seized, 'as is required when papers are subjected to search in one's own household.'

"In the Boyd case, supra, after citing Lord Camden's judgment in Entick v. Carrington, 19 How.St.Tr. 1029, Mr. Justice Bradley said ([at page 630 of 116 U.S., at page 532 of 6 S.Ct., 29 L.Ed. 746]):

"'The principles laid down in this opinion affect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They reach farther than the concrete form of the case then before the court, with its adventitious circumstances; they apply to all invasions on the part of the government and its employees of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life. It is not the breaking of his doors and the rummaging of his drawers that constitutes the essence of the offense; but it is the invasion of his indefeasible right of personal security, personal liberty, and private property, where that right has never been forfeited by his conviction of some public offense,—it is the invasion of this sacred right which underlies and constitutes the essence of Lord Camden's judgment.'"

And again: "The efforts of the courts and their officials to bring the guilty to punishment, praiseworthy as they are, are not to be aided by the sacrifice of those great principles established by years of endeavor and suffering which have resulted in their embodiment in the fundamental law of the land."

In addition to the federal courts, the following states have adopted the rule that evidence obtained in violation of the Constitution is not admissible. (Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.) See State v. Wills, 91 W.Va. 659, 114 S.E. 261, 24 A.L.R. 1408; State v. Owens, 302 Mo. 348, 259 S.W. 100, 32 A.L.R. 408; Orick v. State, 140 Miss. 184, 105 So. 465, 41 A.L.R. 1145; State v. Arregui, 44 Idaho 43, 254 P. 788, 52 A.L.R. 477; State v. Dillon, 34 N.M. 366, 281 P. 474, 88 A.L.R. 348; McIntyre v. State, 190 Ga. 872, 11 S.E.2d 5, 134 A.L.R. 819.

Obviously, the purpose and object of the constitutional provision in question was to guarantee security to the individual against invasion of his premises by officers seeking evidence which might be used by them in a criminal prosecution without making oath or affirmation particularly describing the place to be searched or the person or thing to be seized. In other words, it was contemplated by the framers of the Constitution that before an officer should be permitted to secure evidence by means of a search and seizure, the facts supporting the claim of right to make the search should be submitted to a magistrate in the form of an affidavit, and if the magistrate determined such facts to be sufficient he would issue a warrant authorizing the search of premises particularly described in the warrant and the seizure of the person or thing particularly described therein. To say that to permit the use of evidence acquired in violation of this constitutional provision does not abrogate or destroy the constitutional right so guaranteed is to my mind counterfeit logic.

History reveals many abuses by public officers both in England and colonial times in this country when officers invaded the premises of persons suspected of crimes, many of which have long since been abolished, and the papers and effects of innocent victims seized and used for the persecution as well as prosecution of such victims. It was to prevent these abuses that the Fourth Amendment was added to the Constitution of the United States and section 19 of Article I was incorporated in the Constitution of California. In my opinion there is no such urgency or necessity enjoined upon prosecuting officers today to obtain evidence of law violation which requires them to violate a constitutional provision so specific in its prohibitions, and which has enshrined within its provisions such sacred concepts of liberty, security and justice as the constitutional provision here in question.

The more I read and hear about the tyranny of totalitarianism as it pervades a large part of the world today, the more appreciative I am of the constitutional form of government and the constitutional guarantees which we have in this country and in this state. And every time I see an effort being made to abrogate or nullify by interpretation any of the constitutional provisions designed to protect the life, liberty and property of the people, I shudder to contemplate what will happen if this disposition to abrogate and nullify these constitutional provisions continues. I, for one, shall never yield to the doctrine that a constitutional provision designed to protect the life, liberty and property of the people of this country should be abrogated or nullified by interpretation. If political, social or economic conditions require changes in our Constitution, such changes should be made by amending the Constitution in the manner prescribed by it, but it is not for the courts by their decisions to abrogate or nullify constitutional provisions by interpretation or read into those provisions that which was never intended to be included therein.

In my opinion it was prejudicial error requiring a reversal of the judgment for the trial court to admit the evidence obtained by the police officers as the result of the unlawful entry and search of the premises occupied by the defendants, and the judgment of conviction against them should therefore be reversed.

HOUSER, J., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 895

John CHIEROTTI, Appellant, v. SAN FRANCISCO POLICE DEPARTMENT et al., Respondents.

S. F. 16646.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Leo R. Friedman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., and Joseph A. Garry, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

For the reasons set forth in the opinion in People v. Gonzales and Chierotti, Cal. Sup.Crim. 4382, 124 P.2d 44, this day decided, the order denying the preliminary injunction is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, and EDMONDS, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

For the reasons stated in my dissenting opinion this day filed in the case of People v. Gonzales and Chierotti, Criminal No. 4382, supra, I am of the opinion that the order denying the preliminary injunction should be reversed.

HOUSER, J., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 141

FENNESSEY v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. et al.

S. F. 16676.

Supreme Court of California.

April 2, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Statutes 🔑199

The word "emergency" as used in legislative enactments does not always have precisely the meaning ascribed to it by lexicographers.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Emergency".

2. Municipal corporations ⚷120
Statutes ⚷179

Where the word "emergency" is defined by statute or ordinance, an interpretation thereof must be confined to and limited by such definition, and the subject-matter enacted.

3. Automobiles ⚷12

Under ordinance prohibiting the parking of automobiles between a safety zone and an adjacent curb but containing an exception in favor of public utilities while the driver of an automobile is engaged in necessary performance of emergency duties, the word "emergency" has reference to a method adopted as an expedient for meeting a situation which ordinarily calls for immediate action.

4. Automobiles ⚷246(55)

In pedestrian's action against electric company and its truck driver for injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by bus driven to left of safety zone to avoid electric company's truck parked between curb and safety zone while driver was engaged in daily routine of cleaning and repairing street light fixtures, court properly refused to give instruction that if driver was engaged in maintenance of street lights, electric company and driver were not negligent, in view of ordinance prohibiting parking between safety zone and adjacent curb except where drivers of public utility park in case of emergency, since driver was not engaged in an "emergency". Vehicle Code, § 586, St. 1935, p. 191.

5. Automobiles ⚷173(4)

The fact that method employed by electric company in servicing street lights was the most practicable that could be used was immaterial in determining whether electric company and its truck driver were liable for injuries sustained by pedestrian when pedestrian was struck by bus driven to left of safety zone to avoid electric company's truck parked between curb and safety zone while driver was engaged in servicing street light fixtures. Vehicle Code, § 586, St.1935, p. 191.

6. Automobiles ⚷245(62)

In pedestrian's action against a gas and electric company, its truck driver, and operator of a bus for injuries sustained when pedestrian was struck by bus as it was driven to left of a safety zone to avoid truck which was parked between curb and safety zone while driver was servicing street light fixtures owned by city and county, whether parking of truck had anything to do with swerve or turn of bus onto street car tracks, as result of which accident occurred, or whether bus operator could have avoided accident, notwithstanding that he violated ordinance prohibiting driving to left of safety zone, were questions for jury. Vehicle Code, § 586, St.1935, p. 191.

7. Appeal and error ⚷1002

District Court of Appeal could not interfere with verdict based on conflicting evidence.

8. Negligence ⚷61(2)

Where the original negligence continues and exists up to time of injury, the concurrent negligent act of a third person causing injury will not be regarded as an "independent act of negligence", but the two concurring acts of negligence will be held to be the "proximate cause" of injury.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Independent Act of Negligence" and "Proximate Cause".

EDMONDS and CURTIS, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Elmer E. Robinson, Judge.

Action by Irene Fennessey against the Pacific Gas and Electric Company and others, for personal injuries. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinion, 116 P.2d 479.

Rehearing denied; CURTIS and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

Thos. J. Straub, John J. Briare, Frederick T. Searls, and W. H. Spaulding, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

John J. Taaffe, George B. Harris, and P. J. Murphy, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

A hearing was granted in this cause by this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division One. After examining the record and contentions of counsel we are convinced that the decision of the District Court of Appeal is correct, and we therefore adopt the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Ward when this case was pending in the District Court of Appeal and make it the decision of this court, as follows:

Appeal by defendants Pacific Gas and Electric Company, a corporation, and

Thomas Foley, one of its employees, from a judgment rendered following a jury's verdict in favor of plaintiff Irene Fennessey for damages for personal injuries. Mrs. Fennessey's husband died prior to the trial of the action. Defendant George L. Manecis, the driver of a jitney, as the result of a collision with which plaintiff's injuries were sustained, defaulted and judgment was taken against him.

The accident occurred on the south side of Market street just west of Tenth street in San Francisco, where Foley had parked a company truck between the south curb and a safety zone for the purpose of cleaning, servicing and doing repair work to street lighting fixtures owned by the city and county of San Francisco. The work as performed involved the use of a "tower" truck and it is admitted that in its position near the curb there was insufficient space for eastbound traffic to pass between it and the safety zone. Defendant Manecis, proceeding east on Market street, passed the truck by driving his automobile, which he was using as a jitney bus, to the left (north) of the safety zone, along the street car tracks. Mrs. Fennessey was standing in or very near the marked pedestrian lane which crosses Market street at Tenth street, when she was hit by the Manecis car.

The main contentions of appellants are that the evidence proves as a matter of law that at the time of the accident they were engaged in "emergency" work within the meaning of a municipal ordinance, but that, assuming negligence on their part, the evidence fails to show that such negligence was a proximate cause of the accident. In regard to the latter contention, it is their theory that the act of the jitney bus driver broke the chain of causation between any negligence in parking the truck and plaintiff's injuries.

Section 138 of the Motor Vehicle Act (now section 586 of the Vehicle Code of 1935, St. 1935, p. 191) and article V, section 35 (now section 76), San Francisco Traffic Ordinance, are substantially to the same effect, namely, the prohibition of parking between a safety zone and an adjacent curb. Appellants contend that section 8, article II of the traffic ordinance contains an exception in favor of public utilities "while the driver of any such vehicle is engaged in the necessary performance of emergency duties." Our attention has not been called to a definition of the word "emergency" in the traffic ordinance. In Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 10 Cal.2d 538, 540, 76 P.2d 104, 105, on a former appeal in this case the court held that "The parking of the truck between the safety zone and the curb was a violation of state law and municipal ordinance * * * in force at the time of accident * * * unless it was 'engaged in the necessary performance of emergency duties'."

[1-3] The word "emergency" as used in legislative enactments does not always have precisely the meaning ascribed to it by lexicographers. Huff v. City of New York, 202 App.Div. 425, 195 N.Y.S. 257. It may be defined by the statute or ordinance. If so, an interpretation thereof must be confined to and limited by such definition and the subject matter enacted. The law governing this question indicates that "emergency" has reference to a method adopted as an expedient for meeting a situation which ordinarily calls for immediate action. Mason v. Crawford, 17 Cal.App.2d 529, 62 P.2d 420. The evidence shows that to keep the lights on both sides of Market street reasonably serviced and in repair requires more than a month's continuous work, going from pole to pole. Admittedly the work which Foley was doing, or was expected to do, upon the fixtures, was routine in nature and was not unforeseen, unexpected or the correction of a condition which had suddenly arisen.

[4] Appellants requested an instruction which first quoted a part of the ordinance and then proceeded as follows: "Therefore, if you believe from the evidence that, at or about the time of the accident in question, the said Thomas Foley was engaged in work involving the maintenance of the street lamps as an employee of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, then I instruct you that in that event the defendants Thomas Foley and Pacific Gas and Electric Company were not guilty of any negligence and your verdict must be for those defendants and against the plaintiff." The instruction was refused with the notation "no evidence of the existence of any emergency." The refusal of this instruction must be approved. The repair vehicle was not used in responding to an emergency call, nor was it parked as the result of its arrival at the scene of an "emergency." It was simply engaged in its normal daily routine of cleaning and repairing street light fixtures.

[5] The fact that the method employed in servicing was the most practical that could be used, or that appellant company had a contract with the city to perform the work, can play no part in the determination of the question. The record does not disclose any designated means or method to be used in performing the work. The contract could not justify the violation of a parking law except upon the theory that the servicing performed by appellants was an "emergency," which, as we have just said, was not the case. Until a legislative body in the exercise of its authority reframes an ordinance or statute excepting from the law prohibiting parking between a safety zone and an adjacent curb, vehicles engaged in the performance of routine work on behalf of a governmental agency, appellants are without remedy.

[6-8] Whether the parking of appellants' repair truck between the safety zone and the curb had anything to do with the swerve or turn of the jitney bus on to the first or second street car tracks, as the result of which the accident occurred, or whether the jitney driver could have averted such accident, notwithstanding that he violated the ordinance prohibiting driving to the left of a safety zone, were purely questions of fact to be determined by the jury. If the jury believed the evidence in support of respondents' theory that the parking of appellant company's car was a proximate cause of the accident, we are unable to interfere. Mecchi v. Lyon Van & Storage Co., 38 Cal.App.2d 674, 102 P.2d 422, 104 P.2d 26; McKay v. Hedger, 139 Cal.App. 266, 34 P.2d 221; Gett v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 192 Cal. 621, 221 P. 376; Winsky v. DeMandel, 204 Cal. 107, 266 P. 534; Wright v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 14 Cal.2d 168, 93 P.2d 135; Hurtel v. Albert Cohn, Inc., 5 Cal.2d 145, 52 P.2d 922. In Lacy v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 220 Cal. 97, 98, 29 P.2d 781, 782, the court said: "The authorities in this state hold that where the original negligence continues and exists up to the time of the injury, the concurrent negligent act of a third person causing the injury will not be regarded as an independent act of negligence, but the two concurring acts of negligence will be held to be the proximate cause of the injury." Rae v. California Equipment Co., 12 Cal.2d 563, 86 P.2d 352; Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 17 Cal.2d 594, 110 P.2d 1044.

The judgment is affirmed.

EDMONDS, Justice (dissenting).

Although I agree that the appellants were guilty of negligence as a matter of law, I fail to find any causal connection between their negligence and the injuries sustained by the respondent. Ordinarily, the question of proximate cause, like those of negligence and contributory negligence, is one of fact to be determined by the jury. But where only one conclusion may reasonably be drawn from the facts, the question becomes one of law. Schwartz v. California Gas & Elec. Corp., 163 Cal. 398, 125 P. 1044; Traylen v. Citraro, 112 Cal.App. 172, 297 P. 649; Gallichotte v. California, etc., Ass'n, 4 Cal.App.2d 503, 41 P.2d 349; Kostouros v. O'Connell, 39 Cal.App.2d 618, 103 P.2d 1028; Restatement of the Law of Torts [American Law Institute], § 434.

According to uncontroverted evidence, the truck was parked in such a manner as to prevent automobiles eastbound on Market Street from passing between the curb and the safety zone. This zone is 64 feet in length and is protected by raised buttons. The tracks of the Municipal Railway lie four feet north of and parallel with the safety zone, and about the same distance farther north are the tracks of the Market Street Railway Company.

Immediately prior to the accident, the respondent had alighted from a bus and had stepped into the east end of the safety zone near the pedestrian crosswalk. At the time Manecis had reached a point variously estimated as from 20 to 100 feet away from the west end of the safety zone, he observed the truck blocking the street between it and the curb. Following two or three other cars ahead of him, he swerved to his left and proceeded for several feet along the second track until he struck respondent, who was in the crosswalk, causing severe injuries. During all of this time, his automobile was traveling at a speed of about 10 to 15 miles per hour.

It is well settled that the violation of a statute or municipal ordinance constitutes negligence per se, provided the plaintiff is one of a class of persons whom the statute was intended to protect (Baillargeon v. Myers, 180 Cal. 504, 182 P. 37; Rabe v. Western Union Tel. Co., 198 Cal. 290, 244 P. 1077; Benjamin v. Noonan, 207 Cal. 279, 277 P. 1045; 19 Cal.Jur. 632; Prosser on Torts, p. 266), unless such violation was justifiable or excusable under the circumstances. Mora v. Favilla, 186 Cal. 199, 199 P. 17; Parker v. Auschwitz, 7 Cal.App.2d 693, 47 P.2d 341. Market Street is a thoroughfare with four street car tracks, and the traffic thereon is frequently congested. It was undoubtedly the design of the city ordinance to keep the traffic lane between the curb and the safety zone open and thereby prevent the hazard to pedestrians seeking to board, or leave street cars which would be caused by vehicles traveling on the street car tracks. At the time of the appellants' illegal parking, the respondent had stepped into the safety zone. She was therefore among those whom the statute was intended to protect.

But in order to be a legal cause of another's injury, it is not sufficient that the harm would not have occurred had the actor not been negligent. An original act of negligence is not a proximate cause of an injury when the damage directly results from the intervening act of a third person which was one not to be reasonably anticipated by the defendant as likely to result from his own act. If, with the effects of the former negligence consciously before him, the intervening actor is guilty of a new negligent act which may not be said to flow with logical sequence from the original negligent act, the chain of causation is broken and the original act of negligence is not the proximate cause of the accident. These are fundamental and accepted principles in the law of torts. Vizelich v. Southern Pacific Co., 126 Cal. 587, 59 P. 129; Trice v. Southern Pacific Co., 174 Cal. 89, 161 P. 1144; Schwartz v. California Gas & Elec. Co., supra; Katz v. Helbing, 205 Cal. 629, 271 P. 1062, 62 A.L.R. 825; Hauser v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 133 Cal.App. 222, 23 P.2d 1068; McMillan v. Thompson, 140 Cal.App. 437, 35 P.2d 419; Camp v. Peel, 33 Cal.App.2d 612, 92 P.2d 428.

Applying these principles to the facts of the present case, as I read the record, it is clear that the sole legal cause of the respondent's injuries was the independent act of Manecis in operating his car in such a careless manner as to violate her rights as a pedestrian by running her down in the marked crosswalk. Admitting that the act of the appellants in obstructing the passage of traffic between the safety zone and the curb forced Manecis to take a path of travel made illegal by city ordinance, there is no evidence that the parked truck caused him to operate his automobile carelessly. On observing the truck, he made his first turn to the left at least 20 feet from the west end of the safety zone. He then proceeded along the municipal tracks for about 25 feet, at which point he swerved again to the left and drove along the tracks of the Market Street Railway Company to the point in the pedestrian lane where the respondent was struck. He traveled for a distance of at least 84 feet from the point of his original turn to the place of the accident, and during this course of travel his speed was not more than 10 to 15 miles per hour. The evidence clearly indicates that after he had turned left to avoid the parked truck, his subsequent movements were governed by his own free choice without any possible reference to the truck and unaffected by any act of the appellants. There is no claim that the truck caused Manecis to lose control over his automobile and the evidence is entirely to the contrary. After he turned to the left, there was nothing about the truck which could have affected his action in directing the course or speed of the vehicle he was driving.

Under these circumstances, the act of Manecis in striking respondent was a new act of negligence, wholly unrelated to the negligence of the appellants. There is no basis for holding that Foley should reasonably have anticipated that a car, forced to operate to the left of the safety zone but admittedly within the control of the driver, would be so negligently driven as to strike a pedestrian standing in the marked crosswalk some 86 feet away. The unlawful occupation of the street by the appellants' truck was, at most, a condition and not a contributing cause of the accident. McMillan v. Thompson, supra.

The present case cannot be likened to those wherein the facts show that the vehicle operated by the defendant came to a sudden stop, forcing other vehicles approaching from the rear to swerve out suddenly, and a pedestrian or automobile was struck by another automobile whose driver was avoiding, or attempting to avoid, the defendant's car. Gett v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 192 Cal. 621, 221 P. 376; Mason v. Crawford, 17 Cal.App.2d 529, 62 P.2d 420. Manecis collided with the respondent, not in swerving to avoid hitting the appellants' truck, but only after he had proceeded some 86 feet farther in full control of the speed and direction of the vehicle he was operating.

The case is likewise distinguishable from decisions in which the negligent act of the defendant was a concurring factor and actively participated in the accident. For example, in Lacy v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 220 Cal. 97, 29 P.2d 781, the defendant negligently left an electric light pole in a farm roadway. The plaintiff was about to enter an automobile parked in front of the pole. As the driver of the automobile was endeavoring to start the motor, the car pole in the air in such a manner as to strike the plaintiff on the leg. The defendant's act was held to have been the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. But in the present case, at the time the accident occurred the appellants' act had ceased to have any effect upon the movements of Manecis and it did not actively concur in producing the injuries sustained by the pedestrian.

The respondent relies upon McKay v. Hedger, 139 Cal.App. 266, 34 P.2d 221, and Mecchi v. Lyon Van & Storage Co., 38 Cal.App.2d 674, 102 P.2d 422, 104 P. 2d 26. In the McKay case, the defendants double parked their ice truck in such a manner as to obstruct the view of other drivers lawfully traveling on the street. The plaintiff, a minor child, ran from behind the truck into the path of an oncoming automobile and was injured. In the Mecchi case, the defendant illegally parked its moving van at an angle to the curb opposite two cars parked at the curb across the street, thus reducing the space for passing cars. In passing through this space, a car hit the plaintiff, a minor. In both cases, the question whether the defendant's illegal parking was a proximate cause of the accident was held to be a question for the jury. However, in each of them, the parked automobile obscured the vision of the oncoming drivers and the injured pedestrians, and the accident occurred while the passing cars were in the very act of proceeding around the standing vehicle. The facts of the present case are entirely different and compel a contrary result.

Concerning the holding that the former decision (Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 10 Cal.2d 538, 76 P.2d 104), has now become the law of the case, that appeal was taken, in part, from an order granting the respondent a new trial upon the ground that certain instructions given by the trial court upon the issue of proximate cause was erroneous. The propriety of the challenged instructions was the sole question decided by the court upon that appeal; whether or not the evidence was sufficient as a matter of law to establish the act of the appellants as a proximate cause of the accident was not decided by the court and, in my opinion, the doctrine of the law of the case does not apply to the issues now before the court.

For these reasons, I believe that the judgment should be reversed.

CURTIS, J., concurred.

MEDICO-DENTAL BLDG. CO. OF LOS ANGELES v. HORTON & CONVERSE.*

Civ. 12749.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 31, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 29, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 28, 1942.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚷48

A lease to physician prohibiting physician from maintaining drug store, but impliedly permitting physician to dispense drugs in treating physician's own patients, was not violative of provision in drug company's lease prohibiting leasing of any part of building for drug store purposes.

2. Evidence ⚷20(1)

It is common knowledge that a physician who furnishes medicines to his own patients does not thereby conduct a "drug store".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Drug Store".

3. Evidence ⚷507

In landlord's rent action against tenant asserting violation of lease prohibiting leasing of other parts of building to tenants selling drugs, whether physician in building was selling drugs was not subject of expert testimony, where all facts necessary to decision were before trial court.

4. Landlord and tenant ⚷48

A lease provision, prohibiting leasing of other parts of building to tenants selling drugs, must be interpreted to give effect to parties' main intention, so as to make provision reasonable, and with reference to circumstances under which it was made and matter to which it relates. Civ.Code, §§ 1636, 1643, 1647.

5. Landlord and tenant ⚷48

A provision, in drug company's lease, prohibiting leasing of other parts of building to tenants selling drugs, prohibited the carrying on of business of selling drugs, but did not prohibit physicians in building from exercising their right under Business and Professional Code to dispense medicines to their patients. St.1937, pp. 1300, 1301, §§ 4030, 4031, 4035, 4036.

---

* Subsequent opinion 132 P.2d 457.

6. Druggists 🔑5

A physician having laboratory or office for compounding of drugs and dispensing of prescriptions to patients, and employing pharmacist, did not operate "pharmacy" within Business and Professional Code. St. 1937, p. 1301, § 4036.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Pharmacy".

7. Landlord and tenant 🔑134(3)

A provision in lease permitting physician to compound and dispense drugs in connection with regular course of treatment of physician's patients did not give physician right to do anything which physicians could not legally do under Business and Professional Code, and did not give him permission to operate "pharmacy" or "drug store". St.1937, pp. 1300, 1301, §§ 4030, 4031, 4035, 4036.

8. Landlord and tenant 🔑48

A drug company was "estopped" from asserting that dispensing of medicines to patients by physician was violative of company's lease prohibiting leasing of other parts of building to other tenants selling drugs, where company's agents had knowledge of and acquiesced in physician's practices and sold drugs to physician for three months.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

9. Estoppel 🔑90(1), 95

Equity does not permit a party to take advantage of a situation which he has encouraged by his silence and acquiescence.

10. Estoppel 🔑55

"Estoppel" of corporation can arise from a waiver of a right implied from conduct of corporation's agents causing others to act in the belief that a waiver was intended.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

11. Landlord and tenant 🔑34(2)

Evidence that detriment to drug company's business, by reason of physician's alleged sale of drugs in violation of company's lease prohibiting leasing of other parts of building to other tenants selling drugs, was trivial, would not warrant company's rescission of lease.

12. Contracts 🔑261(2)

The breach of independent convenant or one which does not run to whole consideration for contract does not warrant "rescission" of contract.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Rescission".

13. Contracts 🔑261(2)

A breach of dependent covenant so trivial in amount that it does not materially affect or interfere with primary purposes of covenantee in entering into contract does not give covenantee the right to rescind.

14. Landlord and tenant 🔑48

A provision in lease prohibiting leasing of space in building to tenant's competitor would not be breached by landlord by reason of another tenant's alleged competitive use of space, unless landlord refused or persistently failed to make reasonable efforts to put an end to such violation.

15. Landlord and tenant 🔑48

A provision in lease prohibiting leasing of space in building to tenant's competitor merely imposed on landlord an implied obligation to see that other tenants did not become competitors by reasons of practices adopted without landlord's knowledge or consent.

16. Landlord and tenant 🔑62(2)

A tenant can enjoin competitor from practices constituting violation of tenant's lease prohibiting leasing of space in building to tenant's competitor.

17. Landlord and tenant 🔑34(2)

A tenant was not entitled to rescind lease for alleged violation of provision prohibiting leasing use of space in building to tenant's competitor, so long as landlord was diligently and in good faith endeavoring to remove cause of tenant's complaint.

18. Landlord and tenant 🔑44(1)

Covenants in lease should be construed to be dependent or independent according to intention of parties and good sense of case, and technical words should give way to such intention.

19. Landlord and tenant 🔑20

Leases of realty create rights depending on privity of estate, and rights depending on privity of contract.

20. Landlord and tenant 🔑37

Those features of lease which are strictly contractual should be construed in accordance with principle that intentions of parties should be given effect as far as possible.

21. Contracts 🔑173

Covenants which run to entire consideration of contract are "mutual and dependent".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutual and Dependent Covenant".

22. Landlord and tenant 🔑44(1)

Where landlord's covenant is of such nature that breach thereof will defeat entire purpose of tenant in entering into lease, such as rendering his further occupancy of premises a source of continuing financial loss incapable of satisfactory measurement in damages, covenant goes to entire consideration for lease upon tenant's part.

PARKER WOOD, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Action for rent by Medico-Dental Building Company of Los Angeles against Horton & Converse. From the judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Louis M. Lissner and Laurence M. Weinberg, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. Harper Shoop, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Justice.

Plaintiff sued for rent under a lease dated July 1, 1934, of space on the ground floor of an office building which was used by defendant in conducting a prescription drug business. Judgment was given for defendant on the ground that plaintiff itself had violated the lease in material respects, that because of such violations defendant had the right to rescind and did rescind its lease, and was therefore not liable for rent accruing after it vacated the premises immediately following the rescission.

In the lease between plaintiff and defendant there was a provision that the landlord would not lease any portion of the building "for the purpose of maintaining a drug store or selling drugs or ampoules or for the purpose of maintaining a cafe, restaurant or lunch counter therein during the term of its lease." On December 30, 1937, plaintiff leased the ninth floor to one Dr. Boonshaft, who headed a medical group composed of six or eight doctors. This lease contained the following provisions: "The premises demised hereby are to be used solely as offices for the practice of medicine and dentistry and lessee agrees that he will not maintain therein or thereon, nor permit to be maintained therein or thereon, a drug store or drug dispensary, nor will lessee compound or dispense, or permit to be compounded or dispensed, drugs or ampoules except in connection with the regular course of treatment of lessee's own patients. Lessee agrees not to display any sign or advertisement on the inside or outside of the demised premises or the building of which the demised premises are a part enbodying the words 'Pharmacy,' 'Drug Store,' 'Dispensary' or words of like import. Lessee understands that lessor has heretofore executed a lease to Horton & Converse granting to said Horton & Converse the exclusive privilege of conducting a drug store business on the ground floor of said Medico-Dental Building, and lessee agrees that he will not do, nor permit to be done, anything in connection with the premises demised hereby which would in any way conflict with, or constitute a breach by the lessor therein of said Horton & Converse lease."

The court found that on December 30, 1937, by executing said lease "plaintiff did lease a part or portion of the Medico-Dental Building to a tenant other than the defendant for the purpose of maintaining a drug store and selling drugs on the premises demised in said lease and said lessee so understood said provision, and in this respect the court finds that on December 30, 1937, plaintiff breached its lease with the defendant in a material respect and that such breach was not waived by the defendant; that the plaintiff by virtue of one of the provisions of said lease intended to and did give Louis D. Boonshaft, M. D., the right and privilege of maintaining a drug store, selling drugs and compounding prescriptions on said leased premises, and by so doing failed to protect the defendant against competition."

The court further found that during the month of May, 1938, a drug store in charge of a registered pharmacist was opened by Dr. Boonshaft, registered as a pharmacy with the State Board of Pharmacy with a state sales tax permit, and that goods were sold in said drug store and prescriptions were being compounded and filled and a charge was being made for said prescriptions in said drug store during said month of May, 1938, and that "plaintiff in not taking immediate action to abate said drug store by exercising the authority given it by the provision in its lease with Louis D. Boonshaft, M. D., whereby said Louis D. Boonshaft, M. D., agreed that he would not do, nor permit to be done, anything in connection with the premises demised to him by plaintiff, which would in any way conflict with or constitute a breach by plaintiff of defendant's lease, and, finally, on August 19, 1938, advising defendant that it, the plaintiff, could make no arrangements with Dr. Boonshaft and could not do anything with him regarding the selling of drugs and the maintaining of the drug store on his premises, violated and breached its lease with defendant in a material respect, and that such violation or breach was not waived by defendant."

It was further found that "plaintiff failed, refused and neglected to conform and comply with the restrictive covenant in the lease between plaintiff and defendant and that by reason of such failure, refusal and neglect plaintiff breached its lease with defendant in a material respect, in that it failed to protect the defendant against competition, and the court further finds that such breach was not waived by the defendant."

[1] We shall first take up the question whether the evidence was sufficient to prove any violation by plaintiff of defendant's lease. Preliminarily it is necessary to understand what was meant by the restrictive covenant in question. The trial court found that plaintiff leased space to Dr. Boonshaft "for the purpose of maintaining a drug store and selling drugs." This finding is not supported by the evidence. The space was not leased for the purpose of maintaining therein a drug store. Its use for that purpose was expressly prohibited in positive language. From the wording of the lease it seems clear that Dr. Boonshaft was given implied permission to compound and dispense drugs and ampoules in connection with the regular course of treatment of his own patients. Since this is all that he intended, or was given permission to do, it is apparent from the findings that no distinction was drawn by the trial court between the right so extended to him and the privilege of operating a drug store. This fact is emphasized by the additional finding that the parties to the lease understood that Dr. Boonshaft would have the right to operate a drug store. These findings illustrate the theory of the case which led to the conclusion that plaintiff violated its lease with defendant in leasing to Dr. Boonshaft. This conclusion, in our opinion, is not tenable.

[2] It is conspicuous in the record that throughout the trial it was assumed that a physician who furnishes medicines to his patients is thereby conducting a drug store. That this is not true, as a matter of fact, is of common knowledge. That it is not true as a matter of law is made perfectly clear by the language of provisions of the Business and Professional Code to which we shall refer. A decision based upon findings to the contrary would be novel, to say the least.

[3] A Mr. Walsh, vice president of defendant, and a member of the State Board of Pharmacy, was called as a witness for defendant. He testified as follows: "Now Mr. Walsh, when did it first come to your attention that what in your opinion was a pharmacy, was located on the ninth floor of the Medico-Dental Building?" He answered that he had been so advised by the manager of the store in the building in April or May. The court had previously ruled, over appellant's objection, that Mr. Walsh could testify by way of stating his opinion that a pharmacy was being operated by Dr. Boonshaft. This was not a subject matter for expert testimony. Whether Dr. Boonshaft was given a lease by plaintiff with knowledge that he intended to operate a drug store and whether he operated one were questions of fact for the court to decide. They went to the very essence of the case and were to be decided upon the evidence as to what was actually done in the premises. All of the facts necessary to a decision were before the court; there was no occasion to receive the opinion of any witness as to whether the facts in evidence proved that Dr. Boonshaft was operating a pharmacy or drug store. People v. Overacker, 1911, 15 Cal.App. 620, 632, 115 P. 756; Coelho v. Judson Mfg. Co., 1916, 30 Cal.App. 39, 156 P. 1005; Wilkerson v. City of El Monte, 1936, 17 Cal.App. 2d 615, 622, 62 P.2d 790.

From comments made by the trial judge in connection with the receipt of this expert testimony it would appear that the opinion expressed by the witness was thought to have no little evidentiary value. That the testimony contributed to the erroneous conclusion of fact may fairly be inferred. Furthermore, as will later appear, the opinion, if it had been admissible, was rested so heavily upon the issuance of a pharmacy license to Dr. Boonshaft, rather than upon the manner in which the latter operated his business, as to detract greatly from any force it might otherwise have had.

[4, 5] Another finding was that in his lease Dr. Boonshaft was given permission to compound and sell drugs. This was true if the words "compound and dispense" mean "compound and sell." Let us assume that they do, and let us assume that in a purely technical sense "selling" means every disposition except giving away without charge, direct or indirect. We then come to the question whether compounding and dispensing medicines and ampoules by a physician to his own patients in the course of treatment would be the sale of drugs which was prohibited by the provision of defendant's lease. That provision must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties (Civil Code, section 1636), so as to make it reasonable (Civil Code, section 1643), and with reference to the circumstances under which it was made and the matter to which it relates (Civil Code, section 1647). As so construed we believe it to be clear that it must have been the intention to prohibit the carrying on of the business of selling drugs but not to prohibit those practices which as a matter of law under their professional licenses could be followed by physicians as such. The Medico-Dental Building was what its name implies—one primarily operated for the occupancy of physicians and dentists. That fact is emphasized by defendant and is pointed out as the reason for its maintaining its drug store in the building. There are several pertinent sections of the Business and Professional Code, St.1937, p. 1230 et seq. They are important because they state the law under which physicians dispense medicines and define terms as the parties no doubt understood them, but which were used loosely in the testimony and the findings.

Sec. 4030. "Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, it is unlawful for any person to manufacture, compound, sell or dispense any drug, poison, medicine or chemical, or to dispense or compound any prescription of a medical practitioner, unless he is a registered pharmacist or a registered assistant pharmacist under the provisions of this chapter."

Sec. 4031. "This chapter does not apply to or interfere with any one, who holds a physician's and surgeon's certificate and who is duly registered as such by the Board of Medical Examiners or the Board of Osteopathic Examiners of this State, with supplying his own patients with such remedies as he may desire if he acts as their physician and is employed by them as such and if he does not keep a pharmacy, open shop or drug store, advertised or otherwise, for the retailing of medicines or poisons."

Sec. 4035. "As used in this chapter, pharmacy means and includes every store or shop where drugs, medicines or chemicals are dispensed or sold at retail, or displayed for sale at retail, or where prescriptions are compounded, which has upon it or in it as a sign, the words 'pharmacist,' 'pharmaceutical chemist,' 'apothecary,' 'druggist,' 'pharmacy,' 'drug store,' 'drugs,' or any of these words."

Sec. 4036. "Every store, dispensary, pharmacy, laboratory or office for the sale, dispensing or compounding of drugs, medicines or chemicals, or for the dispensing of prescriptions of medical practitioners, shall be in charge of a registered pharmacist or a licentiate in pharmacy. No registered assistant shall conduct a pharmacy."

[6, 7] It seems that the parties must have had the foregoing statutory provisions in mind when the Boonshaft lease was drafted. Plaintiff was scrupulously careful to provide that Dr. Boonshaft's practices in the dispensing of drugs should be confined to those which are permitted by law to physicians to the exclusion of other practices which pertain to the pharmacy or drug business. It was lawful for Dr. Boonshaft to supply to his own patients, as their physician, such remedies as he might desire to prescribe for them (section 4031) if he did not also "keep a pharmacy, open shop or drug store, advertised or otherwise, for the retailing of medicines or poisons." He had the right to compound prescriptions if he did not also maintain a "store" or "shop" where medicines, etc., were dispensed or sold at retail having upon it as a sign the words "pharmacist," "pharmaceutical chemist," "apothecary," "druggist," "pharmacy," "drug store," or "drugs" (section 4035, Business and Professional Code). He agreed not to display any such sign and never did display one. No doubt he intended to employ a pharmacist, as he would have been required to do under section 4036, because he had a laboratory or office for the compounding of drugs and the dispensing of prescriptions. But this did not constitute having or operating a pharmacy as defined by section 4035. In other words, there was nothing in the lease which gave him the right to do anything which physicians could not legally do, nor was he given permission to operate a pharmacy or drug store. Nor is there any evidence that he intended in the beginning to do or that he did anything that other physicians in the building could not lawfully do. The reasonable construction of the Horton & Converse lease is that it was not thereby intended to deprive future tenants in the building of rights and privileges to dispense medicines to their patients which were enjoyed by the physicians and dentists who were already there and other practitioners who were purchasing drugs and medicines from respondent. The evidence clearly shows that the executives of Horton & Converse so understood their lease for several months after Dr. Boonshaft moved in. He took possession of the ninth floor of the building April 15, 1938. He then began purchasing drugs at retail from defendant's store in the building. He had to pay a sales tax on his purchases and complained of this to Mr. Walsh, the vice president of defendant. The latter told him that sales tax was charged on all retail purchases but not on wholesale purchases. Thereupon Mr. Walsh took the matter up with Mr. Binder, who was the manager of the Boonshaft group, with the result that he received full information as to the manner in which the group of doctors was operating, namely, that it was rendering services on a monthly payment basis, was treating a large number of people, and desired to buy drugs at wholesale to be supplied to the patients. In the latter part of April or early part of May Mr. Walsh saw the drug room and the medicines on the shelves in the Boonshaft suite. He testified that at about that time he had been advised by the manager of the store in the building that Dr. Boonshaft had received quite a quantity of pharmaceuticals, drugs and medicines; that he intended to operate his own pharmacy and had employed a pharmacist. He communicated these facts to the representative of appellant, who read to him pertinent provisions of the Boonshaft lease and explained how Dr. Boonshaft was operating. Mr. Walsh had previously discussed with Mr. Binder and Dr. Boonshaft the possibility of an arrangement under which Dr. Boonshaft would purchase his drugs at a discount from defendant and credit was established as of June 25, 1938, for purchases at wholesale. Defendant continued to sell drugs at retail to Dr. Boonshaft until the wholesale purchases were commenced after the 25th of June, and thereafter sold them at wholesale up to the time of trial. Mr. Walsh testified that Horton & Converse sold drugs, medicines, etc., to Dr. Boonshaft just as they sold them to other physicians. Of course defendant knew during all of this period that the Boonshaft group were supplying drugs to their patients. As a matter of fact Dr. Boonshaft on May 10, 1938, obtained a pharmacy license from the State Board of Pharmacy, of which Mr. Walsh was a member. Mr. Walsh's signature was attached to this license. Although Horton & Converse knew that drugs were being purchased at retail and were to be purchased from them at wholesale to be dispensed to patients, they made no objection to Dr. Boonshaft or his representatives nor did they, until early in August under circumstances to be related, make any objection to the representatives of plaintiff. They knew from having had the Boonshaft lease read to them in part that the group of doctors were not operating a pharmacy or drug store and were doing no more than supplying drugs or medicines to their patients. They were satisfied with this condition of things. Since Mr. Walsh was a member of the State Board of Pharmacy, and since defendant had been in the drug business for a great many years, it is to be presumed that they were well informed of the difference between the drug store or pharmacy business and the distinctly different vocation of the practice of medicine, which involves to some extent the dispensing of medicines. As we have seen, they were satisfied with the practices that were being followed by Dr. Boonshaft. We cannot find in this evidence any support for the finding that the making of the lease itself or the practices followed thereunder amounted to maintaining a drug store or selling drugs. If the dispensing of drugs to patients was competition with defendant, then all of the other physicians in the building who followed the common practices of medical men—and which are commonly known, as well—would likewise have been in competition with defendant. The executives of defendant changed their minds about their own rights in the premises under the following circumstances: on July 1, 1937, occupancy of the Medico-Dental Building had fallen to a level of 50% and for that reason defendant's rent was reduced from $600 to $500 a month for one year, with a proviso that for each 5% of increase over the level of July 1, 1937, the rent would be increased at the rate of $16.66 per month, not to exceed a fixed rental of $600 per month, although the lease also provided for rental equal to 7% of gross sales.

On July 1, 1938, defendant was billed for the July rent in the amount of $658.31, $100 being a restoration of the fixed rental and $58.31 being an amount previously accrued and including, apparently, an increase due to Dr. Boonshaft's occupancy of space. Mr. Horton, president of defendant, then called up plaintiff's representative to make complaint of the charge for rent, saying, "You are not only operating a pharmacy up there but you are raising our rent on the strength of it." Aside from Mr. Walsh's inquiry of plaintiff's representative as to whether Dr. Boonshaft was operating a pharmacy, Mr. Horton's complaint was the first one made to plaintiff as to the practices of the Boonshaft group and no complaint whatever had been made to Dr. Boonshaft. Defendant apparently was satisfied to have Dr. Boonshaft for a customer for the drugs which he was dispensing to his patients. The rent matter appears to have had an illuminating effect.

[8] Clearly the acts of defendant which we have stated were, in themselves, such as to estop it from claiming, as it later on proceeded to do, that the lease to Dr. Boonshaft, or his practices in the dispensing of medicines, constituted a breach of the covenant of defendant's lease. We should look at certain of the findings in this connection. They cover certain facts which were relied upon by plaintiff to establish an estoppel against defendant but they do not cover or purport to cover other matters relating to knowledge and acquiescence discussed herein which we think do support the claim of estoppel. There was testimony for plaintiff that the restrictive provision of the Boonshaft lease had been read to an executive of defendant and that the latter had approved it before the lease was executed. The court found this to be untrue. It had also been testified that Mr. Walsh advised Dr. Boonshaft that it would be necessary for him to obtain a pharmacy license and sales tax permit and that he outlined the procedure to be followed and promised to assist in the obtaining of said licenses. The court found that Mr. Walsh did not give such advice or make such promises and that it was not true that he or any person on behalf of defendant "did assist or encourage Mr. Binder or anyone to establish or maintain or acquiesce in the maintaining of a drug store or selling of drugs in any part or portion of the Medico-Dental Building other than the premises demised by plaintiff to defendant." The first portion of this finding, that relating to the statements of Mr. Walsh, finds support in the evidence because Mr. Walsh as a witness denied having made the statements. The remainder of the finding has technical support in the evidence, because of course it was not contended that defendant assisted or encouraged Dr. Boonshaft to maintain a drug store or sell drugs. But the pertinent facts with relation to defendant's knowledge of and acquiescence in Dr. Boonshaft's practices were established by the testimony of Mr. Walsh and other witnesses for defendant and stand uncontradicted. From the latter part of April or the early part of May until the rent controversy arose on the 1st of August, respondent knew the terms of the Boonshaft lease, had been informed of the employment of a pharmacist as early as April or May, not only knew of the dispensing of drugs to Dr. Boonshaft's patients but also sold him the drugs first at retail and later at wholesale, obtained such benefits as accrued from this business, and yet uttered no word of complaint or remonstrance except to inquire whether a pharmacy, or in other words, a drug store or shop for the sale of drugs to the public, was being maintained. The court found that defendant during the last week of July, 1938, learned of the "activities with reference to the aforesaid drug store," but the facts with reference to defendant's knowledge that Dr. Boonshaft had a pharmacist in his employ and was supplying his patients with medicines purchased from defendant for several months before any complaint was made were established without conflict.

[9, 10] Mr. Walsh denied having had "definite" knowledge of the issuance of pharmacy and sales tax licenses until the last week of July, although he admitted having had knowledge of the employment of a pharmacist early in May. The denial is of an immaterial fact in view of his full knowledge of the manner in which drugs were being dispensed. There is no pretense that defendant's executives were so naive as to believe that the physicians during the several months in question were purchasing large quantities of medicines and giving them away to their patients. Nor does it appear that such is the common practice among physicians. It is true as found by the court that defendant did not encourage Dr. Boonshaft to maintain a drug store or sell drugs, but it unquestionably did, by its silence and its sales of drugs to him encourage him to continue to furnish medicines to his patients and to believe and to proceed in the belief that his methods of doing business did not conflict with defendant's rights under its lease. There was no finding to the contrary. Equally significant was defendant's silence with respect to registering a complaint with plaintiff until after a controversy arose over the amount of rent. The plainest principles of equity preclude defendant from taking advantage of a situation which by its silence and acquiescence it encouraged. The estoppel arose from a waiver of the right to assert that its lease had been broken. It was such a waiver as was to be implied from the conduct of its agents and did not need to be express or intentional as long as others acted in the belief that a waiver was intended. Jones v. Della Maria, 1920, 48 Cal.App. 171, 191 P. 943; Johnson v. Kaeser, 1925, 196 Cal. 686, at page 698, 239 P. 324. If Horton & Converse had proceeded against Dr. Boonshaft, the latter would have had a good defense upon the foregoing facts. How can Horton & Converse have greater rights against plaintiff, or how could plaintiff have had greater rights to compel Dr. Boonshaft to change his practices?

[11-13] There is another reason why we think the evidence was insufficient to support a conclusion that any breach of defendant's lease was of a substantial nature. The only evidence in the record as to the amount or value of drugs dispensed by Dr. Boonshaft to his patients was to the effect that they amounted to from $2 to $5 a day. This apparently was at some time prior to the purchases that were made at wholesale. However, there was no evidence that the sales were ever any greater than that, nor was there any evidence as to the nature of the medicines dispensed which would have enabled the court to know whether they differed from those ordinarily supplied by physicians to their patients, nor was there any evidence whatever as to what proportion of the medicines was supplied under the monthly charge and what medicines, if any, were charged for separately. In other words, while under its arrangement with Dr. Boonshaft defendant was profiting satisfactorily in the sale of drugs to him, its detriment, if any, through loss in the filling of prescriptions was not proved or attempted to be proved. Plaintiff was under no obligation to lease to a tenant who would trade with defendant, nor even to lease to a physician. Dr. Boonshaft's advent as a tenant was distinctly advantageous to defendant. It is to be presumed that defendant's sales to him were profitable. The contention is that Dr. Boonshaft should not have been allowed to supply medicines to his patients at all but should have issued prescriptions for such as were needed, which prescriptions, presumably, in part, at least, would have been filled in defendant's store. This was the excuse which defendant offered for the attempted rescission of its lease. This diaphanous screen cannot hide the nakedness of the claim of damage. Nothing of substance in the way of detriment was proved. It is just as reasonable to infer from the facts in evidence that defendant's profits from the sale of drugs and medicines exceeded its possible profits from filling prescriptions as to infer the contrary.

If it were possible to see in the situation some detriment to defendant's business based upon fact and not pure theory, it would be, upon the facts in evidence, insignificant and trivial and would not have warranted a rescission of the lease. Keating v. Preston, 1940, 42 Cal.App.2d 110, 117, 118, 108 P.2d 479. From the fact that a contract is breached by one party it does not necessarily follow that the other thereby becomes entitled to rescind. A breach of a contract in some trivial or minor respect may in some cases be regarded as if it were the breach of an independent covenant. See discussion by Justice Cardozo in Jacob & Youngs v. Kent, 1921, 230 N.Y. 239, 129 N.E. 889, 23 A.L.R. 1429. If the breach of an independent covenant or one which does not run to the whole consideration for the contract does not warrant a rescission of the contract, by like reasoning a breach of a dependent covenant so trivial in amount and consequence that it does not materially affect or interfere with the primary purposes of the covenantee in entering into the contract should not give the latter the right to rescind. In no proper sense can it be said that the sale of medicines by physicians or dentists in the Medico-Dental Building to their own patients constituted a practice which would bring them in competition with defendant's drug business, and no more can it be said that because Dr. Boonshaft employed a pharmacist to compound prescriptions, the insignificant amount of business done with his patients, assuming that it was all through the medium of prescriptions, constituted competition with defendant's business within the meaning of the covenant, in the absence of any showing whatever that the amount involved exceeded the amounts of medicines and drugs which other physicians and dentists in the building were accustomed to furnish and were furnishing to their patients without objection on defendant's part. This feature of the case seems to have been inadequately presented to the trial court, although it was an important one.

There is yet another finding which we think is unsupported by the evidence, and that is that plaintiff breached its lease by failing to take more vigorous action against Dr. Boonshaft to compel him to change his practices. On August 3, Mr. Horton addressed a letter to plaintiff reading as follows: "Some time ago, prior to the execution of your lease with the Louis D. Boonshaft Medical Group, the manager of your building, Mr. Naylor, called our Mr. Walsh and assured him that the Boonshaft Group would not be allowed to operate a drug store, or dispensary, in the building, and read a portion of the clause in the Boonshaft lease to him over the telephone that would protect us. However, it has come to our attention that Dr. Boonshaft has purchased a stock of drugs, taken out a pharmacy permit, employed a pharmacist, has a State Sales Tax permit, fills prescriptions and sells drugs, and charges for the same, which is in direct violation of our lease, and that this was being done with the full knowledge of your building manager. According to the terms of our lease, we must insist that you immediately put a stop to this practice." Plaintiff's representatives immediately contacted Dr. Boonshaft, with the result that on August 8 there was a meeting in the offices of defendant attended by its officers, Dr. Boonshaft, Mr. Binder, and representatives of plaintiff. Dr. Boonshaft denied that he was violating his own lease or that he was maintaining a drug store or selling drugs or ampoules in violation of defendant's lease. At the suggestion of Mr. Horton, negotiations were undertaken toward an arrangement for Dr. Boonshaft to have his prescriptions filled by defendant. From then on until August 19 plaintiff's representatives were diligent in trying to bring about such an arrangement. They were at all times in sympathy with the claims of defendant, although denying any responsibility for the causes of the complaints, and sincerely endeavored to satisfy the demands that defendant was making. One of the plans was to persuade Dr. Boonshaft to submit a list of the most commonly used prescriptions and drugs to defendant for the purpose of getting prices thereon. This was pursuant to a suggestion made by Mr. Horton. Plaintiff endeavored to obtain such a list but on August 19 its attorney advised Mr. Horton by telephone that he had been unable to do anything with Dr. Boonshaft, that "there could not be any arrangements made," and Mr. Horton then said he thought they would move out, to which the attorney said, "Use your own judgment about that." Upon the following day defendant closed its store, placed a sign on the door announcing its removal to one of its other stores, and piled the store full of packing boxes. On August 24 Mr. Horton wrote to plaintiff stating, "In our letter to you, dated August 3, 1938, we notified you that one of your tenants had purchased a stock of drugs, taken our a pharmacy permit, employed a pharmacist, has a State Sales Tax permit, fills prescriptions and sells drugs in direct violation of our lease. We now take the position that you have had a reasonable time to comply with the provisions of our lease but have failed to do so. We, therefore, advise that such failure compelled termination of performance on our part. You are hereby notified that we will vacate the premises located at 947 West Eighth Street before the first day of September, 1938." The premises were vacated before the end of the month of August.

Plaintiff took the position with Dr. Boonshaft that he was violating the lease, and in the ensuing controversy took the side of defendant. That only goes to establish plaintiff's good faith toward defendant. It does not prove that Dr. Boonshaft was violating his lease. Instead of taking extreme measures, plaintiff endeavored in apparent good faith and with commendable diligence to bring the parties to some sort of agreement. Defendant does not advise us just what plaintiff should have done that it did not do. It was simply assumed by defendant that plaintiff intended to do nothing more than had already been done to bring about a settlement of the dispute. That is not a fair inference from the facts disclosed by the evidence. Immediately upon being notified that Dr. Boonshaft's consent could not be obtained to the purchasing of his drugs on prescriptions from defendant, the latter abruptly closed its doors and abandoned all further effort to otherwise assert its rights under the lease.

[14, 15] A most important fact in this connection is that plaintiff had committed no wrong. As already noted, leasing to Dr. Boonshaft violated no right of defendant; the lease in terms respected and provided against violation of defendant's exclusive privilege. Plaintiff never had any more knowledge of Dr. Boonshaft's practices than defendant had, if indeed, as much, until the matter was discussed in conference in the month of August. Under the view most favorable to defendant, plaintiff's conduct could not have constituted a breach of its covenant unless such conduct amounted to a consent to a breach of defendant's exclusive privilege by Dr. Boonshaft, manifested by refusal or persistent failure to make reasonable efforts to put an end to such violation. In other words, Dr. Boonshaft's violation, assuming one for the moment, could not have become plaintiff's violation until plaintiff in effect adopted it as its own. Conceding that this could have been done through inaction (University Club v. Deakin, 1914, 265 Ill. 257, 106 N.E. 790, L.R.A.1915C, 854), the evidence was clearly insufficient to show that it was done or that plaintiff had abandoned its efforts to find a solution for the disagreement between the tenants. While plaintiff was under an express obligation not to lease space to a competitor of defendant, there was, at most, but an implied obligation to see that other tenants did not become such competitors by reason of practices adopted, without plaintiff's knowledge or consent. And if it be the law that a landlord has a duty in such situations, beyond those he has consciously assumed, a breach of that obligation should not be hastily declared against him without a showing that he has been guilty of bad faith or deliberate violation of his duty.

[16, 17] If defendant's understanding of its rights was correct, it could have enjoined Dr. Boonshaft from the practices which constituted a violation of defendant's lease. Pappadatos v. Market St. Bldg. Corp., 1933, 130 Cal.App. 62, 19 P.2d 517; Waldorf-Astoria Segar Co. v. Salomon et al., 1905, 109 App.Div. 65, 95 N.Y.S. 1053, at page 1056, affirmed in 184 N.Y. 584, 77 N.E. 1197; Standard Fashion Co. v. Siegel-Cooper Co., 1898, 157 N.Y. 60, 51 N.E. 408, 43 L.R.A. 854, 68 Am.St.Rep. 749. We do not say that it was obliged to do so, but it cannot be questioned that a greater measure of cooperation with plaintiff would have strengthened its claim that it acted in good faith. At any rate the precipitate and summary action which it did take was wholly unjustified under the circumstances. It must be remembered that up until the time that it closed its store, defendant had not given plaintiff any notice that it contemplated rescinding its lease nor had it made any complaint whatever that plaintiff was not proceeding diligently to remove the cause of the controversy. It was at Mr. Horton's suggestion that negotiations were taken up toward a settlement of the controversy. Plaintiff was not allowed a reasonable time, or any time at all, within which to take further action after Dr. Boonshaft had declined to enter into an agreement, before defendant closed its store. Defendant's contention in this respect does not compare favorably with the good faith shown by plaintiff throughout the controversy. Defendant had no right under the circumstances shown here to rescind its lease as long as plaintiff was diligently and in good faith endeavoring to remove the cause of defendant's complaint. However, as already pointed out, plaintiff was under no obligation to bring the two tenants to an agreement, or to interfere with Dr. Boonshaft's methods, which did not interfere with the rights of defendant under its lease.

Appellant argues another point which should be decided, inasmuch as it may be pertinent upon a retrial of the case. It is contended that the covenant of the lessor not to lease any part of the building for the purpose of its use as a drug store or for the sale of drugs, and the lessee's covenant to pay rent are independent of each other and therefore that if the former was breached, such breach would not give the lessee the right to terminate or rescind the lease or relieve it from liability to pay rent during the remainder of the term. Two California cases are relied upon, neither of which is in point. They are Arnold v. Krigbaum, 1915, 169 Cal. 143, 146 P. 423, Ann.Cas.1916D, 370, and Exchange Securities Co. v. Rossini, 1919, 44 Cal.App. 583, 186 P. 828. In the first of these cases it was held that a counterclaim for damages for failure to make repairs could not be asserted in an action of unlawful detainer. In the other it was held that a covenant to pay rent was not dependent upon a covenant of the lessor to give the lessee an opportunity to purchase the property in case of sale and that a breach of the latter covenant did not relieve the lessee of his obligation to pay rent. It was also held that a breach of an independent covenant in a lease does not give the right to rescind or terminate the lease in the absence of an agreement between the parties granting such right.

[18-22] In Lunn v. Gage, 1865, 37 Ill. 19, 87 Am.Dec. 233, in construing a lease the court approved a statement to the effect that "covenants are to be construed to be dependent or independent, according to the intention of the parties, and the good sense of the case; and that technical words should give away to such intention." Other cases to the same effect are collected in 32 Am.Jur., section 134. It seems to us to be a wholly satisfactory rule. Leases of real property create distinct sets of rights and obligations, namely, those depending upon privity of estate and those depending upon privity of contract. Samuels v. Ottinger, 1915, 169 Cal. 209, 211, 146 P. 638, Ann.Cas.1916E, 830. Those features of the lease which are strictly contractual in their nature should be construed as other contracts are construed and in accordance with the fundamental principle that the intentions of the parties should be given effect as far as possible. It is an established rule that those covenants which run to the entire consideration of a contract are mutual and dependent. Ernst v. Cummings, 1880, 55 Cal. 179; Brennan v. Ford, 1873, 46 Cal. 7; Osborn v. Henry Cowell Lime, etc., Co., 1918, 37 Cal.App. 67, 70, 173 P. 492. Undoubtedly the covenant in defendant's lease was of such a nature. The exclusive right to conduct a drug store in the building was the thing contracted for. The business was derived largely from tenants in the building and when vacancies occurred defendant's income from the store suffered to such an extent that the rent was temporarily reduced. This fact, of course, is but corroborative of the contention that the business was not of a transient nature and that it was of prime importance that no competitor be rented quarters in the building. Where a covenant of a lessor is of such a nature that its breach will defeat the entire purpose of the lessee in entering into the lease, such as rendering his further occupancy of the premises a source of continuing financial loss incapable of satisfactory measurement in damages, it must be said that the covenant goes to the entire consideration for the lease upon the lessee's part. University Club v. Deakin, 1914, supra; Hiatt Investment Co. v. Buehler, 1929, 225 Mo.App. 151, 16 S.W.2d 219. See also cases cited supra.

The appeal presents no other questions. The judgment is reversed.

SCHAUER, P. J., concurred.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

I dissent. For dissenting opinion see 125 P.2d 610.

DOMINGUEZ ESTATE CO. v. RUDDOCK.

Civ. 12808.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 2, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 28, 1942.
Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

Landlord and tenant ⚷208(1)

Where lease provided that, in event of assignment of lease before completion of building on leased premises, assigning lessee should remain personally responsible for performance of all obligations under lease until building was constructed and paid for, assignor of lease could not be held responsible for nonpayment by his assignee of rental which accrued long after completion of building. Civ.Code, § 1638.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Myron Westover, Judge.

Action by the Dominguez Estate Company against A. B. Ruddock to recover rent allegedly due under lease. From a judgment in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Earl D. Killion, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Garnet C. Rainey, Edward D. Neuhoff, and Montgomery G. Rice, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This action, tried upon a stipulated statement of facts, was brought to recover rent under a fifty-year lease dated June 1, 1912, between R. M. Baker, as lessor, and E. P. Bryan and L. T. Bradford, as lessees, covering certain real property located at 833 South Spring Street in the city of Los Angeles.

It was stipulated that on August 10, 1916, Edna Price became the owner in fee of said property, as devisee under the will of said R. M. Baker, the original lessor, and on August 21, 1918, L. D. Sale by mesne assignments succeeded to all the interest of Bryan and Bradford, the original lessees under said lease. On January 25, 1922, Edna Price and her husband, and the said L. D. Sale entered into an agreement modifying the terms of the original lease with respect to the construction on the premises of a $50,000 building. On December 14, 1923, said lessee, L. D. Sale, and his wife, Katherine M. Sale, transferred all their rights in the lease to A. B. Ruddock, the respondent herein. The last named parties on the same date executed an instrument in writing (which was attached to said assignment) whereby a modification of the building agreement of January 25, 1922, between Price and Sale was made.

On January 7, 1924, respondent Ruddock and his wife granted and assigned to the Southwestern Development Company "a certain Indenture of Lease, bearing date the 1st day of June, 1912." On that day respondent Ruddock surrendered actual possession of the leased premises to said Southwestern Development Company, and since that time has disclaimed any right, title or interest in or to said lease agreement of June 1, 1912. On March 31, 1924, the Southwestern Development Company entered into an agreement whereby it leased to the Los Angeles City Club (for a period of 20 years after the date of its completion), the building proposed to be erected upon the premises covered by the original lease. On November 17, 1924, the building contemplated by the lease and the modification agreements heretofore referred to was constructed, completed and fully paid for.

On October 25, 1926, Edna Price, a widow, as owner and lessor, deeded the property and assigned the lease of June 1, 1912, to City Bond & Finance Company, which corporation on October 26, 1926, deeded the property and assigned the lease to Maria De Los Reyes D. de Francis, who on February 23, 1929, conveyed the real property to Dominguez Estate Company, appellant herein, reserving to herself as grantor a life estate therein including rents, issues and profits arising therefrom during the term of her natural life.

Following January 7, 1924, Southwestern Development Company paid rental under the terms of the original lease of June 1, 1912, to the respective owners of the leasehold interest and from July 7, 1933, said corporation paid rental to appellant, Dominguez Estate Company, which corporation acquired a fee simple title to the property on June 4, 1933, the date of the death of Maria etc. de Francis, the life tenant.

In August of 1932, said Maria etc. de Francis granted the Southwestern Development Company a reduction in the rental from $1,000 to $750 per month, which amount was paid to and including December, 1932. On January 4, 1933, the rental was reduced to $600 per month which sum was paid to and including April, 1937. On April 19, 1937, appellant notified Southwestern Development Company that it would no longer accept rental at the rate of $600 per month but would require the payment of $1,000 per month, as provided by the terms of the lease. Said rental was paid up to and including September 30, 1938, the said Southwestern Development Company having abandoned possession of the premises on September 28, 1938.

It was further stipulated that when appellant acquired title to the real property it knew that Southwestern Development Company was in possession of the premises as lessee under an assignment from respondent Ruddock. Further, that respondent had paid none of the rental or taxes under the terms of the original lease since Janaury 7, 1924 (the date of the assignment by him to Southwestern Development Company), and that none of appellant's predecessors in interest at any time ever made demand upon respondent that he pay the rental, nor did they inform him that he was liable or obligated to perform the terms and provisions of the original lease.

On November 15, 1938, prior to the commencement of the instant action, appellant for the first time notified respondent that he would hold him personally responsible for payment of all rental, taxes, etc., as provided for in the original lease. The instant action was filed on January 12, 1939, to recover rental due for the months of October, November, December, 1938, and January, 1939, at the rate of $1,000 per month.

This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment of the trial court rendered in favor of respondent Ruddock, it being stated in appellant's opening brief as follows: "Apparently the trial court sustained the contention of the defendant and respondent and held that the said A. B. Ruddock was not liable for any rent or other charges under the lease after the building had been erected and completed in accordance with the terms of the lease agreement. It is the contention and claim of the appellant, however, that the said A. B. Ruddock was not released by the completion of the building and that he is still liable for the obligations of the lease until such time as he might make an assignment in the form of assignment as provided in the lease agreement, being the latter part of paragraph 8 * * * which provides that such assignment shall be evidenced in writing, fully executed and acknowledged by the assignee or assignees, as well as the assignors, and whereby the assignee or assignees shall expressly accept and assume all the terms and covenants of the lease to be kept and performed by the lessees and will agree to comply with and be bound by them. * * *"

Paragraph 8 of the lease of June 1, 1912, provides as follows:

"It is further covenanted and agreed that the Lessees may sell, assign or transfer this lease before they shall have constructed or paid for the building on said premises of the character and within the time hereinbefore specified, but in the event of such an assignment, sale or transfer before the final completion of said building, the Lessees herein shall remain and do hereby hold themselves personally responsible for the construction and completion of said building and for the rents due and to grow due and the performance of all other obligations of this lease until such time as said building is constructed and paid for.

"After said building * * * has been erected and completed in conformity with the requirements of this lease * * * the Lessees may sell, assign, and transfer this lease and their interest in said leasehold premises and the buildings thereon provided that all rents, taxes, assessments, insurance and other charges of every kind shall have been paid to the date of such assignment and all covenants and agreements herein contained on the part of said Lessees to be kept and performed shall have been fully complied with at the date of such assignment or conveyance; and further provided that in case of said sale or assignment of said lease the same shall be evidenced in writing, fully executed and acknowledged by the assignee or assignees, as well as the assignors, and duly recorded * * * wherein and whereby the assignee or assignees shall expressly accept and assume all the terms and covenants in this indenture contained, to be kept and performed by the Lessees, and will agree to comply with and be bound by them, and the said Lessees herein * * * agree that they will not make any assignment of this lease or any interest therein except in the manner and upon the conditions as above set forth, and it is agreed and notice is hereby given that any assignment of said lease, lease-hold interest or any interest therein, not in strict conformity with these provisions shall be null and void, provided, however, that in the event that said lease is assigned in good faith and in accordance with the terms and conditions of this paragraph hereinbefore set forth and duly recorded as herein provided and fully accepted in all its terms by the assignee or assignees, as herein contemplated, that then and in that event the Lessees so assigning and conveying said lease * * * shall thereafter and thereby be forever released and discharged from the obligations of this lease on their part to be kept or performed, provided they are not then in default in any of the obligations thereof, on their part to be kept and discharged. In the event of any assignment under the terms and conditions herein set forth, said assignee and all succeeding assignees shall be subject to the same terms and conditions as to future assignments."

The court interpreted the 8th paragraph of the lease as follows:

"III. The court finds, as to the provisions for assignment of said lease dated June 1, 1912, by the lessees, and as to the liability of such assigning lessees, that the language of the first sentence of the eighth paragraph of said lease provides and specifies and means that the original lessees, or any assignees of the original lessees, shall have the right to sell, assign or transfer the said lease before the building specified in the lease should be completely constructed and paid for, but that if said lessees or their assignees should so sell, assign or transfer before such completion and construction, they and each of them should nevertheless remain and continue to be personally responsible for the construction and completion of the said building and for the payment of the rents due or to grow due or accruing prior to said completion and for the performance of all other obligations of the lease by said lease required to be performed only until such time as said building was constructed and paid for, and that said language of paragraph eight also provides and specifies and means that from and after the completion of and payment of said building, no further liability or duty or performance of any sort should accrue or become due from any such original lessee or assignee who had himself sold, assigned or transferred all his interest prior to such completion and full payment.

"The court finds that the second and third sentences of said eighth paragraph of said lease provide and specify and set forth the conditions prerequisite to any assignment of the said lease by the lessee made subsequent to the completion of and payment for said building, and provides for and defines the liabilities and duties of the assignor and assignee of any assignment made after the completion of the said building, and the court finds that said second and third sentences do not affect or have any bearing upon the making of any assignment of the lease by the lessee prior to such building completion or the liability of any assignor, who assigned the lease prior to the construction, completion and payment for said building."

"The language of a contract is to govern its interpretation, if the language is clear and explicit, and does not involve an absurdity." Civ.Code, sec. 1638.

An examination of the eighth paragraph of the lease reveals that it is made up of two paragraphs, the first concerning assignments made before the completion of the contemplated building upon the premises, and providing in the event of an assignment before such completion, such assigning lessee shall remain personally responsible for the performance of all obligations under the lease until such time as said building shall have been constructed and paid for. The second paragraph of paragraph eight concerns assignments made after the completion of the building, and sets forth in detail the manner and form in which such an assignment shall be made at that time.

In view of the clear and explicit language of the said eighth paragraph of the lease, the interpretation placed upon it by the trial court must be sustained as a matter of law. Since respondent Ruddock assigned the lease to the Southwestern Development Company in January, 1924, at which time the contemplated building had not been erected on the property, he cannot be held responsible for nonpayment of rent by his assignee which rental accrued long after the completion of the building, to-wit: in October, November, December, 1938, and January, 1939.

For the reasons stated, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 122

ESCOBAR et al. v. McNIEL et al.

Civ. 6611.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 3, 1942.

1. Automobiles 🔑218

Generally, fact that pedestrians are proceeding along shoulder of highway in same direction traffic is traveling, in opposition to Vehicle Code, establishes "negligence per se". Vehicle Code, § 564, St.1935, p. 188.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence Per Se".

2. Appeal and error 🔑842(7)

Generally, the issue of contributory negligence is one for trier of facts, and will not be disturbed on appeal unless it can be said that such negligence contributed directly to plaintiff's injury, in which event it became an "issue of law".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Issue of Law".

3. Automobiles 🔑245(74)

Evidence presented question for jury as to whether two high school boys, who crossed highway and proceeded to run and walk along shoulder in direction traffic was traveling toward automobile which had stopped to give them a ride, were guilty of contributory negligence, so as to be precluded from recovering for injuries sustained when struck by automobile traveling in same direction. Vehicle Code, § 564, St.1935, p. 188.

4. Negligence 🔑136(9)

Contributory negligence becomes a "question of law" only when court is compelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to negligence of plaintiff contributing to his injury.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Law".

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Chris Escobar, Jr., a minor, etc., and another, against Mary McNiel and another, for injuries sustained by plaintiffs when struck by defendants' automobile. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Butler, Van Dyke & Harris, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Henry S. Lyon and Robert E. Roberts, both of Placerville, for respondents.

STEEL, Justice pro tem.

The defendants appeal from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiffs pursuant to the verdict of a jury. The sole error assigned in this appeal is whether or not the plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The essential facts are without dispute and may be summarized as follows:

The action is one for damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiffs as a result of an accident which occurred on a Sunday afternoon in November, 1939, on U. S. Highway 50, approximately four and one-half miles west of Placerville, in El Dorado county.

The appellant Mary McNiel, accompanied by her husband George P. McNiel (since deceased) was riding in their Chrysler automobile, and at the time of the accident it was being driven by appellant Owen Daniel Brown, westerly along said highway.

The plaintiffs, respondents here, minor high school boys of the ages of 17 and 16 respectively, were pedestrians and on their way home at the time of the accident. As they approached the highway from a side road they observed some friends passing in a car traveling westerly which the boys signaled for a ride. Respondents were then approximately 250 feet from the highway, and the car, hereinafter referred to as the Smith car, did not stop at once but proceeded along the highway some 380 feet to a point about midway in a cut where it was brought to a stop partly on and partly off the paved portion of the highway. The respondents, upon reaching the highway from the side road, looked for oncoming traffic, and seeing none, proceeded directly across the highway to the northerly side and then walked and ran westerly along the north shoulder toward the Smith car. As they approached the car from the rear they went to the left side thereof and had just engaged in a conversation with some of the occupants when the defendant's car, traveling westerly also, approached and struck them, hurling them forward and to the ground in front of the parked Smith car, resulting in the injuries sustained.

Upon the trial, plaintiff's witness, a civil engineer, produced a profile map which was received in evidence showing the physical condition of the highway in the vicinity of the scene of the accident.

As already indicated the accident occurred about midway in a cut with sloping embankments, the length of which was some 600 feet or more. The width of the paved portion of the highway through the cut is 22.4 feet with a white center line, and has a shoulder on either side from five to six feet in width. As a car approaches from the east, that is the Placerville direction, the highway descends somewhat, and at a point some 2,000 feet east of the accident it would disappear from the view of one at the scene of the accident, and after reaching the bottom of the dip or grade it gradually ascends, and at a point some 1,050 feet east of the accident scene it would again come into view, from that point on the grade flattens out almost to level, giving one a clear and unobstructed view for the entire distance last mentioned.

It is the testimony of appellants that they did not see the two boys prior to the impact, and it was only after appellant Mrs. McNiel, who was sitting in the front seat suggested to Mr. Brown, the driver of the car, "I think you struck something" that they pulled to one side and stopped several feet beyond the Smith car. The evidence shows that the accident happened around four o'clock P. M. of the day in question that it was a clear day and the setting sun was shining very brightly as appellants drove toward it traveling westerly. Appellant Mrs. McNiel testified that she held her hand up to shade her eyes; that they were traveling between 40 and 45 miles per hour, and that she saw the Smith car which stopped partly on the highway and partly on the shoulder but that she did not see the boys until after the accident.

Defendants' Exhibit A is a photograph taken by a gentleman immediately after the accident and admittedly shows a good reproduction of the conditions at the scene of the accident immediately after its occurrence. The Smith car is shown parked as above indicated and appears to have been parked as nearly off the pavement and adjacent to the embankment as was practical. Appellant Brown testified in substance to the same effect as did Mrs. McNiel with reference to the speed of the car, the glaring sun, and seeing the Smith car but not seeing either of the boys until after the accident. Appellants further testified that another car was parked approximately opposite the Smith car facing easterly, and that as they approached the scene a car traveling at a high rate of speed coming toward them, passed as they were passing between the two parked cars. There is some conflict in the testimony as to the car being parked opposite the Smith car, some of its occupants testifying that it was parked up the highway a considerable distance. However, this becomes immaterial, as appellants at the outset, concede that there is evidence in the record sufficient to support the jury's implied finding of negligence upon the part of Brown, the driver of the defendant's car.

[1-3] Appellants contend that the fact respondents crossed the highway and then proceeded to run and walk along the shoulder on the north side and in the direction traffic was traveling, which is in direct opposition to the provisions of Section 564 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 188, constitutes negligence per se. While this is the general rule (19 Cal.Jur. 632 and cases there cited) it is also the general rule that the issue of contributory negligence is one for the jury or trier of the facts to determine, and will not be disturbed upon appeal unless it can be said that such negligence contributed directly to the plaintiff's injury, in which event it became an issue of law. Clearly it cannot here be said, as a matter of law, that the act of respondents, in traversing along the northerly side of the highway was a proximate cause of the accident nor can it likewise be said as a matter of law, that the failure of the boys to look back along the highway as they passed to the left side of the Smith car constituted contributory negligence directly or proximately causing their injury. These were questions for the jury.

The undisputed evidence shows that they were standing close up and within a foot of the side of the Smith car, one of the boys with his foot on the running board, and had engaged in a short conversation with some of the occupants when they were struck.

Edward H. Smith who was seated in the rear seat of the Smith car testified as follows:

"Q. Now as you went down the highway where did you first see the Escobar boys? A. I saw them across, coming out of the golf road.

"Q. Now, explain to the jury just exactly what happened after that; what did your son do with his car? A. He drove along, we seen them and he said, 'Oh, I ain't going to stop.' He pulled up maybe four or five hundred feet or something like that and he dropped out his hand and stopped. He says, 'I will give them a ride.' And he pulled up right against the bank and stopped. The little boys crossed the road and came up behind the car.

"Q. How do you know they crossed the road? A. I was looking through the back window.

"Q. Did you watch them all the way down the road? A. Practically all the way down, yes, sir.

"Q. Where were they traveling? A. Traveling right up against the righthand side of the road coming up behind the car.

"Q. Were they on the paved portion or off on the shoulder? A. They were onto the shoulder, right against the cut, right against the bank.

"Q. And what happened as they reached the Smith car, the car which your son was driving and you were in? A. They stepped around the car.

"Q. Did you see them do that? A. Yes, sir, I seen them as they went to make the turn and then they appeared at the window.

"Q. The window at which side of the car? A. On the left side.

"Q. Now you were looking back through the back of the car, the back window? A. As they were coming up I was looking through the back window.

"Q. And you were looking that way when you saw them from the door? A. Yes, sir, and then I turned to the window.

"Q. As you saw the boys making that turn did you see any other car coming from down the highway? A. I did not."

It would appear, therefore, that the jury might well have drawn the inference that appellant's car had not come into vision from the so-called dip when the respondents turned to the left and came to the side of the Smith car. It will be recalled that appellants both testified that they did not see the boys at all prior to the accident.

[4] The jury having found by its verdict that respondents were not guilty of contributory negligence, it becomes a question of law only when the court "is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury. Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125, 128.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 120

In re LASKER.

Civ. 12911.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 2, 1942.

1. Descent and distribution 🔑71(7)

In proceeding to establish fact of petitioner's birth, where evidence is not brought up, on appeal from order denying petition, by bill of exceptions, reporter's transcript, or otherwise, District Court of Appeal must assume that evidence was insufficient to support allegations of petition or to justify order establishing fact of petitioner's birth.

St.1939, p. 752, § 10605; Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 29.

2. Descent and distribution ⚷71(7)

On appeal from order denying petition to establish fact of petitioner's birth, trial judge's opinion, incorporated in brief of amicus curiæ, but not part of record, that applicable sections of Health and Safety Code are unconstitutional, presents no question for review. St.1939, pp. 751–753, §§ 10600 to 10607.

3. Appeal and error ⚷717

The trial judge's opinion cannot be accepted as establishing any fact in case on appeal, even when incorporated in transcript, and cannot take place of record of evidence adduced at hearing.

4. Appeal and error ⚷712

It is appellate courts' duty to decide cases on records before them.

5. Descent and distribution ⚷71(7)

On appeal from order denying petition to establish fact of petitioner's birth, trial judge's opinion, incorporated in brief of amicus curiæ, but not part of record, that applicable sections of Health and Safety Code are unconstitutional, does not warrant assumption by District Court of Appeal that trial judge would have granted petition had he deemed law valid. St.1939, pp. 751–753, §§ 10600 to 10607.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Proceeding by John L. Lasker for establishment of the fact of his birth. From an order denying the petition, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Albert G. Bergman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Douglas DeCoster, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, as amici curiae, on behalf of Los Angeles County.

SHINN, Justice.

This is an appeal by John L. Lasker from an order denying his petition filed under sections 10600 to 10607, inclusive, of the Health and Safety Code, St.1939, pp. 751–753, for the judicial establishment of the fact of his birth.

We have been furnished with a clerk's transcript which contains a petition for order establishing birth, notice of hearing of the petition, affidavits of publication and service, and two minute orders, one showing that the matter came on for hearing, that John L. Lasker was sworn and testified and that the matter was submitted, and the other entry showing that the petition was denied. There also appears in the clerk's transcript what purports to be a deposition of one Mary Lesko, taken in the state of Pennsylvania pursuant to a commission issued in said proceeding.

Section 10605 of the Health and Safety Code provides as follows: "If, upon the hearing, the allegations of the petition are established to the satisfaction of the court, the court may make an order determining that the birth, death, or marriage did in fact occur at the time and place shown by the proofs adduced at the hearing."

[1] The evidence given at the hearing has not been brought up by bill of exceptions, reporter's transcript or otherwise, as required by rule XXIX of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. Without the evidence before us we cannot know whether it was such that the court was or should have been satisfied as to the truth of the allegations of the petition and therefore must assume, under rules of law as controlling as they are familiar, that the evidence given in support of the petition was insufficient to support the allegations thereof or to justify an order establishing the fact of petitioner's birth. 2 Cal.Jur., sec. 262, sec. 499 et seq., and cases cited.

[2] Incorporated in the brief of amicus curiae we find an opinion of the trial judge, expressing the view that the applicable sections of the Health and Safety Code are unconstitutional, and we are asked to assume that the petition was denied for that reason alone. The opinion is not a part of the record (Ferguson v. Green, 1929, 99 Cal.App. 641, 645, 278 P. 1058; Estate of Ingram, 1929, 99 Cal.App. 660, 662, 279 P. 208; Rickards v. Noonan, 1940, 40 Cal.App.2d 266, 271, 104 P.2d 839) and does not present to us a question calling for decision. If we should find ourselves in agreement with the views expressed in the opinion, our affirmance would be supported upon two grounds instead of one, which is unnecessary, and if we should not be able to reach the same conclusion it would still be necessary to affirm the order and our opinion on the constitutional question would therefore be but dictum, without effect as a rule of law. 21 C.J.S., Courts, § 190, p. 317.

[3-5] Although an opinion of the trial judge is sometimes found useful as illustrating the theory or basis of the decision (Union Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co., 1935, 3 Cal.2d 740, 750, 47 P.2d 273), it cannot, even when incorporated in the transcript, be accepted as establishing any fact in the case. Goldner v. Spencer, 1912, 163 Cal. 317, 320, 125 P. 347; Estate of Felton, 1917, 176 Cal. 663, 667, 169 P. 392. The opinion in question is not even in the certified transcript and if it were it would be subject to a motion to strike it out (White v. Merrill, 1889, 82 Cal. 14, 15, 22 P. 1129; Estate of Ingram, supra, 1929, 99 Cal.App. 660, 662, 279 P. 208) and whether or not stricken could not take the place of a record of the evidence adduced at the hearing. Since it is the duty of appellate courts to decide cases upon the records before them, there is no justification for the adoption of loose practices which would make for uncertainty or inadequacy in records on appeal. Consequently we cannot assume, as appellant requests us to do, that the trial judge would have granted the petition had he deemed the law to be valid.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 775

PEOPLE v. MILANCHALK.

Cr. 472.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 1, 1942.

Criminal law 🔑1182

Where clerk's and reporter's transcripts were filed in reviewing court on February 13, 1942, no briefs were filed, and the only appearance on behalf of appellant was in the form of a letter from his counsel stating that he was abandoning appeal, motion to affirm judgment made on March 31, 1942, was granted. Pen.Code, § 1253.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Gordon Thompson, Judge.

Proceeding by the People against John Milanchalk. From the judgment, defendant appeals and a motion is made to affirm the judgment.

Motion granted and judgment affirmed.

Edgar G. Langford, of San Diego, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The clerk's and reporter's transcripts were filed in this court on February 13, 1942. No briefs have been filed and the only appearance on behalf of the appellant is in the form of a letter from his counsel to the effect that he was abandoning the appeal.

The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for March 31, 1942, at which time a motion to affirm the judgment under section 1253 of the Penal Code was made.

The motion is granted and the judgment is affirmed.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 156

HEFFRON v. ROSENBERG et al.

Civ. 11995.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 7, 1942.

1. Bankruptcy 🔑390

After adjudication in bankruptcy and appointment and qualification of a trustee, bankrupt is without right to institute or prosecute an action, cross-action, or proceeding except on cause of action not passing to trustee. Bankr.Act § 70, sub. a, 11 U.S.C.A. § 110, sub. a.

2. Bankruptcy 🔑281

Where bankrupt has an interest in partnership which passes to trustee under Bankruptcy Act, it becomes right of trustee to protect bankrupt's interest by suit against the other partner, if suit is necessary. Bankr.Act § 70, sub. a, 11 U.S.C.A. § 110, sub. a.

3. Bankruptcy 🔑281

Where bankruptcy trustee instituted suit against bankrupt's alleged partner to protect bankrupt's interest in partnership, the trustee had complete control over the action subject to the approval of bankruptcy court. Bankr.Act § 70, sub. a, 11 U.S.C.A. § 110, sub. a.

4. Bankruptcy 🔑302

Where bankruptcy trustee instituted suit to recover assets of bankrupt on theory that bankrupt was undisclosed partner of defendant, cross-complaint of bankrupt against defendant alleging existence of partnership between bankrupt and defendant was demurrable, since the cause of action had passed to the trustee. Bankr.Act § 70, sub. a, 11 U.S.C.A. § 110, sub. a.

5. Bankruptcy 🔑301

In suit by bankruptcy trustee to recover bankrupt's assets on theory that bankrupt was undisclosed partner of defendant, wherein bankrupt filed cross-complaint based on same theory, appointment of receiver was unauthorized where evidence disclosed that the claim upon which the complaint and cross-complaints were founded had been fully settled and compromised by defendant and bankruptcy trustee. Bankr.Act §§ 27, 38, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 50, 66.

6. Bankruptcy 🔑252

Where record did not disclose that appeal had been taken from or direct attack made upon order of bankruptcy court affirming bankruptcy trustee's compromise of claim based on theory that bankrupt was defendant's undisclosed partner, the order was a "final adjudication" of the bankrupt's interest in the property and was not subject to "collateral attack" in suit in state court to recover bankrupt's assets. Bankr.Act §§ 27, 38, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 50, 66.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Collateral Attack" and "Final Adjudication".

7. Equity 🔑65(1)

A party must come into a court of equity with clean hands.

8. Equity 🔑65(2)

Where, on face of bankrupt's cross-complaint based on theory that bankrupt was undisclosed partner of defendant and that defendant held assets of bankrupt, the bankrupt conceded that she defrauded bankruptcy court and her creditors, appointment of receiver was breach of judicial discretion, under "clean hands doctrine". Bankr.Act §§ 27, 38, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 50, 66.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Clean Hands Doctrine".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Action by William I. Heffron, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Jennie Rosenberg, against Jennie Rosenberg and Lloyd Vaughn, to recover assets of the bankrupt, wherein Jennie Rosenberg filed a cross-complaint. From an order appointing a receiver, Lloyd Vaughn appeals.

Reversed.

George T. Goggin and Halverson & Halverson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Michael F. Shannon and Thomas A. Wood, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of the Estate of Jennie Rosenberg, commenced this action against Vaughn and Mrs. Rosenberg on the theory that the bankrupt was an undisclosed partner of Vaughn and that the latter held valuable assets in his own name, half of which should go to the trustee as assets of the bankrupt. The bankrupt filed an answer admitting all the allegations of the complaint, and then filed a cross-complaint pleading substantially the same matters alleged in the trustee's complaint. On the same day that the cross-complaint was filed the trial court, on application of the cross-complainant, issued an order to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed to take possession of all the property held by Vaughn. In response to this order Vaughn filed a demurrer to the cross-complaint, and an affidavit denying the partnership and disclosing a compromise and settlement of the entire controversy between the trustee and himself, duly approved by the referee in bankruptcy. Following a hearing upon the order to show cause the trial court appointed a receiver fixing his bond at $5,000 and granting Vaughn a stay on appeal if he filed a bond in the sum of $50,000.

The appeal is taken from the order appointing the receiver.

It is not possible to sustain the order upon any legal ground, but, in the interest of brevity, we will confine our discussion to two issues—that the court was without jurisdiction to make the order, and that it is not supported by judicial discretion.

Mrs. Rosenberg filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in March, 1939, and was duly discharged in November, 1939. In December, 1940, the proceedings were reopened upon the affidavit of Mrs. Rosenberg stating that she believed that she had a partnership interest in the property standing in the name of Vaughn amounting to over $150,000, but that, through mistake, misapprehension, and misunderstanding, she had failed to include it in her inventory. In her cross-complaint she alleged that in 1923 she entered into an agreement of partnership with Vaughn under which they acquired numerous pieces of real estate, including an apartment house located on West Eighth Street in the city of Los Angeles; that the partnership also acquired valuable stocks and securities; that she filed the original petition in bankruptcy because of a deficiency judgment for $4,200 and that there are other creditors in the sum of $1,500; that Vaughn has repudiated and denied the existence of the partnership, but that he had made an offer to the trustee to settle the controversy by the payment of a fixed sum.

The trustee, as plaintiff and cross-defendant, filed an affidavit showing that a proposal of compromise was made by Vaughn, that the creditors duly accepted the proposal, and that the referee, after a hearing at which the bankrupt was present and made her objections, made his order confirming the proposal and directing the trustee to dismiss this proceeding.

In the affidavit of Vaughn filed in response to the order to show cause he denied the partnership relation; alleged that he was the sole owner of the apartment house located on West Eighth Street, that Mrs. Rosenberg had been employed by him at a fixed salary as manager of the apartment house. Attached to the affidavit was the "statement of affairs" verified by the bankrupt and filed in the bankruptcy proceedings, and also a transcript of her testimony taken in those proceedings. In both instances she took oath that she had been employed by Vaughn at a salary of $600 a year, and that she was not engaged in any business or partnership. She testified that five years preceding she had owned an apartment house which she traded for a worthless ranch, and that one of the claims against her was based on a deficiency judgment arising out of that transaction. She further testified that Vaughn owned the apartment house on West Eighth Street where she was employed, that she never owned that property, and that she had never had any business dealings, trades, or transfers with Vaughn. The order of compromise expressly found that the offer was "fair, reasonable and equitable," that the bankrupt had no assets other than the possibility of recovery in this action which "is extremely doubtful," but that she be permitted to continue the action if she filed a bond indemnifying the estate against loss in the sum of $7,500 if she failed to recover an amount equal to the compromise accepted—$6,000. She failed to comply with this order, but insists upon continuing the litigation, notwithstanding the compromise, and the order of the bankruptcy court.

[1-4] The demurrer to the cross-complaint was overruled. It should have been sustained because the trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings based upon the cross-complaint. "After adjudication of bankruptcy and the appointment and qualification of a trustee, the bankrupt is without right to institute or prosecute an action, cross action, or proceeding except on a cause of action not passing to the trustee." 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, § 489, p. 1362; 6 Am.Jur. p. 732. Section 70, sub. a, of the Bankruptcy Act (Title 11, U.S.C.A. § 110, sub. a), provides that the trustee shall be vested with the title of the bankrupt in all property which prior to the filing of the petition he could have transferred, including "rights of action arising upon contracts." When the bankrupt has an interest in a partnership, which passes to the trustee under this section of the act it becomes the right of the trustee to protect the bankrupt's interest by suit against the other partner, if suit is necessary. Here the trustee exercised that right by commencing this action. As trustee he had complete control over the action, subject to the approval of the bankruptcy court. Williams v. Lane, 158 Cal. 39, 42, 109 P. 873; Greene v. Moore, 43 Cal.App. 91, 93, 184 P. 506; Electric Utilities Co. v. Smallpage, 137 Cal.App. 640, 642, 31 P.2d 412; Dean v. Shingle, 198 Cal.

652, 659, 246 P. 1049, 46 A.L.R. 1156; In re Kranich, D.C., 174 F. 908, 911.

Respondents cite passages from 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, § 489, p. 1362, 1363, giving the bankrupt authority to sue in his own name "where the trustee renounces the claim or fails or declines to take it up and proceed with it, or the court of bankruptcy will not permit him to commence or prosecute the action." This is not the situation presented here. The trustee did not renounce the claim or fail to prosecute the action, and the bankruptcy court did not prevent the prosecution of it. To the contrary, the action was commenced by the trustee and was alive and pending at the time the bankrupt sought to inject herself as a party.

[5, 6] However, since the demurrer was overruled and the application for a receiver was heard on the merits, the entire uncontroverted evidence required the denial of the application for the appointment of a receiver. It was shown that the whole claim upon which both the original complaint and the cross-complaint were founded was fully settled and compromised. The power of the trustee to effect the compromise is found in section 50, title 11, U.S.C.A., Bankruptcy Act. The power of the referee to approve the compromise and direct a dismissal of the suit in the state court is found in section 66 of the Bankruptcy Act. The order of the bankruptcy court affirming the compromise and terminating the litigation was entered on May 15, 1941. There is nothing in the record disclosing that an appeal was taken or that any other direct attack was made upon it. There is no contention here that such attack was made, and we must assume that it has become final. That order having the effect of a judgment of a judicial tribunal must now be deemed a final adjudication of the bankrupt's interests in the property involved in this litigation. Donald v. Bankers Life Co., 5 Cir., 107 F.2d 810, 812; In re Tinkoff, 7 Cir., 85 F.2d 305, 307; In re Florsheim, D.C., 24 F.Supp. 991, 992; Sampsell v. Imperial Paper & Color Corp., 313 U.S. 215, 219, 61 S.Ct. 904, 85 L.Ed. 1293.

This order of the bankruptcy court was based upon the express finding that the offer of compromise was "fair, reasonable and equitable" and that the possibility of recovery in the litigation by the bankrupt estate was "extremely doubtful," and that it was "for the best interest of the estate and all persons interested therein that said offer of compromise be accepted and approved."

[7, 8] The remedy of the bankrupt was by appeal or other direct attack to review the order, and the remedy lies in the bankruptcy court. The order was not subject to this collateral attack in the state court. Hence, the order of the trial court appointing a receiver to take possession of appellant's property was erroneous. Assuming that the bankrupt should be able to amend her cross-complaint to state a cause of action she could not prevail therein except by admitting her wilful perjury in the bankruptcy proceedings, or by matching further perjury with that which has gone before. This proceeding being one in equity she is confronted with the settled rule that a party must come into a court of equity with clean hands. But here, upon the face of her cross-complaint, she concedes that she defrauded the bankruptcy court and her creditors, and prays that a court of equity will aid her in keeping the fruits of such fraud. The appointment of a receiver under such circumstances was a breach of judicial discretion.

The order is reversed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 24

PEOPLE v. LAMARR et al.

Cr. 3539.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 31, 1942.

1. Burglary ⚷41(1)

Evidence held sufficient to justify convictions of second-degree burglary.

2. Burglary ⚷41(4)

In burglary trial, evidence that screen of back porch door of dwelling house alleged to have been entered was cut and door unhooked, that washing machine on porch was unbolted from floor and moved about eight feet, and that defendants made inconsistent statements as to why they were at house, including statement that they were there to get washing machine, was sufficient to show entry.

3. Burglary ⚿41(4)

In burglary trial, real estate broker's testimony that he told defendant's sister that she could see inside of dwelling house, alleged to have been entered, when owner was there in evening, was insufficient to show that defendant's entry of back porch of unlighted house in nighttime was permissive.

4. Burglary ⚿7

Where dwelling house, alleged to have been entered by persons charged with burglary, was described in information as located at certain house number on named street in certain county, defendants were not misled as to house referred to and, not being owners or in possession thereof, were not entitled to make issue as to whether victim of burglary was owner or entitled to possession of house.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

Raymond LaMarr and another were convicted of burglary in the second degree, and they appeal.

Affirmed.

Albert Flaxman, Gladys Towles Root, and Eugene V. McPherson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Lewis Drucker, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendants were charged with the crime of burglary. Each pleaded not guilty and admitted the allegations that he had been convicted twice previously of having committed a felony and that he had served terms in the state prison. Trial by jury was waived. They were adjudged guilty of burglary of the second degree. Defendants appeal from the judgments and the order denying their motions for a new trial.

Appellants claim that the evidence was insufficient to justify the judgments, in that (1) there was no proof of entry, (2) assuming there was entry, it was permissive, and (3) there was no showing that the victim of the alleged burglary was the owner or entitled to possession of the house. This contention is not sustained in any particular.

[1] It is undisputed that the defendants went in a coupe automobile to a single family unlighted dwelling in Los Angeles on August 15, 1941, after dark, about 7:45 p. m., and parked the automobile in the driveway and got out of the automobile; that a three-inch cut was in the screen of the back door parallel with the door hook; that rope and canvas were in the automobile; that a "For Sale" sign was in the front yard; that nothing was found on the persons of the defendants or in their homes.

Other evidence was in substance as follows: Mrs. McDonnell, the complaining witness, had resided in the dwelling until August 3, 1941, but did not remove her furniture until August 28, 1941. Mr. McDonnell had not been at the house since July 5, 1941. Between August 3d, the time when she left the house, and the date of the burglary she returned to the house on three occasions and found that it had been entered and things taken therefrom. On each of such occasions she locked and nailed the doors and windows. On August 14th she observed that her Bendix washing machine was in its usual place on the back porch where it was fastened to a cement slab by bolts, and that some small boys were playing on the porch. On August 16th she observed that the washing machine had been detached from the slab and was in the center of the back porch, having been moved about eight feet.

A neighbor asked the two men who were in the driveway what they were looking for, and they said they were looking for Mr. McDonnell and that they had an appointment to meet him there, and that they were after the washing machine since the instalments were in arrears. The neighbor testified that the automobile was parked at the end of the house facing the rear of the lot.

The neighbor's wife testified on direct examination that she saw one of the defendants come out of the back porch with a flashlight in his hand and that he said he was inspecting the gas and light, and on cross-examination she testified that the man who came out of the back porch with a flashlight "could have been" an officer and that she could not say who that man was. She further testified that one of the men said that the reason that they were so late was that they had come from San Bernardino.

An officer testified that he saw LaMarr in the parkway with a flashlight and that he asked him what he was doing and he said he was looking for the meter, and that he was an employee of the Edison Company; and that soon thereafter, LaMarr said that he was there to see about renting the house for his sister; and that thereafter when Esparza came to the parkway where the officer and LaMarr were, LaMarr said they came there about the washing machine.

Another officer testified that he talked with LaMarr that evening and LaMarr told him that a man by the name of Salcido had sent them out there to pick up the washing machine, and that if the officer would go with him to a certain cafe they might find Salcido; that after searching for Salcido, LaMarr said that, he himself, was the Salcido they had been looking for. The officer testified further that Esparza said LaMarr asked him to help LaMarr get the washing machine and that he went there for that purpose.

A real estate broker, called as a witness by defendants, said he had had a "For Sale" sign up at the premises for a period of about six weeks preceding August 15th; that a woman (the one referred to by LaMarr as his sister) came to his office and wanted to see the inside of the house, and that he told her that she could see the inside only when the owner was there and that the owner was there in the evening occasionally.

The woman referred to as LaMarr's sister testified that LaMarr was her brother; that she had been to the premises on several occasions in the afternoon and evening and knocked at the door and no one answered; that she works at night and she sent the defendants there to see Mr. McDonnell and to make arrangements for her to look the place over.

LaMarr testified that they went there because his sister told them to rent the house or see if the owner would sell it; that they parked the car in the driveway about the middle of the house; that they knocked on the front door, went around to the back, saw the back door open, and were just going to leave when a man (referring to the neighbor) came from the back of the lot and talked to them; that he told the neighbor and the officers that he went there to see about renting or buying the place for his sister; that he did not say that he was from the Edison Company, or that he was looking for the meter, or that he was there to pick up the machine, or that Salcido had sent him; that he did not touch the machine.

Esparza testified in substance the same as LaMarr did, and that he told the officers that he was with Salcido (referring to LaMarr).

The evidence was sufficient to justify the judgments of conviction. The above references to the evidence are adequate to show that it will serve no useful purpose to restate, in the form of an analysis or argument, the various items of evidence which are the basis for this conclusion.

[2] As to appellants' contention that there was no entry, there was testimony that, between the time when the owner of the machine was at the house on August 14th and the time when the defendants were apprehended at the house on August 15th, the screen of the back porch door had been cut, the door unhooked, and the washing machine on the porch had been unbolted from the floor and moved about eight feet. Both defendants participated in making inconsistent statements concerning the reason they were at the house, including a statement that they were there to get the washing machine. Regardless of the view taken relative to the testimony that one of the defendants came out of the porch with a flashlight, the evidence was sufficient to show entry.

[3] The claim of appellants that entry, if any, was permissive is based apparently upon the theory that inasmuch as the real estate broker had told the sister that she could see the inside of the house when the owner was there in the evening, that such a statement was permission to enter the back porch of a stranger's unlighted house in the nighttime and knock upon the kitchen door, and that the sister could delegate such right of entry to defendants. This claim has no merit.

[4] Defendants assert that there was no showing that the victim of the alleged burglary was the owner or entitled to the possession of the house. The house was described in the information as being located at a certain house number on a certain named street in the county of Los Angeles. The defendants were not misled concerning the house to which reference was made. The house was not owned or possessed by defendants or either of them, and they were not entitled to make an issue as to the ownership or possession. People v. Price, 1904, 143 Cal. 351, 352, 77 P. 73;

People v. Redman, 1919, 39 Cal.App. 566, 568, 179 P. 725.

The judgments as to both defendants, and the order denying the motions for a new trial, are affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 117

ADAMS v. HILDEBRAND.

Civ. 13460.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 2, 1942.

1. New trial 🔑9

Where a case involves more than one issue of fact, and the issues are severable, the trial court has power to order a new trial on one issue only. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

2. Appeal and error 🔑977(2)

Ordinarily, the question whether the issues are severable or so inseparably pleaded that a new trial must be granted on all issues is within the trial court's discretion, and that court's determination will not be disturbed on appeal in absence of showing of abuse of discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

3. New trial 🔑9

Where general damages awarded in a negligence action are small but to a certain extent compensatory, no conclusion can be drawn that the verdict was a compromise, and it is within trial court's discretion to grant a new trial on issue of damages alone on ground of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

4. New trial 🔑9

Where trial judge determined that issues of negligence and damages were severable in action for death of plaintiff's two year old son, and jury returned verdict for plaintiff for $250, judge had power to grant plaintiff's motion for a new trial on issue of damages alone. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

5. Appeal and error 🔑977(2)

Where evidence was sharply in conflict on issue of negligence in action for death of plaintiff's two year old son, and there was no showing of abuse of discretion, trial judge's determination that issues of negligence and damages were severable would not be disturbed by reviewing court on appeal from order granting plaintiff's motion for new trial on issue of damages alone. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

6. Damages 🔑9

On question whether trial court had power to grant plaintiff's motion for new trial on issue of damages alone in action for death of plaintiff's two year old son, where it was stipulated that special damages amounted to $198.68, award of $51.32 as general damages for death was inadequate. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

7. Jury 🔑31(7½)

In action for death of plaintiff's two year old son, the granting of plaintiff's motion for new trial on issue of damages alone did not deprive defendant of her constitutional right to a "trial by jury". Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trial by Jury".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Samuel R. Blake, Judge.

Action for wrongful death by Byron O. Adams against Rebecca B. Hildebrand. There was a verdict for plaintiff, and from an order granting a new trial on the issue of damages alone, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

C. F. Jorz, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chase, Barnes & Chase and Milford Fish, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From an order granting a new trial on the issue of damages alone after trial before a jury in an action to recover damages for wrongful death defendant appeals.

The essential facts are:

The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for wrongful death of a child of the age of two years in the sum of $250. Thereafter on motion for a new trial the trial judge made the following order:

"It is hereby ordered that the motion of the plaintiff Byron Q. Adams for a new trial in the above entitled action be and the same hereby is granted as to the issue of damages only, upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify or sustain the verdict heretofore rendered in the above entitled action."

This is the sole question necessary for us to determine:

Did the trial court commit prejudicial error in granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the issue of damages only?

This question must be answered in the negative and is governed by the following pertinent rules of law:

[1] (1) It is within the power of the trial court where there is more than one issue of fact in a case and such issues are distinct and severable to order a new trial on one issue only. (In re Estate of Everts, 163 Cal. 449, 452, 125 P. 1058; sec. 657, Code Civ.Proc.)

[2] (2) Ordinarily the question of whether the issues are severable or so "inseparably pleaded" as to require that a new trial be granted as to all the issues is a question within the discretion of the trial court, whose determination thereof will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion. (Amore v. Di Resta, 125 Cal.App. 410, 414, 13 P.2d 986.)

[3] (3) Where general damages awarded are small but to a certain extent compensatory, no conclusion can be drawn therefrom that the verdict was a compromise, and it is within the discretion of the trial court to grant a new trial as to the issue of damages only upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. (Sassano v. Roullard, 27 Cal. App.2d 372, 376, 377, 81 P.2d 213; see, also, Gates v. Wendling Nathan Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 307, 316, 81 P.2d 173.)

[4-6] Applying the foregoing rules to the facts of the instant case, we find it was within the power of the trial court to grant a motion for a new trial on the issue of damages only, and it was also the duty of the trial judge to determine whether the issues of negligence and damages were severable. The determination of the trial judge that these issues were severable will not be disturbed by us, since there was no showing of abuse of discretion, it being conceded that the evidence was sharply in conflict upon the issue of negligence. It was stipulated that the special damages amounted to $198.68. It is therefore obvious that the sum of $51.32 as general damages for the wrongful death of plaintiff's minor son was inadequate.

[7] There is no merit in defendant's contention that the verdict was a result of an obvious compromise by the jury, in view of the third rule above stated. Neither is there any merit in defendant's proposition that, if the order granting the motion for a new trial stands, he is being deprived of his constitutional right to a trial by jury. (See Ingraham v. Weidler, 139 Cal. 588, 589, 73 P. 415.)

The cases of Wallace v. Miller, 26 Cal. App.2d 55, 78 P.2d 745, and Bencich v. Market St. Ry. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 518, 67 P.2d 398, are factually distinguishable from the facts in the present case. This distinction is clearly pointed out in Sassano v. Roullard, supra, 27 Cal.App.2d page 376 et seq., 81 P.2d 213.

For the foregoing reasons, the order is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 856

GALVAN et al. v. BARNETT et al.

Civ. 13520.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 25, 1942.

Appeal and error ⚷801(1)

An appeal would be dismissed on respondents' motion, where all grounds stated in motion were supported by certificate of clerk of superior court setting forth the facts, and by the authorities cited. District Court of Appeal Rules, rule 6.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by Beniot Macios Galvan and others against Edwin W. Barnett and others. From the judgment, the plaintiffs appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Samuel Mirman and Samuel Rubenstein, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank Karr, E. E. Morris, C. W. Cornell, O. O. Collins, and Randolph Karr, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

The respondents having filed their motion to dismiss the appeal in the above-entitled matter, supported by a certificate of the clerk of the Superior Court setting forth the facts required by Rule VI of this Court, and it appearing that all of the grounds stated in the motion are supported by said certificate and by the authorities cited.

It is hereby ordered that this appeal be, and it is, hereby dismissed.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 141

EHLEN et al. v. BURROWS.

Civ. 13122.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 6, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 1, 1942.

1. Pleading 🔑207

Where complaint showed that plaintiffs were relying upon four distinct causes of action, and all causes were set forth in one count, complaint was vulnerable to special demurrer on ground that the several causes of action were not separately stated.

2. Appeal and error 🔑672

The propriety of trial court's action in not permitting an amendment to complaint after demurrer thereto was sustained was properly before appellate court, where it appeared on face of record that objection to complaint could be cured by amendment. Code Civ.Proc. § 472c.

3. Limitation of actions 🔑31

Generally, an action by a patient against a physician for injury sustained by patient by reason of negligent treatment by physician is an "action sounding in tort" and not upon a "contract", and such an action is barred by statute one year after date of injury. Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 3.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Action Sounding in Tort" and "Action Upon Contract".

4. Limitation of actions 🔑55(3)

If a physician performs an operation in a negligent manner and continues thereafter to treat patient, the one-year statute of limitations on an action for malpractice does not commence to run during continuance of relationship of physician and patient, unless patient has discovered injury or through use of reasonable diligence should have discovered it. Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 3.

5. Limitation of actions 🔑95(1)

The one-year statute of limitations on a patient's action against a physician for malpractice does not run against patient's rights during the time that patient is in ignorance of cause of her disability and cannot with reasonable diligence ascertain such cause. Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3.

6. Limitation of actions 🔑55(3)

In patient's action against physician for negligent diagnosis and treatment and for unnecessarily removing patient's teeth, the one-year statute of limitations commenced to run when patient ceased to be a patient of physician. Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 3.

7. Assault and battery 🔑2

The unnecessary removal of a patient's teeth by a physician without patient's consent constitutes an "assault".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Assault".

8. Limitation of actions 🔑55(3)

A patient's cause of action against a physician for unnecessarily removing patient's teeth without patient's consent was barred by one-year statute of limitations where teeth were removed before August 2, 1939, and patient did not consult physician after that date, and complaint was not filed until January 18, 1941. Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3.

9. Limitation of actions 🔑95(1)

Where it did not appear on face of patient's complaint against physician for malpractice that patient discovered, or by reasonable diligence should have discovered, presence of broken roots of teeth in patient's mouth at a date more than one year prior to filing of complaint, a cause of action against physician for negligently leaving pieces of roots in mouth after removing teeth was not barred by one-year statute of limitations. Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by John H. Ehlen and another against Montrose T. Burrows for damages for malpractice. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part and case remanded with instructions.

Waldo & Waldo, of Pasadena, for appellants.

Crawford & Browne, of Pasadena, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff and her husband brought this action against defendant, a physician and surgeon, seeking damages for alleged malpractice. Defendant filed both a general and special demurrer, and as one of the causes of demurrer interposed the plea of the statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and from the judgment subsequently entered plaintiffs' appeal. The minute order does not indicate the ground upon which the demurrer was sustained, but it appears from the briefs that it was based upon the plea of the statute of limitations.

According to the allegations of the complaint, Mrs. Ehlen, herein referred to as plaintiff, was suffering from a fever and consulted defendant to discover the cause thereof and to be treated for its cure; defendant diagnosed the trouble as being caused by four teeth which contained extensive fillings, although the latter had caused plaintiff no pain; that upon defendant's advice plaintiff consented to the removal of these teeth, and while she was under the general anaesthetic he not only removed them by opening the gums from the side but also removed three other sound teeth, without the consent of plaintiff or her husband and without any necessity therefor in order to save her life or to meet an extreme emergency; that subsequently, although the fever continued, plaintiff with defendant's consent traveled to Orange County where she remained with relatives, and while there consulted with a local physician and surgeon who diagnosed her illness as undulent fever and sent her to a hospital for treatment therefor and also operated for the removal of her appendix; that thereafter plaintiff discovered pus seeping from her gums, and upon consulting a dentist the latter caused X-ray pictures to be taken, from which it appeared that two broken roots had been left in the jaw at the place where defendant had removed some of her teeth, and that later, as soon as it could be done safely, the dentist operated and removed the roots, which had decayed and caused ulceration and decay of the jaw-bone. All of these matters are set forth in one statement of a cause of action, and damages both general and special are alleged, both to plaintiff and to her husband, who is joined as plaintiff.

The various dates involved, so far as they appear from the complaint, are as follows: Plaintiff first consulted defendant on June 30, 1939; plaintiff left for Orange County on August 2, 1939, and did not consult defendant thereafter; the date of the operation by defendant does not appear, but it was of course prior to the latter date; the date upon which the Orange County physician diagnosed the illness as undulent fever was August 12, 1939; plaintiff discovered the pus seeping through her gums "during the month of January, 1940," and thereupon consulted a dentist, who had X-ray pictures taken "and diagnosed therefrom" the presence of the broken roots, and operated to remove them on February 21, 1940. The complaint, which was filed January 18, 1941, does not allege the date upon which discovery of the broken roots was made.

From an analysis of the complaint it appears that plaintiffs are relying upon four distinct causes of action, all set forth in one count, as the basis for the damages sought. These causes are as follows:

(1) For negligent and unskillful diagnosis and treatment, in that defendant failed to properly diagnose the illness as undulent fever, thereby allowing the disease to make inroads upon plaintiff's system during all of the time of defendant's treatment and until later properly diagnosed and treated by another.

(2) For removing any of plaintiff's teeth, which was entirely unnecessary and resulted from an erroneous diagnosis.

(3) For removing the three sound teeth without plaintiff's consent and without immediate necessity in the nature of an emergency.

(4) For negligence and lack of skill in the operation of removing plaintiff's teeth, in that defendant left pieces of root in the jaw and gums and sewed up the latter without removing all of such roots.

[1, 2] The complaint is clearly vulnerable to the special demurrer interposed, to the effect that the several causes of action are not separately stated, and it was proper for the trial court to sustain the demurrer upon this ground. It would, however, be unreasonable to refuse to allow an amendment if this were the only ground of demurrer. The propriety of the action of the trial court in not permitting an amendment is properly before this court on appeal, it appearing on the face of the record that the objection could be cured by amendment. Code Civ.Proc. § 472c.

[3, 4] It is the general rule that an action by a patient against a physician and surgeon for injuries sustained by the former by reason of negligent or unskillful treatment by the latter is an action sounding in tort and not upon a contract. Such an action is therefore barred by the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure one year after the date of the injury. However, there are certain recognized exceptions to this rule in California. Huysman v. Kirsch, 6 Cal.2d 302, 57 P.2d 908; Trombley v. Kolts, 29 Cal.App.2d 699, 85 P.2d 541; Petrucci v. Heidenreich, 43 Cal.App.2d 561, 111 P.2d 421, 422. One exception recognized by all three of these decisions is stated in the last cited case as follows: "That, if a physician and surgeon performs an operation in a negligent manner and continues thereafter to treat the patient, the Statute of Limitations does not commence to run during the continuance of the relationship of physician and patient, unless the patient has discovered the injury or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered it."

[5] In Trombley v. Kolts, supra [29 Cal.App.2d 699, 85 P.2d 546], which involved negligence upon the part of a surgeon in sewing up a wound and leaving a foreign object, viz., a skin clip, in the body, an additional exception is stated as follows: "Certainly the statute of limitations should not run against appellant's rights during the time she was in ignorance of the cause of her disability, and could not with reasonable care and diligence ascertain such cause * * *."

In Huysman v. Kirsch, supra [6 Cal. App.2d 302, 57 P.2d 913], the Supreme Court reviews a large number of cases, including cases arising under the Compensation Act, and states: "The principle running through all these authorities, and approved by our decision, was that the statute of limitations should not run against an injured employee's right to compensation during the time said person was in ignorance of the cause of his disability and could not with reasonable care and diligence ascertain such cause. If we apply this principle to the facts in the present action, the same results will follow as the appellants in this action had no knowledge of the presence of the drainage tube in the body of Mrs. Huysman until it was removed therefrom by the respondent on September 26, 1932."

Although it is true that under the facts in all three of these recent cases the first exception was sufficient to eliminate the statute of limitations, the second exception must also be considered as established in this state in cases where a foreign object has been left in the patient's body by a surgeon performing an operation.

[6-8] Applying these principles to the case under consideration, it appears that as to causes of action numbers (1) and (2), as set forth in the analysis hereinabove made, the statute began to run when plaintiff ceased to be a patient of defendant, and that such actions were therefore barred when the complaint was filed. As to cause number (3), the removal of the three sound teeth without consent, this has been held to constitute an assault. Valdez v. Percy, 35 Cal.App.2d 485, 96 P. 2d 142. However, it falls under the same section governing the limitation of actions; and in any event, the fact of the removal of these extra teeth must necessarily have been obvious to the plaintiff shortly after coming out from the influence of the anæsthetic. Therefore, this cause of action was also barred.

[9] As to cause of action number (4), there does not appear to be any difference in principle between leaving in the patient's body pieces of broken roots of teeth which the surgeon had undertaken to remove and a sponge or drainage tube which had served its purpose and should have been removed. As it does not appear on the face of the complaint that plaintiff discovered, or by the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the presence of the broken roots at a date more than one year prior to the filing of the complaint, the plea of the statute is not available to defendant by demurrer.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed as to causes of action hereinabove referred to as numbers (1), (2) and (3); and as to cause of action herein referred to as number (4), the judgment is reversed and the case is remanded with instructions to permit an amendment to the complaint, if plaintiffs are so advised, so as to cover only this last mentioned cause of action. Neither party to recover costs on appeal.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 133

PEOPLE v. HARKNESS.

Cr. No. 3545.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 6, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 4, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑1144(13)

On appeal evidence must be viewed in a light most favorable to prosecution.

2. Criminal law 🔑304(2)

Trial court sitting without jury was authorized to take judicial notice of fact that sunset on July 15 occurred at 7:05 p. m.

3. Criminal law 🔑564(1)

In prosecution for rape and for violations of sections 288 and 288a of Penal Code, evidence was sufficient to establish that offenses charged occurred in county of Los Angeles. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 288a.

4. Criminal law 🔑564(2)

Necessity of proof beyond reasonable doubt applies only to issue of guilt and not to venue of crimes.

5. Criminal law 🔑564(3)

Venue may be established by circumstantial evidence, and proof of venue is sufficient if the circumstances shown lead to a conclusion that the crime was committed in the county as charged.

6. Criminal law 🔑1159(4)

In prosecution for rape and for violations of sections 288 and 288a of Penal Code, testimony of prosecutrix, who was six-year-old child, was not so strictured by inconsistencies as to require it being disregarded in its entirety. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 288a.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas L. Ambrose, Judge.

George Harkness was convicted of rape and of violations of sections 288 and 288a of the Penal Code, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Gladys Towles Root and Eugene V. McPherson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

Through an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused in counts I and V of the crime of kidnaping; count II charged the offense of rape; counts III and VI alleged violations of section 288 of the Penal Code; and count IV charged a violation of section 288a of the same code. To each of the foregoing charges defendant entered a plea of not guilty and also interposed a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. Three prior felony convictions charged against him were ultimately admitted by the defendant. Trial before the court sitting without a jury resulted in the conviction of the defendant on the charges contained in counts II, III and IV. On the issue presented by the pleas of not guilty by reason of insanity, the court found that the defendant was sane at the time of the commission of the offenses as well as at the time of trial. In the offenses of which defendant was acquitted the prosecutrix was not the same child as the one involved in the counts upon which convictions resulted. This appeal is prosecuted by defendant from the judgments of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, as we are required to do following a conviction, the essential facts are: The victim of defendant's licentious conduct was a young girl six years of age, who lived with her mother, the latter of whom was employed during the evening and left for work on the date here in question at about five minutes after six o'clock, leaving her daughter in care of a housekeeper, Corrine Aseline. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Killion lived in a house located on the rear of the same lot where the prosecutrix resided. On July 15, 1941, defendant came to the Killion home about 9 or 9:30 in the morning. He was there when Mr. Killion left for work at approximately 11:30 o'clock the same morning, as he was when Mr. Killion returned from work at about 5 or 5:30 that afternoon. About that time defendant offered to go out and purchase some food if Mrs. Killion would cook it. At this time the prosecutrix came to the Killion house and stood in the doorway with her little dog. The defendant came down to the house from the garage, sat down at the table, and said to the child, "I will buy you an ice-cream cone," and patted her on the head. It was then 6:20 p. m. The girl and defendant thereupon departed. The Killions waited at their home until 7:30, but did not see the defendant again. The latter had been drinking, but was not drunk, being able to walk straight, talk coherently and without difficulty.

The child testified that she first saw the defendant at the Killion home after her mother had left for work; that the defendant told her he was going to get some hamburgers and vegetables, and invited her to come along, offering to buy her some ice cream; that she accepted the invitation and went with him. He drove to a store, where he told her he wanted to get the ice cream, but upon returning to the automobile stated that the store did not have any ice cream. Thereupon defendant and the child went for a ride to a restaurant to get a drink of Coca Cola. Thereafter they drove around for a time estimated by the child to be about ten minutes, when they parked. According to the testimony of the child, the particular spot where they parked was near some water, but not near or at the ocean. There were no houses around the spot, nor were any people present thereabouts. At the time the automobile stopped it was not quite dark. Defendant and the child got out of the automobile, whereupon the defendant had her remove her sunsuit and panties. At that time she requested him to take her home, but he asked her to wait for a while. She testified that she then tried to start for home, but defendant would not allow her. It was at this time that the three offenses occurred of which the defendant was found guilty. In view of the obscene nature and character of the defendant's assault upon the child we do not deem it necessary to here record the details of the offenses.

According to the child's testimony, she asked the defendant three times to take her home. After perpetrating the offenses charged against him, according to the testimony of the child, defendant drove her home, but let her out of the car approximately three houses from where she resided. Upon her arrival at her home the child was crying. The housekeeper immediately took her to the place where the mother was employed, and the matter was reported to the police. This was about 8:45 o'clock in the evening. The housekeeper testified that the child had asked to go outside about six o'clock and that approximately twenty minutes thereafter, when the housekeeper went out to search for her, the child was missing. She next saw her at 8:30 o'clock, lying on the couch crying. At the time she removed the child's garments the housekeeper noticed that the child's panties had blood on them at the crotch and that her sunsuit was very dirty and wet.

Dr. Etta Gray, examining physician from Juvenile Hall, made an examination of the child on July 17. Her findings are as follows: "A. I found a recent rupture of the hymen at the lower left side. The ruptured edges of the hymen bled readily when touched with an applicator. There was ecchymosis of the vulva and marked irritation. There was dilatation of the hymen.

"Q. From your examination you believe that the hymen was actually broken? A. It was." The doctor further testified that the vaginal canal had not been stretched and that in her opinion the male organ had not entered therein; that the rupture of the hymen could have been caused by a finger or fingernail.

Defendant was apprehended July 17th, and was questioned at the police station, at which time he stated that he went to visit the Killions and remained there all day; that about 6:15 o'clock in the evening

Mrs. Killion sent him to the store for some groceries, and when he left he took the girl with him, stopped at a Japanese market where he bought some vegetables, and then drove west on Imperial Boulevard to Hawthorne, where they had some ice cream. He further stated that he remained there about fifteen or twenty minutes, during which time he had a couple of intoxicating drinks; that he then left with the child in the automobile, and when he arrived near the child's home he let her out, because the child said, "Don't go in, my mother will scold you." According to his statement to the police, he then drove away without going in the house. He also stated that for some three weeks he had been drinking heavily and was not so sure as to what had happened. At a subsequent conversation the officers again questioned defendant, at which time he stated that he did remember the little girl crying, and that if she stated that he had done the things charged against him it must be so, and expressed a desire to enter a plea of guilty rather than have the child testify against him in court. He said, "I guess I did it, but I was drinking."

A police officer testified that he was familiar with the district in the vicinity of Hawthorne and around the route which defendant stated that he traveled with the prosecutrix. This officer testified that there were several bodies of water in that district and that one was located at El Segundo Boulevard west of Western Avenue about a quarter of a mile; that between El Segundo Boulevard and Imperial Highway, and between Crenshaw and Western, there were approximately fifteen such bodies of water, some of them with trees and weeds around them, and others without. All these bodies of water, it was testified, were situate in Los Angeles County.

The defendant produced a witness who operated a service station in the city of Los Angeles, who testified that about seven o'clock in the evening of July 15th the defendant was in his service station. He based the certainty of his testimony upon the fact that he had a dental appointment at eight o'clock that night and closed his station at 7:30. In connection with the testimony of this witness it was shown that he had previously been twice convicted of a felony. Further, it was shown by the records of the dentist that his appointment was at eight o'clock on July 16th and also on July 18th, but that he had no appointment for the 15th. This witness later took the stand and testified that he had been mistaken; that he actually saw the defendant on July 16th.

Taking the witness stand in his own behalf, defendant testified that on the evening in question he was at the home of the Killions; that he saw the prosecutrix standing in the yard, crying because her dog had been scratched by a cat; that he told her he was going to the store and would bring her some ice cream or candy, but Mrs. Killion admonished him not to do so, which admonition he heeded; that he left shortly after for the market, but did not take the child with him. He positively denied committing the offenses charged against him. He further testified that Mrs. Killion and he had been at the house all day, during which time he consumed the better part of three pints of whiskey; that when he left the house he went to a liquor store in an attempt to purchase additional whiskey, but did not have the money therefor; that he then went to San Pedro. He denied telling police officers of the various routes he took in the vicinity of Hawthorne. Although defendant testified as to the names and addresses of people whom he claimed to have visited on the night of July 15th, he did not produce any of these people as witnesses. With reference to his conversation with the police officers as testified to by the latter, defendant in his testimony stated that he did not talk with them, and in fact had told them that he could not converse with them because he was too ill.

[2-4] It is first contended by appellant that the evidence touching upon the question of venue "lacks affirmative proof that the crime, if any, was committed in Los Angeles County." Briefly, the facts testified to in reference to venue are that at 6:20 p. m., July 15th, the prosecutrix was taken by defendant from 99th and Avalon Streets and returned to that place at 8:30, a period of approximately two hours and ten minutes. According to the testimony of the child, they drove for a short time, estimated by her to be about ten minutes, to a market of some sort to get ice cream. They remained there for about ten minutes. They then drove for a few minutes to a restaurant for some Coca Cola and remained there about ten minutes, after which they proceeded down the highway on to a dirt road near some water ponds, where there were trees and weeds. The drive from the restaurant to the scene of the offenses consumed about ten minutes. According to the testimony of the child, at the time the crimes were being committed, it was still a little bit light. The court was authorized to take judicial notice of the fact that sunset occurred at 7:05 p. m., all of which circumstances point to the fact that the statement of the prosecutrix with reference to the passage of time from when she first got in the automobile until the offenses were committed is accurate. As heretofore pointed out, it was shown by the testimony of a police officer that in the vicinity of Hawthorne, which is located in Los Angeles County, there were numerous places where there were small bodies of water surrounded to some extent by both trees and weeds. It was also shown by the testimony that the nearest point in a county outside Los Angeles would be Seal Beach in Orange County, a distance of 25 or 30 miles. Strongly supporting the testimony of the child that the locus delicti was in Los Angeles County was the testimony of the defendant, who, although denying commission of the crimes, nevertheless testified as to where he had been on the evening in question, and according to his own testimony, he never left the county of Los Angeles. Under this state of the evidence, the court was justified in drawing the conclusion that the offenses charged occurred in the county of Los Angeles. As was said by this court in People v. Carter, 10 Cal.App.2d 387, 52 P.2d 294, 295, "The state gives no assurance to its feloniously insubordinate citizens that the venue of their crimes will be fixed beyond a reasonable doubt; that doctrine applies only to the issue of guilt. People v. McGill, [10 Cal.App.2d 155, at page 159], 51 P.2d 433; Underhill on Criminal Evidence, vol. I, § 36, p. 45. The defendant and appellant, therefore, is in no position to complain because the location of the offense was not established to a degree of certainty more to his liking."

[5] Venue, like any other fact in a criminal case, may also be established by circumstantial evidence, and proof of venue is sufficient if the circumstances shown in evidence lead to a conclusion that the crime was committed in the county as charged. People v. Peete, 54 Cal.App. 333, 361, 202 P. 51; People v. Hill, 2 Cal.App.2d 141, 150, 37 P.2d 849. Instead of indicating that the defendant was in any county other than Los Angeles, the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the testimony is that he never left that county.

[6] Appellant does not contend that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgments of conviction, nor is it asserted that the testimony is so inherently improbable as to challenge belief by reasonable people; but appellant points out what he terms "glaring inconsistencies" in the testimony given by the prosecuting witness. We have read the testimony of the prosecutrix, and we find therein nothing that would empower a reviewing court to conclude that such testimony is strictured by inconsistencies that would require the trial judge to disregard it in its entirety. This is especially true in the testimony of the child as to the immediate circumstances surrounding the cruel assaults made upon her. This alone would justify the trier of facts in concluding that the crimes charged were committed, however weak in places the testimony of the child witness may have been made to appear. Much of what we said in regard to a similar claim made by the appellant in People v. Roberts, 50 Cal.App.2d 558, 123 P.2d 628, is applicable here, and reference thereto is made for an exposition of our views concerning the power of an appellate tribunal to disturb the findings of a trial judge or jury on the ground that such findings are barren of sufficient evidence to support them because of claimed inconsistencies in the testimony. Furthermore in the instant case it should be pointed out that there are certain proven facts and circumstances strongly tending to corroborate the testimony of the child. For instance, she and appellant were seen together on the evening in question; they left for the store to get some ice cream for the girl and supposedly to purchase some foodstuffs which were to be prepared by Mrs. Killion. However, appellant did not return to the Killion home as he had promised, but did come back into the neighborhood about 8:30 o'clock, when he let the child out of his automobile. After leaving appellant and going into her home, the prosecutrix was crying and immediately made complaint, as well as a complete disclosure of what had transpired. There was also the testimony of the Juvenile Hall physician and the condition of the child's undergarments, all corroborative of the verity of the testimony given by the prosecutrix.

For the reasons herein stated, the judgments and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 856

DUVALL v. FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF VAN NUYS.

Civ. 13513.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 25, 1942.

Appeal and error 🔑801(1)

Motion to dismiss appeal, supported by certificate of clerk setting forth facts required by Court rule, was granted where grounds stated in motion were supported by certificate and by authorities cited. Rules of District Court of Appeal, rule VI.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Suit by Cora L. Williams Duvall against the First Baptist Church of Van Nuys. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Henry Walleck, of Van Nuys, for appellant.

Hitchcock, Cook & Obegi, of Van Nuys, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The respondent having filed its motion to dismiss the appeal in the above entitled matter, supported by a certificate of the clerk of the Superior Court setting forth the facts required by rule VI of this court, and it appearing that all of the grounds stated in the motion are supported by said certificate and by the authorities cited,

It is hereby ordered that this appeal be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 11

HUNT et al. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al.

Civ. 13197.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 31, 1942.

1. New trial 🔑6

The granting or refusing of motion for new trial is largely within trial court's discretion.

2. Appeal and error 🔑979(2)

A reviewing court has no power to interfere with the trial court's determination of motion for new trial, unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears or there is no substantial conflict in the testimony on material issues, and the evidence, as a whole, is insufficient as a matter of law to support a verdict for the moving party.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1046(5)

Action of trial court in granting a new trial could not be impeached because of remarks on defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff that trial court felt that all matters were properly submitted to jury, and that there was evidence sufficient to serve as a finding for verdict for plaintiff. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

4. New trial 🔑71

Where record in death action disclosed sharp conflict in testimony as to manner in which fatal accident occurred, no abuse of discretion was shown in granting defendants' motion for new trial.

5. New trial 🔑71

Where there was evidence that passenger, after alighting from bus, fell under bus as it was starting up, instead of being struck by bus as contended by passenger's heirs seeking recovery from company operating bus, for his death, and evidence that passenger was unsteady on his feet and had been drinking whisky, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting company a new trial after verdict for plaintiffs.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis Howell Smith, Judge.

Action by Mittie B. Hunt and another against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and others to recover damages for the death of Robert S. Hunt, deceased. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs. From an order granting defendants a new trial, plaintiffs appeal.

Order affirmed.

John C. Miles, Lee J. Myers, and Harold Breacher, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank Karr, C. W. Cornell, and O. O. Collins, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JESS E. STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

Action by the mother and sister of Robert S. Hunt to recover damages by reason of the death of the latter, which plaintiffs allege was caused by defendants in the operation of a motor coach. The answer denies negligence and sets up contributory negligence as an affirmative defense. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs and assessed the damages at $20,000.

Defendants thereafter made a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and this motion was denied. Defendants then moved for a new trial, and in their notice of motion specified all of the statutory grounds as set forth in section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This motion was granted, and in its order the court adjudged "that the motion of the defendants * * * for a new trial in the above entitled action be and the same is hereby granted, and the court further specifies that one of the grounds upon which said motion is so granted is the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict heretofore rendered in said action."

Decedent Robert S. Hunt was a passenger on a bus belonging to defendants, and alighted therefrom onto the sidewalk at a regular bus stop a short distance from a street intersection. The driver testified that he then started the bus and moved up to the pedestrian lane and, upon the green signal light appearing, continued and was in process of making a right-hand turn into the intersecting street when in his mirror he saw decedent lying in the street. Until then he did not know there had been an accident. Only two other witnesses testified as to how the accident happened. A newsboy, called by plaintiffs, testified that he was on the corner across the street; that he saw the front end of the bus strike decedent and knock him down and that thereafter his view was obstructed by other traffic. A motorist called by defendants testified that he was driving in the rear of the bus but in the adjoining lane; that he saw decedent walking along the sidewalk after alighting from the bus; that he appeared unsteady on his feet, and just as the bus started up he slipped and fell under it, the rear right wheel passing over him. Two police officers called by defendants testified that they talked to Mr. Hunt at the receiving hospital, that his breath was alcoholic and that they found a bottle of whiskey, partly consumed, in his pocket. The hospital surgeon also testified that the victim's breath was heavy with alcohol.

[1-5] The law is thoroughly settled that the matter of granting or refusing to grant a motion for new trial is largely within the discretion of the trial court. In the case of Malloway v. Hughes, 125 Cal.App. 573, 13 P.2d 1062, 1065, the subject is discussed and many cases reviewed. It is there said that "under the law as thus declared it is beyond the power of the reviewing court to interfere with the determination of the trial court unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears * * * or there is no substantial conflict in the testimony on material issues and the evidence as a whole is insufficient as a matter of law to support a verdict in favor of the moving party." Appellants in their brief contend that there was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge, and quote at some length from his remarks made at the time of passing upon the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, in which he is quoted as saying, among other things, that "I feel the matter submitted to the jury and all of those matters were properly submitted to the jury and that there was evidence sufficient to serve as a finding for the verdict which has been just returned by the jury." Whatever may have been the remarks or the views of the court on that occasion, he subsequently conducted a hearing upon the motion for new trial and became convinced that the motion should be granted. This action cannot now be impeached by any remarks made previously by the court during progress of the trial. Lucerne Country Club v. Beal, 21 Cal.App.2d 121, 123, 68 P.2d 408. The record discloses sharp conflict in the testimony as to the manner in which the accident occurred and no abuse of discretion is shown in the granting of the motion for new trial.

Other matters are discussed by counsel, involving a nunc pro tunc order made by the court subsequent to the appeal correcting the minute order made at the time of granting the motion. The effect of such correction was to include the other grounds of the motion as well as insufficiency of the evidence. However, the actual order signed by the court, as well as the original and corrected minutes, specified insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. As already indicated, the action of the trial court must be sustained upon this ground, without invoking the others included in the order and discussed in the briefs.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 95

BENTLEY v. MOUNTAIN et al.

Civ. 11979.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 2, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 2, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Contracts 🔑215(1)

Contracts between union and beauty shop owners terminable at will could be terminated by shop owners at any time without violating any terms of contracts.

2. Injunction 🔑118(3)

In action on behalf of union members to enjoin violations of contracts between union and beauty shop owners and for damages, allegations that defendants violated contracts or caused violation thereof by others were mere "conclusions of law" which could not strengthen complaint in absence of allegation of fact showing violations.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion of Law".

3. Injunction 🔑118(3)

In action on behalf of union members for injunctive relief and damages, complaint disclosing that defendants had not violated or induced others to violate any alleged contract between union and beauty shop owners, but had at most terminated and induced others to terminate certain contracts which were terminable at will, failed to state cause of action.

4. Master and servant 🔑16

Though it is the policy of the law to protect employees' right of collective bargaining, nothing in the law denies to either employers or employees the right of lawful collective action.

5. Conspiracy 🔑1

Conspiracy in and of itself is not actionable.

6. Conspiracy 🔑18

In action on behalf of union members for injunctive relief and damages, amended complaint, alleging that defendants entered into a conspiracy to violate contracts between union and beauty shop owners and to induce other owners to violate similar contracts, was demurrable in absence of allegations of fact showing that any of defendants' acts violated any right of plaintiff or union.

7. Injunction 🔑118(3)

A complaint, alleging that defendants picked up, took away, absconded with, and converted to their own use union beauty shop cards, did not show a violation of any contractual right of union or member seeking injunction and damages, where alleged contracts between union and shop owners required return of cards on demand, and it did not appear that cards were removed without consent of shop owners or that defendants refused to deliver cards on demand.

8. Trover and conversion 🔑2

An action for "conversion" lies only where tangible personalty of some value has been taken.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conversion".

9. Trover and conversion 🔑32(2)

A union member's amended complaint, alleging that defendants picked up, took away, absconded with, and converted to their own use union beauty shop cards, was insufficient to state a cause of action for "conversion" irrespective of alleged contractual rights between union and beauty shop owners in absence of allegation that cards, as such, had any value.

10. Action ⚷6

In action on behalf of union members for injunctive relief and damages, amended complaint, disclosing that defendants had not violated or induced violation of any contract between union and beauty shop owners but had at most terminated and induced others to terminate contracts which were terminable at will, showed that a "labor controversy" existed but did not disclose any "justiciable controversy" entitling plaintiff to relief. St.1937, p. 208, § 923.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Justiciable Controversy" and "Labor Controversy".

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Beverly Bentley, individually and as a member and as president of Hairdressers and Cosmetology Union No. 582A, affiliated with Journeymen Barbers' International Union of America, on behalf of herself and all other members of Hairdressers and Cosmetology Union No. 582A, against John Mountain and others for an injunction and damages. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Clarence E. Todd and Henry C. Todd, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sefton & Quattrin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff filed an amended complaint seeking an injunction and damages. The demurrer of defendants to said amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend and judgment was entered in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appeals from said judgment.

Plaintiff purported to sue "individually and as a member and as president of Hairdressers and Cosmetology Union No. 582A, affiliated with Journeymen Barbers' International Union of America, on behalf of herself and all other members of Hairdressers and Cosmetology Union No. 582 A." Her original complaint consisted of one count. Her amended complaint consisted of five counts. Said union was alleged to have jurisdiction "over all hairdressers, cosmetologists and beauticians within the County of Marin, State of California." The defendants were alleged to be persons who owned and maintained beauty shops within said county.

The amended complaint was a lengthy instrument but the theory of said amended complaint may be briefly stated. It was drawn upon the theory that said union had contracts with the defendants; that defendants entered into a conspiracy to violate said contracts and to induce other beauty shop-owners to violate similar contracts; and that as the result of the actions of defendants in pursuance of said conspiracy the contracts of defendants and others had been violated to the damage of "plaintiffs." Plaintiff prayed for an injunction prohibiting defendants from violating or causing the violation of any contract between the union and any beauty shop-owner in Marin County and for damages in the sum of $5,000. Defendants interposed a general and special demurrer to said complaint. The trial court "ordered, adjudged and decreed that defendants' general demurrer to said first amended complaint and the separate causes of action therein alleged, be sustained without leave to amend the same, and that defendants have judgment * * *."

Plaintiff contends that the trial court erred in sustaining the general demurrer but in our opinion this contention cannot be sustained. The alleged contracts referred to in the amended complaint were evidenced by exhibits attached to the amended complaint. The exhibits were designated as "Exhibit A" and "Exhibit B." It was alleged in the amended complaint that prior to August 7, 1940, defendants had entered into agreements in the form set out in "Exhibit B" and had received union beauty shop-cards and had displayed the same in their shops. The "Union Beauty Shop Card," together with the "Rules Governing Union Beauty Shop Cards," found on the back thereof, constituted "Exhibit A."

When "Exhibit B" is examined it is found to be a form entitled "Agreement Governing Display of Union Beauty Shop Cards." It is designed for execution by the shop-owner only and it provides that the shop-owner agrees, in consideration of being allowed to display the union beauty shop-card, to comply with the rules on the back of said card; that the card shall remain the property of the union; and that the shop-owner will permit the removal of said card by a representative of the union upon demand. When "Exhibit A" is examined, it is found to be a form entitled "Union Beauty Shop," with the seal of the union thereon and a statement that the card is the property of the union and is issued subject to the conditions set forth on the back thereof. On the back hereof are found the general rules governing union beauty shop-cards.

While it was alleged in the amended complaint that defendants executed said agreements in the form set out in "Exhibit B," it appears entirely clear from an examination of the two related exhibits that the alleged agreement did not obligate the shop-owners to do anything further than to do certain things during the time that they displayed the union shop-cards and to give up the cards to the representative of the union upon demand. In other words, there was no obligation imposed upon the shop-owner to conduct a union shop for any specified period of time.

[1-3] Assuming that the allegations of the amended complaint were sufficient to show that valid contracts existed between the union and the shop-owners, said contracts were contracts terminable at will and could therefore be terminated by the shop-owners at any time without violating any of the terms of said contracts. Adkins v. Model Laundry Co., 92 Cal.App. 575, 581, 268 P. 939; Williston on Contracts, vol. 1, p. 59, sec. 38. The allegations of the amended complaint to the effect that defendants "violated" said contracts, or "caused the violation" of said contracts by others, are mere conclusions of law which cannot strengthen the pleading in the absence of allegations of fact showing such violations. We find no such allegations of fact in said amended complaint. On the contrary, it affirmatively appears from the allegations of fact in said amended complaint that defendants had not violated or induced others to violate any alleged contract with the union but at most, had merely terminated and induced others to terminate certain contracts which were terminable at will.

Plaintiff takes the position that although said contracts were terminable at will, plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to the relief demanded. In support of this position, plaintiff cites and relies upon Patterson Glass Co. v. Thomas, 41 Cal.App. 559, 183 P. 190. Said case is not authority for the proposition for which it is cited. On page 566 of 41 Cal.App., on page 193 of 183 P., the court, after setting forth the terms of the contract of employment between the employer and the employees, said: "We do not believe that the section of the Civil Code [Civ.Code, sec. 1999] relied upon should be given a construction which would justify a court of equity in holding that these employés were working 'at will,' i. e., that they could quit work without notice and without paying plaintiff its money advances." And on page 568 of 41 Cal.App., on page 194 of 183 P., after discussing certain cases dealing with contracts of employment without specification as to the duration thereof, it is said: "We do not think it necessary in the present case to follow these cases in their view as to engagement 'at will,' * * *." In the concurring opinion, it is said at page 570 of 41 Cal.App., at page 195 of 183 P.: "I may add that, in my opinion, the situation does not call for a discussion of the rule applicable to instances of employment at will." Furthermore the cited case and the other cases discussed therein involved contracts of employment between the employers and their employees. As appears from the authorities discussed on page 569 of 41 Cal.App., on page 194 of 183 P., the decisions were based upon the then established rule that "The right of a master to have his servant continue in his employ without molestation * * * is a recognized property right" and "that no person has a right to entice away another's servant." In the present case, the only contracts involved are alleged contracts, terminable at will, between the union, on the one hand, and the shop-owners, on the other hand. This fact also distinguishes the present case from certain authorities cited by plaintiff such as Imperial Ice Co. v. Rossier, 18 Cal.2d 33, 112 P.2d 631, involving contracts which were not terminable at will.

[4] Much is said in plaintiff's briefs to the effect that the employees had the right of collective bargaining and that it is the policy of the law to protect such right. This may be conceded but we find nothing in the law which denies to either the employers or the employees the right of lawful collective action. As we view the amended complaint, it shows no more than that the shop-owners were exercising their right of lawful collective action.

[5, 6] Special mention should be made of certain allegations found in said amended complaint. Plaintiff alleged a "conspiracy" between defendants but conspira cy, in and of itself, is not actionable. In Richmond Terminal Corp. v. Parr Terminal Co., 116 Cal.App. 368, 2 P.2d 579, the complaint alleged that defendants had conspired to do certain acts. This court there said at page 369 of 116 Cal.App., at page 579 of 2 P.2d, "Such allegations are insufficient unless it appears that some right of plaintiff has been violated by some alleged wrongful act or acts of defendants for 'conspiracy cannot be made the subject of a civil action unless something is done which, without the conspiracy, would give a right of action.'" See, also, Bowman v. Wohlke, 166 Cal. 121, 125, 135 P. 37, Ann. Cas.1915B, 1011; Moropoulus v. C. H. & O. B. Fuller Co., 186 Cal. 679, 200 P. 601. As above indicated there are no allegations of fact in the amended complaint before us which show that any of the acts of the defendants violated any right of plaintiff or the union.

[7-9] There is also an allegation in the amended complaint that on or about August 8, 1940, defendants "through the instrumentality of defendant Lola Blake, picked up, took away, absconded with and converted to their own use the shop-cards," from certain shops of defendants and other shop-owners. It does not appear, however, that the alleged acts of defendants in removing the shop-cards from the various shops was done without the consent of the shop-owners or that defendants refused to deliver said shop-cards to plaintiff or to any other representative of the union upon demand. These acts did not therefore constitute a violation of any right of plaintiff or the union under the alleged contracts as the only right of the union against the shop-owners under the contract with respect to return of the shop-cards was to have said shop-cards returned upon demand. Nor was said amended complaint sufficient to state a cause of action for conversion of the shop-cards, irrespective of the alleged contractual rights, as such action is confined to cases where tangible personal property of some value is taken. 65 Corp.Jur. 28. It was not alleged that said shop-cards, as such, had any value.

In counts two, three and four of the amended complaint, plaintiff repeats certain allegations of count one and sets forth allegations tending to show that the union had certain additional contracts with certain shop-owners specifically covering wages, hours and working conditions. But at no place in the amended complaint is it alleged that any contract with any shop-owner was for any specified period of time or that any alleged contract was not terminable at the will of the shop-owner. In count five of said amended complaint, plaintiff repeats certain allegations of count one, quotes section 923 of the Labor Code, St.1937, p. 208, and complains that defendants have refused to negotiate a contract with the union but we find nothing in said count which strengthens the allegations of count one which are repeated in said count.

[10] In conclusion we may state that while it appears from the allegations of the amended complaint that a labor controversy exists, it does not appear that any justiciable controversy has arisen in which plaintiff is entitled to the aid of the courts. Plaintiff has simply failed to allege facts showing a violation by defendants of any right of plaintiff or of the union. We therefore conclude that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer.

In view of the conclusions above set forth, it becomes unnecessary to consider the other points raised by defendants in support of the action of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 39

In re SUMMERS' ESTATE.

TREADWELL v. WOODS.

Civ. 11950.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

April 1, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Adoption 🔑1

Adoption was unknown to the common law and exists as a pure creation of statute.

2. Adoption 🔑1

In order to effect an adoption, there must be a substantial compliance with all of the essential requirements of statutes under which right of adoption is claimed.

3. Adoption ⚷1
Statutes ⚷205

In determining what provisions of adoption law effective in 1881 were mandatory, the statute should receive a sensible construction and its intention ascertained not from the literal meaning of any particular word or single section, but from a consideration of the entire statute, its spirit and purpose. Civ.Code, §§ 222–227.

4. Adoption ⚷1

The adoption of a child under statutes in effect in 1881 was essentially a matter of contract between the parties whose consent was required, although the sanction of a judicial officer was required. Civ.Code, §§ 222–227.

5. Adoption ⚷13

Under statutes in effect in 1881, adoption could not be approved until court had satisfied itself that person adopting was ten years older than the child, that all parties whose consent was required consented fully and freely, and that adoption would be for the best interest of the child adopted. Civ. Code, §§ 222–227.

6. Adoption ⚷17

Uncontradicted testimony was sufficient to establish adoption under statute in effect in 1881 where the record of adoption, if any, had been destroyed in San Francisco fire of 1906. Civ.Code, §§ 222–227.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John D. Murphey, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of C. F. Summers, deceased, wherein four separate petitions for letters of administration were filed. From an order granting the petition of Charlie Y. Woods and denying the other petitions, including that filed by James L. Treadwell, the latter appeals.

Order affirmed.

John J. Taaffe and Joseph C. Haughey, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. A. Kennedy, Raymond Salisbury, and Joseph C. Prior, all of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Calvin F. Summers died intestate on March 7, 1939, at the age of about 85 years, leaving an estate of considerable value, consisting chiefly of a bank deposit and mining property. He was a widower, and was not survived by any children, brothers or sisters. Four separate petitions for letters of administration were filed; one by Charlie Y. Woods, claiming to be the decedent's grandson, and another by James L. Treadwell, who was admittedly a grandnephew. The probate court granted Woods' petition and denied the others; and Treadwell alone has appealed. It is conceded that by virtue of section 422 of the Probate Code a grandson's right to administer an estate is prior to that of a grandnephew; but whether or not Woods was a grandson depended upon the determination of the question of whether, as claimed by him, his mother, Bertha Lois Summers, was the legally adopted daughter of the decedent. In this regard respondent claimed that the adoption proceeding took place in the superior court in and for the City and County of San Francisco about the year 1881; and at the hearing of the present proceeding it was stipulated that if any records of such adoption proceeding ever existed they were destroyed in the San Francisco fire of 1906. The probate court found in favor of the respondent on the adoption issue, and appellant attacks the finding upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to sustain said finding.

In order to pass upon the correctness of the probate court's finding it becomes necessary to consider the evidence adduced at the hearing relating to the family history and the background of the parties. It appears therefrom that Isabel Mather Henderson and John Wilson Henderson, husband and wife, had two children, Bertha Lois (respondent's mother) and Isabel (known generally as "Belle"). In 1875 Mrs. Henderson obtained a divorce from her husband on the ground of extreme cruelty, and was awarded the custody of the children, who were then 4 and 8 years of age respectively. The children, however, remained living with their father, and Mrs. Henderson, who was then in her early thirties, took a position as governess for the children of Mrs. Mabel Summers Treadwell, wife of James Parker Treadwell Sr. and sister of Calvin F. Summers. Calvin at that time was about 19 years old, and lived with his sister at 16 Shephard Place, San Francisco. In 1877 he and Mrs. Isabel Henderson were married, and continued to live with Calvin's sister at 16 Shephard Place. In 1881 Bertha Lois and Belle, the Henderson childdren, went to live with their mother and Calvin Summers, and it was during that year that it is claimed the court proceedings took place whereby Calvin F. Summers legally adopted Bertha Lois.

Belle did not get along well with Summers, and a short time after the adoption of Bertha Lois, Belle went back to live with her father. Bertha Lois continued to live with Summers and her mother until about 1888, part of the time on Haight Street. She attended the College of Holy Names in Oakland during 1887, using the name "Lois Somers." (The name Summers was sometimes spelled Sumers and also Somers.) In 1893 Bertha Lois bore an illegitimate daughter, who died in 1934, leaving surviving her two daughters who were named as heirs of Calvin F. Summers in respondent's petition. Also in 1893 Bertha Lois married Albert S. Woods. They had two children, the respondent Charlie Y. Woods and his brother Eugene (Gene) B. Woods. Bertha Lois divorced Woods in 1911 and subsequently married Charles Howard, but had no children by him; and she died in 1927.

The main evidence relating to the adoption proceeding and the circumstances attending it consisted of the testimony given by Belle Henderson, the surviving sister of respondent's mother, Bertha Lois. At the time of the hearing of the present proceeding Belle (or Isabel) Henderson was married, and upon being sworn as a witness gave the name "Isabel Bryan." She testified that she was present in court at the time the adoption took place. In this regard she stated, in part, that about 1881 she and her sister Bertha Lois went to live with Summers and their mother at 16 Shephard Place in San Francisco—they had been living with their father up to that time; that in the presence of her sister, her mother and herself Summers said he wished to adopt her sister, that she was a very bright girl and he would be able to give her advantages that her father could not; that at that time the witness was between 12 and 13 years old, and her sister between 8 and 9. Continuing, she testified that about a month after the above discussion Summers, his wife and the two girls "went to the court out in the City Hall" and went into the courtroom and sat down, and her mother was introduced to the judge, Judge Halsey; that her mother and Summers were sworn to tell the truth, and Summers handed the judge some papers and said this was the little girl he wished to adopt; that the judge read the papers, and then asked her mother if she was willing for Summers to adopt the child and she said yes; that her mother and Summers then signed the paper, after which the judge wrote something on the paper himself; that then the judge said to Bertha, "Bertha, now you have a new father" and he hoped she would be very happy in her new surroundings. Continuing her narrative, Mrs. Bryan testified that she remained with her mother and Summers for about a year; but that Summers was not kind to her, so she told him she was going back to her father, and he replied, "Go ahead, but your sister can't go, she belongs to me. I have adopted her"; that after she went back to live with her father, Bertha's adoption was discussed many times, and that her father was quite hurt that Bertha had chosen to live with Summers. She also testified that after the court proceedings her sister used the name Lois Summers and never again used the name Henderson, and that she continued to live with Summers "till she was grown." She also testified that she had a copy of the divorce decree between her mother and her father up to 1939; that she knew from that document that they were divorced in San Francisco; that the grounds were extreme cruelty, and that the custody of the two children was given to the mother.

Considerable corroborative testimony was introduced. In part it consisted of the following: Albert S. Woods, husband of Bertha Lois and father of respondent, testified that Henderson, his wife's natural father, told him Bertha Lois had been adopted by Summers; and he testified that sometime prior to their marriage he and Bertha met Summers on Kearney Street and Bertha said, "There comes my father," and introduced Summers as her father; that about a week or two prior to their marriage he had a conversation with Summers; that Bertha told Summers they were going to get married and Summers inquired if Woods was working and what his salary was; that Summers said, "Well, now, she is my daughter, I adopted this girl, I am interested in her and I want you to take good care of her * * *." Furthermore, various other witnesses testified to admissions made in their presence, by Summers and Bertha Lois' mother, that Summers had adopted Bertha Lois as his child; and the registration books of the convent she attended in 1887–8 were introduced in evidence, showing she was registered there under the name "Lois Somers." There was no contradictory testimony introduced in behalf of appellant, nor on this appeal does he challenge the truth of any of the statements made by any of respondent's witnesses.

The sections of the Civil Code effective at the time it is claimed the adoption proceedings herein took place provided that the person adopting must be at least 10 years older than the person adopted (sec. 222); that a married man not lawfully separated from his wife cannot adopt a child without the consent of his wife (sec. 223); that a legitimate child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents, if living, except that the consent is not necessary from a father adjudged guilty of cruelty and for that cause divorced (sec. 224); that the consent of a child if over the age of 12 years is necessary to its adoption (sec. 225); that the person adopting and the child adopted and the other persons, if within or residents of this state, whose consent is necessary, must appear before the judge of the superior court of the county wherein the person adopting resides and the necessary consent must thereupon be signed and the agreement be executed by the person adopting, to the effect that the child shall be adopted and treated in all respects as his own lawful child should be treated (sec. 226); that the judge must examine all persons appearing before him separately and if satisfied that the interests of the child will be promoted by the adoption, he shall make the order accordingly (sec. 227).

[1-5] In the Estate of Johnson, 98 Cal. 531, 33 P. 460, 461, 21 L.R.A. 380, the Supreme Court had occasion to review the foregoing code sections, and in doing so it said in part: "The right of one person to legally adopt the offspring of another, and thus to create between the person adopting and the child adopted the relation of parent and child, giving to the child all the rights and subjecting it to all the duties of that relation, was unknown to the common law, and exists in this state as a pure creation of statute law; and, in order to effect such adoption, it is necessary that there should be a substantial compliance with all of the essential requirements of the law under which the right is claimed; but, in determining what provisions of the law are essential, and therefore mandatory, the statute is to receive a sensible construction, and its intention is to be ascertained, not from the literal meaning of any particular word or single section, but from a consideration of the entire statute, its spirit and purpose." And later on the court said: "The adoption of a child under the section[s] of the Civil Code above cited is not a judicial proceeding (In re [Estate of] Stevens, 83 Cal. 322, 23 P. 379 [17 Am.St. Rep. 252]), although the sanction of a judicial officer is required for its consummation. The proceeding is essentially one of contract between the parties whose consent is required. It is a contract of a very solemn nature, and for this reason the law has wisely thrown around its creation certain safeguards, by requiring, not only that it shall be entered into in the presence of a judge, but also that it shall receive his sanction, which is not to be given until he has satisfied himself of these three things: First, that the person adopting is 10 years older than the child; second, that all the parties whose consent is required do consent, fully and freely, to the making of such contract; third, that the adoption contemplated by the contract will be for the best interest of the child adopted."

[6] In the present case the probate court accepted as true all of the testimony given by Mrs. Bryan; and it is our conclusion that it was justified in finding therefrom that all necessary jurisdictional and statutory requirements to establish a valid adoption had been satisfied. Summarized, the undisputed facts appearing therefrom are that the child was less than 12 years of age, and that Summers was more than 10 years older than the child; that the consent of the natural father of the child was not essential because of the decree of divorce; that the sole purpose in going before the judge of the court was to accomplish the act of adoption; that Summers and his wife were sworn as witnesses; that they were examined separately, and that consent to the adoption was fully given by Summers and his wife (the natural mother of the child); that Summers handed the judge some papers which were read by the judge and signed by Summers and his wife, and that thereafter the judge wrote something on the paper himself; whereupon the judge stated to Bertha, "* * * now you have a new father"; and bearing in mind the nature of the requirements of said sections 226 and 227, the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence is that the paper Summers handed to the judge and which Summers and his wife signed was the agreement to adopt, and that the paper signed by the judge was the order of adoption.

Appellant contends in effect, however, that in a case such as this where it is claimed that the record of the adoption has been destroyed, the fact of the adoption can be legally established only as provided by section 1855 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is, either by the production of a copy of the original record, or by the testimony of one who has actually read the documents constituting the adoption record and can relate the substance of their contents by virtue of having read them; and in support of such contention he relies mainly upon the Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 177 P. 283, 288. While a portion of the opinion therein was devoted to a discussion of the failure to produce any witness who had actually read the adoption papers which the appellant therein claimed had been destroyed by the San Francisco fire of 1906, an examination of the entire decision discloses that there were additional grounds upon which the court largely based its conclusion that no adoption had been established. One was a fatal defect in the proof in that there was a failure to prove the jurisdictional requirements demanded by sections 225 and 223. In this regard the court said: "The appellant admitted that he was over 12 years of age at the time, and he did not testify that he signed a consent to the adoption and produced no evidence to that effect. The wife of the decedent was capable of consenting, was not separated from her husband, was then in California, and she did not sign a consent thereto. It follows that even if the judge did make an order, as claimed, it was wholly void." There are no such defects in the proof in the present case. Another ground was that the evidence affirmatively established that the child was not supported by the alleged adopting parent nor treated as his own child. On this point the court said: "The appellant was kept in a boarding school for about four years thereafter and supported for some six months longer in Arizona, where he was sent because he was afflicted with tuberculosis. The appellant contends that his expenses during all this period were paid by the decedent. But the evidence is almost conclusive that the expenses were paid out of the funds belonging to the Sharon trust above mentioned, and charged to all the beneficiaries. At all events, it comes far short of proving that the decedent, after the alleged adoption, regarded and treated the appellant as his own child should have been treated. He did not treat him as he treated his own child, then living. He never took the appellant into his family, nor associated with him in any way, and in fact he never thereafter spoke to the appellant or communicated with him in any manner whatever. As corroboration of the fact of a valid adoption, the evidence could not well have been weaker without being absolutely immaterial and irrelevant." Here the evidence shows without dispute that the child was supported by the adopting parent and treated as his own child. Since, therefore, the two cases are essentially different in the matter of proof, we do not deem the decision in the Estate of Sharon as here controlling.

Appellant also emphasizes the Estate of McCombs, 174 Cal. 211, 162 P. 897, but there the probate court found against the claimant on the determinative question of fact and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the finding. Stated more precisely, the determinative question of fact there was whether in conformity with the law of the state of New York in force in 1887 a written instrument of adoption had ever been entered into between an orphanage and Mr. and Mrs. George W. McCombs for the adoption of the contestant and appellant therein, Helen McCombs Fairchild; and apparently the probate court was not convinced by the evidence produced that such an agreement had been executed, because it found that the claimant was not the legally adopted daughter. Here the probate court found in favor of the claimant on the determinative issue of fact, and as above stated, it is our opinion that the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain its finding. Moreover, in the McCombs case, it appears that there was no proof that the child was placed in the orphanage under such circumstances as gave the officers of that institution power to enter into a contract for its adoption.

A casual inspection of Estate of Guinasso, 13 Cal.App. 518, 110 P. 335, stressed by appellant, shows that it is not at all in point. There an attempt was made to probate a destroyed will, and the proceeding was governed by a code section enacted for the sole purpose of taking care of such cases, to wit, section 1339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it stood at that time.

Several other cases have been cited by appellant, but no useful purpose could be served by giving each of them special attention, because none of them dealt with a factual situation similar to the one here presented. Nearly all of them involved direct attacks by the natural parents upon the validity of existing adoption proceedings; and the decisions on appeal simply restated the general doctrine applicable to such cases, that the one claiming a valid adoption must show that there has been a compliance with every essential statutory requirement. There is nothing in the decision of the probate court in the present case, nor in our disposal of the appeal from that decision, which can be said to conflict with such general doctrine.

The order is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 146

CHICHESTER v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAV. ASS'N.

Civ. 13199.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 6, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑758(3)

Under court rules regarding briefs, appellant's assignments of error should take the form of propositions which, if sustained, would lend substantial support to appellant's request for a reversal of judgment. Rules for Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 8, §§ 2, 4.

2. Appeal and error 🔑773(2)

Where appellant's brief was stricken from files because of failure to comply with court rule, and appellant failed to file brief within time allowed for filing of proper brief, motion to dismiss appeal was granted. Rules for Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 8, §§ 2, 4.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis Howell Smith, Judge.

Action by Frank M. Chichester, as trustee, etc., against Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal.

Motion granted.

J. K. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Louis Ferrari, of San Francisco, and Edmund Nelson and G. L. Berrey, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

This is a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that appellant has failed to file an opening brief pursuant to the rules of this court.

These are the facts:

March 13, 1941, appellant filed a notice of appeal from the decision of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. August 28, 1941, appellant filed a document in this court denominated "appellant's opening brief." This brief contained the following headings:

(1) Statement of Facts.

(2) The Court Erred in Granting a Nonsuit.

(3) The Effect of Bankruptcy on Contracts of the Bankrupt.

(4) Vehicle Code v. Trust Receipts Law.

(5) The First Cause of Action—$2,222.36.

(6) The Third Cause of Action—$5,654.95.

(7) Second Cause of Action—Insolvency.

(8) Estoppel.

(9) Conclusion.

October 22, 1941, respondent moved to strike the foregoing document on the ground that it did not comply with the requirements of the last paragraph of section 2, rule VIII, Rules for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, which reads as follows:

"The brief or petition must present each point separately under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented or the point to be made." (Larmac Consolidated Index to Constitution and Laws of California (1941) 1623.)

[1] This motion was granted pursuant to the provisions of section 4, rule VIII, supra, and appellant allowed twenty days within which to file an opening brief which would comply with the rules of this court. Such ruling was in accordance with numerous previous decisions holding that, in order to comply with the requirements of the last paragraph of rule VIII, section 2, supra, appellant's assignments of error should take the form of propositions which, if sustained, would lend substantial support to appellant's request for a reversal of the judgment of the lower court. (Adams v. Standard Accident Insurance Co., 124 Cal.App. 393, 394, 12 P.2d 464; Bernstein v. Congregational Anshi Sfart, 14 Cal.App.2d 96, 57 P.2d 954; Graybeal v. Press-Telegram Pub. Co., 14 Cal.App.2d 252, 57 P.2d 1343; Superior Sand Co. v. Smith, 19 Cal.App.2d 166, 64 P.2d 1149; Bright v. Zabler, 43 Cal.App.2d 706, 708, 111 P.2d 387).

[2] Appellant has not filed a brief pursuant to our order of October 22, 1941. Therefore, since more than twenty days have elapsed since the entry of such order, respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal should be and it is hereby granted.

MOORE, P. J., and WOOD, J., concurred.

HAAS v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.*

Civ. 12978.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 2, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 28, 1942.

1. Mandamus ⇨172

Where Los Angeles board of fire commissioners denied application for fireman's pension made by painter in fire department, the sole legal questions that could be considered in mandamus proceeding to compel action by board were whether board acted within its prescribed authority and whether there was any evidence reasonably supporting its action. Code Civ.Proc. § 1085.

2. Mandamus ⇨172

Where Los Angeles board of fire commissioners denied application of a painter in fire department for a fireman's pension, the lower court had no authority to determine, in a mandamus proceeding, whether painter was a member of the fire department within applicable provisions of city charter. Code Civ.Proc. § 1085.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨200

Whether a painter in Los Angeles fire department was a member of the fire department entitled to a fireman's pension was a fact question addressed to discretion of the board of fire commissioners on application for pension, and board's determination could not be disturbed by the courts in absence of fraud or other actionable irregularity.

4. Constitutional law ⇨72

The courts have authority to pass judgment on the validity of the acts or omissions of the Los Angeles boards of fire and pension commissioners but not on the wisdom of their action.

5. Mandamus ⇨173

Where fraud or arbitrary or capricious action of an administrative body vested with discretion to determine fact questions is alleged, a court in a mandamus proceeding may resort to the equivalent of a trial de novo, but the court is limited to directing the body or officials comprising it to remain within the limits of their jurisdictional powers. Code Civ.Proc. § 1085.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨200

Action taken by city attorney and board of pension commissioners was not binding on Los Angeles board of fire commissioners when called on several years later to determine whether painter in fire department applying for a pension was a member of department entitled to a pension under applicable provisions of city charter.

7. Municipal corporations ⇨176(3)

Where constitutional grant of power constituting source of Los Angeles city charter contained no grant of power to define or create individual property rights by charter, provision of charter purporting to create a property right in an office or position in the fire department and to the compensation attached thereto is void.

8. Property ⇨1

The term "property" necessarily includes all rights appertaining to property and essentially a part of property, and a "property right" is dependent on property and is merely an incident thereto. Civ.Code, §§ 654, 655, 657, 663, 669, 671, 1000.

---

* Subsequent opinion 132 P.2d 201.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Property" and "Property Right".

9. Property 🔑1

A simple right cannot under the law be accorded the distinction of a "property right" unless its origin can actually be traced to property and its continued relation thereto retained. Civ.Code, §§ 654, 655, 657, 663, 669, 671, 1000.

10. Mandamus 🔑172

A determination of the Los Angeles board of fire commissioners on application for pension that applicant occupying civil service position of painter in fire department was not a member of fire department within city charter did not involve the question of deprivation of property, and determination was not reviewable by trial court in mandamus proceeding in absence of fraud or irregularity in board's action. Code Civ.Proc. § 1085.

WHITE, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Nelson J. Haas against the City of Los Angeles, the Board of Fire Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, and others, to compel the board to place petitioner on pension service on the pension rolls as a member of the Fire Department of the city. From a judgment ordering the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., Frederick Von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and Robert J. Stahl, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph Scott and J. Howard Ziemann, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment ordering the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate directing appellant Board of Fire Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles to place respondent on pension service upon the pension rolls as a member of the Fire Department of said city, in conformity with the provisions of Article XVII of the Los Angeles City Charter and certain ordinances of the same city.

The facts briefly are as follows: Respondent in 1911 took and passed a civil service examination for the position of painter in the Fire Department, and he was thereafter duly assigned to the civil service position of painter in the Fire Department of the City of Los Angeles. He worked as an employee in the fire department until June, 1939, when he made application for a fireman's pension as provided in Article XVII of the charter of the City of Los Angeles. The application was denied upon the ground that only those persons duly and regularly appointed in the fire department under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent and extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles are entitled to the benefits of the fire and police pension system, and that a person with the civil service status of painter in the fire department is not eligible for a fireman's pension. There is no dispute as to the facts.

The City of Los Angeles maintains a city employees' retirement system (Art. XXXIV, Los Angeles City Charter), the benefits of which inure to all employees in the city service in the classified civil service other than members or employees of the fire and police departments, who are entitled to benefits under the provisions of Article XVII of said charter. It is conceded that respondent, if not entitled to the benefits of the police and fire department pension fund, is entitled to the protection of the general city employees' retirement system.

Neither appellant nor respondent correctly states the only valid question involved. Respondent states the question as follows: "Does the respondent, duly appointed to and holding the civil service position of 'Painter—Fire Department', come within the purview of Article XVII of the Charter of the City of Los Angeles?" Appellants state it as follows: "Is a person occupying the position of painter and who is qualified, under civil service rules and regulations, for the position of painter and no other, a member of the fire department for pension purposes, when the charter declares that for such pension purposes 'the fire department shall consist of all persons duly and regularly appointed'," etc.

This is an action in mandamus "to compel the admission of a party to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which [it is contended] he is entitled." Section 1085 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] It is not the function of the courts to determine the foregoing question in the first instance, or indeed at all. That duty and responsibility is with the legally constituted authority created by the charter for such purposes. When the proper legally constituted authority has acted, the sole legal question that can result from such action, in connection with the issues herein sought to be raised is, first, whether, in this instance, the Board of Fire Commissioners acted within its prescribed authority and, second, whether there was any evidence reasonably supporting its action. Manifestly, the question was addressed to the judgment and discretion of the commission, which the courts are without authority to disturb in the absence of fraud, or other actionable irregularity.

It is urged that petitioner is unlawfully precluded from the use and enjoyment of a right and office to which he is entitled and that this is so by virtue of the city charter and the ordinances applicable to the facts upon which petitioner depends.

The court found as a fact as follows: "That since the 1st day of September 1911, the duties of petitioner have consisted of and petitioner has duly been engaged in the painting of fire hydrants, ladders and other fire-fighting equipment and appliances, and the testing and treating for preservation of fire-fighting equipment and appliances, and the painting of fire houses; that since the 1st day of September, 1911, petitioner was required to and did relieve firemen on duty, and was required to and did respond to certain fire alarms in the City of Los Angeles, and was required to and did assist the Fire Department of the City of Los Angeles at scenes of fire." And further in substance that petitioner's request to be retired and placed on a pension as a member of the Fire Department as provided by Article XVII of the city charter was denied. But that he was informed that he was to be included as a member of the City Employees Retirement System and that $900.66 which had theretofore been paid by him into the pension fund was returned to him.

[2, 3] The court found as a conclusion of law: "That since the 1st day of September, 1911, petitioner has been and is a member of the Fire Department of the City of Los Angeles within the meaning and purview and entitled to the benefits of Article XVII of the charter of the City of Los Angeles, as amended, and of ordinance No. 28252 (new series) and of all ordinances of the City of Los Angeles enacted pursuant to said section of said charter."

The above conclusion is without legal sanction. There is no legal authority authorizing the determination of such a question in mandamus proceedings in the premises. The question sought to be determined by the above conclusion is beside the issue. Moreover, the question as to whether petitioner was a member of the fire department within the meaning of Article XVII of the city charter was a question of fact and in the instant case a question addressed to the judgment and discretion of the Board of Fire Commissioners.

In the final analysis petitioner's action is based on a disagreement with the judgment of the commission on this question. That an honest difference of opinion can exist in the circumstance is at once evident from a review of the record. For example, it is petitioner's contention, quoting from petitioner's brief under the heading "Respondent's Fire Fighting Duties," that: "Under the Fire Department Rules of December 11, 1911, he was under the supervision of the mechanical engineer and the mechanical engineer had a duty to report to 'all second (or greater) alarm fires'. He was instructed by the Chief of the Fire Department that he would have to report to 'second alarm fires' and 'fill in' when any company was shorthanded. He actually did report to second alarm fires and filled in when a company was shorthanded. Furthermore, his name appears three times on the department's 'Roll of Merit' among the firemen who, the Roll states, '* * * are members of the department who have been placed in the roll of meritorious conduct for the' years ending June 30, 1913, June 30, 1915, January 30, 1916." And under the heading "Respondent's Fire Prevention Duties," that: "In addition to relieving firemen on duty and to responding to certain fire alarms in the City of Los Angeles, and assisting at scenes of fire upon certain occasions, respondent ever since his appointment in the Fire Department has, in addition to his duties as ordinary painter, also done a great deal of work in the nature of fire prevention, such as: Respondent tested fire hydrants to see if they were in working order and particularly to determine if the threads were in proper shape to permit the attachment of fire hose, and also painted fire hydrants; and this work continued after 1930. He took new hose to firehouses to replace damaged hose. Replaced glass in fire alarm boxes. Inspected, repainted and replaced broken bolts in fire ladders. Inspected and serviced fire fighting tools. Treated safety net. Treated materials to be used on fire hydrants. 'Laid line' at scene of fire and connected hose to engine and in earlier days unhitched horses from engine. Put out awning fires started by live sparks at scene of fire, and knocked sparks off hose jacket and helped stretch fire traffic lines. Drove coal wagons to fire engines at scene of fire. Drove and operated cellar pumps."

On the other hand appellant city, after reviewing the evidence relating to petitioner's activities in the fire department, sums up his position, quoting from appellants' brief, as follows: "Without further extending this portion of our brief, we believe that it may fairly be said, as to the facts of this case, that we are here confronted with an individual who, from boyhood on, lived in the immediate vicinity of a fire department station house and who personally was imbued with a desire to be a fireman, but, because of his physical characteristics, that is, his height and weight, was unable to meet the minimum requirements of the civil service department for fire service. He did the next best thing—he entered the department as a painter, which, so far as his civil service status is concerned and so far as the position occupied by him is concerned, was the only position he ever held. For the first two years of his employment he was assigned to the machine shop, which was located immediately adjacent to a building in which was housed both an engine company and a truck company, manned by the regular fire-fighting personnel. During this period he continued to reside immediately back of the building in which was located another engine company of the fire department. At all times, then, he was in close personal association with members of the fire-fighting force. While he knew that, so far as his civil service status was concerned, he had the position of painter and no other, he was undoubtedly told that he would be expected, as he says, to help out wherever possible where companies found themselves shorthanded at places where he was painting, which he undoubtedly did upon any and every occasion that presented itself. Of this there can be no doubt. That he regarded himself as a member of the fire department there can be no doubt. That he, upon many occasions substituted for regular firemen when those firemen wanted extra time off and for which they would have had to turn over to any other man the daily wage paid to firemen, cannot be denied. Human nature being what it is, we have no doubt but that respondent here could have spent every day, when not on duty at the machine shop, taking some fireman's place in an engine house, when he was apparently ready, willing and anxious to volunteer for such duty at no compensation."

It will be seen from the foregoing that there is an abundance of evidence to support the conclusion of the Board of Fire Commissioners that petitioner was not a member of the fire department within the meaning of Article XVII of the charter of the City of Los Angeles, section 185 of which is as follows, and is the pertinent part thereof: "For the purpose of the provisions contained herein, the Fire Department shall consist of all persons duly and regularly appointed in the Fire Department under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles, under whatever designation they may be described in any salary or departmental ordinance providing compensation for said Fire Department; * * *."

[4] Having decided in effect that it was no part of petitioner's duty to prevent or extinguish fires and having classified him accordingly, the Board of Fire Commissioners and the Board of Pension Commissioners have been ordered by the trial court to "place petitioner on pension service and on the pension rolls as a member of the Fire Department of the City of Los Angeles, and to grant to petitioner as a member of the Fire Department of the said city all the benefits of Article XVII of the charter of the City of Los Angeles, as amended, and of Ordinance No. 28252 (New Series) and of all other ordinances of the City of Los Angeles enacted pursuant to said article of said charter of said city, and to show or cause to be shown on the records of respondents that petitioner is entitled to all pension benefits of the fire and police pension system of said city, and that they pay and cause to be paid all money incident thereto, together with costs of suit incurred herein by petitioner, taxed in the sum of $19.50." Thus the trial court has substituted the court's judgment for the judgment of those legally constituted governmental agencies charged with the administration of municipal affairs. Not because there was anything illegal, fraudulent, arbitrary, or because some other irregularity entered into their deliberations, but because of a difference of opinion between the court and the boards as to the outcome of the only test by which such question could be determined. This the trial court was without authority to do. The courts are vested with authority to pass judgment on the validity of the acts or omissions of the above mentioned boards but not the wisdom of such action.

Petitioner is not entitled to the enjoyment "of a right or office," herein sought to be enforced in mandamus proceedings, by virtue of the charter and the city ordinances applicable thereto. Petitioner is not entitled to the enjoyment of the right or office unless and until the Board of Fire Commissioners so decides. This the commission has decided by resort to the appropriate test provided in the charter. Hence, as above noted, it is the action of the commission only which the courts may review for the limited purpose above mentioned.

[5] It should be noted that the situation here presented bears no relation to those actions of a similar character that involve allegations of fraud, arbitrary or capricious action of administrative bodies vested with discretion to determine questions of fact. In such actions, for the purposes of determining those issues, it appears to be well settled that the court in a mandamus proceeding may resort to the equivalent of a trial de novo. But, even in these cases the court is limited, in effect and in proper cases, to directing such administrative bodies or officials to remain within the limits of their jurisdictional powers, which manifestly do not include the power to act fraudulently or arbitrarily.

Referring again to respondent's statement of the question involved, to-wit: does the respondent, duly appointed to and holding the civil service position of "Painter—Fire Department," come within the purview of Article XVII of the charter of the City of Los Angeles? It is argued, quoting from respondent's brief, that "this question has been answered unqualifiedly in the affirmative: (1) In 1929, by the then City Attorney: (2) In 1932, by the Board of Pension Commissioners in granting respondent a Certificate of Service entitling him to such a pension; (3) By the official annual reports of the Fire Department; (4) By the City Council by ordinance; (5) By the trial court herein".

[6] It may be conceded that such events occurred, but neither the opinion of the city attorney in 1929 nor the action of the board of pension commissioners in 1932 nor whatever the annual reports of the fire department may reveal, nor any ordinance that the record discloses, are of any help in deciding the above mentioned sole question here presented. Respondent concedes that the doctrine of estoppel does not apply. The action taken in the past, as above described, was not binding on the board of fire commissioners, called upon to determine petitioner's status when his application for a pension was filed. It is the action of this commission, and this commission only, that is before the court for review.

[7] The city charter of the City of Los Angeles provides that: "The right of an officer or employee of the Fire Department to hold his office or position and to the compensation attached to such office or position is hereby declared to be a substantial property right of which he shall not be deprived arbitrarily or summarily, nor otherwise than as herein in this section provided." Because of the above provision it may be urged that the right to the final determination of the issues in a court, where only judicial power can be exercised, cannot be denied by reason of the due process clause in the constitution. If such a property right exists, authority therefor must be found elsewhere than in the city charter, for the constitutional grant of power that constitutes the source of the charter contains no grant of power to define or create individual property rights by charter. Hence, the provision purporting to create such a property right is void.

In a decision by the Supreme Court of California, filed March 16, 1942, not yet final, the power of the court in mandate proceedings was considered at length. Laisne v. California State Board of Optometry et al., 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457. There, appellant's license to practice optometry had been revoked by the California State Board of Optometry and in an attempt to set aside the order of said board, relief was denied by the trial court.

In the Laisne case the trial court had denied appellant the right to introduce any new and material evidence and compelled the submission of the case on the record and proceedings before the board of optometry. The Supreme Court reached the conclusion that the validity of the judgment hinged upon the action of the trial court in denying the appellant the right to introduce such evidence. The Supreme Court in that connection pointed out that if the superior court in the mandate proceedings were limited to the evidence presented before the board, or if the findings of fact were conclusive on the court, then the board would be exercising the complete judicial power reserved to the courts. The decision further declared that "the appellant's right to practice optometry was a vested property right." And that "such right cannot be finally destroyed by a nonjudicial body if the action of that body is questioned in a court of law in a mandate proceeding." It was held in substance therefore that only a trial de novo would afford appellant his full constitutional rights in the circumstances and that the judgment of the court as to the facts could, and should in proper cases, supersede the judgment of the board. It is assumed throughout the prevailing opinion that the license to practice optometry is a property right entitled to protection under and by virtue of the due process clause of the constitution. Manifestly, if the license to practice optometry were not property the due process clause of the constitution would not apply. It is at once evident that if such an assumption is unwarranted, it follows that the conclusion is based on a fallacy underlying the whole opinion that effectively annuls the conclusion, for it is axiomatic in logic that the validity of a conclusion can survive only so long as the truth of the premise upon which it is based can be sustained. This being true, it is important to inquire whether the license to practice optometry is actually a property right. This subject is not discussed in the prevailing opinion. It is assumed as a matter of fact and as a matter of law without further comment. However, two former decisions of the Supreme Court of California are relied on as authority, viz: Hewitt v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L.R.A.,N.S., 896, 113 Am.St.Rep. 315, 7 Ann.Cas. 750, and Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965, 966. In the Hewitt case it is assumed, without comment or citation of authority, that the license to practice medicine is a property right. The Suckow case also involved the act regulating the practice of medicine and followed the Hewitt case as authority for the proposition that the right to practice medicine is a property right. The Suckow case, however, adhered to the old rule that the board of medical examiners was not exercising "the judicial power of the State." Neither case turned on the question as to whether the right to practice medicine was a property right.

Title I of part I of the Civil Code deals with the nature of property. The pertinent provisions are as follows:

Section 654: "The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others. In this code, the thing of which there may be ownership is called property."

Section 655: "There may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery; of all domestic animals; of all obligations; of such products of labor or skill as the composition of an author, the good-will of a business, trade-marks and signs, and of rights created or granted by statute."

Section 657: "Property is either: 1. Real or immovable; or, 2. Personal or movable."

Section 663: "Every kind of property that is not real is personal."

Section 669: "All property has an owner, whether that owner is the state, and the property public, or the owner an individual, and the property private. The state may also hold property as a private proprietor."

Section 671: "Any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold, and dispose of property real or personal, within this state." And property may be acquired by: Occupancy, accession, transfer, will, or succession. Section 1000, Civil Code.

[8, 9] The above provisions are of a general nature and have a uniform operation, as the constitution requires; they affect all alike, whether minors or adults, citizens or aliens, sane or insane. And it is significant to note that the above provisions omit the use of the term property rights. The reason for the omission both in the constitution and the statutes, however, is at once obvious. The term property necessarily includes all rights appertaining to property; essentially a part of property. A property right, of necessity, is dependent on property; it is merely an incident to property. A simple right cannot under the law be accorded the distinction of a property right unless its origin can actually be traced to property and its continued relation thereto retained. Unless capable of such identification it cannot be accepted as a property right. Thus it will be seen that unless it can be shown that the license to practice optometry is an incident to property, the assumption that nevertheless it is a property right is without foundation. Property, as such, as the above-quoted provisions of the Civil Code demonstrate, has definite legal characteristics; for example, it is, as noted above, capable of ownership; it may be sold, mortgaged, inherited, etc.; in addition to many others too well known to require enumeration. Of all of the characteristics peculiar to property, what single one can be identified with the license to practice optometry? Therefore, how can the license to practice optometry be upheld as an incident to property? If it cannot be so upheld as an incident to property, how can the contention that it is a property right be successfully maintained? And finally, in this connection, if the license to practice optometry cannot be demonstrated to be either property or a so-called property right, how can the action of the board of optometry be held to be an invasion of the judicial power vested exclusively in the courts? That the right to practice optometry is a personal right and the license in the nature of a conditional or qualified privilege, properly subject to regulation under the police power of the state, there can be no question. Manifestly, it is the right of everyone to practice optometry, providing the conditions precedent are met. But the license so to practice remains a privilege. Once granted, professional success does not alter the status of the license. Nor does material success alter the conditions upon which the license is granted. Hence, in the matter of revoking a license the question of deprivation of property is irrelevant.

[10] Likewise, the determination of the question of whether a civil service employee is a fireman, is one separate and apart from that of his right to a pension. An employee cannot be held to be a fireman merely because otherwise he would not be entitled to the benefits of a fireman's pension. Nor can it be argued that because a fireman is entitled to such benefits the power to determine his status as a member of the fire department involves the power to determine a property right. Here again, the question of deprivation of property is irrelevant. Such a question only becomes relevant after the status of the employee is determined; and any argument to the effect that, because of property rights involved, a fire department employee's status as a fireman may not be finally determined by an administrative board, is without substance.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed.

YORK, P. J., concurred.

WHITE, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. The inevitable effect of the majority opinion in this case will be the abrogation of the right of one possessed of a property or contractual right to appeal to the courts from the spoliation of such rights and to leave the possessor of such rights to the mercy of legislative administrative agencies, working as they do in a field peculiarly exposed to political demands. True, these boards grant a hearing and take evidence, but are the courts to say that the findings of fact of such boards are conclusive when the evidence clearly establishes that the findings are erroneous and that personal or property rights have been invaded or abridged? St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, 298 U.S. 38, 52, 56 S.Ct. 720, 80 L.Ed. 1033. To answer this inquiry in the affirmative is to admit that the judicial power of a court of competent jurisdiction can be circumscribed by giving finality to the actions of such boards even though such actions transcend the limits of constitutional authority and due process of law.

That respondent was a member of the fire department is conceded. He was appointed following a civil service examination, and it has frequently been held that a classified civil service employee possesses a vested right to his office under the law. Indeed, subdivision 1 of section 135 of the Los Angeles City Charter, which has to do with the discharge of members of the city fire department, specifically declares a position in the fire department to be "a substantial property right of which he" (the fire department employee) "shall not be deprived arbitrarily or summarily." Such being the case, does not the fire department employee have a vested property right in the emoluments or perquisites of his office, such as the pension provided for such employees, when his duties in the fire department bring him within the pale of section 185 of the charter? It has been held with reference to such vested rights that when a board or commission acts arbitrarily against such vested rights existent under the law, such board or commission acts against the law itself, and in such cases the courts will by mandamus compel recognition by the board of the individual's right and conformity by such administrative tribunal with law. Lotts v. Board of Park Commissioners, 13 Cal. App.2d 625, 634, 57 P.2d 215.

If respondent herein possessed, as I believe he did, both a property and a contractual right to receive the pension he had earned by the character and manner in which, as well as the period over which, he discharged his duties in the fire department, then if the findings of the board upon his claim are conclusive upon the courts, we must conclude under the majority opinion that such boards are entitled to and do exercise complete judicial power, reserved, as I feel, by the Constitution of this state, to enumerated courts thereof. Const. art. VI, sec. 1; Laisne v. California State Board of Optometry, 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457. To my mind, any such exercise of judicial power by such administrative board is in direct conflict with the cited constitutional provision. To quote from a concurring opinion by Chief Justice Beatty in Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21, 30, 81 P. 225, 229, "Vested rights of property and contract rights are placed by the Constitution under the protection of the courts where alone the questions of law and fact upon which they depend can be finally decided." In my judgment, the administrative board whose acts are here challenged was without authority to make conclusive findings of fact and to predicate thereon a final order, not reviewable by the courts, which would deprive respondent of a property right vested in him to receive his pension as a member of the fire department. Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848; McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 752, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205; Laisne v. California State Board of Optometry, supra.

If the foregoing be the law in cases which involve factual differences and where the owner of a property right is entitled to the independent judgment of a competent court in what amounts to a trial de novo, then certainly the possessor of a property right incident to a civil service position is entitled to the independent judgment of a court of law when an administrative board, in the face of stipulated and conceded facts, arbitrarily, unlawfully, and in defiance of the plain provisions of the city charter, deprives him of his vested right to participate in the pension system provided for fire department employees performing the duties assigned to him. The instant proceeding does not partake of a situation where it is sought to control the unabused discretion conferred upon an administrative board. It rather provides a case where a certain contingency, viz., the performance of services of a certain type over a prescribed number of years, has taken place, by reason whereof the charter requires the board to perform a prescribed act, viz., retire the employee on a pension. In such case the functions of the board are ministerial, and upon the happening of the contingency the writ of mandate will issue to control the action of the board.

I take the position that whether respondent is entitled to participate in the pension benefits of the fire and police pension system is dependent upon a construction of section 185 of the city charter, which provides that for the purpose of determining the eligibility of a person working in the fire department to participate in the pension system, such person must be a member of the fire department "duly and regularly appointed * * * under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles, under whatever designation they may be described in any salary or departmental ordinance providing compensation for said fire department; * * *."

That respondent is a member of the fire department cannot be questioned. In 1911 he passed a civil service examination for the position of "painter in the fire department," and was thereafter duly appointed to such position in the department. Appellant Board of Fire Commissioners, however, takes the position that regardless of his membership in the fire department, respondent is not entitled to a pension because the civil service classification of his position did not impose upon him as a matter of law the duty of extinguishing or aiding in the prevention of fires. I, however, take the position that had the framers of the charter provision governing pensions in the fire department intended to so limit the benefits of that system, they could and would have so stated. Instead, we find the charter provision providing in clear and unequivocal language that pension benefits should inure to "all persons duly and regularly appointed in the fire department under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires * * * under whatever designation they may be described. * * *"

The trial court found upon clear and convincing evidence that while respondent was employed as a painter in the fire department, his duties included certain definite fire-fighting and fire-prevention activities. We cannot be indifferent to the rule which requires of us in ascertaining the intent and meaning of the charter provisions, to indulge in a liberal construction thereof to the end that the beneficial results aimed at may be achieved. Hurley v. Sykes, 69 Cal.App. 310, 231 P. 748. The clear intent of the fire department pension provisions is to protect all persons employed in the fire department whose duty it is to aid in the extinguishment or prevention of fires. The language of the charter provisions in question indicates without peradventure of a doubt that it is not the classification of a member of the fire department that determines his eligibility for a pension, but it is the duties performed by such member that is decisive.

That respondent was engaged in the duties of both extinguishing and preventing fires cannot be questioned, when, as the record shows, he was required by the chief of the department to report to all second or greater alarms of fire; to "fill in" when any company of fire-fighters was short-handed; and that he actually did both. His name appears three times on the department's "roll of merit," made up of members of the fire department who performed outstanding or meritorious services. Respondent also actually participated in putting out fires. During his incumbency in the fire department he drove fire apparatus to the scene of fires; he "laid line" at the fires; and connected hose to the engine. Included among his fire-prevention activities was his inspection of fire-fighting tools and treating materials used in fire hydrants. Through his years of service in the department the Board of Pension Commissioners accepted respondent's payments to the pension fund; and as far back as May 22, 1932, the last-mentioned board issued to respondent a certificate of service pursuant to ordinance No. 67778, which certified that he had served as a member of the fire department for twenty years and was entitled to retirement as provided in section 181 of the Los Angeles city charter. The ordinance just mentioned reads in part: "Upon the completion of the period of service mentioned in section 181 of the charter of the City of Los Angeles, entitling such member to retire under its provisions, such member shall be entitled to retire at any time thereafter from active service from such department in accordance with the provisions of said section 181 hereinabove referred to, which right shall be a fully matured, absolute, vested property right, reserved for such member as a constituted and granted right to retire." Pursuant to the terms of another city ordinance, respondent was classified as a "pension employee," as distinguished from a "non-pension employee" or "civilian employee."

This case furnishes a striking example of the inequity and injustice that would ensue were we to accept the claim of appellants that only those members of the department who are classified in civil service as fire-fighters are eligible to participate in the fire and police pension system. It also furnishes a clear reason why the framers of the charter provision used language the clarity of which admits of no denial that the meaning and intent was to extend the benefits of the pension system to all persons working in the fire department whose duty was to extinguish or prevent fires, and that, notwithstanding any designation by which they might be described in any salary or departmental ordinance.

It is unnecessary to here again reiterate at greater length my views of the meaning and intent of the charter provisions under consideration. Such views are further set forth in dissenting opinions filed by me in the cases of Knoll v. City of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 124 P.2d 113, and McKeag v. Board of Pension Commissioners, Cal.App., 124 P.2d 109, this day decided.

For the reasons stated in the last-cited cases as well as for the reasons advanced herein, the judgment in my opinion should be affirmed.

McKEAG v. BOARD OF PENSION COM'RS OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES.*

Civ. 13049.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 2, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 28, 1942.

Mandamus 🔑172

A determination of the Los Angeles board of pension commissioners denying petitioner a widow's pension on ground that during his lifetime, petitioner's husband, who had acted as secretary of board of fire commissioners, was not legally entitled to receive pension paid to him from police and fire pension system was not reviewable by trial court in mandamus proceeding.

WHITE, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Nettie K. McKeag against the Board of Pension Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles and others to compel defendants to pay a pension to petitioner. From a judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandate, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Robert J. Stahl and Edward J. Olstyn, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Don M. Kitzmiller, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in a proceeding in mandamus wherein the court below granted a peremptory writ to compel the appellants, as members of the Board of Pension Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, to pay to petitioner a pension pursuant to certain of the terms and provisions of article XVII of the Los Angeles city charter. There is no dispute as to the facts, which are that petitioner is the widow of Charles E. McKeag, who for many years acted as secretary of the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners, having been appointed to that position in 1906. From 1925 to 1932, he acted as secretary of the Board of Fire Commissioners exclusively. He was retired on February 16, 1932, and was paid a pension from the police and fire pension system of said city until the time of his death on August 23, 1939. Thereafter his widow, petitioner herein, pursuant to the provisions of section 183 of the city charter, made application for a widow's pension. There is no dispute as to petitioner's claim that for more than one year prior to her husband's death she was his wife; but on September 26, 1939, appellant commissioners denied her a widow's pension on the ground that during his lifetime her husband was not legally entitled to receive the pension paid him, by reason of which fact petitioner herein was foreclosed from participating in the pension system benefits.

The question here involved is the same as that in Haas v. City of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 124 P.2d 100, this day decided, and for the reasons given in the opinion in the Haas case the judgment herein is reversed.

YORK, P. J., concurred.

WHITE, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. Section 183 of the city charter, so far as here pertinent, provides in part as follows: "Whenever any member of the fire or police department shall die * * * after retirement, or while eligible to retirement from such department on account of years of service, then an annual pension shall be paid in equal monthly installments to his widow. * * *"

It is first contended by respondent that under the aforesaid charter provision the Board of Pension Commissioners had no alternative than to grant her a widow's pension, for the reason that in 1932 her husband was duly retired on a pension which was regularly paid him for some seven years up to the time of his demise. Respondent argues that in 1939 the pension board was without authority to review its determination made in 1932 that her husband was a member of the fire department and of the class thereof entitled to share in the benefits of the pension fund. I am not in accord with respondent's claim in this regard. The law seems well settled that where, as here, there is no provision in the charter giving to the Board of Pension Commissioners acting in any judicial capacity, the power to determine a question of fact in connection with the granting or withholding of a pension, the board is in the same position "with relation to such a matter as is any officer required by law to do a prescribed act in a certain contingency, where no special method is provided by law for the ascertainment of the facts. Under such circumstances it may often be true that there is uncertainty or dispute as to the facts, but in such a case the only resort of the officer is such investigation as he may be able to himself make for the purpose of determining his own course of action. His determination as to the facts, however, is not effectual for any other purpose. If not satisfied as to the evidence of the essential facts, he may refuse to act until required to do so by the judgment of some tribunal invested with the power to finally determine such controversy, but before such tribunal any conclusion to which he may have come on the facts has no legal force whatever. The sole question there is whether the facts are in realty such as to require the performance of the act, and this altogether regardless of the officer's conclusion as to the facts. The party having a vested right in the performance of the act, if the facts are as claimed by him, has also the right to have his claim as to the facts judicially determined. The functions of the board in such a matter as this are really ministerial only, and come under the same principle as would apply in the case of a county or city auditor, in so far as any finality to its conclusions are concerned. * * * As we read the charter, it gives no judicial function whatever to the board in such a matter as this, confers upon it no authority to hear and determine a controversy in a judicial sense." French v. Cook, 173 Cal. 126, 160 P. 411, 413; Sheehan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 197 Cal. 70, 239 P. 844.

---

* Subsequent opinion 124 P.2d 109.

The determination of the Board of Pension Commissioners in 1932, when it voted respondent's husband a pension pursuant to section 185 of the charter, not being judicial in character, possesses no legal force whatever as such and amounts to nothing more than an indication of the board's course of action in the premises at the time such action was taken. From what has just been said, it follows that when called upon to determine the validity of respondent's application for a widow's pension in 1939, the board was not bound by its determination in 1932 to the effect that her husband was a member of the fire department entitled to a retirement pension. In its determination of respondent's application, the board was empowered to make an investigation thereof for the purpose of deciding its course of action thereon, and if such investigation satisfied the board that at the time of the death of respondent's husband he was not and durnig his period of retirement on pension never had been a member of the fire department as contemplated by section 185 of the charter, then the board was not bound by the course of action determined upon by it or its predecessor board in 1932. The right of the board in this regard does not of course foreclose respondent from having her claim as to the facts of the case in connection with the status of her husband in the fire department and its pension system judicially determined.

We come now to a consideration of appellant's claim that respondent, as the widow of Mr. McKeag, was not entitled to a pension because the latter was never employed in the fire department within the class of such departmental employees that are entitled to participate in the fire and police pension fund system. The question of the eligibility of respondent's husband to retire upon a pension is dependent upon a construction of the provisions of section 185 of the Los Angeles city charter as applied to the duties performed by him in his position as secretary to the Board of Fire Commissioners. The cited section, so far as here material reads: "For the purpose of the provisions contained herein, the Fire Department shall consist of all persons duly and regularly appointed in the Fire Department under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles, under whatever designation they may be described in any salary or departmental ordinance providing compensation for said fire department."

A further chronological review of the factual background surrounding the status of Secretary McKeag reveals the following: At all times, beginning with his appointment in 1906 and continuing until his retirement in 1932, he was paid by the fire department and carried on the payroll of such department. This was true during the period he also acted as secretary to the Board of Police Commissioners, for which service he received no compensation from or through the police department. Throughout the years here involved, the fire department was under the control and direction of the Board of Fire Commissioners, who so far as Secretary McKeag was concerned were empowered to require of him in addition to his secretarial activities the performance of "such other duties as the board may prescribe." It seems to me that any question as to whether respondent's husband was a member of the fire department is settled by the provision of section 80 of the present city charter which reads: "Subject to the provisions of this charter * * * said general manager (chief engineer) shall have the power and duty * * * (2) to appoint, discharge, suspend or transfer the employees of the department, other than the secretary and the chief accounting employees; * * *."

The just-quoted section would appear to amount to a recognition of Mr. McKeag in his capacity as secretary to the Fire Commission as one of the employees of the fire department, but an employee whose appointment, discharge, suspension or transfer was not within the power of the chief of the fire department. The word "employee" used in the foregoing charter section is synonymous with "member," used in section 185 of the charter. Hurley v. Sykes, 69 Cal.App. 310, 231 P. 748. In connection with Secretary McKeag's status with the fire department, it is noteworthy that upon his retirement a promotional civil service examination was held in the fire department to fill his position as secretary to the Board of Fire Commissioners. This promotional examination was limited to certain members of the fire department, viz., firemen, auto firemen, captains, etc. In other words, only members of the fire department could participate in the civil service examination for secretary to the Board of Fire Commissioners. In 1932 the council of the city of Los Angeles by ordinance determined who were and were not members of the fire department and segregated members of such department into two groups, (1) pension, and (2) nonpension employees. At this time the position of secretary held by Mr. McKeag was included in the pensioned group. This action certainly amounted to a legislative determination of the fact that the secretary to the Board of Fire Commissioners was a position created for the purpose of preventing or extinguishing fires in the city of Los Angeles, and as cogently stated by the city attorney of Los Angeles in an opinion furnished appellant Board of Fire Commissioners, "may generally be accepted by your honorable body for the purpose of determining the question of membership in the fire and police pension system."

As far back as 1930 appellant Board of Pension Commissioners, pursuant to ordinance No. 67778 of the city of Los Angeles, duly certified that Charles E. McKeag was "a member of the fire department, has served in such department the aggregate number of years, to-wit, 24, entitling such member to retirement as provided in section 181 of the Charter of the City of Los Angeles."

The record shows that the Board of Fire Commissioners found as a fact that Secretary McKeag was a member of the fire department "whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles"; and it also appears that in addition to his routine duties as secretary, Mr. McKeag was ordered by appellant Board of Fire Commissioners to "respond to such alarms of fire as the Board of Fire Commissioners may direct, and perform such other duties as may be required by the Board of Fire Commissioners or the chief engineer for the purpose of prevention and extinguishment of fires in the City of Los Angeles." It remains uncontradicted in the record that pursuant to directions of the fire commissioners, Secretary McKeag responded to fire alarms and performed actual work at the scene of fires in connection with the extinguishment thereof. In addition to the foregoing, he made records of conditions prevailing at these fires for the purpose of studying such conditions at a later date; he prepared legislation, resolutions and orders tending to decrease fire hazards and to make for more efficient operation of the fire department; he personally took steps to remedy hazardous situations.

From the foregoing recital it appears plainly to me that in the course of his duties as secretary to the Board of Fire Commissioners Mr. McKeag was actually engaged in the prevention and extinguishment of fires in the city of Los Angeles, and therefore, under the provisions of section 185 of the city charter, was entitled to participate in the benefits of the pension fund.

Appellant commission, however, takes the position that it is not the duties performed by a member of the fire department, but the status of such person in the classified civil service that establishes his right to participate in the pension benefits. In other words, the Board of Pension Commissioners now asserts that in order to obtain the benefits of the pension system, a member of the fire department must hold a civil service classification or position which requires the performance of duties tending to prevent or extinguish fires in the city, and this assertion is now indulged in by appellant commission notwithstanding the fact that over a long period of years it recognized Secretary McKeag as a member of the fire department who was entitled to receive a pension and actually paid him such pension until the time of his death. I am not impressed with the argument of appellant board in the light of the plain and unequivocal language used in section 185 of the charter. I feel that the following quotation from my dissenting opinion in the case of Knoll v. City of Los Angeles, Cal. App., 124 P.2d 113, this day filed, effectively answers the last-mentioned contention of appellants herein: "* * * respondent argues that if a regularly classified civil service fireman were assigned appellant's duties or were assigned to the salvage bureau or fire prevention bureau, such employee would nevertheless be entitled to participate in the pension system, not because of the duties he was performing, but because of the duties imposed by law upon one holding the civil service classification of a fireman. I do not concede the soundness of this argument, in view of the plain and understandable language of the charter, section 185 of which provides that 'for the purpose of the provisions contained herein the fire department shall consist of all persons duly and regularly appointed in the fire department under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles, under whatever designation they may be described in any salary or departmental ordinance providing compensation for said department.'

"It is noteworthy that the section does not restrict the operation of the fire department pension fund to those members of the department of any particular designation described in any salary or departmental ordinance, but on the contrary, provides that notwithstanding any descriptive designation in the rules or ordinances, any employee whose duties involve the prevention or extinguishment of fires shall be regarded as a member of the fire department entitled to participate in the pension benefits of the fire department pension system. If the framers of the charter or the people in adopting the same had intended to limit the benefits of the system to those classified as firemen, it would have been very simple to so state. That they did not intend such a limitation is evident from the use of the language providing that any member of the fire department whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles shall be eligible to share in the pension funds regardless of the designation given him in any salary or departmental ordinance. * * *"

There is another phase of this case which adds strength to the conclusion that Secretary McKeag was a member of the fire department within the purview of section 185 of the charter, and that is the fact that appellant Board of Pension Commissioners, charged with the duty of interpreting the provisions of the charter in relation to applicants for pension rights, continued over a period of some ten years to determine and recognize that Secretary McKeag was entitled to pension rights. The record further shows that such a course of action on the part of the commission was in accordance with the advice and counsel of the city attorney of Los Angeles. This established course of conduct on the part of the commission, followed uninterruptedly for some ten years, constituted a contemporaneous practical construction of the applicable pension provisions of the charter by those charged with the duty of administering it. While such contemporaneous and practical construction is not controlling, it is nevertheless entitled to considerable respect and recognition. In United States v. Philbrick, 120 U.S. 52, 59, 7 S.Ct. 413, 417, 30 L.Ed. 559, it was said: "A contemporaneous construction by the officers upon whom was imposed the duty of executing those statutes is entitled to great weight; and, since it is not clear that that construction was erroneous, it ought not now to be overturned."

Construing the Los Angeles city charter provisions governing fire department pensions in a light which will render them reasonable, fair and harmonious with the manifest and apparent purpose, and which will conform to the spirit and intent of the charter, I am impressed that the trial court was correct in determining that Secretary McKeag was a member of the fire department and belonged to the class of members therein that entitled him to retire as he did on a pension; that accordingly, upon his death his wife, respondent herein, was entitled under the provisions of section 183 of the charter to receive and have paid to her the pension allowance therein provided for.

For the foregoing reasons, as well as for the reasons advanced in the dissenting opinions this day filed by me in the cases of Knoll v. City of Los Angeles and Haas v. City of Los Angeles, I feel that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

KNOLL v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.[*]

Civ. 12705.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

April 2, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 28, 1942.

Mandamus 🔑172

In mandamus proceeding by general clerk of Los Angeles fire department to compel board of fire commissioners to admit clerk to membership in fire and police pension system, trial court had no authority to pass directly on question whether clerk was a member of the fire department and entitled to share in benefits of system.

WHITE, J., dissenting.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William S. Baird, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Lily Knoll against the City of Los Angeles, the Board of Fire Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, and others, to compel the board to admit petitioner to membership in the fire and police pension system of the city. From an adverse judgment, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Loren A. Butts, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., F. Von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and Robert J. Stahl, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This is a proceeding in mandamus brought by appellant to compel respondent Board of Fire Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles to admit her to membership in the fire and police pension system of said city.

It is conceded by all parties that so far as the determination of the question of law involved herein is concerned, there is no dispute as to the pertinent facts, which are that on November 3, 1917, appellant was, in accordance with the civil service rules and regulations of the City of Los Angeles, appointed and employed as a member of the fire department of said city, and has been at all times subsequent thereto, and was at the time of the commencement of this action, a member of the fire department, holding and occupying in such department a position the title of which is that of general clerk, designated in the fire department salary ordinance of said city as code number 2353-M.

By ordinance number 71513, adopted by the Council of the City of Los Angeles in 1932, the departmental salary ordinance of the fire department was subdivided into two groups, the first being entitled "Pension Employees," followed by "Non-Pension Employees." These designations continued until July 1, 1938, when by the provisions of ordinance number 79867 the two classifications aforesaid were changed to read (a) "Firemen" and (b) "Civilian Employees." During all the times just mentioned, all positions designated code 2353-M in the salary ordinance, and which code designation covers the position occupied by appellant, have been carried as "Non-Pension" or "Civilian Employees."

The trial court found that the duties performed by appellant did not in any way relate to the prevention or extinguishment of fires. It was further found by the court that appellant was not a regular member of the Los Angeles city fire department within the intent and meaning of sections 180 to 189 inclusive of the City Charter and therefore was not entitled to share in the benefits of the police and fire pension system.

---

[*] Subsequent opinion 132 P.2d 203.

The question here involved is the same as that in Haas v. City of Los Angeles, Cal. App., 124 P.2d 100, this day decided. While it is true that the trial court was without authority to pass directly upon the question of whether appellant was a member of the fire department and entitled to share in the benefits of the police and fire pension system, yet for the reasons given in the opinion in the Haas case the judgment herein is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., concurred.

WHITE, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. My views with respect to the right of the court to review and control by mandate the action of the administrative board by reason of the happening of certain contingencies is fully covered in the dissenting opinion this day filed by me in the case of Haas v. City of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 124 P.2d 100.

In the instant case, as in the case just cited, there can be no question but that appellant is a member of the fire department. Section 185 of the charter specifically provides that "for the purpose of the provisions contained herein, the Fire Department shall consist of all persons duly and regularly appointed in the Fire Department under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles, under whatever designation they may be described in any salary or departmental ordinance providing compensation for said Fire Department; and the Police Department shall consist of all members of such Police Department appointed under civil service rules and regulations and sworn in, as provided by law, to perform the duties of a regular police officer of the City of Los Angeles, under whatever designation that they may be described in any salary or departmental ordinance providing compensation for the members of said Police Department. The provisions as herein in this charter contained shall apply to all members of the Fire and Police Departments as in this section defined, and to all members of said departments who have been heretofore granted pensions."

There can be no doubt that appellant is a person "duly and regularly appointed in the fire department under civil service rules and regulations," but the controversy presented herein centers around the question of whether in appellant's position in the fire department she was one whose "duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles." The duties performed by appellant as a member of the fire department, as disclosed by the record, may be thus summarized: To keep a full and complete record of all fires with data of such fires which occur in the City of Los Angeles; to give out information and reports of such fires to the various bureaus and fire department officials when such information and reports are necessary; to maintain tables and analyses of fires; to render a daily report to the Fire Prevention Bureau, showing the location of fires, the inspection district in which fires have occurred, the nature of such fires, the estimated loss because of such fires, and the cause of such fires; to prepare and submit reports to the chief engineer and the Board of Fire Commissioners showing fire losses, causes of fires, location and type of buildings in which fires have occurred; to prepare and submit to the chief engineer of the fire department statistical data, schedules, tables and analyses of the causes of fires and fire alarms, sources of fires, analyses of fire alarms as to type of construction, the number of buildings damaged by fire, analyses of fire alarms relative to the spread and extent of damage to buildings by fire, classification of fire losses in the different types of buildings; analyses of the various methods of fire extinguishment; and to furnish data, prepare tables, analyses and reports whenever necessary, and to do all other duties which may be assigned to her within the scope of her ability.

In connection with the foregoing, the chief engineer of the Los Angeles Fire Department testified: "She is called upon in the performance of her duties to use her incentive, judgment and discretion. There is no question about it at all. She is indispensable in that respect." A battalion chief of the same department, in charge of the Fire Prevention Bureau, testified: "The reports are essential and necessary to the performance of the duties of my position. We must find out the reason of the fires. We do not get that information that I have just referred to before the inspection of the reports."

A deputy fire prevention engineer of the fire department testified: "* * * I receive reports from Miss Knoll daily. They show where fires have occurred, the type of building in which these fires occur and the cause of the fire and the loss. I use these reports very much in the work of the fire prevention bureau. The reports are used in connection with my work as follows: If we did not know what the causes of the fires were and how to safeguard the city in fire prevention, we could not really function over there as a fire prevention bureau very well. * * * We have to depend on the analyses, the table of schedules, the daily reports of Miss Knoll here to determine what are the proper safeguards to take in preventing fires."

Section 185 of the charter specifically provides that for the purpose of the pension provisions therein contained the members of the fire department eligible to participate in its benefits must be those "whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles." That such restriction was contemplated by the people in adopting the charter is emphasized by the language immediately following that just mentioned in section 185, which provides that members of the police department entitled to pension benefits shall consist only of "all members of such police department * * * appointed under civil service rules and regulations, and sworn in, as provided by law, to perform the duties of a regular police officer for the City of Los Angeles." This brings us to a consideration of the question as to whether or not appellant in her position of a general clerk in the fire department was a member of said department "whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires." I am not unmindful of the rule which requires that in ascertaining the intent and meaning of the charter provision regarding pensions we should indulge in a liberal construction to the end that the beneficial purpose aimed at shall be carried out, but in so doing I do not think we are authorized to disregard or ignore the plain intent and meaning of language used by the framers of the charter and adopted by the electors when they voted for such charter. Where, as here, the language of section 185 of the charter seems so explicit in its meaning that the benefits of the pension system in question shall be restricted to certain members of the fire department, it would be unfair to such members who contribute to the pension fund, as well as to the public whose funds also support the system, to extend its benefits to others than those within the class established by the charter as entitled thereto. In other words, the equities are not always exclusively on the side of the applicant for pension benefits, however helpful to the maintenance of the fire department the services of such applicant may be, when such services do not come within the classification set up in the charter provisions creating the pension system.

I do not construe the charter as limiting the fire department pension benefits only to those members of the fire department who are constantly exposed to injury and death in the extinguishment of fires, but do feel that except for such firemen the pension benefits are not available to others unless they be engaged in the performance of duties which aid in the prevention of fires. Does appellant come within the last-named category of fire department employees? I think she does. As heretofore pointed out, the charter does not limit the pension benefits solely to those firemen engaged in a physical struggle with the flames, but includes those whose duties are to aid in the prevention as well as the extinguishment of fires. Surely it would not be contended that members of the fire department who check private premises for the presence thereon of combustible materials or other fire hazards would not be entitled to participate in the pension system. In People ex rel. Tucker v. Ennis, City Ct., 7 N.Y.S. 630, a telegraph operator in the employ of the fire department was held to be a member of the force for extinguishing fires. So also in People ex rel. Smith v. Wurster, 89 Hun 7, 35 N.Y.S. 86, it was held that a surgeon whose duty it was to attend sick members and answer fire alarms was a member of the force for extinguishing fires.

I do not wish to be understood as holding that every clerk or stenographer employed by the fire department is entitled to participate in the pension fund, but the duties performed by appellant herein were not merely clerical. They involved the exercise of discretion, judgment and initiative on her part. She classified, analyzed, and transmitted to various officials of the fire department her conclusions derived from such analyses. When the charter provisions herein are read in connection with the subject matter thereof, it seems to me at once apparent that participation in the pension fund is not to be restricted to those who actually combat the flames, but is available to those whose duties require them to aid in the prevention of conflagrations. Included among appellant's duties is the furnishing of daily reports to the fire prevention bureau, showing in which inspection districts fires occurred, the location of and nature of such fires, and the estimated loss sustained, as well as the cause of such fires. The reports furnished by appellant are checked against the fire prevention records to determine when the premises as shown in said reports were previously inspected, what conditions were found to exist, and whether the existing conditions constitute a violation of fire ordinances. The reports are also utilized to determine whether the district has been properly inspected by the inspector; to determine what type of buildings are proving the greatest fire hazard; to determine from the reports the greatest causes of fires and what measures to adopt to combat these causes, such as the drafting of new fire ordinances; to determine where the greatest number of fires is occurring in order to arrange the assignment of fire inspectors to the various districts; to determine the responsibility of inspectors and the question of whether they are fulfilling their duties; to make spot maps showing location of grass fires and other causes. Appellant's reports are also used in fire prevention instructions and public education regarding various fire hazards; in preparing fire facts for publicity and school use during Fire Prevention Week; in checking the number of fires, causes and losses before, during and after Fire Prevention Week, for the purpose of making a report to the National Fire Waste Council. They also serve to check on false alarms to determine the effectiveness of various methods of reducing the number of such alarms.

I have heretofore set forth some of the testimony given by ranking officials of the fire department as to the nature, value and indispensability of appellant's contribution to the fire-prevention program of the department. To the testimony already narrated might be added the testimony of a fire department captain in charge of the school detail of the fire prevention bureau, who testified that he was an instructor in the fire college, and "had specialized reports from Miss Knoll for instructional purposes as well as for inspection in the field and public education. * * * The reports aided and assisted me in performing my duties. * * * The reports must be made up with judgment and careful selection. The reports are available to me. I take the reports that Miss Knoll gives me, consider that information and use it in my work. She has to use judgment in selecting material and I, in turn, use judgment in distributing that material."

Respondent concedes the importance of the work done by appellant, so far as the efficient conduct of the fire department is concerned, but insists that it is not the duties performed by a member of the fire department, but the civil service status and the duties imposed upon holders of such civil service status that determine eligibility for pension benefits. In other words, respondent argues that if a regularly classified civil service fireman were assigned appellant's duties or were assigned to the salvage bureau or fire prevention bureau, such employee would nevertheless be entitled to participate in the pension system, not because of the duties he was performing, but because of the duties imposed by law upon one holding the civil service classification of a fireman. I do not concede the soundness of this argument, in view of the plain and understandable language of the charter, section 185 of which provides that "for the purpose of the provisions contained herein the fire department shall consist of all persons duly and regularly appointed in the fire department under civil service rules and regulations whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles, under whatever designation they may be described in any salary or departmental ordinance providing compensation for said department."

It is noteworthy that the section does not restrict the operation of the fire department pension fund to those members of the department of any particular designation described in any salary or departmental ordinance, but on the contrary, provides that notwithstanding any descriptive designation in the rules or ordinances, any employee whose duties involve the prevention or extinguishment of fires shall be regarded as a member of the fire department entitled to participate in the pension benefits of the fire department pension system. If the framers of the charter or the people in adopting the same had intended to limit the benefits of the system to those classified as firemen, it would have been very simple to so state. That they did not intend such a limitation is evident from the use of the language providing that any member of the fire department whose duty it is to prevent or extinguish fires in the City of Los Angeles shall be eligible to share in the pension funds regardless of the designation given him in any salary or departmental ordinance. From what has been said it follows that the action of the city council in passing an ordinance which placed appellant by reason of her civil service classification in the "Non-Pension" class was without force or effect because it contravened the plain intent, purpose and meaning of the charter provision. It is clear to me that appellant, because her duties related to and were part of the fire prevention program of the department, is entitled to share and participate in the benefits of the pension system set up by the charter for the benefit of members of the fire department as described and provided for in sections 180 to 189 of the charter.

For the reasons herein stated, as well as for the reasons advanced in the cases of Haas v. City of Los Angeles and McKeag v. Board of Pension Commissioners, Cal. App., 124 P.2d 109, I am of the opinion that the judgment of the trial court should be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

51 Cal.App.2d 29

SMITH v. SMITH.

Civ. 11773.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 1, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Execution 🔑391

In proceedings supplementary to execution levied on interest of beneficiary of spendthrift trust, wherein motion was made to release the levy, court had jurisdiction to determine issue of how much money was reasonably necessary for support of the beneficiary, as against contention that such issue could only be determined in equity by creditor's bill. Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

2. Execution 🔑358

The statutory "proceedings supplementary to execution" were designed to take the place of a creditor's bill and any property which was reachable by a creditor's bill may be reached by the process of such proceedings. Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proceedings Supplementary to Execution".

3. Execution 🔑358

"Supplementary proceedings" are special proceedings of statutory origin, summary in character, instituted subsequent to a judgment and to the issuance of execution and sometimes after return of execution unsatisfied for purpose of discovering and reaching assets of a judgment debtor and applying them to the satisfaction of the judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Supplementary Proceeding".

4. Appeal and error 🔑1036(3)

In creditor's proceedings supplementary to execution levied on interest of beneficiary of a spendthrift trust and involving issue of how much money was reasonably necessary for support of the beneficiary, where trustee was bound to pay beneficiary entire nine-tenths less $100 of income from trust, the creditor's rights were not affected by not having trustee brought in as a party, as against contention that trustee was a "necessary party" or "indispensable party". Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Party" and "Indispensable Party".

5. Execution 🔑402

In proceedings supplementary to execution levied on interest of beneficiary of a spendthrift trust, order declaring that $750 a month was reasonably necessary for beneficiary's support, that beneficiary's receipt from trust had fallen short and that beneficiary was entitled to the receipts exempt from legal process until they attained an average of $750 a month, was not objectionable on ground that it increased the beneficiary's allowance from the trust fund. Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

6. Execution 🔑366

In proceedings supplementary to execution levied on interest of beneficiary of spendthrift trust, evidence sustained finding that $750 a month was reasonably necessary for the beneficiary's support. Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

7. Trusts 🔑152

The beneficiary of a spendthrift trust is entitled to receive free from claims of his creditors sufficient income to support himself and those dependent upon him according to the mode of life to which they had been accustomed and to care for any affliction from which the beneficiary or his family may be suffering. Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)

The question regarding amount necessary for support of beneficiary of spendthrift trust which beneficiary is entitled to receive free from claims of creditors is one peculiarly proper for determination of trial court after hearing evidence regarding character, circumstances and condition of the beneficiary. Code Civ.Proc. § 714 et seq.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; William F. James, Judge.

Proceedings supplementary to execution by Grace Helen Smith against James Franklin Smith. From an order determining exemption from legal process of income from a spendthrift trust, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Joseph F. O'Malley, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Elliott Cook, of San Francisco, and Louis Oneal, of San Jose, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order made pursuant to proceedings supplementary to execution levied on the interest of a beneficiary of a spendthrift trust. Appellant participated in the proceedings without objection and among other things asked for general relief, but now contends that the court decided issues which could be heard and determined by it only in the exercise of its jurisdiction in equity, by way of a creditor's bill.

[1] The parties to the appeal were husband and wife. They separated in 1923, at which time they entered into a property settlement agreement. In 1928 appellant (the wife) obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce, wherein the court approved the property settlement agreement; and in 1929 the final decree of divorce was granted. In 1940 appellant obtained a judgment against respondent for moneys due under said agreement, and thereafter caused an execution to be levied on the trustee of a spendthrift trust created by the will of respondent's sister, of which respondent is principal beneficiary. Respondent moved to release the levy upon the ground that all moneys due him from the trust fund were necessary for his support according to his station in life. It was stated in the notice of motion that the motion would be based on respondent's affidavit and any evidence adduced at the hearing. Such affidavit was attached to the notice of motion, and annexed to the affidavit and made part thereof by special reference was respondent's verified demand wherein in detail he set forth his financial condition, the circumstances attending his mode of life, past and present, and his living requirements and necessities. Appellant appeared by counsel in opposition to the motion and presented her own affidavit wherein she admitted some of the averments made by respondent, and denied others. The affidavit then went on affirmatively to aver facts upon which she relied as showing that no part of the income from said trust was necessary for respondent's support; and the affidavit concluded as follows: "Wherefore, affiant prays the order of court denying said defendant's claim as an exemption of his beneficial interest under his herein stated testamentary trust, and that an order be made directing said testamentary trustee to withhold all of the aforesaid sums of money monthly now being paid to said defendant; and for such other and further relief or orders as to the court may seem meet and proper in the premises." When the motion came on for hearing the parties stipulated that respondent's right to the income from the trust was liable to the levy of execution, subject, however, to his claim of exemption by reason of the spendthrift provisions and his necessities of life; and thereupon the parties proceeded to try and have the court determine the issue of how much money was reasonably necessary for the support of respondent according to his station in life. Evidence was introduced by both parties, and after a full hearing on the merits the trial court made its order whereby it found and determined the maximum amount that was conservatively and reasonably necessary for respondent's support according to his station in life. It was ordered, therefore, that he was entitled to receive and take all income from said trust exempt from legal process "unless and until" the same "shall have attained" the maximum amount fixed by said order; and the sheriff was directed to release the levy of execution as to said income accordingly. Appellant, being dissatisfied with the maximum amount so fixed by the trial court, took this appeal from said order, and as stated, for the first time challenges the jurisdiction of the trial court to hear and determine the issue thus submitted to it. In this regard she contends that it could exercise its jurisdiction in a matter of this kind only in equity through the medium of a creditor's bill. There is no merit in the contention.

[2, 3] In this state it has been held repeatedly that statutory proceedings supplementary to execution (sec. 714 et seq., Code Civ.Proc.) were designed to take the place of a creditor's bill (Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 187; Staples v. May, 87 Cal. 178, 25 P. 346; Pacific Bank v. Robinson, 57 Cal. 520, 40 Am.Rep. 120; Travis Glass Co. v. Ibbetson, 186 Cal. 724, 200 P. 595; McCullough v. Clark, 41 Cal. 298; McKenzie v. Hill, 9 Cal.App. 78, 98 P. 55; Herrlich v. Kaufmann, 99 Cal. 271, 33 P. 857, 37 Am.St.Rep. 50; 7 Cal.Jur. p. 800); so that any property which was reachable by a creditor's bill may now be reached by the process of such proceedings. Staples v. May, supra; Pacific Bank v. Robinson, supra. See, also, 11 Cal.Jur. p. 156. As said in 11 Cal.Jur. pp. 146, 147: "Supplementary proceedings are special proceedings of statutory origin, summary in character, instituted subsequent to a judgment in an action and to the issuance of execution, and sometimes after the return of execution unsatisfied, for the purpose of discovering and reaching assets of a judgment debtor, and applying them to the satisfaction of the judgment. They are regarded as proceedings in an action, but auxiliary and supplementary thereto. Under the old system of practice when a judgment creditor had exhausted the remedy by writ of execution, he had a right to invoke the jurisdiction of a court of equity by a proceeding known as a creditor's suit for the purpose of compelling a discovery of assets tangible or intangible and applying them to the satisfaction of his execution. And formerly this was the only method of reaching assets which could not be seized on execution. Supplementary proceedings were created to provide an easier and less expensive method of reaching the same result, and are intended as a substitute for creditors' suits."

In the leading case of Herrlich v. Kaufmann, supra, 99 Cal. at pages 274, 275, 276, 33 P. at page 858, 37 Am.St.Rep. 50, it was said: "Formerly, assets of a judgment debtor, which could not be effectively seized by the sheriff under an execution, such as a debt owing to the defendant, could be reached, upon a proper showing, through a court of equity, by means of a creditor's bill or suit; but in this state, and in most of the other states, a legal remedy is afforded by statutes providing for proceedings supplementary to execution, and the general rule is that when there are such statutory proceedings they must be pursued. * * * It has been several times held by this court that the statutory proceedings supplementary to execution are a substitute for a creditor's bill. In Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. [187], 201, the court say: 'In reference to the chapter prescribing the mode of proceedings supplementary to execution, it seems clear that those provisions were intended as a substitute for what was called "a creditor's bill." This is so stated by the practice commissioners in their original note to this chapter in the New York Code. The design was, in the language of those commissioners, "to furnish a cheaper and easier method." The different sections of this chapter, when taken together, form a consistent and harmonious whole, and, when fairly and liberally carried out, afford a cheaper and easier method than the former one, by creditor's bill.' In [Pacific] Bank v. Robinson, 57 Cal. [520], 522 [40 Am.Rep. 120], the court say: 'Proceedings under sections 714 to 721 and section 574 of the Code of Civil Procedure were intended as a substitute for the creditor's bill, as formerly used in chancery. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. [187], 201; Lynch v. Johnson, 48 N.Y. [27], 33. So that any property which was reached by a creditor's bill may now be reached by the process of proceedings supplementary to execution.' In Habenicht v. Lissak, 78 Cal. [351], 357, 20 P. 874 [5 L.R.A. 713, 12 Am.St.Rep. 63], the court say: 'In [Pacific] Bank v. Robinson, 57 Cal. 520 [40 Am.Rep. 120], it was held that the proceedings supplemental to execution are intended to take the place of the creditor's bill.' See, also, McCullough v. Clark, 41 Cal. [298], 302; High v. Bank [of Commerce], 95 Cal. 386, 30 P. 556 [29 Am.St. Rep. 121]. Also, Graham v. [La Crosse, etc.], R. Co., 10 Wis. 459; Hexter v. Clifford, 5 Colo. 168; and cases cited in note to Lathrop v. Clapp [40 N.Y. 328], 100 Am.Dec. [493], 501, in support of the statement therein made, that 'in nearly all of the states these proceedings supplemental to execution are regarded as a substitute for the creditor's bill of the chancery practice.' It is not necessary, however, to go to the length of saying that a creditor's bill could not be sustained here under any circumstances, for there might, perhaps, be cases in which the statutory proceedings would not afford adequate relief. But they must be pursued, unless in those exceptional cases in which it appears that equity must be invoked because legal remedies are unavailing."

It follows, therefore, that since the parties here elected to invoke the summary proceedings provided by the statute, rather than have their controversy heard and determined in equity by way of a creditor's bill, it was within the scope of the trial court's jurisdiction so to hear and determine the matter at issue in such proceeding.

The case of Canfield v. Security-First Nat. Bank, 13 Cal.2d 1, 87 P.2d 830, 846, involved in part a similar issue, and in passing upon the question of the application of section 859 of the Civil Code the court there said: "Appellants' rights are given to them by section 859 of the Civil Code—that is by creditor's bill in equity;" and doubtless the matter here could have been so heard and determined. But there is nothing to be found in the Canfield decision, nor in said section 859, which declares that a creditor's bill is the exclusive remedy. Here, unlike the Canfield case, there were no intervening rights of third parties, for under the terms of the spendthrift trust respondent was entitled to a definite nine-tenths of the income after payment of one tenth plus $100 to another. Therefore, even though the trial court had heard and determined the matter through the medium of a creditor's bill rather than by way of this supplementary proceeding, the subject matter of the controversy, the parties thereto, and the issue involved, would have been precisely the same. The same tribunal was vested with original jurisdiction over both cases at law and suits in equity; therefore, since as we have seen under the decisions above cited the controversy could be heard and determined either as a proceeding at law or in equity, and the parties chose to have it disposed of as a proceeding at law, there was no want of jurisdiction in the trial court so to do. If as appellant asserts a contrary rule prevails in some other state, it is doubtless in conflict with the law of this state, and therefore is not here controlling.

[4] Appellant also makes for the first time on appeal the point that the trustee was a necessary and indispensable party to the present proceeding. But the record shows that the execution was levied on the trustee, and that he made answer to the sheriff at the time of the service of the writ; furthermore, the proceeding in no way involved the trustee's title, interests, discretion or management of the trust fund. If the amount to be paid to the beneficiary had been discretionary with the trustee, as in the Canfield case, then a different situation would have been presented; but here, as stated, the trustee was bound to pay to this beneficiary the entire nine-tenths less $100 of the income from the trust; consequently appellant's rights herein were in no way affected by not having the trustee brought in as a party, if in fact he was not already made so by levying the execution on him.

[5] Another contention urged by appellant is that the effect of the order was to "increase" respondent's allowance from the trust fund to $750 a month. But a reading of the order shows that the contention is without merit. The contention is based upon the fact that from 1935, the date of the rendition of the decree of distribution, to October, 1940, the date of the levy of the execution, respondent received from said trust fund monthly payments ranging only from $210.48 to $548.17. The order declared that "a sum of $750 a month is conservatively and reasonably necessary for his support in accordance with his station in life," and that "his receipts from said trust are wholly disbursed so far as they will go for necessary personal and household expenses. They have fallen short, and must continue to fall short so far as is now known, of what is reasonably necessary for his support in accordance with his station in life. He is entitled to receive and take the same exempt from legal process and the claims of creditors, and this plaintiff's claim thereto, unless and until they shall have attained an average amount of $750 a month, the average to be taken in each calendar year." (Italics added.) It will be seen, therefore, that the court simply decided the issue presented, that is, the amount reasonably necessary for respondent's support according to his station in life; and held in effect that any sum paid in excess of this amount was liable to the claims of his creditors. Before the court could find whether there was a surplus, it was necessary for it to determine the amount necessary for the defendant's support, and in doing so it was within its power to fix such sum in excess of what respondent was actually receiving, under the circumstances. It may be conceded that if respondent's financial condition becomes changed, for instance if the trust income ceases to be his sole means of support, such change could be urged as ground for modification of the present order.

The statement is made in appellant's brief that the trial court was "informed in limine that there was then pending a creditor's bill filed by the plaintiff elsewhere;" but this statement is positively denied in respondent's brief, and the record fails to disclose anything which may be taken in support of appellant's statement or from which it may be inferred that a creditor's bill was pending at the time these supplementary proceedings took place. In any event, nowhere does the record show, nor does appellant claim, that she made any objection whatever to the hearing or determination of the issue in the present proceeding.

[6] Nor can we sustain appellant's second major ground of appeal that the evidence is insufficient to support the trial court's basic finding that $750 a month is conservatively and reasonably necessary for respondent's support in accordance with his station in life.

A former appeal was taken by appellant from a judgment in respondent's favor, based on the verdict of a jury in an action brought by appellant to recover money claimed to be due under an agreement made in 1928 modifying the agreement of 1923, wherein the judgment was affirmed (Smith v. Smith, 7 Cal.App.2d 271, 46 P.2d 232); and the background of the case as it appears from the decision rendered on that appeal and as shown by the record herein may be stated as follows: Respondent is a retired physician, and at the time these supplementary proceedings were had was 67 years of age, and resided at the Huntington Apartments in San Francisco. He is a graduate of Cooper Medical School and the Royal College of Surgeons in England, and at the time of his retirement in 1929 enjoyed a lucrative practice averaging $25,000 a year. Following his separation from appellant in 1923 and during the last years of his practice his income from sources apart from his practice ranged from $200,000 to $400,000 a year. But subsequent to his retirement and during the ensuing depression years, the financial reverses he suffered and the heavy expenses he was compelled to meet wiped out his entire fortune, so that for several years preceding the levy of the execution herein his only source of income was from the trust created by his sister's will; and because of having undergone a major abdominal operation a few years ago he has been incapacitated from again entering the medical practice or engaging in any gainful occupation.

By the terms of the 1923 property settlement agreement respondent agreed to pay appellant $250 monthly during her lifetime; and he fully performed his part of that agreement up to May, 1928, when a new agreement was made. It confirmed the 1923 agreement, but provided that the monthly payments be increased to $300; and respondent further agreed to make a cash payment to appellant of $10,000, in consideration of which appellant agreed to refrain from attacking the agreement or from making any demands on respondent or his property; also from molesting or interfering with respondent or his full enjoyment of his property. It was further agreed that upon the breach by appellant of the latter promise, the 1928 agreement should be of no further force; that the rights of the parties should thereafter be governed by the 1923 agreement, and that the extra $50 a month and the $10,000 theretofore paid pursuant to the 1928 agreement should be applied as advance payments on the 1923 agreement. On the day following the execution of the 1928 agreement appellant obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce, and therein the property settlement agreement was approved by the court. In January, 1929, respondent retired from the practice; a few months later the final decree of divorce was entered; and some time thereafter, the year not appearing in the record, respondent again married. He paid the $10,000 and the monthly $300 payments to appellant in compliance with the 1928 agreement until October, 1931, when his monthly payments grew less; and about April, 1933, he discontinued them entirely. Thereafter and in 1934 appellant commenced an action on the 1928 agreement, and as a defense respondent pleaded a breach by appellant of the molestation covenants thereof, and claimed that the total extra payments made by him under the 1928 agreement were in excess of all sums accruing under the 1923 agreement. The jury found for respondent, and as stated the judgment entered thereon was affirmed on appeal, the reviewing court saying in part that the evidence of molestation showed that respondent felt obliged to move from San Francisco and seek a new and less troubled home and field for practice in Los Angeles. Thereafter, due to heavy financial losses and the fact that he had given up his medical practice, he fell in arrears in making the payments required by the 1923 agreement, and in June, 1940, appellant obtained a judgment against him therefor in the sum of approximately $11,500. Meanwhile respondent's sister died, leaving the will creating said spendthrift trust. The decree of distribution was rendered in September, 1935, and as above mentioned, from that time until October, 1940, when the execution was levied, respondent's nine-tenths of the income from the trust ranged from some $210 to about $548 monthly, which was paid to him by the trustee.

The trial court found and the evidence shows that respondent has always been accustomed to all reasonable comforts in his home and surroundings, including servants and automobiles, and to extended trips abroad; and that his circle of friends embraces persons of independent means, prominent in professional, business and social groups in his home community. The evidence further shows that on account of his financial reverses he has been compelled to dispense with the use of an automobile and with servants, except occasional household help; that he has been forced to give up recreations and club memberships, and has minimized entertainment of friends to a point where he can but occasionally have guests at his home; that he has had to forego travelling, and many other pleasures he formerly enjoyed; that all of the income from the trust has been expended for his necessary living expenses and household bills, so far as it would go; and that the receipts have fallen very considerably short of his reasonable necessities of life.

[7, 8] Appellant argues that the trial court fixed the amount necessary to support respondent on the basis of his station in life as it was ten years ago, when he was extremely wealthy, rather than on the basis of what is now actually necessary for his support; and in this connection she avers in her affidavit that standing in his present wife's name is an elaborate home in Palo Alto. Respondent testified, however, that the property in Palo Alto is heavily mortgaged; and there is in his testimony and affidavit ample evidentiary support of the trial court's findings in the particulars in which they are attacked by appellant; and there can be no comparison whatever between this case and the Canfield case, wherein it was shown that the beneficiary's "needs" therein included unreasonable extravagances and luxuries, and expenses for lavish entertainment and gambling losses. As said in the Canfield case, the statute fixes no standards by which the amounts necessary for the support of the beneficiary are to be ascertained; and that in ascertaining the proper allowance, the courts of this state have held that the beneficiary is entitled to receive free from the claims of his creditors sufficient income to support himself and those dependent upon him, according to the mode of life to which they have been accustomed, and to care for any affliction from which he or his family may be suffering; that the amount varies according to the station in life of the beneficiary; that no absolute fixed sum can be used to apply to all cases; that the "cost of living, cost of housing, medical cost, the manner in which the beneficiary has been reared, the number and health of his dependents, his own health, his entire background—all these and perhaps others should be considered." [13 Cal.2d 1, 87 P.2d 841.] Furthermore, as pointed out in that case, the question is one peculiarly proper, primarily at least, for the determination of the trial court, after hearing evidence as to the character, circumstances and condition of the party. Applying the foregoing legal principles to the present case, it is our conclusion that the trial court's findings are not wanting in evidentiary support, and that the maximum amount fixed is not unreasonable.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and B. C. JONES, J., pro tem., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 14

BLACKMAN et al. v. DALTON'S AUTO & FURNITURE LOANS, Ltd. et al.

Civ. 12801.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 31, 1942.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑230(9)

In action for rent by two of beneficiaries of trust who signed the lease, lease was not inadmissible on ground of "variance" because lease purported to be a lease by a trust and trustee as lessors and not by the plaintiffs, where lessee was charged with knowledge that lease was not signed by the trust or trustee but by individual beneficiaries as lessors.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Variance".

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑62(1)

Where lessee signed lease using a name different from name appearing as lessee in body of lease and accepted lease as signed by individual trust beneficiaries as lessors even though it appeared from body of lease that trust and a trustee were lessors and lessee accepted keys, entered into possession and was not disturbed therein and lease was treated as fully executed, lessee could not, in beneficiaries' action for rent, deny beneficiaries' title.

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑63(1)

A tenant in undisputed possession under lease cannot question his landlord's title.

4. Action 🔑24

"Mutuality of remedy" is a rule of equity and hence does not apply in action for rent.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutuality of Remedy".

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑24(1)

Where lessors were liable to lessee on implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, and lessee was obligated on its covenant to pay rent, lease was not invalid for lack of "mutuality of obligation".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutuality of Obligation".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Myron Westover, Judge.

Action by F. C. Blackman and others against Dalton's Auto and Furniture Loans, Limited, and others to recover rent wherein defendants filed a cross complaint. From a judgment for plaintiffs, Dalton's, a corporation, appeals.

Affirmed.

Cannon & Callister and Reed E. Callister, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. Ward Johnson, of Long Beach, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

The complaint for rent under a written lease was filed in the municipal court. A cross-complaint for $2,500 damages was filed also in the municipal court, and the action was transferred to the superior court. Trial was without a jury and judgment was for plaintiffs Blackman and Brandenstein upon the complaint against Dalton's, a corporation. There is no provision in the judgment as to the cross-complaint, however, the conclusions of law state that the cross-complainant is not entitled to recover. The appeal is by defendant Dalton's from the judgment.

The complaint alleged that plaintiffs and defendants entered into a written lease for a period of one year to commence on March 29, 1939. In answer to the complaint defendant Dalton's, a corporation, denied that it entered into a lease with plaintiffs.

At the trial it was stipulated that the lease sued upon was signed by duly qualified agents of defendant Dalton's, a corporation, and that no rent had been paid and that the lease had been signed by F. C. Blackman and Fannie Brandenstein. It is stated in the first paragraph of the lease that the lease is between F. C. Blackman Trust No. 1896, Western Trust and Savings Bank, known as lessors, and Dalton's Auto and Furniture Loans, Ltd., known as lessees. At the end of the lease it is signed "Fabe C. Blackman Fannie Brandenstein Lessors" and "Dalton's W. C. Fonda Pres. R. A. Bashep Sect. Lessees." Plaintiffs offered the lease in evidence. Defendant objected to the offer on the ground that said lease purported to be a lease between F. C. Blackman Trust No. 1896, Western Trust and Savings Bank of Long Beach, as lessors; and the lease had not been executed by the parties named in the lease and had no bearing on the issues; and that said lease lacked mutuality; and that there was no showing that F. C. Blackman and Fannie Brandenstein were authorized to sign the lease for the trust or the bank.

Before the court ruled upon the objection a declaration of trust, known as the F. C. Blackman Trust No. 1896, and the amendments thereto were offered in evidence by defendant and received. That declaration of trust, executed in 1936, and the amendments thereto show that the beneficiaries and their interest at the time of the making of the lease were: Fannie Brandenstein, one-half; and F. C. Blackman and La Fern L. Blackman, his wife, one-half; and that the trustee was Western Trust and Savings Bank, a corporation; and that the property involved herein was a part of the trust property and was conveyed to the trustee by "deed absolute in form" prior to the making of the lease; and that the trustors reserved to themselves the right to full and undisturbed possession of the whole of the trust estate without any rental or accounting to the trustee; and that the trustee agreed to lease the property upon the written order of the trustors. The court then overruled the objection which had been made by defendant to plaintiffs' offer of the lease in evidence and received the lease in evidence.

The keys to the building were turned over to the defendants and were not returned. Soon after the delivery of the keys the defendant placed various billboards and signs on the outside of the building and they remained there for four or five weeks.

[1] The court properly overruled defendant's objection to the offer of the lease in evidence. There was no material variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof. It was alleged that "plaintiffs" entered into a lease. The lease offered in evidence was signed by two of the four plaintiffs. The two who signed were two of the three beneficiaries under the trust, referred to as a plaintiff. It does not appear that the "trust" is an entity or has capacity to sue. The bank was the trustee subject to the reservations above mentioned. Although it is stated in the first paragraph of the lease that the "trust" and the bank are lessors, the lease was signed by the two plaintiffs Blackman and Brandenstein, as lessors. It will be noted that the name of the lessee as stated in the body of the lease, to wit: "Dalton's Auto and Furniture Loans, Ltd.", is also different from the name of the lessee as signed at the end of the lease, to wit: "Dalton's." The defendant is charged with knowledge that the lease was not signed by the "trust" and the bank, as lessors, but was signed by the two individual plaintiffs, as lessors. Defendant, therefore, was not misled or taken by surprise as to what lease was referred to in the allegations of the complaint.

[2] Defendant signed the lease, as lessee, using a name different from the name appearing as lessee in the body of the lease, and accepted the lease as signed by plaintiffs Blackman and Brandenstein, as lessors, even though it appeared from the body of the lease that there was a trust known as the "F. C. Blackman Trust No. 1896" and that the "trust" and the Western Trust and Savings Bank were the lessors; and entered into possession of the property. Defendant accepted the keys and has not returned them, and placed signs upon the building and the signs remained there four or five weeks, and the defendant was not disturbed in its possession of the premises. The lease was treated by the parties who signed it as a fully executed instrument at the time possession of the premises was delivered and accepted. The defendant, having gone into possession under these circumstances and its possession not having been disturbed, is not permitted in this action for rent to deny the title of those who signed the lease as lessors. Lataillade v. Santa Barbara Gas Co., 1881, 58 Cal. 4, 5; Reynolds v. Lewis, 1881, 59 Cal. 20, 21; San Juan Gold Co. v. San Juan Ridge, etc.,

Association, 1939, 34 Cal.App.2d 159, 167, 93 P.2d 582.

[3] A concise statement of the principles applicable here is in Connolly v. Kilcourse, 1934, 285 Mass. 398, 189 N.E. 199, as follows: "A tenant in undisturbed possession under a lease cannot question his lessor's title. * * * He has agreed to pay for use of the premises and he is liable on his covenant so long as he has the use. It is immaterial whether or not the landlord has a good title. * * *

"We need not consider questions of title even if they have been argued, and although the parties tried the case upon these immaterial issues. The only defence possible for the defendant is eviction by superior title, and he has not been evicted, nor has he so pleaded."

[4, 5] Defendant asserts that the lease is invalid because it lacks mutuality. It is not clear whether the reference is to mutuality of remedy or mutuality of obligation. Mutuality of remedy is a rule of equity, and therefore, does not apply in this action for rent. There is mutuality of obligation, the plaintiffs Blackman and Brandenstein being liable to defendant on the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment (LaFrance v. Kashishian, 1928, 204 Cal. 643, 269 P. 655), and the defendant being obligated on his covenant to pay rent.

The judgment is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 111

APPIER v. HAYES.

Civ. 12903.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 2, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)

Where trial court found that officer assaulted minor and struck him on or about the face, failure to make finding on issue regarding whether officer used only such force as was necessary to place the minor under arrest was harmless since, in view of finding made, a finding on such issue would have been adverse to the police officer.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)

Even though the trial court fails to adopt findings on material issues, judgment will not be reversed provided the adoption of such omitted findings would not require the rendering of a judgment different from that which was rendered.

3. Assault and battery 🔑35

In minor's action for assault committed by police officer, evidence sustained finding that officer assaulted minor and struck him on or about the face and record would not warrant conclusion that judgment for minor was a miscarriage of justice.

4. Assault and battery 🔑27

In minor's action for assault committed by police officer, evidence of reputation of neighborhood in which minor was arrested and of persons who habitually congregated there was properly excluded where there was no evidence that the minor was at any time connected with such persons or the gang which congregated in the neighborhood.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1004(1)

In absence of showing of passion or prejudice on part of trier of facts, an award of damages will not be disturbed.

6. Assault and battery 🔑40

$500 damages for assault of minor who was struck on or about the face with such force that his nose was injured and two teeth were damaged to extent that reasonable value of dental treatment would be $125 was not excessive.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Orlando H. Rhodes, Judge pro tem.

Action for damages for assault and battery by Reford Appier, a minor, etc., against Walter C. Hayes. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., W. Jos. McFarland, Asst. City Atty., and Wm. U. Handy, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert Ryan and Grover Bossert, both of Santa Monica, for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This appeal from a judgment in favor of the minor plaintiff, in an action for damages for assault and battery brought against defendant police officer, is presented to this court upon a bill of exceptions and appellant's opening brief, it being contended (1) that the court erred in failing to find on the issue of necessary force, in view of the fact that appellant alleged in his answer to the complaint that he used such force and no more than was necessary to effect respondent's arrest; (2) that the court erred in the rejection of certain evidence offered by appellant; (3) that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings as to the amount of damages awarded and that said damages are excessive.

The complaint alleged that the defendant police officer employed by the city of Los Angeles "did willfully and unlawfully assault the plaintiff and strike him on and about the face and body with his fists and with a blackjack or 'billy' * * * ", and asked for general damages in the sum of $5,000, punitive damages in the sum of $5,000, and special damages (1) $300 for dental service treating injuries to teeth, and (2) $300 for services of a physician and surgeon in treating an injured nose.

The answer, among other things, alleged that appellant placed respondent under arrest "and without subjecting plaintiff to any more restraint or force than necessary for his arrest and detention, proceeded to conduct plaintiff to the police car nearby and plaintiff thereupon resisted arrest, whereupon this defendant used such force—and no more—as was necessary to restrain plaintiff."

The trial court sitting without a jury found "1. That on or about the 4th day of November, 1939, in the city of Los Angeles, California, the defendant Walter C. Hayes did assault the plaintiff and strike him on or about the face.

"2. That as a result of said assault, plaintiff's face was bruised and he sustained injury to his teeth, to-wit: the lower left, central and lateral incisors were broken lingually and approximately ⅓ of their incisal surface was also fractured. The lower right lateral incisor was broken laterally and incisally. That as a result of said damage to plaintiff's teeth it was necessary that he engage the services of a dentist to treat the same. That the reasonable value of the said dental treatment is the sum of $125 and that plaintiff has sustained special damage in that sum.

"3. That as a result of said assault plaintiff sustained general damages in the sum of $625.00."

Accordingly, judgment was entered for the sum of $750. Thereafter appellant's motion for a new trial was denied provided respondent agreed in writing to a reduction of the amount of the judgment from $750 to $500. Respondent on July 29, 1940 filed his written agreement to such reduction. Appellant's principal assignment of error is failure of the court to find "on the issue of whether the force used was in excess of that necessary to arrest the plaintiff."

An examination of the record herein reveals that on the evening of November 4, 1939, respondent Appier, 19 years of age, with several other young men drove into a parking lot located at the rear of some business houses facing on Santa Monica Boulevard in West Los Angeles. This lot provided free parking space to patrons of a motion picture theater in the neighborhood. An argument ensued between John Ware, the parking attendant, and Raymond Coffman, respondent's cousin, who was the driver of the car in which respondent was then seated, as to where the car should be parked. Meanwhile, appellant and another police officer drove into the parking lot and appellant handed Coffman a traffic ticket for unlawfully crossing a pedestrian zone just before driving into the parking lot. Ware requested the officers to settle the argument he was having with the boys, but the officers refused, saying it was not a criminal offense and they could not interfere. Respondent and Coffman became angry at Ware's statements to the police officers, and told him if he would come out into the alley they would "work him over," whereupon Ware left the parking lot and proceeded to the entrance of the neighborhood theatre. When the officers and the boys arrived at the theatre a few moments later, Ware requested plaintiff's arrest.

With respect to what then took place, respondent testified in brief that appellant took him by the left shoulder and right arm, twisting the right arm behind respondent and pushed him in front of him to the police car which had proceeded up the alley to the parking lot; that he went with the officer willingly; that when they reached the police car appellant walked respondent directly into the car and held him there while he (appellant) opened the rear door with his left hand, whereupon he turned respondent around and hit him in the mouth and nose with his fist, all in one motion, and then pushed him into the car; that appellant then climbed into the car and beat respondent about the face, head and body and hit him in the mouth with a blackjack or some other hard instrument, cracking the enamel on his teeth; that the blow struck outside the car caused respondent's nose to bleed; that appellant continued to beat respondent continuously until they arrived at the police station which was approximately two blocks away; that upon arriving there he was conducted to the washroom where he washed blood from his face; that he was covered with blood from head to foot; that he remained in the washroom three or four minutes during which time his nose stopped bleeding; that his face was swollen and bruised and he thought his nose was broken; that the jail physician who examined him said his nose was only bruised and would be all right; that respondent's underlip was cut and he was bleeding at the mouth; that his lips and mouth were swollen out of shape for several days; that he was arrested Saturday night, November 4, 1939, and was released on Monday, the 6th, no complaint having been filed against him by Ware, the parking lot attendant; that on November 8th, he went to a dentist to have his teeth examined.

The dentist who examined him testified that he found that respondent's lower right central and right lateral incisors were broken lingually, approximately one-third of their lingual surface being broken away, leaving a ragged edge on the teeth so that the tongue was slightly chafed; that in his opinion the enamel had been broken recently and could have been broken at any time within the week, otherwise they would have been stained; by reason of the breakage of the enamel the teeth were not in acclusion; that there would be a slight space between the upper and lower teeth when brought together; that the reasonable value for putting a porcelain cover over the back of the teeth where the enamel was broken was $125; that by using gold instead of porcelain the cost would be $30; that the gold would last as long and would be every bit as good as the porcelain, there being no difference between the effectiveness of the two materials; that the life of the teeth would be the same and the only difference in appearance would be that a thin gold line would be visible on the edge of the two injured teeth. This witness further testified that when he examined respondent on November 8, 1939, he did not recall that respondent's lips were swollen, nor did he see any bruises on his lips, but that the gums were slightly inflamed at the roots of the two injured teeth.

Several witnesses testified that they saw appellant strike respondent as he put him in the car; that respondent was not resisting the officer; that they did not see what happened inside the car.

John Ware, the parking lot attendant, testified that "when first arrested plaintiff objected and as defendant started to take him up the alley he held back; that defendant pushed him along; that the witness followed them about fifteen feet behind; that when they got to the car plaintiff turned around and faced defendant; that there was a moment's pause, and then defendant hit plaintiff on the side of the face and pushed him into the car; that no blows were struck in the car."

Appellant testified he told respondent he was under arrest and thereupon took hold of him by the right arm; that "plaintiff jerked away and defendant then grabbed his arm tighter and twisted the right arm behind him; that there was a distance of some 60 to 70 feet from where plaintiff was arrested on the sidewalk to the police car in the parking lot up the alley; that the plaintiff resisted by holding back and 'wrestling with' him; that plaintiff was not fighting but he was not going willingly; that the witness walked the plaintiff right into the car and held him there until he had opened the rear door of the car with his left hand; that he then let go of the plaintiff and told him to get into the car; that the plaintiff instead of getting into the car turned, and with his back to the car, faced the defendant, doubled up his fists and put up his hands as though to strike a blow; that he believed that if he did not hit the plaintiff that he (the plaintiff) would hit him (the defendant); that defendant thereupon hit plaintiff a short, sharp blow on the side of the mouth and nose with the 'heel' of his open hand; that at the same time he pushed plaintiff into the car where he landed across the seat 'on his ribs and rump'; that the witness then got into the car; that he did not strike the plaintiff after he got into the car; that he was busy getting back his wind."

The officer further testified that when respondent threw up his fists as though to strike him, the witness hit the plaintiff not only in order to protect himself, but because he believed such force was necessary to effect the arrest; that there was a large group of men in the vicinity of the police car; that he believed them to be friends of respondent and that if the arrest was not made quickly there would be a free-for-all fight.

The several officers who saw respondent when he was brought into the police station testified to the effect that there was no blood on respondent's clothes; that respondent had been drinking; that his face was not bruised, cut or disfigured in any way; that his appearance was normal, and that he complained of no injury except that to his nose. The police surgeon at the West Los Angeles Station testified that he examined respondent on the night of November 4, 1939, and found his nose was bruised but not otherwise injured; that he observed no other injuries to the respondent's face and that respondent complained of no other injuries; that he did not examine respondent for alcoholism.

[1] Upon these facts, the trial court made the findings of fact heretofore recited, to the effect that appellant "did assault the plaintiff and strike him on or about the face." While it is true the answer alleged that appellant used only such force as was necessary to place respondent under arrest, and the trial court failed to adopt findings in that regard, such omission is harmless. Since the court found that appellant "did assault the plaintiff," a finding on the issue presented by the affirmative defense set up in the answer would necessarily have been adverse to appellant.

[2] "It is established law that even though the court fails to adopt findings on material issues involved in the case the judgment will not be reversed on that account provided the adoption of such omitted findings would not require the rendering of a different judgment from that which was rendered." Strauch v. Bieloh, 16 Cal.App. 2d 278, 282, 60 P.2d 582, 584, and cases there cited.

[3] An examination of the evidence discloses that the findings of fact and the judgment are supported thereby, and that nothing has been shown which would warrant the conclusion that the result was a miscarriage of justice.

[4] The trial court properly rejected evidence of the reputation of the neighborhood in which the arrest was made and of the persons who habitually congregated there, it having been stipulated that there was no evidence that respondent was at any time connected with such persons or "gangs of young ruffians" who congregated in the neighborhood.

[5, 6] In the absence of a showing of passion or prejudice on the part of the trier of the facts, an award of damages will not be disturbed. The amount of the judgment is not excessive if the testimony of respondent is to be believed.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed; the appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 18

COLGROVE v. LOMPOC MODEL T CLUB, Inc., et al.

Civ. 13004.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 31, 1942.

1. Negligence ⚷32(1)

The rule that only duty owing to licensee is to refrain from wilful or wanton conduct applies only to cases relating to duty owed with respect to condition of premises, that is, to cases involving "passive negligence" as distinguished from "active negligence".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Active Negligence" and "Passive Negligence".

2. Automobiles ⚷155

If plaintiff attending automobile racetrack was a licensee and was upon part of premises where operator of automobile which had been driven in the races knew or had good reason to expect him to be, operator owed duty to plaintiff to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to him.

3. Appeal and error ⟹1066
Trial ⟹253(4)

In action by spectator at automobile race track for injuries sustained when struck by racing automobile, brought against both operator of track and driver, where one of issues was whether there was an agency relationship between driver and track operator, instructions that only duty owed to plaintiff, if a licensee, was to refrain from wilful or wanton injury, which contained no provision relative to duty of track operator based upon an agency relationship, were prejudicially erroneous, in view of evidence.

4. Appeal and error ⟹216(2)

If law applicable to facts of case is stated correctly in a general charge, a party may not, in absence of a request for more specific instruction, complain that a more specific instruction should have been given.

5. Appeal and error ⟹216(3)

Where instructions as given were erroneous, plaintiff was not precluded from asserting that error was committed, even though he did not request a proper instruction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; C. Douglas Smith, Judge.

Action by Earl D. Colgrove against Lompoc Model T Club, Inc., and another for personal injuries, wherein a judgment was entered in favor of both defendants. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Glines & Libeu, of Santa Maria, for appellants.

Fred A. Shaeffer, of Santa Maria, and Wilbur D. Garber, of Temple City, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

The action is for damages for personal injuries to plaintiff as a result of being struck by an automobile driven by defendant Cazenave upon the premises of the defendant Lompoc Model "T" Club, Inc. Judgment was upon a verdict in favor of both defendants. The appeal is from an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial. In granting the motion the judge signed an order as follows: "The motion of plaintiff for a new trial is granted on the ground of errors of law occurring in the trial."

Defendant Lompoc Model "T" Club, Inc., operated a race track for model "T" Fords about 10 miles from Lompoc. The track was oblong with the longer sides on the north and south. A single cable, referred to as a fence, extended along the north side of the track about forty feet from the north edge of the track. The space between the cable and the track was slightly rough and had some weeds on it. On July 23, 1939, plaintiff attended the races after having paid an admission charge. He watched the races from a point at the northeast turn of the track just outside the cable. About 5 or 10 minutes after the last race he started to walk to his car which was parked at the northwest turn of the track. About 2,000 persons attended the races that day and cars were parked almost solidly along the outside of the cable and, as he walked, many of the cars were moving preparatory to leaving. After he had walked for some distance outside the cable among the parked and moving cars and in the brush he went under the cable and walked toward his car and was struck by a race car which was being driven by defendant Cazenave. There was testimony that signs were on the cable and trees stating "Keep off tracks" and that announcements were made over a loud speaker system during and after the races to the effect that the people should keep off the tracks; and there was testimony in opposition thereto. There were from 25 to 150 persons in the area on the track side of the cable at the time of the collision. Defendant Cazenave was a member of the Model "T" Club and had driven in the races that day, and because he had steering gear trouble with his car he was ordered out of the race and required to wait inside the track until the race was finished. After the race he and two girls entered the front seat of the race car and he started to give the girls a ride around the track and was traveling about 30 miles per hour, when according to some testimony his car went out of control, and struck plaintiff.

Appellants (defendants) contend that no errors of law occurred during the trial and that the order granting a new trial upon that ground is erroneous.

It is the position of respondent (plaintiff) that in this case, in which plaintiff was injured by a moving automobile, that certain instructions given at the request of defendants to the effect that the only duty owed to plaintiff, if a licensee, was to refrain from wilful or wanton injury, were erroneous for the reason they were not applicable to the facts in this case; that those instructions apply to cases in which no overt act of negligence is involved such as cases relating to the duty owing to a licensee with respect to the condition of the premises or, as sometimes expressed, to cases involving passive negligence as distinguished from active negligence.

Plaintiff further contends that, even if it be assumed that he was a licensee rather than an invitee, the duty owed to plaintiff by the operator of the automobile was not merely to refrain from wilfully or wantonly injuring him but was the duty to exercise ordinary care. This contention is sustained.

The instructions, above referred to, are as follows:

"No. 49, Defendants'. Your are further instructed that a person who enters the premises of another at the express or implied invitation of the occupant of said premises is an invitee. However, when said person uses or traverses a portion of said premises where he is not invited or normally expected to go, and the object of his visit to that portion of the premises is solely for his own benefit, pleasure, convenience or curiousity, having no relation to the business of the occupant of the premises, he is at best a mere licensee, the license being enjoyed by him with its concomitant perils, and with the assumption of all risks attached to the condition of that portion of the premises, or which are incident to the operation of the business conducted thereon, the occupant owing him no duty, except to refrain from doing him wilful or wanton injury. Given"

"No. 50, Defendants'. You are further instructed that if you find that at the time and place of the happening of the accident involved in this case the plaintiff, Earl D. Colgrove, was upon a portion of the premises occupied by the defendant Lompoc Model 'T' Club, Inc., a corporation, where the said plaintiff, Earl D. Colgrove, was not invited to be, nor usually expected to be, and was there only for his own benefit, convenience, or curiosity, then you must find that the plaintiff, Earl D. Colgrove, was a mere licensee, and that the defendants Lompoc Model 'T' Club, Inc., a corporation, and Edward Cazenave owed him no duty other than that they should not wantonly or wilfully injure him. Given"

"No 51, Defendants'. You are further instructed that if you find that at the time and place of the happening of said accident that defendant, Edward Cazenave, was rightfully upon said portion of the premises at the time and place of the happening of said accident, and that plaintiff, Earl D. Colgrove, was a mere licensee at the time and place of the happening of said accident, then you are instructed that defendant Edward Cazenave, owed no greater duty to plaintiff, Earl D. Colgrove, at such time and place than did defendant, Lompoc Model 'T' Club, Inc., a corporation, and that said measure of duty by both defendants was merely to refrain from doing wanton or wilful injury to said Earl D. Colgrove at the time and place of the happening of said accident. Given"

"No. 52, Defendants'. Your are further instructed that if you find that at the time and place of the happening of the accident involved in this case the plaintiff, Earl D. Colgrove, was a mere licensee, then you are instructed to disregard any instructions that I have or may give in reference to the duty of the occupier of the premises to an invitee, and must confine your deliberations to determining whether at such time and place either of the defendants were guilty of wantonly or wilfully injuring plaintiff Earl D. Colgrove, and if you find that under such circumstances that defendants, or either of them, did not wantonly or wilfully injure the plaintiff, then your verdict must be for the defendants, and both of them, and against the plaintiff. Given"

[1, 2] Each of the instructions above quoted states that the duty owed to plaintiff, if he was a licensee, was to refrain from wanton or wilful injury. That is a general rule which applies to cases relating to the duty owed to a licensee with respect to the condition of premises, that is to cases involving passive negligence as distinguished from active negligence. If plaintiff was a licensee and was upon a part of the premises where the operator of the automobile knew or had good reason to expect him to be, the duty owed to plaintiff by the operator of the automobile was to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to plaintiff.

Another issue was whether there was an agency relationship between the operator of the automobile and the club. The instructions quoted did not include a provision relative to the duty of the club toward plaintiff based upon such alleged relationship.

[3] These instructions, in view of the facts in the case, were prejudicially erroneous.

In the case of Yamauchi v. O'Neill, 1940, 38 Cal.App.2d 703, 102 P.2d 365, plaintiff was on a driveway which served the rear entrance of defendants' store and was struck by defendants' truck. Defendants contended the plaintiff was a licensee and the only duty owed to plaintiff was to refrain from wilful or wanton conduct. The court stated that even if it be assumed that plaintiff was a licensee rather than an invitee the contentions of defendants had no application to the facts before the court. In that case it was stated further at page 707 of 38 Cal.App.2d, at page 367 of 102 P. 2d: "there can be no doubt whatever that the negligent operation of a moving vehicle in a place where the operator has good reason to expect the presence of licensees constitutes active negligence as distinguished from passive negligence. Under such circumstances the duty owed by the operator of the moving vehicle to a licensee, whether such operator be the licensor or any other person, is not merely the duty to refrain from wilful or wanton conduct but is the duty to exercise ordinary care."

In the case of Lucas v. Walker, 1913, 22 Cal.App. 296, 301, 134 P. 374, 376, 379, it is said: "A licensee under such circumstances is entitled to recover for any injury to himself * * * resulting from the active negligence of the licensor, and such licensor is responsible in damages for any overt act of negligence, though the same be neither willful nor wanton."

Plaintiff contends that two other instructions were erroneous. One of them was to the effect that a habit of an owner in allowing people to use premises is indicative of license, and user is licensee and not invitee. The other one defines wilful injury, wanton injury, and negligent injury. By reason of the decision herein relative to the above quoted instructions, it is not necessary to discuss these two additional instructions.

In their argument on this point appellants (defendants) refer to three other instructions given at the request of defendants, and to four other instructions given at the request of plaintiff. Appellants state that these seven instructions and the six claimed to be erroneous by plaintiff should be considered together, and contend that when so considered they correctly state the law. Such a consideration of these instructions does not reveal that the jury was instructed correctly as to the duty of defendants to plaintiff, if plaintiff was a licensee and was injured by reason of the active negligence of defendants.

Appellants cite the cases of Hamakawa v. Crescent Wharf, etc., Co., 1935, 4 Cal. 2d 499, 50 P.2d 803, and Lindholm v. Northwestern Pac. R. R. Co., 1926, 79 Cal.App. 34, 248 P. 1033, and rely principally upon them in support of their contention that the instructions were not erroneous. In the Yamauchi case, 1940, supra, the court distinguishes those cases from a situation similar to the one now before the court, and for that reason it is unnecessary to discuss those cases further.

Defendants assert that since plaintiff did not request an instruction embodying the principle of law which is announced in the Yamauchi case, supra, relative to active negligence, that he may not complain on appeal because such an instruction was not given.

[4, 5] If the law applicable to the facts of a case is stated correctly in a general charge to the jury, a party may not, in the absence of a request for a more specific or elaborate instruction, complain that a more specific or elaborate instruction should have been given. Townsend v. Butterfield, 1914, 168 Cal. 564, at page 569, 143 P. 760; Ohran v. County of Yolo, 1940, 40 Cal.App.2d 298, at page 307, 104 P.2d 700; 24 Cal.Jur. 796. In this case, however, the instructions as to the duty owing to a licensee injured by active negligence were erroneous, and plaintiff is not precluded from asserting that error was committed in instructions which were given, even though he did not request a proper instruction.

The order granting the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

MUELLER v. ELBA OIL CO. et al.*

Civ. 11624.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

April 3, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 1, 1942.

1. Bankruptcy 🔑384

Bankruptcy referee's order by which referee purported to discharge partners from individual liability for debt of bankrupt partnership was void, since it was an "order confirming a composition" which under Bankruptcy Act could only be made by judge. Bankr.Act § 12, 11 U.S.C.A. § 30.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Order Confirming a Composition".

2. Bankruptcy 🔑149, 354

Where a partnership has been adjudicated a bankrupt, the individual assets of the general partners may be drawn into the administration of the bankrupt estate, and any surplus remaining after paying partners' individual creditors is applicable to partnership debts. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. g, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g.

3. Partnership 🔑165

A partner is individually liable for partnership debts.

4. Bankruptcy 🔑375

Where, during pendency of proceedings to bring assets of partners into partnership bankruptcy proceedings, two partners offered specified sum to be applied in part payment of partnership creditors on condition that such partners be released and discharged in full from individual liability to the creditors, the plan was essentially one for a "composition" so that provisions of Bankruptcy Act regarding composition were required to be complied with. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. g, and §§ 12, 14, sub. c, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g, and §§ 30, 32, sub. c, 202.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Composition".

5. Bankruptcy 🔑375

A "composition" of creditors is a proceeding voluntary on both sides by which the debtor of his own motion offers to pay his creditors a certain percentage of their claims in exchange for a release from his liability and the offer of composition may be of a lump sum.

6. Bankruptcy 🔑387

A composition when confirmed operates as a discharge in bankruptcy. Bankr.Act §§ 14, sub. c, 371, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 32, sub. c, 771.

7. Bankruptcy 🔑377

In bankruptcy proceeding before confirmation of composition is sought the composition must be accepted in writing by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed, which number must represent a majority in amount of claims. Bankr.Act §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 30, 202.

8. Bankruptcy 🔑375

In bankruptcy proceeding a composition when confirmed is binding on creditors who do not assent, and therefore there must be strict compliance with the statutory requirements. Bankr.Act §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 30, 202.

9. Bankruptcy 🔑38

The term "arrangements" in 1938 amendment to Bankruptcy Act includes compositions. Bankr.Act § 301 et seq., 11 U.S.C.A. § 701 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arrangement".

10. Bankruptcy 🔑384

Where involuntary bankruptcy proceeding was instituted against partnership in December, 1937, and offer of composition of individual liability of partners for partnership debts was made on or about June 28, 1938, validity of referee's order purporting to confirm the composition was required to be determined under Bankruptcy Act as it existed prior to 1938 amendment which became effective in September, 1938. Bankr. Act §§ 12, 38, 73, 74, 306, 361–372, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 30, 66, 201, 202, 706, 761–772; Bankr. Act 1938, § 7, 11 U.S.C.A. § 1 note.

11. Bankruptcy 🔑375

Under Bankruptcy Act prior to 1938 amendment, a composition originates in an offer of composition, and is made by filing of petition or answer in which the debtor states that he desires to effect a composition. Bankr.Act §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 30, 202.

12. Bankruptcy 🔑384

Under Bankruptcy Act providing that the judge shall confirm a composition, referee does not have authority to confirm composition, since when the Bankruptcy Act uses the term "court" the referee may be included but when the term "judge" is used the referee is excluded. Bankr.Act 1898, § 1(16), 11 U.S.C.A. § 1(16); Bankr.Act § 12, 11 U.S.C.A. § 30.

---

* Subsequent opinion 130 P.2d 961.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Court" and "Judge".

13. Bankruptcy 🔑387

Where bankruptcy referee's order confirming composition of individual liability of partners for debts of bankrupt partnership was void, judge's subsequent order discharging partnership did not operate as a "release" of individual liability of partners for partnership debt. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. g, and §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g, and §§ 30, 202.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Release".

14. Bankruptcy 🔑429

Where 1938 amendment to Bankruptcy Act provided that discharge of partnership shall not discharge individual general partners from partnership debts and that except as otherwise provided the amendatory act shall govern proceedings so far as practicable in cases pending when it takes effect, the amendatory act governs interpretation of discharge granted after the amendment took effect in proceedings instituted before effective date of the amendment. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. j, and § 6, sub. b, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. j, and § 1 note.

15. Bankruptcy 🔑375

Where offer of composition is made by partners of partnership adjudicated bankrupt, it should not be made until after schedule of individual assets and liabilities as well as of partnership assets is on file. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. g, and §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g, and §§ 30, 202.

16. Bankruptcy 🔑382

In involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against partnership, where notice was given to creditors of a petition praying for discharge of liability of two partners to creditors who had filed claims, order of referee discharging the two partners from any and all liability which might exist against either of them as partners was irregular. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. g, and §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g, and §§ 30, 202.

17. Compositions with creditors 🔑2

In involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against partnership where order confirming composition and discharging two partners from individual liability for partnership debts was void on its face because made by referee rather than by judge, the composition was binding as a "common-law composition" on those who participated in it. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. g, and §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g, and §§ 30, 202.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Common-Law Composition".

18. Bankruptcy 🔑386

The fact that plaintiff's assignor did not file a claim in bankruptcy proceeding against partnership did not bar plaintiff or its assignor from attacking void order of confirmation of composition of individual liability of partners for partnership debts, where the offer of composition was made within six month period following adjudication of bankruptcy in which claims were required to be filed. Bankr.Act 1898, § 57, sub. n, as amended in 1926, 11 U.S.C.A. § 93, sub. n.

19. Bankruptcy 🔑375

An offer of composition should extend to all creditors whose claims are listed by bankrupt. Bankr.Act § 12, 11 U.S.C.A. § 30.

20. Bankruptcy 🔑387

Where offer of composition of individual liability of two partners for debts of bankrupt partnership was made before time for filing claims had passed, and order confirming composition was void because made by referee and not by judge, although the order operated as a common-law composition on those who participated in the proceeding, the order did not operate to discharge individual liability of the two partners to assignee of creditor who did not file claim, and who did not participate in the composition proceedings. Bankr.Act § 5, sub. g, and §§ 12, 74, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g, and §§ 30, 202.

21. Bankruptcy 🔑252

Under Bankruptcy Act authorizing receiver or trustee, with approval of "court", to compromise any controversy arising in administration of estate, approval of compromise may be by the referee. Bankr.Act § 27, 11 U.S.C.A. § 50.

22. Bankruptcy ⚷375

Under Bankruptcy Act, that which is as a matter of law a composition cannot be accomplished without complying with statutory requirements under the guise of being a compromise of controversy. Bankr.Act, §§ 12, 27, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 30, 50.

23. Bankruptcy ⚷252

A "compromise of controversy" within Bankruptcy Act authorizing receiver or trustee to compromise any controversy implies a dispute to be settled. Bankr.Act § 27, 11 U.S.C.A. § 50.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Compromise of Controversy".

24. Bankruptcy ⚷252

In partnership bankruptcy proceeding, dispute regarding whether liquidation of individual assets of two partners would yield any surplus for partnership creditors could not be made the subject of a "compromise of controversy" which would authorize discharge of the general partners from individual liability to partnership creditors. Bankr. Act § 27, 11 U.S.C.A. § 50.

25. Bankruptcy ⚷404(1)

The Bankruptcy Act, prior to 1938 amendment, provided only for discharge of bankrupt following full administration in bankruptcy or for discharge upon confirmation of composition of creditors, but under the 1938 amendment, a discharge may be secured upon confirmation of an arrangement, and right of a partner to secure discharge from individual liability to partnership creditors where bankrupt is a partnership, is similarly limited. Bankr. Act § 5, sub. g, and §§ 12, 74, 301 et seq., 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g, and §§ 30, 202, 701 et seq.

26. Bankruptcy ⚷252

A bankruptcy trustee, with approval of court, may arrange for compromise of a dispute based on a claim of liability of a third person to the bankrupt, but the trustee cannot arrange for a compromise of liability of such third person to creditors of the bankrupt. Bankr.Act § 27, 11 U.S.C.A. § 50.

KNIGHT, J., dissenting.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Henry G. Jorgensen, Judge.

Action by D. J. Mueller against Elba Oil Company and others to recover purchase price of goods sold. From a judgment determining that defendants Frank Raiter and Louis Oleari had been discharged from liability in bankruptcy, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Mueller & Westover, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Rosendale, Thomas & Muller, of Salinas, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, as the assignee for collection of the MacClatchie Manufacturing Company of California, brought this action against the Elba Oil Company and its four general partners to recover from them the sum of $362.23, the purchase price of certain goods sold the partnership. General partners Frank Raiter and Louis Oleari defended the action on the ground that the debt was a partnership debt; that the partnership was adjudicated a bankrupt; that these two defendants paid $7,500 to the trustee in bankruptcy in full settlement, discharge and compromise of all their liability to creditors of the copartnership and as a composition of creditors of the copartnership; that the court made an order discharging these two defendants from any and all liability to creditors of the copartnership individually and as copartners. It is further alleged that the copartnership was discharged in bankruptcy. From a judgment determining that Raiter and Oleari had been discharged from liability for this debt plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The cause was tried upon an agreed statement of facts. It therein appears that in October of 1937 the Elba Oil Company, a limited partnership with four general partners including Raiter and Oleari, became indebted to the MacClatchie Manufacturing Company of California for the purchase price of certain materials. This debt was unsecured and has never been paid. On December 31, 1937, an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed against the partnership, and on January 4, 1938, the partnership was adjudicated a bankrupt, and one Russell B. Seymour became the trustee for the bankrupt. The debt owing to plaintiff's assignor was duly scheduled as an unsecured partnership debt, and thereafter the notice to creditors and other notices were properly sent to this creditor. Although its debt had thus been duly scheduled, the MacClatchie Company filed no claim in the bankruptcy proceeding.

On April 4, 1938, the trustee filed a petition to marshal the individual assets of the partners, in which he prayed that they be directed to file forthwith a schedule of their assets and liabilities. He averred in the petition, on information and belief, that the purported limited partners, naming them, were in fact general partners. The record shows two orders to show cause, directed to both general and limited partners, issued by the referee in April, 1938. A third order to show cause, dated December 19, 1938, was directed to the four general partners only, including Raiter and Oleari. Apparently no hearings were ever held on any of these orders to show cause.

On June 28, 1938, a bank wrote a letter to Seymour as trustee, on behalf of Raiter and Oleari, enclosing a cashier's check for $7,500, and offering to compromise Raiter's and Oleari's liability for the partnership debts. The letter stated that the check should be used for effecting "a composition of creditors of said Elba Oil Company." The letter containing this offer expressly stated that it was subject to the following conditions: (1) All secured creditors must accept their security in full discharge; (2) that all unsecured creditors and costs and fees of the bankruptcy proceeding should be paid from the $7,500; and (3) that each creditor of the partnership should execute a full release of Raiter and Oleari "of and from any and all individual liability to each of said creditors."

On January 30, 1939, the trustee filed with the referee a "petition to compromise controversy." This petition recites that the trustee had filed a petition to marshal the assets of the individual partners; that on December 19, 1938, an order to show cause had been issued on the petition directed to the four general partners, which order was set for hearing on January 26, 1939. While the proceeding to marshal the assets of the individual partners was pending, the petition continues, many conferences were held between the trustee and counsel for Raiter and Oleari. The trustee recommended that if the sum of $7,500 was paid to the trustee in full settlement and discharge of the individual liability of Raiter and Oleari to the creditors of the bankrupt, he, the trustee, would present to the court a petition "to compromise the controversy."

On June 28, 1938, the petition proceeds, the trustee received the cashier's check for $7,500; that thereafter numerous conferences were had between the trustee and attorneys for "various creditors of the estate" and a basis of compromise arrived at "between all of the parties to the litigation hereinabove set forth," which petitioner believes is for the best interest of the estate; that it is doubtful whether the estate could realize any greater sum from any order directing Raiter and Oleari to turn over their assets to the trustee, and that there is "also some doubt as to the ability" of the trustee "to prevail in the said proceeding to marshal the assets of the said Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari." The prayer is for an order authorizing the trustee to compromise the controversy and "completely releasing and discharging the said Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari of and from any and all individual liabilities to each and every one of the creditors who have filed claims in the above entitled bankrupt estate."

On February 20, 1939, the referee made an order granting the trustee's petition to compromise, in which it is recited that it is in the best interests of the creditors of the bankrupt estate that the compromise petitioned for should be approved. The order directs the trustee to compromise the controversy by accepting the $7,500, and further provides that, upon the receipt of the $7,500 by the trustee, Raiter and Oleari "are fully and completely released and discharged from any and all claims, demands, liability, causes of action or judgments against them or either of them, as general partners of the above-named bankrupt." It should be noted that this order purports to release Oleari and Raiter from the claims of all creditors, while the petition was limited to creditors who had filed claims.

On March 6, 1939, the judge of the Federal District Court made an order of discharge in bankruptcy by which it was provided that "Elba Oil Company, a copartnership composed of * * * Louis Oleari and F. E. Raiter be discharged from all debts and claims which are made provable by said Acts [bankruptcy laws] against its estate" which existed on the day the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy was filed, excepting such debts as are excepted by law from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy. It is to be noted that the discharge is of the partnership. It does not provide for discharge of the individual liability of the partners for the partnership debts.

[1] We are of the view that the referee's order of February 20, 1939, by which he purported to discharge Raiter and Oleari from individual liability for parnership debts was void on its face for the reason that as an order confirming a composition under § 12 of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C.A. § 30, it was required to be made by the judge, and could not validly be made by a referee.

[2, 3] Where a partnership has been adjudicated a bankrupt the individual assets of the general partners may be drawn into the administration of the bankrupt estate, and any surplus remaining after paying individual creditors is applicable to the partnership debts. Section 5, sub. g, of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. g; Francis v. McNeal, 3 Cir., 186 F. 481, 108 C.C.A. 459; 6 Remington on Bankruptcy [4th ed.] p. 499, 505. This results from the rule that a partner is individually liable for partnership debts.

[4, 5] In the case herein, while proceedings to bring the assets of the partners into the bankruptcy were pending, Raiter and Oleari offered $7,500 to be applied in part payment of the partnership creditors on condition that they be released and discharged in full from individual liability to such creditors. The plan was essentially one for a composition. A composition of creditors is a "proceeding, voluntary on both sides, by which the debtor, of his own motion, offers to pay his creditors a certain percentage of their claims in exchange for a release from his liabilities." 6 Am. Jur. 776, § 416. The offer of composition may be of a lump sum, as in the case herein. In re Bickmore Shoe Co., D.C., 263 F. 926.

[6-8] A composition when confirmed operates as a discharge in bankruptcy. "The confirmation of a composition shall discharge the bankrupt from his debts, other than those agreed to be paid by the terms of the composition and those not affected by a discharge." 11 U.S.C.A. § 32, see cases cited p. 133, note 631; for similar provision as to arrangements under the 1938 amendments, see 11 U.S.C.A. § 771; Myers v. International Trust Co., 273 U.S. 380, 47 S.Ct. 372, 71 L.Ed. 692. Before confirmation of the composition is sought it is required that it be accepted in writing by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed, which number must represent a majority in amount of claims. 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 30, 202. Since a composition when confirmed is binding on creditors who do not assent, it is settled that there must be strict compliance with the statutory requirements. In re Palmer, D.C., 2 F.Supp. 275, 277; In re Frear, D.C., 120 F. 978; 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, § 653, p. 1689.

[9] Prior to the 1938 amendments to the Bankruptcy Act, compositions were provided for by §§ 12 and 74. 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 30, 202. Under the 1938 amendments these sections were superseded by provision for "arrangements." 52 Stats. 840, enacting clause, and Chap. XI at p. 905, 11 U.S.C.A. § 701 et seq. The new procedure includes compositions in the term "arrangements." This is plain from the definition, as follows: "'Arrangement' shall mean any plan of a debtor for the settlement, satisfaction, or extension of the time of payment of his unsecured debts, upon any terms." 11 U.S.C.A. § 706. An arrangement is not required to be confirmed by the judge. Under the 1938 amendments referees are invested with jurisdiction, subject to review by the judge, to "confirm or refuse to confirm arrangements or wage-earner plans, or set aside the confirmation of arrangements or wage-earner plans and reinstate the proceedings or cases." 11 U.S.C.A. § 66; see, also, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 761–772, providing for confirmation by the "court," but not requiring confirmation by the "judge."

[10, 11] These sections are not applicable to this proceeding. The 1938 amendments expressly provide that §§ 12, 73 and 74, as amended, "shall continue in full force and effect with respect to proceedings pending under those sections upon the effective date of this amendatory Act." 52 Stats. p. 916, 11 U.S.C.A. § 799(3). The composition in the present case is referable to § 12. A composition under § 74 is initiated by the filing of a petition or answer in which the debtor states that he desires to effect a composition. Upon the judge approving the petition the composition proceeding goes forward with a meeting of creditors and other formalities. 11 U.S.C.A. § 202. Such procedure was not followed in the present case. A composition under § 12 originates in an "offer of composition." 11 U.S.C.A. § 30; Nassau Smelting & Refining Works v. Bright-wood Bronze F. Co., 265 U.S. 269, 271, 44 S.Ct. 506, 68 L.Ed. 1013; Myers v. International Trust Co., 273 U.S. 380, 47 S.Ct. 372, 71 L.Ed. 692; 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, § 653, p. 1688. The offer in the present case was made "on or about June 28, 1938," according to the agreed statement of facts. The 1938 amendments were approved on June 22, 1938, and by terms of the amendatory act went into effect three months later, that is, on September 22, 1938. 52 Stats. p. 940, 11 U.S.C.A. § 1 note.

[12] By virtue of the express provision of the amendatory act above-referred to, § 12 was applicable to the pending proceeding herein involved. Section 12 provides that "the judge shall confirm a composition." 11 U.S.C.A. § 30; In re Bloodworth-Stembridge Co., D.C., 178 F. 372; In re Everick Art Corp., 2 Cir., 39 F.2d 765, 768. When the act uses the term "court," the referee may be included, but when the term "judge" is used the referee is excluded. In re McMurray, D.C., 8 F. Supp. 449; 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, §§ 268, 270, pp. 976, 978; 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, 5th Ed., 92. Section 1 of the act provides: "'Judge' shall mean a judge of a court of bankruptcy, not including the referee." 11 U.S.C.A. § 1, subd. 16; subd. 20 under the section as amended in 1938.

[13] The judge's subsequent order of discharge does not operate as a release of the individual liability of the partners for the partnership debts. The discharge was of the partnership. It was provided therein that "Elba Oil Company, a copartnership composed of Joseph E. Barrett, J. S. Lees, Louis Oleari and F. E. Raiter be discharged from all debts and claims which are made provable by said Acts against its estate, and which existed on the 31st day of December, A. D. 1937, on which day the petition for adjudication was filed against it; excepting such debts as are by law excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy."

[14] The 1938 amendment added to § 5 of the Bankruptcy Act, paragraph j, reads as follows: "The discharge of a partnership shall not discharge the individual general partners thereof from the partnership debts." 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. j. The amendatory act contained the following provision: "Except as otherwise provided in this amendatory Act, the provisions of this amendatory Act shall govern proceedings so far as practicable in cases pending when it takes effect." 52 Stats., p. 940, 11 U.S.C.A. § 1 note; see, In re Wm. Akers, Jr., Co., Inc., D.C., 31 F.Supp. 900. In view of this provision section 5, sub. j, 11 U.S.C.A. § 23, sub. j, governs the interpretation of the discharge herein.

Prior to the enactment of § 5, sub. j, there was some doubt as to whether a discharge of the partnership only had the effect of discharging the individual liability of the partners for the partnership debts. Myers v International Trust Co., supra; 7 Remington on Bankruptcy, 5th Ed., p. 863; 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, § 580, p. 1546; 37 Harv.Law Rev. 614. The 1938 provision removed this doubt.

[15] There appear to be other defects in the proceeding viewed as a composition, in addition to the absence of confirmation by the judge. Where the offer of composition is made by partners of a partnership adjudicated bankrupt it should not be made until after the schedule of individual assets and liabilities as well as of partnership assets is on file. In re Palmer, D.C., 2 F.Supp. 275, 277. This is because the creditors in determining whether it is to their advantage to assent to an offer of composition should have full information as to assets available to satisfy their claims. Any surplus of individual assets after paying individual debts may be used to pay partnership claims. In the present case the offer was made while proceedings to compel the partners to file their schedules were still pending and before individual schedules had been filed.

[16] The notice to creditors was of a petition praying for discharge of the liability of the partners Raiter and Oleari to creditors who had filed claims, whereas the order of the referee entered on the petition discharges them from any and all liability which might exist against either of them as partners.

[17] The bankruptcy papers included in the present record also show a failure to comply with the requirement that before confirmation is sought the composition must have been accepted in writing by a majority of the creditors. 11 U.S.C.A. § 30. The apparent reason for these omissions will be discussed hereafter. It is not necessary to determine whether these irregularities singly or together would render the composition void as a discharge. It is clear that, where the act requires the judge to confirm a composition, confirmation by a referee, a subordinate official of the court, is of no legal effect. Such confirmation is void on its face as to creditors who did not participate in the composition. The composition is binding, however, as a common law composition, on those who participated in it. In re Clarence A. Nachman Co., 2 Cir., 6 F.2d 427; Paris Medicine Co. v. Lusby, 174 Ark. 749, 297 S.W. 1015; Welles-Kahn Co. v. Klein, 81 Fla. 524, 527, 88 So. 315; 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, § 653, p. 1688.

[18, 19] The fact that plaintiff's assignor had not filed a claim in the bankruptcy proceeding does not bar it or its assignor from attacking the void order of confirmation. The offer of composition was made on June 28, 1938. The adjudication took place on January 4, 1938. Hence, the offer of composition was made within six months' period following adjudication of bankruptcy, in which claims are required to be filed. 11 U.S.C.A. § 93, sub. n; 44 U.S.Stats. 666, amending § 57 of the Bankruptcy Act. The claim of plaintiff's assignor was listed in the partnership schedules filed. An offer of composition should extend to all creditors whose claims are listed by the bankrupt. 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, §§ 654, 658, pp. 1689, 1692; 7 Rem., 4th Ed., pp. 196, 238; 8 Collier on Bankruptcy, 14th Ed., pp. 959, 1237, 1238; Nassau Smelting & Refining Works v. Brightwood Bronze F. Co., 265 U.S. 269, 44 S.Ct. 506, 68 L.Ed. 1013; In re Adamson, 2 Cir., 83 F.2d 211. Thus it has been held that where the bankrupt makes an offer of composition before the time to file claims has passed, creditors whose claims are scheduled by the bankrupt need not make proof of claims to share in the composition. Nassau Smelting & Refining Works v. Brightwood Bronze F. Co., supra.

[20] It should be noted that the terms of the offer of composition here involved did not confine it to creditors who had filed claims, nor did the referee's order of approval so limit it. But the trustee's interpretation of the offer evidently was that payment should be made only to those who had proved claims, since he prayed in his petition that Raiter and Oleari be released from individual liability to creditors who had filed claims. In any event no payment was made to plaintiff's assignor, nor did it in any way participate in the composition proceedings. In the circumstances the void order of confirmation did not operate as to it to discharge the individual liability of the general partners Raiter and Oleari.

[21] It appears that the failure to follow the procedure prescribed for a composition was due to the fact that the matter was handled as "a compromise of controversy." The act provides: "The receiver or trustee may, with the approval of the court, compromise any controversy arising in the administration of the estate upon such terms as he may deem for the best interest of the estate." 11 U.S.C.A. § 50; 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, 5th Ed., p. 717; 8 C.J.S., Bankruptcy, § 305, p. 1032. Since approval of the "court," rather than of the "judge" is required, approval of a compromise may be given by the referee.

[22] But that which is as a matter of law a composition may not be accomplished without complying with the statutory requirements under the guise of being a compromise of controversy. "This section [§ 27, 11 U.S.C.A. § 50] should not be confused with § 12 on compositions. It is intended to supply a summary and inexpensive way of settling questions arising in the administration of bankrupt estates. It is most often used in connection with contests on claims filed against the estate, or the contested collections of claims due the estate. It cannot, of course, be resorted to where the matter in controversy is the right to a discharge." Gilbert's Collier on Bankruptcy, one vol., 4th Ed., p. 570.

[23] A "compromise of controversy" implies a dispute to be settled. In the case herein the papers in the bankruptcy proceeding which have been made part of the record in the present case show a dispute as to whether certain persons who claimed to be limited partners were in fact general partners. But there is no intimation of any dispute as to the status of the four general partners, including Raiter and Oleari. The trustee's petitions described them as general partners and the stipulation of facts upon which the present action was heard so describes them.

[24] The petition to compromise recites that it is doubtful that the estate can realize from marshaling of the individual assets of Raiter and Oleari a greater sum than they offered to pay, that is, $7,500, and that "there is also some doubt as to the ability of your Trustee to prevail in the said proceeding to marshal the assets of the said Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari." However, as to general partners the authority of the trustee to marshal assets to the end of applying any surplus remaining after paying individual debts to partnership obligations exists as a matter of right, unless, perhaps, where it appears unlikely that any surplus above individual debts will result. It would seem, therefore, that on the record the only dispute which could exist was whether liquidation of the individual assets of Raiter and Oleari would yield any surplus for partnership creditors. In our view such a dispute may not be made the subject of a compromise of controversy which will result in discharge of general partners from individual liability to partnership creditors.

[25] The Act, prior to the 1938 amendment, provided only two methods whereby a bankrupt could secure a discharge—the discharge granted following full administration in bankruptcy, and a discharge upon confirmation of a composition of creditors. Welles-Kahn Co. v. Klein, supra. Under the 1938 amendment a discharge may be secured upon confirmation of an arrangement. The right of a partner to secure a discharge from individual liability to partnership creditors where the bankrupt is a partnership is similarly limited. The individual assets of a partner may be drawn into the bankruptcy administration. The Act makes no provision whereby one whose assets are subject to the jurisdiction of the court in a bankruptcy proceeding may secure a discharge from liability to creditors of the bankrupt in any other way. See In re Northampton Portland Cement Co., D.C., 185 F. 542.

But for the fact that the court in the bankruptcy proceeding has jurisdiction of the individual assets of a partner where a partnership has been adjudicated bankrupt, it would be without jurisdiction to discharge a partner at all. This is made plain by the decision in Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Ben L. Berwald Shoe Co., 5 Cir., 10 F.2d 275, writ of certiorari denied by Supreme Court, 271 U.S. 671, 46 S.Ct. 485, 70 L.Ed. 1143. In that case a corporation was adjudicated bankrupt. Its president and chief stockholder made an offer to the trustee to pay unsecured creditors 55% of their claims on condition that the corporation and all its officers and directors be released from all liability growing out of operation of the bankrupt corporation. Suits were then pending in a state court by certain of the creditors against the officers and directors on claims of individual liability growing out of corporate transactions. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the court in bankruptcy was without jurisdiction to discharge the officers and directors under the compromise of controversy provision or at all. The court reversed the decision of the district court approving the compromise. In re Ben L. Berwald Shoe Co., D.C., 1 F.2d 494. The circuit court was of the view that the court in bankruptcy was without right thus to cut off the individual liability, if any, of the officers and directors to creditors of the corporation. The court said [10 F.2d 276]: "We cannot assume that these claims [the claims of the creditors against the officers and directors which were being asserted in the state court suits] are without substance, and with regard to them the trustee was not authorized to represent appellants. A simple illustration will demonstrate this: It would never be contended by any one that the trustee could compromise the claim of an individual creditor against a third person arising from his indorsement of the bankrupt's note. There is no difference in principle in the case here presented. Furthermore, none of the parties has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the District Court with regard to these suits, and the District Court was without jurisdiction to bind appellants to the full extent of the compromise offered."

[26] That is, the trustee, with the approval of the court, may arrange for compromise of a dispute based on a claim of liability of a third person to the bankrupt, but he cannot arrange for a compromise of a liability of such third person to creditors of the bankrupt. He does not represent the creditors as to such liability.

To summarize—the court in bankruptcy was without jurisdiction to discharge the individual liability of Raiter and Oleari as general partners except following full administration in bankruptcy or upon composition proceedings which met the statutory requirements. The referee's order was void as a discharge of the individual liability of Raiter and Oleari. It was void as a composition of creditors under § 12 of the Act because it lacked confirmation by a judge. The provision for compromise of controversies does not authorize a discharge of the individual liability of a partner to partnership creditors.

The judgment is reversed.

WARD, J., concurred.

KNIGHT, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. The respondents Raiter and Oleari, after having been thrown into involuntary bankruptcy, made an offer of composition with creditors whereby they paid $7,500 in cash in full settlement of all creditors' claims against them as individuals and as members of a copartnership; and after several months negotiations the offer and the money were accepted. The trustee to whom the composition money was paid petitioned the bankruptcy court for confirmation, and after a full hearing of which due notice was given the composition was confirmed by the referee; thereupon the money was distributed by the trustee to the creditors, and thereafter the judge of the bankruptcy court granted the discharge in bankruptcy.

Appellant's assignor was one of the creditors of the partnership and was duly scheduled as such, but refrained from proving its claim. Subsequent to the adjudication of bankruptcy and prior to the making of the offer for composition said creditor assigned its claim to appellant, and he brought this action thereon in the superior court against the bankrupt partnership and its individual members. Following the discharge in bankruptcy respondents filed an amended answer wherein they pleaded as a bar to the action the confirmation of the composition and the discharge in bankruptcy. The cause was tried on an agreed statement of facts, and judgment was given for defendants.

In that state of the record it seems clear to me that the reversal of the trial court's judgment not only constitutes a collateral attack upon the final orders and decrees of the bankruptcy court, but is based upon a hypertechnical analysis of the legal forms followed by the trustee and the referee in confirming the composition, for which forms these respondents were in no way responsible, and which reversal results in a manifest injustice to these respondents.

"A composition in bankruptcy is a settlement with creditors, partaking of the nature of a contract. It is a proceeding, voluntary on both sides, by which the debtor, of his own motion, offers to pay his creditors a certain percentage of their claims in exchange for a release from his liabilities; the amount offered may be less or more than would be realized through distribution in bankruptcy by the trustee, and the creditors may accept it or refuse it, though they are treated as a class and the will of the majority is enforced upon the minority provided the decision of the majority is approved by the court. The composition proceeding in a measure supersedes the proceedings in bankruptcy." 6 Am.Jur., p. 776, citing numerous cases. The confirmation of a composition offered by a bankrupt discharges him from all of his debts and reinvests in him the title to his property. 6 Am.Jur., p. 777. Upon signing the order of composition the bankruptcy court loses jurisdiction except to set aside the composition within the time and for the reasons permitted by the statute, and "The discharge effected by confirmation of a composition can not be set aside or annulled by a state court, even for fraud that was not discovered within the statutory time. It enjoys the same immunity from collateral attack that is accorded to an order of discharge granted on application therefor." 6 Am.Jur., p. 779. In this connection it should be here stated that nowhere in the bankruptcy proceedings nor in the trial of the present case was there any charge of fraud.

It is held that "A composition in a bankruptcy proceeding against a partnership discharges the partners as to their liability both as partners and as individuals for the firm debts." 6 Am.Jur., p. 778. In the present case the offer of composition was made by respondents through a bank. It was in writing, and as follows: "Enclosed herewith is our cashier's check in the sum of $7500.00, dated June 28, 1938, numbered 7794 and payable to you as trustee of the estate of Elba Oil Company, bankrupt. This check is delivered to you for the sole and exclusive purpose of using the same and the proceeds thereof for effecting, completing, and paying a composition of creditors of said Elba Oil Company, No. 32287-Y, of the District Court of the United States, Southern District, Central Division, according to the terms and conditions of offer heretofore made or hereafter to be made by our clients, Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari, as copartners of said Elba Oil Company. We are advised that the terms and conditions of said offer are or will be as follows: (1) that all secured creditors of said Elba Oil Company shall take and accept all properties described in their respective securities in full satisfaction and discharge of the debts secured thereby; (2) that all unsecured creditors and all trustees' fees, attorneys' fees, receivers' fees, costs, etc., shall be fully satisfied and paid out of said sum of $7500; and (3) that each creditor of said Elba Oil Company shall execute in writing a full and complete release and discharge of our clients, Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari, of and from any and all individual liability to each of said creditors. If you effect, complete, and obtain confirmation of a composition of creditors upon such terms and conditions, you are authorized to use the proceeds of said check for payment of said fees, costs, claims of unsecured creditors, etc., but for no other purpose, and in the event that you are unable to effect, complete, and obtain confirmation of such composition within three months from the date hereof, you shall return said sum of $7500.00 to us without deduction of any kind whatsoever. Until and unless said composition shall be so effected, completed, and confirmation thereof obtained, said sum of $7500 shall be and remain the property of the undersigned." (Italics ours.)

In the trustee's petition for the confirmation of the composition it was alleged that the petitioner recommended that if the sum of $7,500 was paid over to the trustee "in full and complete settlement, release, and discharge of the individual liability of said Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari," said trustee would petition for a confirmation thereof; that after receipt of said sum numerous conferences were had between the trustees, his attorneys and the attorneys for various creditors, and a basis of compromise was arrived at "between all of the parties to the litigation hereinabove set forth," the basis of which was as follows: "That in consideration of an order being made and entered herein, wherein and whereby Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari are fully and completely released and discharged of and from any and all individual liabilities to each and every one of the creditors who have filed claims in the above entitled bankruptcy proceedings, being the Elba Oil Company, a copartnership, the said Frank E. Raiter and Louis G. Oleari will, through the Monterey County Trust and Savings Bank, pay to the Trustee herein the sum of $7500.00." The trustee then went on to allege that he believed it was for the best interests of the creditors of the estate that the compromise be approved, for the reason that it was doubtful that the estate could realize any greater sum from any order that might be made directing them to turn over their assets to the trustee, and that the acceptance of the compromise would eliminate costly and long drawn out litigation and would redound to the benefit of the creditors of the estate. Thereafter the petition came on for hearing before the referee, and the composition was confirmed, the referee having recited in his order of confirmation "that all of the allegations and recitals of said petition were true." The order of confirmation was dated February 20, 1939, and on March 6, 1939, the judge of the bankruptcy court granted the discharge of said copartnership and the individual members thereof "from all debts and claims which are made provable by said Acts [of bankruptcy] against its estate, and which existed on the 31st day of December, A.D. 1937, on which day the petition for adjudication was filed against it." At no time during the bankruptcy proceedings nor subsequent to the granting of the discharge did the appellant or his assignor or any other creditor or person interested in the bankruptcy proceeding challenge the validity of or object to any of the proceedings which were being had therein, and as above stated no question of fraud has ever been raised. To the contrary, so far as the record herein shows, the respondents and the trustee acted honestly and in good faith and to the best interests of all parties concerned.

As will be noted from the majority opinion, the attack made upon the bankruptcy proceeding is founded mainly on two grounds: first, several technical errors or mistakes made, apparently inadvertently, by the trustee and the referee in the wording of the petitions, notices, and orders leading up to the confirmation of the composition; secondly, because the order confirming the composition was made by the referee and not by the judge of the bankruptcy court. It is my view that the errors or mistakes adverted to fall far short of being of such substantial character as to justify a state court in repudiating the bankruptcy proceeding. And for two reasons I disagree with the conclusion that the confirmation of the composition was void because the order was made by the referee. In the first place, the bankruptcy law was extensively revised in 1938, the amendments becoming effective in September, 1938. By section 38 of the 1938 law, 11 U.S.C.A. § 66, jurisdiction was expressly conferred on referees to confirm or refuse to confirm "arrangements" which superseded "compositions." Here the petition for confirmation was filed in January, 1939; and the hearing was had and the composition confirmed in February, 1939. It is true that the 1938 law does not apply to composition proceedings which are pending on the effective date of said law; but I am not convinced that the exemption applies to the vast additional authority conferred upon referees by the new act. However, even assuming that it does, the discharge in bankruptcy, granted by the judge of the court approximately two weeks after the referee had confirmed the composition, in my opinion in itself operated not only as a confirmation of the composition, but also of all acts of the referee performed by him prior to the granting of the discharge. In other words, the act itself provides that upon the confirmation of a composition the consideration given by the bankrupt is distributed according to the direction of the judge and the case is dismissed. Sec. 12, sub. e, 11 U.S.C.A. § 30, sub. e; 6 Am.Jur., p. 779. The discharge in bankruptcy was therefore in effect a dismissal of the bankruptcy proceeding.

As stated in the majority opinion, the debt appellant sued upon was admittedly a partnership debt. It was scheduled as such, and thereafter the notice to creditors and the other notices were properly sent to this creditor; consequently the fact that he did not choose to prove his claim does not exempt him from the binding effect of the bankruptcy proceedings, for as held in the following cases a composition binds creditors with scheduled claims although they do not prove their claims. Nassau Smelting & Refining Works v. Brightwood Bronze F. Co., 265 U.S. 269, 44 S.Ct. 506, 68 L.Ed. 1013, 1015; Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 47 S.Ct. 400, 71 L.Ed. 684. It has even been held that the bankruptcy court has the discretion to pass upon a composition offer although a claim has been omitted from the schedules. In re Spiller, D. C., 230 F. 490. Nor is appellant in a position to claim that he was denied the right to participate in the composition fund because he could have done so if he had proved his claim.

Even assuming, however, that as the majority opinion holds, the confirmation of the composition is void because the order was made by the referee rather than by the judge, appellant is in no better position to maintain his action against the partnership and its individual members because by virtue of the bankruptcy act "Whenever a composition is not confirmed, the estate shall be administered in bankruptcy as herein provided." Sec. 12, sub. e. In other words, by virtue of the adjudication of involuntary bankruptcy the bankruptcy court through the trustee took possession of the estate of the involuntary bankrupts. It would follow, therefore, that if the composition is void the discharge in bankruptcy is likewise void, and the estate has not yet been administered and the involuntary bankrupts are still immune from actions brought by their creditors. Practically the same situation arose in the case of Joseph v. Rowell, 9 Cir., 108 F.2d 592. There it was claimed that an adjudication of bankruptcy was void because made by a referee instead of the court; also that an order confirming sale of property was void for the same reason. It was held in effect that even though the referee may have exceeded his authority in making the orders complained of, such fact did not divest the bankruptcy court of its jurisdiction over the debtor's property.

For the reasons stated the trial court's judgment in my opinion should be affirmed.

51 Cal.App.2d 69

OAKLAND SCAVENGER CO. et al. v. GANDI.

Civ. 11885.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 2, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Corporations 🔑298(7)

The inability to produce original minute book of a corporation written in Italian and the omission from book containing English translation thereof of minutes of director's meeting at which allegedly was adopted a resolution, an unsigned typewritten copy of which was clipped to page containing English translation of minutes of meeting at a later date, did not establish conclusively that no such meeting was had and no resolution adopted in view of testimony of those who were officers and directors at the time as to passage of the resolution.

2. Corporations 🔑113

Where original minute book of corporation written in Italian could not be found and typewritten English copy of resolution, which purported to give directors power over the transfer of stock held by a deceased stockholder only in the case of accidental death, was so ineptly written as to be ambiguous if not meaningless, oral testimony of directors and officers, in the absence of any reason why power should have been restricted thus, warranted interpretation of resolution so as to grant such power whatever the cause of death.

3. Corporations 🔑113

Evidence sustained finding that deceased stockholder assented to resolution requiring each stockholder to indorse and deliver to corporation his certificate of stock and authorizing corporation upon death of a stockholder to transfer stock to his son if qualified and capable of filling vacancy or sell it to some other person thus qualified where there was no dissenting vote to resolution and deceased stockholder thereafter indorsed his stock pursuant thereto.

4. Corporations 🔑113

Evidence sustained findings that resolution requiring each stockholder to indorse and deliver certificate of stock owned by him to corporation and authorizing the corporation upon death of stockholder to transfer his stock to son if qualified and capable of filling vacancy created by stockholder's death, or to some other person thus qualified, was adopted by directors and stockholders and assented to by deceased stockholder who had indorsed his stock pursuant thereto.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)

District Court of Appeal had no power to disturb judgment based upon findings of fact supported by substantial evidence and inferences therefrom.

6. Wills 🔑91

Indorsement and delivery of certificate of stock to issuing corporation pursuant to resolution authorizing corporation upon stockholder's death to transfer stock to his son if qualified and capable of filling vacancy created by stockholder's death, or, if not, to some other person thus qualified, would be a "testamentary transfer" ineffective to transfer to corporation any rights in the stock unless executed in compliance with formalities prescribed for wills, unless a trust in stock was thereby created.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Testamentary Transfer".

7. Trusts 🔑14

Indorsement and delivery of certificate of stock to issuing corporation is ineffective to create a trust in stock unless an interest presently passes to the corporation as trustee.

8. Trusts 🔑14

A transfer to trustee need not be of a present interest in order to create a valid trust, but may be of a future interest, provided the interest presently passes to the trustee.

9. Trusts 🔑14

Where stockholder indorsed and delivered certificate of stock to issuing corporation pursuant to resolution authorizing corporation upon stockholder's death to transfer stock to his son or some other person qualified to fill vacancy, retention by stockholder of right to sell stock during his lifetime would not prevent transaction from being a "present transfer" of interest in stock creating a trust therein.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Present Transfer".

10. Corporations 🔑113

Where stockholder indorsed and delivered certificate of stock to issuing corporation pursuant to resolution authorizing corporation upon stockholder's death to transfer stock to his son or some other person qualified to fill vacancy, it was not necessary to transfer of an interest to the corporation as trustee that the corporation's rights be shown on its stock transfer book.

11. Trusts 🔑30½(1)

Transfer of stock pursuant to resolution requiring each stockholder to indorse and deliver to corporation certificate of stock owned by him, and authorizing corporation upon stockholder's death to transfer stock to his son or some other person qualified to fill vacancy, created a "trust" in stock, regardless of whether stockholders understood the legal nature of their acts.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trust".

12. Trusts 🔑14

Where stockholders indorsed and delivered certificate of stock to issuing corporation pursuant to resolution requiring such transfer and authorizing corporation upon stockholder's death to transfer stock to his son, or some other person qualified to fill vacancy, whether stockholders intended presently to transfer an interest in stock so as to create a trust rather than attempt to make a testamentary disposition of stock depended on the whole context of resolution interpreted in the light of surrounding circumstances.

13. Corporations 🔑113

Trusts created by transfer of all capital stock in a corporation to the corporation pursuant to resolution requiring such transfer and authorizing corporation upon the death of a stockholder to transfer stock to his son or some other person qualified to fill vacancy was not invalid as unreasonably restraining the stockholder's right of alienation.

14. Corporations 🔑56

A by-law adopted by a majority vote binds stockholders who did not assent.

15. Corporations 🔑57

An invalid by-law may operate as a binding agreement upon those who assent to it, if not opposed to public policy as a contract.

16. Trusts 🔑46

An agreement assented to by all stockholders to transfer their stock in corporation to the corporation in trust to be transferred upon the death of a stockholder to his son or some other person qualified to fill vacancy would not be opposed to "public policy".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

17. Corporations 🔑113

A trust created by transfer of all stock in a corporation to the corporation to be transferred upon the death of a stockholder to his son or some other person qualified to fill vacancy was not invalid because its object was to give the corporation some control of its stockholder personnel.

18. Corporations 🔑113

Provisions restraining a stockholder's right to transfer stock are strictly construed.

19. Corporations 🔑113

Where resolution required each stockholder to transfer stock to issuing corporation and authorized corporation upon stockholder's death to transfer stock to his son, if a son survived whom directors deemed capable of assuming vacancy created by stockholder's death, otherwise to sell stock at best price obtainable from a person qualified to assume vacancy, the discretion vested in directors was not to be exercised arbitrarily and the rejection of a higher bid by one capable of filling vacancy would warrant recourse to courts.

20. Corporations 🔑113

A resolution requiring each stockholder to transfer to corporation his stock therein and authorizing corporation upon stockholder's death to transfer stock to stockholder's son if in opinion of directors he was qualified and capable of assuming vacancy created by father's death was not void for uncertainty but impliedly authorized selection of son deemed best qualified.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Frank M. Ogden, Judge.

Action for declaratory relief by the Oakland Scavenger Company, a corporation, and others against John Gandi, as executor of the estate of Giacomo Gandi, deceased, to obtain a determination of company's right in 100 shares of stock of the company issued in the name of deceased, wherein executor by answer and cross-complaint prayed for a decree quieting title. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Hearing denied; CURTIS, J., dissenting.

Cross & Brandt, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Decoto & Hardin and J. Meredity Wortz, all of Oakland, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff Oakland Scavenger Company brought this action for declaratory relief against John Gandi, executor of the estate of Giacomo Gandi, to obtain a determination of its rights in 100 shares of stock of the company issued in the name of deceased. Thomas Ferro, president of the company, joined as plaintiff, suing individually and on behalf of other stockholders. The defendant appeals from the judgment by which it was decreed that the company held the stock in trust, to sell it at the best price obtainable from a person qualified and capable of assuming the vacancy caused by the death of Gandi and to deliver the proceeds to defendant as executor. The judgment is based on a resolution adopted by the board of directors and thereafter by the stockholders. It further provided for payment to defendant executor of dividends and profits in the sum of $912, declared on the stock to August 31, 1939, and of dividends and profits which should be declared to the date of sale and transfer. Defendant executor claims the stock free of any rights in the corporation or stockholders. By answer and cross-complaint he prayed for a decree quieting title.

The company has 183 stockholders, each owning 100 shares. All stockholders work for the company. At the end of each month it is determined how much shall be paid to stockholders, each receiving the same amount, less individual deductions at a fixed rate per day for working days missed. The figure is such that a balance remains due notwithstanding a worker has been absent a full month, or has died, as in the case of defendant's testate. The company is not incorporated under the provision for organization of cooperative corporations. Section 653.1 et seq., Civil Code. The articles of incorporation and by-laws did not provide that each stockholder should work for the company, nor for uniform stock holdings and payments. The practice apparently rests on long established custom.

The contentions of appellant may be divided into two groups. First, defendant contends that it is extremely doubtful whether any resolution of this character was passed at all; that if a resolution was passed it appears as a matter of law that it was not the resolution found by the court; that the resolution was not binding on defendant's testate because it does not appear that he voted for it or endorsed and delivered his stock to the corporation pursuant to the resolution. A second group of contentions concerns the validity and effectiveness of the resolution found by the court, assuming that deceased endorsed his stock pursuant thereto. It is contended that the resolution is void as an unreasonable restraint on a stockholder's right of alienation; that there was no intent to create a trust and that the resolution is too uncertain to create an enforceable trust. The basic question here presented is whether a trust was created. If no title to the stock vested in the corporation as trustee it was a mere agent whose rights would not survive death of the stockholder.

The company was incorporated in 1920. In 1926 it changed its name from United Oakland Garbage Company to Oakland Scavenger Company by court decree. Thereafter new certificates were issued to show the changed name. The stockholders left their new certificates in possession of the corporation to guard against loss. The resolution which gives rise to this action was passed by the board of directors on March 12, 1930, and by the stockholders on March 15, 1930. Thereafter all stockholders endorsed their certificates and the company continued in possession.

The complaint as originally filed set forth the resolution as follows:

"Resolved:—That, all stockholders endorse and return Certificates of stock to the Corporation and that in case one of the stockholders meets with an accident and death befalls him, the Heir of Stock transfers certificate of stock in name of son providing therefore that the Corporation find the son capable to fulfill the Vacancy of the Deceased member, and Whereby if heir of stock has no son then the Corporation has an authority to sell stock at valued price on the date of Deceased member, thereupon the corporation delivering money to the heir of Stock."

The defendant's testate died on May 7, 1938. He did not die an accidental death. He left a widow, but no sons, nor any daughters so far at the record shows. In terms the resolution set forth above applies only in case a stockholder "meets with an accident and death befalls him." In his opening statement counsel for plaintiffs stated that it had been discovered that the resolution as set forth in the complaint did not correctly portray the corporate action, that it was to apply in the event of death from any cause. Thereafter the complaint was amended to set forth the resolution as follows:

"Resolved: That each of the stockholders endorse and deliver to the Oakland Scavenger Company the Certificate of Stock owned by him, and that in case of the death of any stockholder the Oakland Scavenger Company, be and it is hereby authorized and directed to transfer said Certificate of Stock to the son of the deceased person, if in the opinion of the Board of Directors of said Oakland Scavenger Company, the said son is qualified and capable of assuming the vacancy created by the decease of the father, and if said deceased stockholder leaves no surviving son, or if the said son, in the opinion of the Board of Directors of the Oakland Scavenger Company be not qualified and capable of assuming said vacancy, then the Oakland Scavenger Company, be and it is hereby authorized and directed to sell the said Certificate of Stock, and the shares represented thereby, at the best price obtainable from a person qualified and capable of assuming said vacancy, delivering the money so received from such sale to the surviving wife of said deceased stockholder, or if he leaves no surviving wife, to his heirs at law."

The resolution as found by the court differs from that set forth in the amended complaint in that it provides for delivery of the proceeds of sale "to the duly appointed representative of the estate of the deceased stockholder." This is in accord with the allegations of defendant's answer that if plaintiff corporation has the right to sell the stock it is required to pay proceeds to defendant to be administered in the estate of the deceased.

All proceedings of the company were conducted in Italian. There was introduced in evidence a minute book in English, showing minutes of the board of directors from December 26, 1925, to June 28, 1933. During this period until sometime in 1933 the witness D. Rossi was secretary. He testified that he took notes in Italian at the meetings and thereafter wrote up complete minutes in Italian. The English minute book was a translation of the Italian, made by the bookkeeper, Amelia Rettagliatta, who was with the company until May 1, 1935. She customarily wrote the translation in longhand in the English minute book and Rossi signed the minutes of each meeting as thus translated. Rossi testified that she could read Italian "pretty well", that when she didn't understand she called him.

Attached by gem clip to page 84, on which appear minutes of a meeting of the board of directors held on March 26, 1930, is a sheet of paper with typewriting. It reads: "At the meeting of the Board of Directors on March 12th, 1930, it was read as follows: [here the resolution as set forth in the original complaint appears]." On the same page there follows this statement: "At the general meeting of the Stockholders of the Corporation on the date of March 15th, 1930, the foregoing resolution was read before all stockholders: [here also is the resolution as set forth in the complaint as first filed].

"This resolution was passed by Mr. Francesco Piombo, and seconded by Mr. Louis Re, and unanimously accepted by our Stockholders of the Corporation." The page is unsigned.

The corporation was unable to produce the minute book kept in Italian by Rossi or his roll call book. He testified that when his term as secretary ended he placed his books in a box and turned them over to the new secretary, Ben Cerruti. Cerruti testified that the box had been left in an upstairs room in the office of the company, but was no longer there. He and Ferro, president, had searched for it, but had been unable to find either the box or the Italian minute book. The English minute book was kept by the bookkeeper in the office safe.

Appellant suggests that there is "some question" as to whether any resolution at all was passed, although we do not understand him to contend that as a matter of law the evidence is insufficient in this respect. He observes that the minutes were generally written in longhand and signed by the secretary, and that no space was left in the minute book between the longhand minutes of the directors' meeting of February 26, 1930, on page 83, and those on the following page for the meeting of March 26, 1930. The typed matter on the sheet clipped to page 84 obviously does not set forth complete minutes of either the directors' meeting of March 12, or the stockholders' meeting of March 15. In fact the book contained only minutes of the directors' meetings and of the annual stockholders' meetings at which directors were elected, although the Italian minute book, according to Rossi, included minutes of all stockholders' meetings, held regularly once a month. It would have been a departure from practice, therefore, for the minutes of the stockholders' meeting of March 15 to have been included.

[1] Why the minutes of the directors' meeting of March 12, 1930, were not set forth in the usual form is not explained, but their absence and the inability to produce the Italian minute book do not establish conclusively that no meeting was held and no resolution passed, in view of the testimony of those who were officers and directors at the time as to the passage of the resolution. An examination of the minute book reveals other resolutions in typewriting, pasted rather than clipped to the book, which are not shown by the longhand English minutes. Pasted to page 100 are minutes of a board of directors' meeting held on January 28, 1931, showing passage of a resolution amending the provision of the Articles of Incorporation setting forth the purposes of the corporation. Longhand minutes of the same meeting, on page 100, contain no reference to this resolution.

Pasted to page 101 is a typed page setting forth, but not in complete minutes, a resolution in regard to compensation insurance of the company passed at a directors' meeting on January 7, 1931. There are no longhand minutes for this meeting.

Pasted to page 103, again not included in complete minutes, is a lengthy resolution passed at a directors' meeting on February 4, 1931, providing for the purchase by the company of all outstanding capital stock of the Contra Costa Hog Company and of certain contracts at a purchase price of $75,000 to plaintiff corporation. There are no longhand minutes for this meeting.

The typed resolution changing the articles, pasted to page 100 above other longhand minutes, is not signed by the secretary. The other two resolutions noted above are signed. In the circumstances it is readily apparent that great significance cannot be attached to the omission from the book of complete longhand minutes of a directors' meeting held on March 12, 1930, as giving rise to a suspicion that no resolution at all was passed on that date.

For the plaintiff corporation the following witnesses testified as to the contents of the resolution of March, 1930: Ben Cerruti, director in March, 1930, who thereafter succeeded Rossi as secretary; F. Martino, a director in March, 1930; Louis Re, vice-president of the company at the time of trial, a director in 1930; Dominic Rossi, a director and secretary in 1930. The only witnesses called by defendant were Cerruti, called under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, and defendant himself, who did not testify as to the terms of the resolution. Plaintiff Ferro, president of the company, was absent in Europe at the time of trial.

[2] The several witnesses for the company all testified that the resolution was to apply whatever the cause of a stockholders' death. The entire lack of reason for invoking the resolution only when a stockholder died an accidental death in itself strongly supports this testimony. The resolution as phrased on the typed sheet attached to the minute book is so ineptly worded, obviously by one not familiar with English, as to be ambiguous, if not meaningless. As written it requires explanation and interpretation. Appellant does not contend that corporate minutes are more than prima facie evidence of corporate action. In view of the absence of any reason to confine the resolution to cases where a stockholder died accidentally it may be doubted whether the record would support any other conclusion than that based on the testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses that it was to apply whatever the cause of death.

[3] The further contentions that the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to show that decedent assented to the resolution, or that he endorsed and delivered his stock pursuant to it, cannot be upheld. The question of decedent's assent to the resolution is of major importance if the resolution is sustained on the theory that it operated as an agreement between the stockholders themselves and between them and the company, as will be pointed out hereafter. There was testimony that decedent was present at the meeting, that all stockholders were present. Absence from monthly meetings was punishable by fine and attendance was regularly so large that a hall was rented. The vote on the resolution was by show of hands. There were no dissenting votes. All stockholders thereafter endorsed their stock. Appellant argues that the testimony is consistent with deceased not having voted at all. A failure to vote under such circumstances indicates assent where a stockholder subsequently endorses his stock and leaves it with the corporation, as provided by the resolution.

Appellant's further contention that it does not appear that the stock was endorsed pursuant to the resolution cannot be sustained. The only reasonable inference to be drawn from his endorsement in the circumstances is that it was pursuant to the resolution. The deposit of the stock, unendorsed, to guard against its loss, had been made several years previously. Even had decedent not been present at the meeting or had not taken part in the vote, his act of endorsing the stock pursuant to the resolution would indicate his assent and purpose to be bound by it.

[4, 5] On this branch of the case the problems presented are all factual. The testimony of the witnesses does show contradictions, which respondents explain as due to their difficulty with the English language. It cannot be held as a matter of law that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. There being substantial evidence and inferences therefrom to support the findings, this court has no power to disturb the judgment based thereon.

[6, 7] The next question presented is whether the endorsement and deposit of the stock with the corporation pursuant to the resolution was effective to create a trust in the stock. Unless an interest presently passed to the corporation as trustee when the defendant's testator endorsed the certificate and left it with the corporation, the arrangement was ineffective to create a trust. Cohn v. Klein, 209 Cal. 421, 287 P. 459; Nichols v. Emery, 109 Cal. 323, 41 P. 1089, 50 Am.St.Rep. 43; Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home, 167 Cal. 570, 140 P. 242; Niccolls v. Niccolls, 168 Cal. 444, 143 P. 712. That is, if title does not pass until death, the transfer is testamentary, and must comply with the formalities prescribed for wills. If no interest passed in the present case until death of the stockholder, or if the arrangement was a mere agency which was revoked by death of the stockholder, then plaintiff corporation and its stockholders have no rights by virtue of the resolution and acts done pursuant thereto.

[8] In order to create a valid trust the transfer to the trustee need not be of a present interest, but may be of a future interest. All that is required is that an interest presently pass to the trustee. In Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home, supra, a grantor executed and delivered a deed absolute in which she reserved a life estate, power to revoke and power to sell. The court held that the same rules applied as to the case of a similar grant to a trustee, that an interest presently passed which saved the grant from being testamentary, notwithstanding the power of revocation and power of sale reserved. This case has been cited with approval in Gordon v. Barr, 13 Cal.2d 596, 91 P.2d 101, and American Bible Society v. Mortgage Guarantee Co., 217 Cal. 9, 17 P.2d 105. See notes, 73 A.L.R. 209; 11 A.L.R. 23.

In Nichols v. Emery, supra, a father executed a deed to his son as trustee, with instructions in the deed to sell within ten months of the grantor's death and to divide the proceeds in a certain manner. A power of revocation was reserved and no disposition was made of the estate intervening between the date of the deed and the death of the trustor. The court held that there was a present transfer of interest which was operative and absolute until revoked by the grantor, that there remained in him a life estate.

[9] In the case herein the resolution does not purport to restrict a stockholder's right to sell the stock during his lifetime. There is evidence that it was the practice to make no sale without the approval of the company. However, under the rule of the Tennant case, the retention of the right of the stockholder to sell the stock during his lifetime would not prevent the resolution and acts done under it from being a present transfer.

[10] It was not necessary to the transfer of an interest to the corporation as trustee that the corporation's rights be shown on its stock transfer book. The transfer was not the usual transfer of stock ownership. The corporation apparently acted without legal advice and it is, therefore, understandable that these special transfers should not be registered on its books.

[11] Appellant objects that no intent to create a trust was shown here. The purpose to be accomplished appears beyond dispute—that if the stockholder left no capable son the company was to have the right to sell the stock, but that it should have no beneficial interest in the proceeds. To the accomplishment of this purpose it was necessary that a legal interest pass to the company before the death of the stockholder. The endorsement and delivery of the stock was an appropriate means of making such a transfer. That is, the stockholders intended to accomplish their purpose by the means adopted. The trial court, therefore, properly held that their intent was to create a trust although the stockholders doubtless did not fully understand the legal nature of their acts.

As indicating that there was no intent to transfer legal title by means of the endorsement and delivery of the stock, appellant relies strongly on a stipulation made by respondent's counsel during the trial. The following occurred:

"The Court: As I understand the testimony of the previous witnesses—I don't know but maybe you will stipulate to it, to save time—that the certificate of stock of the deceased was kept in the possession of the Corporation, and no transfer was made of it to the Corporation, nor did the Corporation claim any title to that certificate of stock by reason of its endorsement in blank, or otherwise, isn't that the situation?

"Mr. Decoto [respondents' counsel]: That is the stipulation, and I will make that stipulation, if the Court please.

"Mr. Brandt [appellant's counsel]: And that the endorsement and leaving of the stock with the Company was not intended to be, and did not transfer any legal or beneficial interest in the stock, or title to it?

"Mr. Decoto: I am willing to make the stipulation as recited by the Judge, and I think that covers it fully.

"Mr. Brandt: Well, I don't know that the Company doesn't claim any title to the stock.

"The Court: In itself?

"Mr. Brandt: In itself.

"Mr. Decoto: We have stipulated to that.

"Mr. Brandt: Well, possibly it covers the matter. In other words, Mr. Decoto, so that we can save time, the stock was merely left in the possession and custody of the Oakland Scavenger Company?

"Mr. Decoto: Well, when you go into that, I would have to add to that, for certain purposes.

"The Court: Well, I presume it is your contention that the stock was left with the Company, and was endorsed in blank, so that, in case of the death of one of the members, if there were no son to qualify to carry on, that the Corporation could then sell the stock? I presume that is your contention?

"Mr. Decoto: That is our contention.

"The Court: That is the only purpose for which it was endorsed in blank and left with the Company?

"Mr. Decoto: Yes. The Corporation claims no title in itself to the stock."

These remarks, when the record is read as a whole, do not amount to a stipulation that no trust was created. When the circumstances under which this stipulation was made are considered, it is clear that it should be given no broader meaning than that the company had no beneficial title, that it had no title or interest in the stock in the sense that it was without right to the proceeds from the sale of the stock, that its title was only in aid of a right to sell the stock. This is made clear by the fact that prior to the institution of this action respondents' counsel had taken the position that under the resolution the corporation itself became absolute owner upon the death of a stockholder, with the obligation only to pay a price therefor. The stipulation made it plain that he no longer adhered to this position. It was thereafter brought out during the trial that if the corporation was to succeed it must be on the theory of a trust.

[12] As indicating that there was no intent presently to transfer a legal interest by the endorsement of the stock, appellant also refers to a provision contained in new by-laws adopted after this controversy arose. The by-law reads: "Upon the death of the stockholder, full ownership and title to his stock certificate, and the shares of stock represented thereby shall pass to and become vested in the Board of Directors of the Oakland Scavenger Company, for the purposes set forth in this Article." (Italics supplied.) Since the new by-law provision was intended to make more certain the accomplishment of the object of the earlier resolution, and in appellant's analysis under the new provision no interest passed until the death of the stockholder, he argues that it cannot be presumed that the intent under the early resolution was any broader than the by-law. But use of such language as that contained in the by-law is not conclusive as to when an interest passes. The question depends on the whole context, interpreted in the light of surrounding circumstances. Cohn v. Klein, 209 Cal. 421, 287 P. 459; Randall v. Bank of America, 48 Cal.App.2d 249, 119 P.2d 754.

[13-16] Appellant's further contention that if a trust was created it was invalid because the effect is unreasonably to restrain a stockholder's right of alienation, cannot be sustained. It is not necessary here to consider whether the restriction would be valid as a by-law. A by-law adopted by majority vote binds stockholders who do not assent. Even a by-law, if invalid, may operate as a binding agreement on those who assent to it, if not opposed to public policy as a contract. Vannucci v. Pedrini, 217 Cal. 138, 143, 17 P.2d 706; People's Home Savings Bank v. Sadler, 1 Cal.App. 189, 81 P. 1029; Jennings v. Bank of California, 79 Cal. 323, 21 P. 852, 5 L.R.A. 233, 12 Am.St.Rep. 145; 6A Cal.Jur. 327. The resolution herein was not adopted as a by-law. All stockholders in general and Gandi in particular assented to it and endorsed their stock and permitted it to remain with the company as contemplated by the resolution. As an agreement it is not opposed to public policy. By the resolution each stockholder surrendered his right to make testamentary disposition of his stock, although not of the proceeds from its sale. But this results in any case where the owner of property creates a trust without reserving a right to revoke. The situation insofar as the question of the restraint on the owner's right of alienation is concerned is no different where the subject of the trust is stock than where it is other personal property or real property.

[17] The trust is not invalid by reason of the fact that its object was to give the corporation some control of its stockholder personnel. The reason for such control in a corporation operated as was respondent is apparent. This purpose is frequently accomplished by agreements which provide that before a stockholder sells his stock he must first give the corporation or other stockholders an option to buy it. Such agreements are generally sustained. Baumohl v. Goldstein, 95 N.J.Eq. 597, 124 A. 118; Nicholson v. Franklin Brewing Co., 82 Ohio St. 94, 91 N.E. 991, 137 Am.St.Rep. 764, 19 Ann.Cas. 699; 8 Fletcher, Cyclopedia Corporations, Rev. and Perm. Ed., p. 786; notes, 117 A.L.R. 1359; 65 A.L.R. 1168, 1183, citing numerous cases. In this state it has been held that although a provision giving other stockholders an option to purchase is valid as an agreement, an option to the corporation to purchase itself violated section 309, Civil Code, as it then stood. Mancini v. Patrizi, 87 Cal.App. 435, 262 P. 375; Mancini v. Patrizi, 110 Cal. App. 42, 293 P. 828; Vannucci v. Pedrini, supra. The section prohibited the dividing, withdrawing or paying to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock of the corporation except such as remained after payment of its debts on dissolution. The arrangement in the present case is no more objectionable than the option plan insofar as the perpetuation of control by existing stockholders or directors is concerned.

In Krauss v. Kuechler, 300 Mass. 346, 15 N.E.2d 207, 117 A.L.R. 1355, the court upheld the validity of an agreement by which it was provided that at the death of a stockholder his shares of common stock should automatically become the property of the corporation by paying to the estate of the deceased a sum agreed upon by the remaining stockholders. In Searles v. Bar Harbor Banking & Trust Co., 128 Me. 34, 145 A. 391, 392, 65 A.L.R. 1154, the court upheld an agreement between stockholders as follows: "Any person acquiring through will, or descent, or by conveyance to take effect at death, any stock of this corporation issued after the passage of this by-law shall be bound to offer the same for sale and transfer to any party appointed by the Trust Company Directors at a fair value of such stock as determined by said Directors, or if said value is not satisfactory to the estate; at the fair value of said stock as determined by three appraisers, one to be chosen by the estate, one chosen by the Directors and one chosen by those two, but any and all appraisers must be chosen from and be when chosen, stockholders in said Trust Company."

[18] The resolution in the present case applies only in the event of the death of a stockholder. It does not purport to restrict his right of alienation during his lifetime. Provisions restraining a stockholder's right of transfer are strictly construed. 18 C.J.S., Corporations, § 391, p. 921. Under the rule of the Tennant case, supra, a transfer does not become testamentary because the transferrer reserves the absolute power of sale during his lifetime. Witnesses herein testified to a practice of not selling without receiving the approval of the company, but appellant himself contends that it was not shown that there was a binding agreement to that effect. However this may be, the present action concerns the effect of the resolution which expressly was made to apply only in the event of a stockholder's death. We are not here concerned with what restrictions during the lifetime of a stockholder will operate as an unreasonable restraint on alienation.

[19] It is also objected that the resolution is ineffective because the phrase "qualified and capable of assuming the said vacancy" is too uncertain; that it in effect enables the company to sell at a low price to one whom it prefers for some reason, while rejecting the higher bid of another who is qualified and capable. Appellant contends that this is just what the company is attempting to do in this instance. The trial court made it plain in his remarks during the trial that he did not so construe the resolution; that the discretion vested in the directors was not to be exercised arbitrarily or in bad faith; that if the company rejected the higher bid of one who was capable the defendant would have recourse to the courts. See Krauss v. Kuechler, 300 Mass. 346, 15 N.E.2d 207, 117 A.L.R. 1355. The judgment as originally signed provided that the company should sell the shares "at the best price obtainable from a person in the opinion of the Board of Directors of Oakland Scavenger Company, qualified and capable of assuming the vacancy created by the death of Giacomo Gandi." When the italicized phrase was called to the court's attention on motion for new trial it was deleted.

[20] Appellant makes the further contention that the resolution is void for uncertainty in that it does not provide expressly for the contingency of a stockholder having two or more sons, all of them capable to assume the vacancy in the company. The reasonable implication is that in such event the company shall select the son whom it deems best qualified and most capable. In view of the long standing scheme for uniform stock holdings of 100 shares, with payment of the same wages or dividends to each stockholder, it cannot be held to have been within the contemplation of the parties that a deceased owner's shares should be divided between his several sons. The arrangement results in a preference to one son over another. But this was a matter for consideration of the stockholders when they unanimously passed the resolution.

The judgment is affirmed.

GOODELL, J. pro tem., and WARD, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 127

ALEXANDER v. SCATTERGOOD et al.

Civ. 12946.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
April 6, 1942.

1. Evidence 🔑83(2)

Presumption existed that official duty was regularly performed in connection with the discharge of municipal employee and that the law governing discharge of civil service employees was observed. Civ.Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑218(8)

In action by classified civil service employee of city for wrongful discharge, where there was no direct attack made upon order of discharge grounded upon extrinsic fraud in its procurement, presumption existed that charges allegedly made against employee were true and that the order discharging her was determined by duly constituted authorities to be just and proper. Civ.Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑218(10)

If charges contained in order discharging classified civil service employee of city were true and procedure provided for bringing about discharge of employee was adhered to, resulting in an ultimate finding that the employee was discharged for cause, defendants could not be held liable in damages on theory that they unjustifiably procured discharge of the employee. Civ.Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑218(10)

Cause of action of classified civil service employee of city was based upon right derived solely from city charter and therefore complaint was required to allege compliance with charter requirements in order to state a cause of action on theory that discharge was unjustifiably procured by defendants. Civ.Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

5. Municipal corporations ⚿218(10)

In action by classified civil service employee of city, where employee failed to allege compliance by her, or failure of compliance by defendants with requirements of city charter preventing discharge except for cause, complaint did not allege a cause of action for wrongful discharge. Civ.Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

6. Municipal corporations ⚿218(1)
States ⚿53

Where one accepts and holds an office subject to conditions that are imposed by law of the state or political subdivision whose agent or servant such person is, and if a cause of removal and mode of enforcing it are provided by law, the person is deemed to have accepted his office or employment on condition that he may be removed for that cause and in the manner provided.

7. Municipal corporations ⚿218(1)

Where city charter created a position and employment occupied by plaintiff who sought damages for wrongful discharge, the charter properly provided the manner of eliminating the position or discharging the holder therefrom and the plaintiff took the same subject to the charter conditions.

8. Municipal corporations ⚿218(8)

Where order discharging classified civil service employee was not directly attacked on ground of extrinsic fraud, complaint based on theory that defendants maliciously, and without probable cause charged employee with certain derelictions as result of which the employee was discharged, did not state a cause of action for malicious prosecution, since such theory would amount to a "collateral attack" on the order. Civ.Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Collateral Attack".

9. Municipal corporations ⚿218(10)

Where remedies provided by city charter to discharged classified civil service employee are ample and exclusive, a discharged employee is required to pursue and exhaust them and if she fails to do so she is without standing in court in action for damages based on theory of wrongful discharge. Civ. Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

10. Municipal corporations ⚿218(10)

In action by classified civil service employee of city for damages resulting from allegedly wrongful discharge, complaint did not state cause of action against fellow employee who was without power under city charter to discharge the plaintiff employee. Civ.Code, § 1708; Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben F. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Audrey D. Alexander against Ezra F. Scattergood and others for damages for wrongful discharge. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

R. R. Sleeper, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Nicholas & Davis, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Justice.

This appeal is prosecuted by plaintiff from a judgment of dismissal predicated upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. Upon the occasion of entering the minute order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, the court directed that the signing and filing of a formal judgment be withheld for a period of ten days to afford plaintiff an opportunity to make application to file an amended complaint. When within the specified time no application, motion or request for leave to amend the complaint was made or filed, the court directed the entry of the formal judgment aforesaid.

The complaint, after alleging the corporate status of the city of Los Angeles, set forth that the Department of Water and Power is a department of the city government established in accordance with the city charter. It then alleged that on or about October 23, 1929, the plaintiff, after a competitive civil service examination, was found qualified and placed on the eligible list for employment as a stenographer; that on or about March 3, 1930, plaintiff was, in accordance with the charter of the city of Los Angeles and the rules and regulations of the departments of Water and Power and Civil Service, selected and employed as a senior stenographer, in which capacity she continued to be regularly and continuously employed until September 9, 1937. The complaint alleged that at all times during the period of her employment plaintiff "pursued the duties of her said position in a careful, prudent and efficient manner"; that at the commencement of her employment she received a salary of $125 per month, and that subsequently the amount of such salary was increased to $140 per month, which latter amount was being paid her on September 9, 1937. It was alleged in the complaint that the defendant Ezra F. Scattergood was at all times employed by the Department of Water and Power of said city as the general manager of the Bureau of Power and Light, and that the defendant Lydia Jean Morgan was at all times mentioned in the complaint a senior stenographer of the same grade and classification under civil service rules as was the plaintiff. It was then alleged that while plaintiff was employed as above set forth, the defendants, "with false and untrue accusations against the plaintiff and with threats to discharge her and false allegations that she was 'spying' upon other employees, and by employment of 'stool pigeons' to seek out petty tales against the plaintiff and refusals to investigate the truth or falsity of such petty tales and accusations, sought to harass and oppress the plaintiff, and wrongfully, unlawfully, maliciously, with wanton disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, and solely for personal reasons and in consummation of such trickery, intrigue, and vindictiveness, discharged the plaintiff and removed her from her said position. * * *" Judgment was sought for the sum plaintiff would have received from the time of her discharge up to the date of the commencement of this action, in the sum of $4,168, and for exemplary damages in the sum of $20,000.

This action is founded upon section 1708 of the Civil Code, which prohibits any person from injuring the person or property of another or from infringing upon any of his rights. Assuming the correctness of plaintiff's contention that one who maliciously and without justifiable cause induces an employer to discharge an employee is liable in an action of tort to the employee for the damages thereby sustained (Civ.Code, § 1708; Cooley on Torts, 1932 Ed., vol. II, § 226, ch. 9), we are of the opinion that the complaint herein, as framed, does not state a cause of action under the announced theory.

Plaintiff was a classified civil service employee of the city of Los Angeles, whose employment and dismissal therefrom are governed by the provisions of the city charter. With reference to employment and discharge in the Department of Water and Power, subdivision 2 of section 80 of the charter empowers the general manager (which was the position held by the defendant Scattergood) "to appoint, discharge, suspend, or transfer the employees of the department, other than the secretary of the board and the chief accounting employee of the department, and to issue instructions to said employees, other than the secretary and the chief accounting employee, in the line of their duties, all subject to the Civil Service provisions of the charter; * * *." Section 112a of the charter authorizes any board or officer having the power of appointment of officers, members and employees in any department of the government of the city to remove, discharge or suspend such employee, but provides that such discharge of any classified civil service employee shall be made only for cause; that such cause shall be stated in writing by the board or officer having the power to effect such removal and filed with the Board of Civil Service Commissioners with a certificate that a copy of such statement has been served upon the discharged employee. While the discharge of the employee takes place upon such filing, nevertheless within fifteen days after such statement shall have been filed, the Board of Civil Service Commissioners is empowered upon its own motion, or upon written application of the discharged employee, must, proceed to investigate the grounds for such discharge. The board is authorized, after making such investigation, if it finds that the grounds of discharge were insufficient or not sustained and that the person is a fit and suitable person to fill the position from which he was removed, to order such employee's reinstatement or restoration to duty. The order of the Civil Service Commission affirming or revoking the discharge of an employee is by the charter declared to be final and conclusive. The charter further provides that in the event the Board of Civil Service Commissioners makes an order as aforesaid of restoration, the discharged employee is entitled to receive compensation from the city the same as if he had not been removed or discharged by the appointing board or officer.

[1-3] In view of the fact that the complaint contains no allegation to the contrary, we must presume that official duty was regularly performed in connection with the discharge of plaintiff. (Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subd. 15), and that the law was observed. Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subd. 33; Hauser v. Pacific G. & E. Co., 133 Cal.App. 222, 23 P.2d 1068. It must therefore be assumed that at the time her employment with the city was severed plaintiff was served with a notice in writing of her discharge; that such notice, with a certificate of service upon her, was filed with the Board of Civil Service Commissioners; that if the plaintiff filed with said board a written application within five days after service upon her of the statement of the ground of her discharge, that the Board of Civil Service Commissioners, pursuant to the provisions of the charter, proceeded within fifteen days to investigate and did investigate the same, and determined that the grounds stated for such discharge were sufficient. There is no direct attack made upon the order of discharge herein grounded upon extrinsic fraud in its procurement, and therefore the presumption arises that the charges allegedly made by respondents against the plaintiff were true, and that the order discharging her was determined by the duly constituted authorities to be just and proper. Caraker v. Webster, 24 Cal.App.2d 300, 74 P.2d 1048; Roos v. Harris, 203 Cal. 201, 263 P. 225; Fetterley v. Gibson, 210 Cal. 282, 291 P. 411; Plum v. Becket, 120 Cal.App. 507, 7 P.2d 1111. Of necessity it follows that if the charges contained in the order of her discharge were true and that the procedure provided by the charter for bringing about her discharge were adhered to, resulting in an ultimate finding that plaintiff was discharged for cause, then defendants cannot be held liable in damages therefor.

[4-7] In view of the fact that plaintiff's cause of action arises upon a right derived solely from the charter of the city of Los Angeles, her complaint must allege compliance with the requirements of the charter in order to state such a cause of action. Kline v. San Francisco U. School Dist., 40 Cal.App.2d 174, 104 P.2d 661, 105 P.2d 362; Green v. Grimes-Stassforth S. Co., 39 Cal.App.2d 52, 102 P.2d 452; Watts v. Currie, 38 Cal.App.2d 615, 101 P.2d 764. Plaintiff having failed to allege in her complaint compliance by her or failure of compliance by the defendants with the requirements of section 112a of the city charter above set forth, which section prevents her discharge except for cause, such failure is fatal to her alleged cause of action for her claimed wrongful discharge. When one accepts and holds an office subject to certain conditions that are imposed by the laws of the state, county, city or other political subdivision whose agent or servant such person is, and if a cause of removal and a mode of enforcing it are provided by law, then such officer or employee is deemed to have accepted his office or employment on condition that he may be removed for that cause and in the manner provided by the law. Cline v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 331, 336, 193 P. 929. The charter of the city of Los Angeles having created the position and employment occupied by plaintiff, it was proper to provide in such charter the manner and means of eliminating such position or discharging the holder therefrom, and the holder or incumbent in such office or employment takes the same subject to the charter conditons which accompany it.

[8, 9] Even though we assume that plaintiff has attempted to allege a cause of action for malicious prosecution, and that the basis therefor is that the defendants maliciously, falsely and without probable cause charged plaintiff with certain derelictions of duty in a notice of discharge filed with the city civil service commission, as the result of which plaintiff was discharged from her position, nevertheless a cause of action is not stated. Not setting forth any allegations of extrinsic fraud which was involved in procuring the order of discharge, such a theory would amount to a collateral attack on the order apparently made by the civil service commission ousting plaintiff from her position. Bound as we are to assume either that plaintiff appealed to the civil service commission, which board sustained her discharge, or that she failed to take advantage of the provisions of the charter which entitled her to ask for such a review of the order of the general manager discharging her, and there being no direct attack upon the order of discharge grounded on extrinsic fraud in its procurement from the civil service commission, it must be assumed that the charges allegedly made by defendants were true and that the order of discharge was proper. Caraker v. Webster, supra. Where, as here, the remedies provided by the charter are ample and exclusive, plaintiff was required to pursue and exhaust them, and having failed to do so, she is without standing in court in an action of the kind attempted to be alleged in the complaint filed herein. Johnson v. City of Glendale, 12 Cal.App.2d 389, 55 P.2d 580; 1 Cal.Jur. 381, 382, § 58, and cases cited.

[10] Concerning the allegations contained in the complaint with reference to the defendant Lydia Jean Morgan, who was a fellow employee of plaintiff, it is at once apparent from a reading of the allegations that defendant Lydia Jean Morgan could not possibly have discharged the plaintiff as she is alleged to have done, because she had no power so to do under the charter of the city of Los Angeles. On that ground, irrespective of other claimed deficiencies in the complaint with reference to defendant Lydia Jean Morgan, it must be held that as to her no cause of action was stated.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 750

WEINBERG v. DAYTON STORAGE CO., Inc., et al.

Civ. 11791.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 27, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Warehousemen 🔑25(5)

Where New York moving company estimated household furniture, actually weighing 4,415 pounds, to weigh 3,000 pounds, and contracted with owner to ship furniture to California at fixed charge per hundred pounds and represented to agent California storage company that weight was 7,900 pounds, and California company, upon receipt of the furniture, demanded payment based upon represented weight before delivery of furniture to owner, demand was excessive amounting to a "conversion", notwithstanding that California company acted in good faith.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conversion".

2. Principal and agent 🔑159(2)

An agent is guilty of conversion although acting in good faith and in exact accord with the instructions of his principal if the latter is guilty of conversion.

3. Bailment 🔑16

Where a bailee of personal property has come into possession of the owner's property lawfully, a demand for possession by the owner is essential to create a liability for conversion.

4. Warehousemen 🔑25(8)

Where owner of furniture in possession of storage company seeking recovery for the conversion thereof had several times questioned correctness of storage company's charges, and storage company tendered furniture to owner conditional upon payment of charges predicated on claimed weight subsequently proved to be excessive, and manner of tender indicated that a lesser sum than that demanded would not be accepted, owner did not "waive" his objection to the claimed weight of the goods by failure to challenge its correctness at time of tender.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

5. Tender 🔑15(3)

The basis of the rule that objections to a tender not raised are deemed waived is that ordinarily a party who makes an improper tender through no fault of his own should be given an opportunity to correct it.

6. Trover and conversion 🔑9(3)

A demand for delivery of property by the owner thereof as a prerequisite to recover for its conversion is not necessary where the acts of defendant in relation to the property show a conversion, or where, under the facts, a demand would be futile.

7. Warehousemen 🔑25(5)

Where furniture weighing 4,415 pounds was shipped by New York moving company to agent California storage company on representation that weight was 7,900 pounds and storage company tendered furniture to owner conditional upon payment of charges predicated on weight represented to it by moving company, the correctness of which charges was questioned by owner, storage company had duty to ascertain true weight before making demand for payment, violation of which was a "conversion" of the furniture.

8. Warehousemen 🔑25(5)

Where owner of furniture shipped from New York moving company to agent California storage company demanded delivery thereof and tendered payment of less than amount actually due and storage company demanded payment of charges predicated on weights represented to it by moving company amounting to more than was actually due, owner made sufficient "demand" for the goods, and failure to comply therewith constituted a "conversion" by storage company.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Demand".

9. Pleading 🔑237(1, 8)

Great liberality should be used in permitting the filing of amendments to pleadings to conform to proof where they do not prejudice the opposing party, but such amendments should not be allowed when they raise new issues.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1041(4)

In conversion action, error in permitting plaintiff to add new cause of action for fraud to conform to proof was not prejudicial to defendant where evidence amply supported findings against defendant on conversion issue and findings on fraud issue could be disregarded.

11. Appeal and error 🔑1073(5), 1178(6)

Where defendant, in conversion action in reliance on stipulation that plaintiff would receive back her goods in lieu of recovery for reasonable value thereof and would recover only for consequential damages, cut short proof of value of goods converted, and evidence of value was unsatisfactory, an award of a judgment for damages for conversion was prejudicial error requiring a new trial on the issue of damages.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by May Weinberg against Dayton Storage Company, Incorporated, and Lyon Storage & Moving Company, for conversion of personal property. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Lyon Storage & Moving Company appeals.

Reversed with directions.

Aiken, Kramer & Aiken, of Oakland, for appellant.

Dudley H. Nebeker and Richard H. Klippert, both of Oakland, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Judge.

Defendant Lyon Storage and Moving Co. appeals from a judgment awarding plaintiff $1,750 as the reasonable value of certain personal property of plaintiff found to have been converted by defendant, and also awarding plaintiff $750 damages for the loss of use of the property. Dayton Storage Company, Inc., a New York corporation which does not do business in this state, was also named as a defendant, and allegations of the complaint were directed against it, but it was never served, nor did it appear in the action. The deposition of its employee M. H. Richer, however, was read into evidence on behalf of defendant.

The complaint as originally filed states a cause of action for conversion. It avers that on January 5, 1940, plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of certain described personal property; that on that date she served on defendant a written demand for the return of the property; that defendant then and still refuses to return the property to plaintiff; that on that date defendant converted the property to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $5,000. At the trial, after all the evidence was in, plaintiff was permitted to amend the complaint "to conform by proof" by adding a second count charging defendants Dayton Storage Company, Inc., and Lyon Storage and Moving Co. with fraud and deceit.

The evidence shows that in November, 1938, the respondent made arrangements with the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., in New York for the storage of her household furnishings in New York, and for their transportation to California when, and if, she should desire them. The negotiations were had with M. H. Richer, the "estimator" employed by Dayton Storage Company, Inc. The respondent testified that she showed Richer all of the goods to be stored and shipped, and that he told her that packed in a lift van the goods would weigh, "at the most," 3,000 pounds. It is a reasonable interpretation of the evidence that Richer represented that the maximum weight of the goods in a lift van would not be over the above-mentioned weight and that they probably would weigh less. Based on this representation, respondent entered into a written contract with the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., on a form prepared by it, for the transportation of the goods to California when ordered by respondent for $6.50 per one hundred pounds. The agreement provided that the goods should be packed and removed from respondent's New York apartment by the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., and shipped by boat in lift van to Oakland, California, and delivered to, and unpacked in, respondent's residence in Oakland for the above-mentioned rate. In the printed portion of the form appeared the following: "This estimate is approximate only on goods listed above and is not to be considered a definite figure." It was then provided the goods should be stored in New York for one month for $7.25 (and $7.25 for each succeeding month); that the "Estimated Wgt. 3,000 lbs. at $6.50 per cwt." made the shipping charges $195; that the cost of insurance was $8; that the "Total Estimate" was $210.25. Typed on the bottom of the first page appears this statement: "If shipment goes to California, all storage charges and 50% of estimate to be paid before shipping." The agreement was signed by respondent and Richer, and respondent paid $10 on account at that time. Respondent also testified that she was informed by Richer that appellant represented the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., in California, and that when she desired the goods she should call upon that company in this state.

In November, 1939, respondent decided to have the goods shipped to California. She had paid the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., for the storage of the goods except for the first month which was included in the above-mentioned contract. She called upon appellant company in Oakland and talked with Jack Blum, "storage estimator and salesman." Respondent showed the contract to Blum, and asked that the goods be shipped. The appellant communicated with the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., and it was arranged that appellant should act as the agent of the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., in moving the goods from the shipping terminus in Oakland to respondent's residence in that city, and in collecting the amount due from respondent. Appellant was to be paid by the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., for this service at rates fixed by the California Railroad Commission. Respondent paid appellant $105, the same being approximately 50% of the estimate fixed in the contract. Respondent had several conversations with Blum concerning the possibility of shipping the goods by train, but, upon ascertaining the rate, ordered the goods shipped by boat according to the contract.

The Dayton Storage Company, Inc., delivered the goods to a steamship company on November 30, 1939. The goods were consigned to appellant and the bill of lading showed a purported weight of 7,900 pounds. The goods were removed from the boat in Los Angeles due to the shipping strike in San Francisco. They were conveyed by train by the Southern Pacific to San Francisco consigned to appellant, the bill of lading also showing a purported weight of 7,900 pounds.

On December 11, 1939, prior to the arrival of the goods, appellant wrote to respondent advising that the goods had been shipped, that the shipment weighed 7,900 pounds and that she owed a balance of $416.50. On December 27, 1939, respondent paid to appellant an additional $134.19. On January 4, 1940, appellant wrote to respondent informing her that the goods had arrived, and requesting payment of a claimed balance of $282.51, plus an additional $51.75 for railroad freight from Los Angeles. The claimed balance of $282.51 is based on a total charge of $513.50 for 7,900 pounds at $6.50 per one hundred pounds, plus $8 insurance, making a total of $521.50. If payments of $105 and $134.19 be deducted the balance is $282.31. The demand, however, was for $282.51.

Respondent had seriously questioned the correctness of the charges from the moment she was first informed of the total amount claimed. She had communicated that fact on several occasions to appellant. In fact, before the goods were shipped from Los Angeles, appellant and respondent entered into an agreement that by permitting such shipment respondent waived no rights by reason of her claimed overcharges.

After receiving the demand of January 4, 1940, the next day respondent served a written demand on appellant, in which she stated that she had already paid $264.44 for the shipping, which was $54.19 more than the amount called for by the original contract ($210.25); that that demand was made for the return of the overpayment and for immediate delivery of the goods.

It concluded that, unless delivery of the property was made within twenty-four hours of the receipt of the demand, respondent would treat the retention of the property as a conversion. Receiving no response from appellant, eight days later respondent filed her complaint charging appellant and the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., with conversion. The latter company, however, was not served and did not appear.

The case proceeded to trial upon the theory advanced by respondent that under her contract she was liable only for charges predicated on a weight of not to exceed 3,000 pounds. Appellant contended that the contract showed on its face that it was an estimate, and that respondent was liable for 7,900 pounds at $6.50 per one hundred pounds. During the first part of the trial it was assumed that the goods actually weighed 7,900 pounds. The goods were then in the Southern Pacific warehouse consigned to appellant. After appellant had closed its case respondent introduced evidence that she had procured the goods to be weighed at the Southern Pacific warehouse and that the true weight of the goods, plus the weight of the lift van, was 4,415 pounds. Following the introduction of this evidence, which was not contradicted by appellant, and, after the close of all the evidence, respondent was permitted to amend her complaint to conform to proof by adding a second count to her complaint wherein she charged the appellant and the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., with fraud and deceit in misrepresenting the weight of the goods.

On the allegations of the first count the court found that the contract between respondent and the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., was that the company would deliver the goods to respondent at her residence in Oakland for $6.50 per one hundred pounds; that when appellant received the goods it did not deliver the same but demanded as a condition of delivery payment of $334.26, which represented the balance due on a weight of 7,900 pounds plus freight charges from Los Angeles; that the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., represented that the goods would weigh approximately 3,000 pounds; that they actually weighed 4,415 pounds.

Upon the second count the court found that the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., with intent to deceive, represented that the goods would weigh, when packed, 3,000 pounds, which it knew to be false; that respondent entered into the contract in reliance on such representation; that the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., and appellant sought to collect on a basis of 7,900 pounds weight, when the goods actually weighed 4,415 pounds "which was an additional and excessive weight over and above that which the defendants were entitled to charge for of thirty four hundred eighty five pounds (3485), the true facts of which the defendants Dayton Storage Company, Inc., concealed from plaintiff."

It is to be noted that the above findings sustain the right of appellant to charge for 4,415 pounds, rather than 3,000 pounds. It should also be noted that it is not found that appellant misrepresented the weight knowing the true weight. There is no evidence that appellant knew that the true weight was not 7,900 pounds. Appellant had been informed by the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., that the goods weighed 7,900 pounds, and that figure had been given on the two bills of lading. However, the same cannot be said as to appellant's principal, the Dayton Storage Company, Inc. The deposition of Richer, the estimator, for that company, was taken before trial. He testified that he estimated the weight at 3,000 pounds, but that some time after the goods were received by his company they were weighed and the weight was 7,900 pounds. He conceded that in spite of this great variance respondent was not notified of the claimed weight until about the time the goods were shipped.

Although appellant did not know that the weights given on the bills of lading were incorrect, there is some question as to whether, in the exercise of reasonable care, appellant should not have had the goods re-weighed before making the demand upon respondent. Appellant knew of the "estimate" of 3,000 pounds, and knew that respondent seriously questioned the correctness of the charges. Blum testified that, although actual weight frequently varied from estimates to a considerable extent, he had "never seen such a wide variance as this one; I cannot understand it how anyone could say it weighed approximately 3,000 pounds and the shipment could weigh 7,900 pounds * * *." The witness Harvey Lyon testified that he was surprised at the variance between the estimate and the weight shown on the bills of lading. It might well be that good faith, under the circumstances, required appellant to have the goods re-weighed.

[1, 2] However, even if it be conceded that appellant was acting in good faith and in complete accordance with the instructions of its principal, the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., the amount that it demanded as a condition precedent to delivery of the goods was excessive. The law is settled that an agent is guilty of conversion, although acting in good faith and in exact accord with the instructions of his principal, if the latter is guilty of a conversion. Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 27 P. 33, 13 L.R.A. 605, 25 Am.St.Rep. 110. Appellant does not challenge this principle.

The major contentions of appellant are that it is not liable for a conversion because (1) respondent made no proper demand in that she did not tender the amount actually due on 4,415 pounds; and (2) when appellant offered to deliver the goods on payment of the balance due on 7,900 pounds respondent did not challenge the weight given on the bills of lading, but in her demand of January 5, 1940, took the position that regardless of weight she was entitled to the goods on payment of the $210.25.

[3-8] The legal situation is therefore one where the person in possession of the goods demanded, as a condition precedent to delivery, the payment of an excessive sum, while the owner of the goods tendered an amount which, as it subsequently turned out, was too little. Under such circumstances, has a conversion been committed? It is the general rule that where the bailee of personal property has come into possession of the owner's property lawfully, a demand for possession by the owner is essential to create the liability. See cases collected, 24 Cal.Jur., p. 1032, § 10. Appellant urges that, when it tendered the goods on condition that charges predicated on a claimed weight of 7,900 pounds be paid, and respondent did not then challenge the weight, the respondent waived that objection. It relies heavily on the rule that objections to a tender not raised are deemed waived. Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 P. 1115; Hind v. Oriental Products Co., Inc., 195 Cal. 655, 235 P. 438. The basis of that rule is that, under ordinary circumstances, a party who makes an improper tender through no fault of his own, should be given an opportunity to correct it. That rule, however, is not of inevitable application. It, as well as the rule in reference to the necessity of a demand, is subject to exceptions. It is well settled in this state that there is no necessity for a demand where the acts of the defendant in relation to the property show a conversion, or where, under the facts, a demand would be futile. Mier v. Southern California Ice Co., 56 Cal.App. 512, 206 P. 83; Wood v. McDonald, 66 Cal. 546, 6 P. 452; Lowe v. Ozmun, 3 Cal.App. 387, 86 P. 729; Fiedler v. Allen, 117 Cal. App. 622, 4 P.2d 292; Yamada v. Masue Osawa, 12 Cal.App.2d 133, 54 P.2d 1135; Metzler v. Foster Holding Co., 5 Cal.2d 278, 54 P.2d 447. Each case must turn upon its own facts. In the present case the appellant knew long before the goods arrived that respondent challenged the correctness of the charges. Appellant had seen the contract estimating the weight at 3,000 pounds. Blum testified that, although true weight varied from the estimate, he had never seen a case with a variance such as here is claimed. The question of the weight was several times discussed between appellant and respondent—in fact, appellant wrote to the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., asking that company to ascertain the "exact weight" of the goods before they were shipped. The next day respondent telegraphed to New York informing the Dayton Storage Company, Inc., to ship the goods immediately and to disregard appellant's letter. Respondent testified that this telegram was sent at the suggestion of Blum. When the goods arrived in Los Angeles there was such a dispute over the charges that it was agreed between the appellant and respondent that by agreeing to the shipment by rail respondent would not waive her claim that there was an overcharge. The goods were consigned to the appellant. Under such circumstances, the appellant sent the demand of January 4, 1940, by which it demanded payment based on a claimed weight of 7,900 pounds. Appellant urges respondent was under a duty to demand that the goods be re-weighed. We think that, from all the circumstances, the trial court was justified in holding that with the knowledge of all the above-mentioned facts appellant was under a duty to ascertain the true facts before it made its demand. By electing to go ahead by demanding payment based on a claimed weight of 7,900 pounds it indicated to any reasonable or prudent person that a tender of less would not be accepted. When respondent made her demand on January 5th certainly the appellant knew that respondent challenged the claimed charges. Although respondent in her letter did not expressly challenge the correctness of the weight, in view of the surrounding circumstances, such a challenge was implicit in the very nature of the demand by her. Under these circumstances, the demand made by respondent was sufficient. The evidence amply supports the finding of the trial court that there was a conversion by appellant.

[9, 10] Appellant next urges that it was error to permit the filing of the first amended complaint. The record shows that the trial court permitted respondent to file an amended complaint after the evidence had been closed. By this pleading the respondent was permitted to add a new cause of action predicated on the theory of fraud. It was filed on the theory that it was an amendment to conform to proof. While it is true that great liberality should be permitted in the filing of amendments where they do not prejudice the opposing party, it is equally true that amendments of pleadings to conform to the proofs should not be allowed when they raise new issues not included in the original pleadings and upon which the adverse party had no opportunity to defend. Richter v. Adams, 19 Cal.App.2d 572, 66 P.2d 226; Rosemead Co. v. Shipley Co., 207 Cal. 414, 278 P. 1038; Lavely v. Nonemaker, 212 Cal. 380, 298 P. 976; Bank of United States v. Foreman, 102 Cal.App. 756, 283 P. 874. However, although it was probably error to permit this pleading to be filed, such error in no way prejudiced appellant. The findings on conversion being amply supported by the evidence, the findings on the fraud issue may be entirely disregarded.

[11] None of the other points urged by appellant need be discussed except its contention that the cause must be reversed for a new trial on the issue of damages. With that contention we agree. In the original complaint respondent prayed for $5,000 for damages for the conversion. Her evidence as to the value of the converted property, and, as to damages for loss of use, was quite sketchy. On direct examination she testified that the reasonable fair value of the converted articles was $5,000, and that the reasonable damage for loss of use of the articles was $200 a month. On cross-examination she not only could not fix the value of many of the articles but clearly indicated that a portion of the value was based on sentimental factors. When the appellant started to put in its case it produced an auctioneer who started to testify as to value when it developed that he had never seen the goods in question. The trial court very properly suggested that the goods should be viewed by the witness, and, perhaps, by an appraiser appointed by the court. The parties then stipulated that the court should first pass on the question of liability without further evidence of value, and then, if the court desired evidence as to value, it might make an order to view the goods and might appoint an appraiser. No further evidence of value was offered. After all the evidence on the question of liability was in, the case went over for some five months during which time several arguments on the law were presented to the trial court. On November 6, 1940, the case was again called for argument. At that time the court asked: "Could that matter of valuation be stipulated to, to clear it up?" The court then stated: "The testimony of the value is very, very meager." Under those circumstances, counsel for respondent replied: "For the purpose of this hearing, if I get your point, your Honor, we will stipulate that the plaintiff may receive back her goods in the condition they were delivered to the principal Dayton Storage Company in lieu of getting a reasonable value for her goods, which she claims to have been worth the sum of $5,000 and then we respectfully submit that she receive the natural and probable consequential damages which flow therefrom, and if your Honor determines there has been a conversion." The judge replied: "All right." Thereafter, the cause was continued from time to time for further argument but no further evidence of value was offered or requested. The conclusions of law as originally prepared obtained a provision that in lieu of damages the appellant could deliver the converted property to respondent, but this provision was deleted by the trial judge. No reason appears or has been suggested as to why this provision was deleted. Under the judgment the respondent was awarded $1,750 as damages for the conversion of the property, and $750 for the loss of use of the property. While it may be true that the proof of value is sufficient to support the finding of value, a point we do not now decide, it is equally clear that appellant cut short its proof of value in reliance on the stipulation. This was error of a most serious and prejudicial nature. A party cannot be permitted to thus lull his adversary into believing that the issue of value has been removed from the case, and then secure a judgment for the value.

On the new trial the trial court can determine whether respondent agreed to bear the cost of shipping the goods from Los Angeles to Oakland. No finding was made on this issue. There should also be deducted from the amount of respondent's recovery the difference between the cost of shipping 4,415 pounds at $6.50 per one hundred pounds, and the amount paid by respondent to appellant and the Dayton Storage Company, Inc. No useful purpose would be served in again trying the conversion issue. The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial on the sole issue of damages. Both sides to bear their own costs on this appeal.

WARD, J., and GOODELL, Justice pro tem., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 101

MITCHELL et al. v. ASHTON et al.

Civ. 12008.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 2, 1942.

1. Mines and minerals 🔑81

Oil lessors, asserting in action to quiet title to oil well casing, that seller who was allowed claim in lessee's bankruptcy proceeding, for amount due on conditional sales contract, waived ownership of casing under contract, could not rely on contract, not being parties or privies thereto.

2. Mines and minerals 🔑81

Oil lessors, suing to quiet title to casing, could not assert that conditional seller, knowing that casing was for well, and permitting cementing therein, could not repossess casing on lessee's default, where seller was not destroying well, which had been abandoned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Goodwin J. Knight, Judge.

Action by James M. Mitchell and another against Harry Ashton, as trustee in bankruptcy, etc., the Howard Supply Company, and others, involving the title to and the right to remove a portion of certain casing now standing cemented in an oil well. From the judgment, the plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Hanna & Morton, B. W. Burkhead, and Hilton H. McCabe, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

O. C. Sattinger, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This action involves the title to and the right to remove a portion of certain casing now standing cemented in an oil well.

James M. Mitchell and Catherine T. Mitchell, hereinafter referred to as the plaintiffs, were the owners of certain real property situated in the Torrance oil field, Torrance, California. On the 4th day of May, 1938, they executed an oil and gas lease covering said real property, to the Selegna Drilling and Producing Company. Through mesne conveyances said oil and gas lease was thereafter transferred to Kovell Oil Company. The latter company drilled and brought into production an oil and gas well upon the premises known as Kovell No. 1.

While the Kovell No. 1 well was being drilled, and on June 30, 1938, the defendant Howard Supply Company, a corporation, sold 4,850 feet of 6⅝", 26#, Grade C casing to Kovell Oil Company under a conditional sales contract by the terms of which the casing was sold for the purpose of use and operation by Kovell Oil Company, upon the real property involved in this action, and not for any other purpose. Title to said casing was retained by the Howard Supply Company until it had received payment in full therefor.

The casing described in the conditional sales contract was used by Kovell Oil Company in the drilling and production of Kovell No. 1 well and was cemented therein.

The defendant Harry Ashton was appointed trustee in bankruptcy of Kovell Oil Company on or about December 1, 1939.

On January 15, 1940, the defendant Howard Supply Company filed its "Proof of Secured Claim" in the matter of the bankruptcy of the Kovell Oil Company wherein it claimed the sum of $9,186.79, which amount was the full balance then due on the conditional sales contract. The said claim was later allowed in full in the bankruptcy proceedings of the Kovell Oil Company.

On or about March 1, 1940, the defendant, Harry Ashton, as trustee in bankruptcy of Kovell Oil Company, ceased the production of oil and gas from Kovell Well No. 1, removed certain machinery and oil well equipment therefrom, and abandoned the oil and gas lease in April, 1940. No attempt has since been made to produce oil and gas from Kovell Well No. 1. On January 22, 1941, the plaintiffs commenced this action to quiet their title to the real property, to the derrick, and to the casing standing cemented in Kovell Well No. 1.

The casing involved in this action is now standing cemented in Kovell No. 1 well but the State Oil and Gas Supervisor will not consent to the removal of any portion thereof in excess of 650 feet and before said supervisor will consent to the removal of that much of said casing he will require the balance thereof to be permanently and securely plugged, which operation will make it impossible to further use the remaining portion of said casing or to thereafter reopen and further produce said Kovell No. 1 well.

The respondent, Howard Supply Company, has fully complied with the terms of the conditional sales contract but the Kovell Oil Company has failed to make all the payments due thereunder and there is at the present time a balance unpaid on said contract.

The trial court adjudged the plaintiffs to be the owners and entitled to the possession of the real property and the derrick but that the respondent, Howard Supply Company, was the owner and entitled to the possession of all the oil well casing sold to Kovell Oil Company under said conditional sales contract and now standing cemented in Kovell No. 1 well.

The plaintiffs have appealed from that portion of the decree which determined the Howard Supply Company to be the owner of said casing and entitled to the possession thereof. In support of their appeal they have brought up the judgment roll only.

In their complaint the plaintiffs named Harry Ashton, as trustee in bankruptcy of the Kovell Oil Company, Barny Berens, and several fictitious persons, as defendants. Later by amendment Howard Supply Company was named as a defendant claiming it had been sued as "One Doe Corporation." Berens filed an answer. Howard Supply Company filed a separate answer and pleaded the conditional sales contract. There was no allegation in Berens' answer that he was the assignee of any interest in the real estate or any of the property standing on or attached thereto. Nor is there any finding to that effect. Neither Kovell Oil Company nor any one claiming to be its assignee appeared in the action, or participated in the trial.

[1] In their first point the plaintiffs contend Howard Supply Company having filed a claim in the bankruptcy proceedings, which was allowed for the full amount due, waived any claim of ownership by it under the terms of the conditional sales contract. However, as shown by the above facts, the plaintiffs were not parties to said contract, were not privies thereto, and may not rely thereon. Roullard v. Rosenberg Bros. & Co., 193 Cal. 360, 364–366, 224 P. 449.

[2] In their second point they contend that Howard Supply Company having sold the casing to the lessee with knowledge that it was to be used in an oil well, and having permitted it to be permanently cemented therein, cannot repossess it, upon default of the lessee, where to do so would destroy the well to the damage of the lessor. We find no merit in that contention. The action was one to quiet title, not to repossess anything. Furthermore, there are no findings to the effect that Howard Supply Company is doing or will do anything to "* * * destroy the well to the damage of the lessor." Furthermore, the findings show that Kovell Well No. 1 was not at the time this action was commenced a going concern. On the contrary the findings show that the trustee in bankruptcy operated the well from December 1, 1939, until March 1, 1940, and that on said date he abandoned the well, that much of the equipment was detached and taken away, and that there remains on the ground only the derrick and the casing cemented in the well. Assuming that as to a successful development the lessor may, under certain conditions, be entitled to the use of the casing (Meers v. Frick-Reid Supply Corp., Tex.Civ.App., 127 S.W.2d 493), it is clear that the findings do not show that the instant case comes within such rule.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 47

KIESSIG et al. v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.

Civ. 11890.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 1, 1942.

1. Constitutional law 🔑14

Technical words in a constitutional provision are interpreted as usually understood by persons in the profession or business to which they relate unless clearly used in a different sense, and that rule applies also to words not in common use, or having no very definite signification in their ordinary use. Civ.Code, § 1645.

2. Taxation 🔑219

Under constitutional provision exempting from taxation, except for state purposes, vessels of more than 50 tons burden registered at any California port and engaged in transportation of freight or passengers, the words "tons burden" mean net register tonnage, particularly in view of Shipping Act provision requiring net tonnage of every registered vessel to be carved into or otherwise permanently marked on vessel. 46 U.S.C.A. § 77; Const. art. 13, § 4.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Tons Burden".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

Action by Otto C. Kiessig and others against the County of San Diego and others for the refund of personal property taxes paid under protest. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Sloane & Steiner, of San Diego, for appellants.

James B. Abbey, Dist. Atty., and William A. Glen, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., of San Diego, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem.

On the first Monday in March, 1939, at noon, the appellants owned the "Sportfisher II" and the appellant Otto C. Kiessig owned the "Sportfisher III," both documented vessels registered in the Customs House at San Diego, their home port. As of that time the respondent assessor levied a personal property tax for 1939-1940 against each vessel, $512.24 on one and $596.16 on the other. Appellants paid the taxes under protest and brought this action for their refund. Judgment went in favor of the county and this appeal ensued.

The protests were filed under the claim that each vessel was of more than 50 tons burden and therefore exempt under section 4 of article XIII of the Constitution of this state, which reads: "All vessels of more than fifty (50) tons burden registered at any port in this State and engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers shall be exempt from taxation except for State purposes until and including the first day of January, 1955."

The court found that both vessels were engaged in the transportation of passengers; that as registered the deadweight tonnage of the "Sportfisher II" was in excess of 70 tons, her gross tonnage was 69.43, and her net 40 tons; that the deadweight tonnage of the "Sportfisher III" was in excess of 75 tons, her gross was 73.45, and her net 39 tons. The court then found that the former vessel did not exceed 40, or the latter 39, tons burden, and therefore that neither was exempt. It will be readily seen that if the size of these vessels should be determined by either their deadweight or their gross tonnage they are within the exemption.

The question to be decided is stated by appellants as follows: "* * * was the trial court correct in adopting as the measure of the 'burden' of such vessels the respective 'net tonnages' thereof as registered in the United States Customs Office or should the tons burden thereof be measured in the ordinary sense of their respective 'carrying capacities'?" In contending for a definition of "tons burden" in the ordinary sense the appellants invoke the familiar rule that "* * * the courts will interpret a measure adopted by vote of the people in such manner as to give effect to the intent of the voters adopting it. Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, (5th ed.) § 66." Kaiser v. Hopkins, 6 Cal.2d 537, 58 P. 2d 1278, 1279. In the last-cited case it is further said: "It must be held that the voters judged of the amendment they were adopting by the meaning apparent on its face according to the general use of the words employed. Such is the rule where it does not appear that the words were used in a technical sense. * * * 'Where a word having a technical as well as a popular meaning is used in the Constitution, the courts will accord to it its popular signification, unless the very nature of the subject indicates, or the context suggests, that it is used in its technical sense.'" Have the words "tons burden" a popular and nontechnical meaning? Appellants ask the rhetorical question, "What then is the popular signification of the word 'burden'? In searching for the answer, [they say] no better authority for 'ordinary and popular' meaning can be consulted than the dictionary" and they quote Webster's New International Dictionary as follows: "burden * * * 1. That which is borne or carried; a load; * * * 3. The bearing of loads; as, a ship or beast of burden * * * 6. The capacity of a vessel, for carrying cargo;—also the weight of the cargo; as, a ship of a hundred tons burden * * *." (Other dictionaries quoted are in agreement.) But this inquiry is not confined to the meaning of this word alone. We are concerned with the phrase, "more than fifty (50) tons burden," and if we resort to the dictionary cited by appellants we find that the first definition of the noun "ton" therein is equivocal for it shows (what everybody knows) that there are "long tons" or "gross tons" of 2,240 pounds, and "short tons" of 2,000 pounds, and two other kinds of tons as well. The second definition therein reads: "Naut. & Com. (a) A unit of internal capacity for ships; 100 cubic feet (2.8307 cu. m.);—called specif. register ton. See Tonnage, 2. (b) A unit approximately equal to the volume of a long ton weight of sea water, used in reckoning the displacement of vessels, esp. war vessels; 35 cubic feet;—called specif. displacement ton. (c) A unit of volume for freight, approximately the volume of a ton weight of the particular commodity;—called specif. shipping ton. A ton of merchandise is often reckoned at 40 cu. ft., and a ton of timber at 42 cu. ft." It might be noted, in passing, that the conclusion reached by the trial judge was not inconsistent with the dictionary definition in its nautical sense first quoted above. If, then, the voter, in pondering over the proposed constitutional amendment, had had recourse to his dictionary, the foregoing is what he would have found.

[1] The words "tons burden" are not words in common use by the people generally, or by those who do not deal with ships and shipping. Each of them, taken separately, has its own ordinary meaning, and each is in common, every-day use, but when they are found in this collocation they form a phrase which is decidedly a shipping term. "Technical words are interpreted as usually understood by persons in the profession or business to which they relate, unless clearly used in a different sense. This rule applies to words which are not in common use or which have no very definite signification in their ordinary use." 23 Cal. Jur. p. 750; 5 Cal.Jur. p. 596; sec. 1645, Civil Code. The Encyclopedia Britannica, 14th ed., vol. 20, pp. 555, 556, title "Shipping: Tonnage Terms," contains an elaborate review of this subject, too lengthy to quote in full. However, the article opens with this statement: "The term 'Tonnage' has a variety of meanings. According to the British Merchant Shipping acts and the Suez and Panama Canal regulations it is a measurement of the capacity or volume of a ship expressed in units of 100 cubic feet—one unit of such volume being termed a ton measurement. The purpose of measuring a ship is twofold—primarily to form a basis for the payment of the various charges which are levied by Port and Harbour authorities, by Lighthouse Boards and for pilotage services; secondly for use in the registration or identification of the ship itself." In discussing gross and net tonnage after the method of measuring a vessel is given, this article says: "The register or net tonnage is now determinable (being the gross tonnage less the deductions permitted as described above), and is the tonnage which appears on the register of the vessel and on which dues are assessed." (Emphasis ours.)

Thus far we have discussed only definitions of the words "ton" and "burden" found in the dictionary cited by appellants, and in the article in the Britannica which we consulted under section 1875, Code of Civil Procedure. From those authorities alone we are satisfied that the phrase "tons burden" is not one which can be said to be understandable without resort to a more technical inquiry than that afforded by the common lexicon.

The method of measuring vessels of American registry to determine their cargo capacity is minutely prescribed in R.S. 4153, codified in U.S.C.A., title 46, "Shipping," section 77 ("Tonnage") which reads in part as follows: "The register tonnage of every vessel built within the United States or owned by a citizen or citizens thereof shall be her entire internal cubical capacity in tons of one hundred cubic feet each, to be ascertained as follows: * * *." Here follows a detailed and technical formula for the measurement of the gross tonnage of a vessel. The statute then provides for the deduction therefrom of the tonnage of spaces or compartments occupied by the crew, by the master, for the working of the helm, the capstan and anchor gear, for charts, signals, instruments, stores; also space occupied by the propelling power and numerous other spaces and areas. It then provides: "And the proper deduction from the gross tonnage having been made, the remainder shall be deemed the net or register tonnage of such vessels." In this legislation Congress has provided for a more or less permanent record of net tonnage to be cut into the ship herself. This important requirement reads: "In every vessel documented as a vessel of the United States the number denoting her net tonnage shall be deeply carved or otherwise permanently marked on her main beam, and shall be so continued; * * *." with a penalty for violation. (Emphasis ours). It is significant that this required memorial is of net, and not of gross or of deadweight tons.

It happens that in the instant case the appellants seek exemption on the claim that "tons burden" means gross tons or deadweight tons. If, however, the vessels were to go through the Panama Canal tolls would doubtless be charged on the basis of net register tonnage or its equivalent. See U.S.C.A., title 48, "Insular Possessions," sec. 1315. Likewise pilotage into or out of their home port would undoubtedly be computed on their net register tonnage. Sec. 1376, Harbors and Navigation Code, St. 1937, p. 827.

A concise and informative statement respecting tonnage is found in The Thomas Melville, 5 Cir., 62 F. 749, 751, 10 C.C.A. 619, a case which had to determine whether wharfage charges were to be computed upon gross or upon net tonnage. An ordinance of the city of New Orleans, adopted in 1875 and amended in 1881, levied a charge of twenty cents per ton on vessels of "1,000 tons and under," (and a different rate for larger vessels), without specifying the kind of tons. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the vessel should pay wharfage on the basis of gross, and not net, tonnage, for the reason that when the ordinance was adopted and amended "the navigation and customs laws of the United States dealt only with gross tonnage; and, at the same time, canal tolls in the state of Louisiana and general charges for towage and dock services were based upon gross tonnage." The court further pointed out that in 1882 the United States departed from its former practice of calculating customs dues upon gross tonnage "and adopted the practice of calculating customs and tonnage dues upon the net tonnage, which was to be determined according to certain rules laid down in the statute, and denominated the 'net register tonnage;' * * *." The court held that this change in federal law did not affect the New Orleans ordinance because nothing had been done locally to conform to the change. The case is not cited here for any bearing it might have as authority (it has none, because in the instant case there was no intervening change in any law) but simply for the following clear definition of the word "ton" by a federal court of high authority passing upon a quasi-maritime question: "2. The word 'ton,' in the ordinance and amendments thereto controlling this case, as applied to the measurement of vessels, has a certain definite meaning, well settled by custom and by the navigation laws of the United States, and it means 100 cubic feet of interior space. The entire cubic contents of the interior space, numbered in tons, is called the 'gross tonnage.' When, from the entire cubic contents of the interior of a vessel, there are deducted the spaces occupied by the crew and by propelling machinery, the remainder, numbered in tons, is called the 'net tonnage.' "

Respondents cite The Craigendoran, D. C., 31 F. 87, 88, where a statute of New York prescribed wharfage charges at one rate for vessels "of two hundred tons burden and under," and a different rate for larger vessels (without specifying the kind of tons). The question (similar to that presented in the Melville case, supra) was whether the tonnage should be ascertained by measuring the vessel as prescribed by federal law in force when the state wharfage statute was enacted, in 1877, or by measuring her as prescribed by federal law in force when she was berthed. The court doubtless had in mind the change in 1882, noted in the Melville case. The district judge said: "This question is not free from difficulty; but on reflection, and upon considering the force of the expression of the supreme court, where it is said, 'Evidently the word "tonnage," in commercial designation, means the number of tons burden the ship will carry as estimated and ascertained by the official admeasurement and computation prescribed by the public authority,' and mindful of the fact that the measuring of a ship for the purpose of fixing her tonnage is required by law to be made by an officer of the United States, and that the method of measuring to be pursued by such officer is prescribed by law, and that the tonnage of the ship must be inserted in her register or enrollment, and the tonnage there stated must be that tonnage, and no other, which is ascertained by the officer, from a measurement made in the manner prescribed by law at the time of her registry or enrollment, and that consequently the only legal tonnage of the ship is the tonnage stated in her registry or enrollment, I am of the opinion that the words 'tons burden,' as used in the wharfage act of 1877, above quoted, should be held to mean the registered tonnage of the ship, and not her gross tonnage. No method by which to ascertain the tonnage of a ship for the purpose of calculating her wharfage is provided by the state statute, and all ships are required by law to carry a register in which the tonnage is stated. The fair presumption is that it was the intention of the statute that reference to the ship's register should be made for the purpose of calculating her wharfage, and not to leave the tonnage to be a matter of private calculation and open to dispute." The reference to the decision of the supreme court is to the State Tonnage Tax Cases, 79 U.S. 204, 12 Wall. 204, 224, 20 L. Ed. 370, 376. The Melville case, supra, refers to The Craigendoran case as having been well decided. In The Antonio Zambrana, D.C., 88 F. 546, 548, the court says, citing The Craigendoran, "It is probable that the rate should be upon the registered, and not gross, tonnage."

In the case of "The Brunel," Law Reports, Probate Division, 1900, p. 24, 48 Weekly Reporter, 243, 81 Law Times Report, 500, the Court of Appeal decided the precise question now presented. The opening sentence in the opinion reads: "The question is, what is the meaning of the words 'not exceeding 15 tons burden'" in the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894. Further, the court says, "In the Court below it was argued that the meaning of tons burden in this section is 'the carrying capacity of the ship.'" The Justice's views are thus stated: "It seems to me that the true construction of this section, dealing with the registration and also with the nonregistration of a ship, is that the words 'tons burden' mean the net tonnage—that is, the gross tonnage after allowing for the deductions, in other words, the register tonnage."

The appellants cite the case of The North and South Shields Ferry Co. v. Barker, Exchequer Reports, Vol. 2, p. 136. This case was decided in 1848, involving a small ferry across the river Tyne. It was decided before steam came into general use, and before the British Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, and it is not mentioned in The Brunel case. This is the only case the appellants cite which lends any support at all to their position.

Attention is called to the case of County of Los Angeles v. Craig, 38 Cal.App.2d 58, 100 P.2d 818, where this same section of the Constitution was before the court and where it was held that the word "registered" should be given its non-technical meaning. There was no question in that case respecting the words "tons burden" for it was conceded that the vessel involved was of approximately 800 tons. The vessel had been "enrolled" as distinguished from "registered" (for the technical distinction between registration and enrollment see The Mohawk, 70 U.S. 566, 3 Wall. 566, 18 L.Ed. 67; Wheaton v. Weston & Co., D.C., 128 F. 151) but the court held that when the word "registered" was used in the constitutional provision it was used in the same sense that it had theretofore been used in several legislative provisions where it was obviously used to include "enrolled" and "licensed."

[2] One of the telling factors in this case is the requirement found in section 77 of the Shipping Act that the net tonnage of every registered vessel be carved into the very structure of the ship or otherwise permanently marked. This is a strong argument on the side of a definite tonnage, fixed and determined for long periods of time if not for the life of the ship, and not dependent upon how much she is capable of carrying "deadweight" or on how much cargo she carries on one voyage as distinguished from another—lead or feathers, for instance. Moreover, the view taken by the trial court is not at all contrary to the meaning given to "tons burden" when ordinary books of reference are consulted by laymen. They all show that the words "tons burden" when used together have a technical meaning, and connote a measurement peculiar to ships and shipping. We have seen from the statutes and from the cases cited that this meaning is net register tonnage, as the trial court held.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

MOORE v. STELLA et al.*

Civ. 12730.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 31, 1942.

Rehearing Granted April 30, 1942.

1. Licenses 🔑39

Where agreement to sell mineral rights standing in the name of corporation was executed in the name of its president and assignment of the rights was executed by president in the name of corporation, both corporation and president were liable for money received therefor with knowledge that mineral rights were worthless and that sales were in violation of Corporate Securities Act and order of the real estate commissioner. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814; Act 112, § 20g.

2. Licenses 🔑39

Where worthless stock was sold without a permit to finance oil and gas developments being conducted by holder of stock, both such holder and person who actually made sales were liable for the money received therefor whether saleswoman acted as agent for holder of stock or whether stock was formally transferred to her before transfer to purchasers in the effort to evade permit requirements of Corporate Securities Act. Civ.Code, § 2343, subd. 3; Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814.

3. Licenses 🔑18½

Mineral rights in 2½-acre tracts in large undeveloped area purchased by individual investors with expectation that development thereof could be accomplished only through large scale operations by others, from which individuals might derive benefits by leasing their tracts, constituted "securities" within meaning of Corporate Securities Act prohibiting sale thereof without permit. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 3814.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Security".

4. Licenses 🔑18½

In determining whether a given instrument is a "security" within meaning of Corporate Securities Act prohibiting sale thereof without permit, courts invariably look through mere form to substance. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814.

5. Licenses 🔑18½

Promotion schemes, which lead investors into enterprises where earnings and profits of business or speculative ventures must come through the management, control, and operations of others, and which, regardless of form, have the characteristics of operations by corporations, joint-stock companies, trusts, and similar business structures, are subject to regulation under the Corporate Securities Act. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814.

6. Licenses 🔑39

Evidence that sales of corporate stock standing in the name of woman who actually negotiated sale thereof were actually dispositions of stock for the use and benefit of the corporations themselves, which benefit was derived through use of proceeds from stock sales to finance oil drilling operations, sustained finding that such stock was not personally owned by seller so that sale thereof without permit violated Corporate Securities Act. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George A. Dockweiler, Judge.

Action by Elma I. Moore against E. F. Stella, individually and as trustee, etc., and others, for the return of money paid for mineral rights and shares of stock sold by defendants. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

---

* Subsequent opinion 127 P.2d 300.

Charles I. Rosin, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph N. Owen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

The complaint, consisting of thirteen causes of action, was for the return of money paid for "mineral rights" and shares of stock, after notice of rescission by plaintiff. The first nine causes of action related to the mineral rights, and the tenth, eleventh and twelfth causes of action related to the shares of stock, and the thirteenth was for money had and received and was based upon the transactions involved in the preceding twelve causes of action. The judgment was for plaintiff against defendants as follows: Stella on all thirteen causes of action for the aggregate sum of $9,775; Stella-Harold Development Company on the seventh cause of action for $2,000; Dallas M. Steele on the tenth, eleventh and twelfth causes of action for $1,225.

The complaint alleged that Stella was a real estate broker; that Stella-Harold Development Company was a corporation and the alter ego of Stella; and as to the first nine causes of action, which related to the "mineral rights," that defendants sold plaintiff mineral rights in various two and one-half acre parcels of land in Tehama County, and plaintiff paid various sums of money therefor to defendants and received from defendants written agreements to deliver to plaintiff an assignment of the mineral rights in each parcel to be selected by Stella from the acreage in certain sections of land; and that in the mineral rights transactions referred to in the first nine causes of action defendants delivered such assignments signed "E. F. Stella, by Dallas M. Steele," except as to the ninth none was delivered, and as to the seventh it was signed "Stella-Harold Development Company by E. F. Stella, President"; that defendants made fraudulent representations as follows: as to the value of the rights; the lands had great potential oil and gas values; that defendants were diligently drilling an oil well near the land which was nearly ready for production and was near a commercially productive gas and oil well. The complaint further alleged that plaintiff was eighty years of age, inexperienced and had no independent advice; that the mineral rights were of no value, and the area had been extensively drilled without recovery of oil or gas in commercial quantities, and the well was not being drilled diligently but wilfully delayed, and that the gas well referred to as "near" had been abandoned four years, and the oil well referred to as "near" was eighteen miles away; that defendants had no permit or broker's license from the Corporation Commissioner to sell the assignments of mineral rights and that the sales were void; that defendants have divided 1546 acres in Tehama County and 5760 acres in Glenn County into parcels of two and one-half acres each, and that defendants are engaged in the general business of selling such assignments and that such method is a scheme to evade the Corporate Securities Act, Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814; that as to the certain acreage described in the fifth, sixth and seventh causes of action, defendants violated an order of the real estate commissioner, in that, a survey of the land required to be made was not made, and a map required to be recorded was not recorded, and that a copy of the order required to be delivered to purchasers was not delivered to plaintiff; that no surface rights or rights of ingress or egress were given, and adjacent acreage was sold to others; that plaintiff became aware of the facts on November 13, 1938, and served notice of rescission on November 21, 1938.

The complaint alleged as to the tenth, eleventh and twelfth causes of action, which related to the shares of stock, that defendants sold plaintiff shares of stock in three different corporations without having any permit from the Corporation Commissioner so to do, and fraudulently represented that they were reasonably worth the amount plaintiff paid therefor, although in truth they were of no value; that as to one of the corporations the sale was in contravention of an order of the Corporation Commissioner that no sale be made.

The answer of defendants alleged: That Stella received the money for the mineral rights in the sum of $8,550; and that Steele received the money for the shares of stock in the sum of $1,225; and in substance the answer was a denial of the other allegations of the complaint. They alleged that a permit from the Corporation Commissioner was not necessary for the sale of the mineral rights or the stock.

The court found: That Stella-Harold Development Company was the alter ego of Stella; that defendants had no permit or broker's license from the Corporation Commissioner for the sale of the mineral rights or the shares of stock; that the order of the real estate commissioner was violated as to parcels referred to in the fifth, sixth and seventh causes of action; that the survey was not made and no map was recorded; that Stella-Harold Development Company sold rights only as referred to in the seventh cause of action; that the acreage in Tehama County was divided into parcels of two and one-half acres each, and the Glenn County land was divided into parcels of one acre each, and defendants were engaged in a general business of selling the mineral rights to the public, and that such method was a scheme wilfully used to evade the Corporate Securities Act that Steele was involved only in the sale of the shares of stock.

There were no findings of fact as to the eighth cause of action.

The court concluded that the mineral rights and stock were of no value and were sold in violation of the Corporate Securities Act and that the sales referred to in the fifth, sixth and seventh causes of action were in violation of the Real Estate Act, Gen.Laws 1937, Act 112, section 20g thereof; and that plaintiff had rescinded the transactions and was entitled to receive all the money paid.

Soon after the complaint was filed plaintiff caused a writ of attachment to be levied upon property of defendants Stella and Stella-Harold Company. All of the defendants moved to discharge the attachment upon the ground that the action was not such as would support an attachment, in that plaintiff had the assignment of mineral rights and the shares of stock and could not fulfill the requirements that the attaching party must allege and show that plaintiff was not secured by any lien, or if so secured that the security had become valueless through no fault of her own. In plaintiff's affidavit in support of the attachment she stated that the assignment and the issuance of the stock were made without a permit or broker's license first had from the Corporation Commissioner, and she alleged that if she had any such purchaser's lien as that given in sections 1789 and 3050 of the Civil Code that such security had become valueless without her fault.

Defendants' motion for discharge of attachment came on for hearing on January 4, 1939, and counsel for the plaintiff stated that a decision upon the motion, as to whether the sales were in violation of the Corporate Securities Act, would be a decision of the main point in the case. The court stated that such a decision would in effect decide the lawsuit. Counsel for defendants stated: "Well, we can't help that," and "Well, there are many lawsuits that are decided on preliminary motions before it comes to trial," and "That is not an unusual thing," and insisted that the hearing proceed. The hearing proceeded and required seven days for completion. The reporter's transcript on the hearing consists of 469 pages. When the motion was submitted both counsel demanded that findings be made, and on March 14, 1939, the court signed and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and order denying motion for discharge of attachment.

The court found in the proceeding to discharge attachment that: Each and all of the assignments of mineral rights, set forth in the complaint, by which defendants sold to plaintiff and plaintiff purchased from them certain alleged mineral rights in and to certain acreage in Tehama and Glenn Counties are and were securities within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act, Act 3814, General Laws of California; that defendants, and each of them, had no broker's license nor had they, or either of them, any permit from the Corporation Commissioner for the sale of said securities, and that in making said sales defendants violated sections 3, 4, 6, 7 and 9 of said act; that the parcels sold to plaintiff as described in the fifth, sixth and seventh causes of action lie in the area prohibited from sale by the report or permit of the real estate commissioner and agreed by the defendant Stella not to be sold until such time as the same had been surveyed, the exact area determined, and a map filed and recorded; that no such survey was made nor was any map based on such survey filed or recorded, but notwithstanding the failure of defendants to comply with such requirements, they sold said parcels to plaintiff in said prohibited areas; that said parcels were sold in violation of section 20g of the Real Estate Act, Act 112, General Laws of California; that as to the ninth cause of action no assignment has been delivered to plaintiff; that plaintiff rescinded said transactions and that said transactions are void; that the shares of stock of the Fortuna Holding Corporation, the Summit Holding Corporation and the K-B-P Holding Corporation, sold by defendants Stella and Steele to plaintiff were securities within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act and that the same were sold without any permit and without any broker's license being first secured from the Corporation Commissioner; that said stock was not the bona fide personally owned stock of said defendants or either of them; that Stella had acquired all the outstanding stock of said corporations prior to the transaction in question and had become the alter ego of said corporations; that for the purpose of evading the Corporate Securities Act he issued new stock in said corporations and caused the same to be sold to the public, including plaintiff, for the benefit of himself as issuer; that the methods used by him in marketing said stocks was an indirect promotion of a scheme with an intent on his part to evade the provisions of said act relative to procuring a permit and broker's license; that said sales of stock are void and plaintiff rescinded the same; that said assignments of mineral rights and said stock of said corporations had, at the times of sales to plaintiff, and now have no value whatever.

From the order denying the motion to discharge the attachment the defendants appealed to the District Court of Appeal. The appeal was dismissed and a rehearing was denied.

The action came on for trial on October 13, 1939, before the judge who had presided at the hearing of the motion to discharge the attachment. A stipulation was proposed by counsel for defendants (appellants) that "the transcript to be prepared of the evidence introduced on the motion to discharge the attachment, and that all of the evidence introduced there may be considered as introduced in this trial at this time." Counsel for plaintiff stated that the stipulation was acceptable, except that the matters set forth in the findings and conclusions and judgment in the attachment matter were res judicata and need not be tried again, but if the court held to the contrary, that the former transcript may be considered as the testimony in the case without the necessity of going over it again. Counsel for defendants so stipulated. Counsel for plaintiff then introduced in evidence certified copies of the minute order of the District Court of appeal granting the motion to dismiss the appeal, and the order of that court denying appellant's petition for a rehearing. The remittitur had not at that time been filed and counsel for plaintiff requested a continuance of the trial until after the remittitur had been received, but this request was denied, and counsel for plaintiff objected to the introduction of evidence upon the ground that the order of the court in the attachment matter was an appealable order, that an appeal was taken and dismissed and a rehearing denied and that the order was a final judgment, and plaintiff should not be compelled to relitigate those matters as to violation of the Corporate Securities Act which were decided in the former order. The matter was submitted for decision, and for ruling upon the objection as to res judicata. Before the signing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law, and after the remittitur had been filed, the court reopened the case and received the remittitur in evidence. Then the case was submitted again.

The ruling upon the objection appears in the document entitled "Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law" preceding the formal findings of fact and is as follows: "* * * it now overrules the said objections to the introduction of any evidence in the matter, made by the plaintiff on the grounds that the merits of the action have been previously adjudicated and finds that there has been no previous adjudication of the merits of the action."

The findings of fact and conclusions of law in the attachment matter and the order therein were not included as a part of the record on appeal. After this case was placed upon the appeal calendar, respondent made a motion for permission to file certified copies of such findings of fact and conclusions of law and order denying the motion to discharge attachment, upon the ground that said documents were inadvertently omitted and were necessary in the consideration of the contention that there had been an adjudication of the issue as to violation of the Corporate Securities Act. Appellants objected to the motion upon the ground that such documents had no place in the record because no appeal was taken by respondent. That motion has heretofore been granted and in addition thereto this court ordered that the original Notices of Motion to Discharge Attachment and the Amendment thereto, together with the original affidavits in support thereof and in opposition thereto, be transmitted by the County Clerk of Los Angeles County to this court for consideration upon this appeal.

Appellant contends as follows:

1. That the findings are not supported by the evidence;

2. That this being an action for rescission, the court erred in ordering unconditional judgment for repayment of money without providing for restitution by respondent;

3. That the sale of a mineral deed to mineral rights in real property of sufficient area that purchaser may maintain independent drilling operations and development work thereon, and which is not subject to participation in the benefits derived therefrom, or in the property itself, by any other person or under agreement, is not a security within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act;

4. That changing par value of all shares of stock of a corporation, or increasing or decreasing the number of shares, as a result of amendment to articles of incorporation, where the stock certificates as changed represent the same interest as the stock did before the amendment is not a new issue, and does not require a new permit from the Corporation Commissioner if the original stock had been issued validly under a permit;

5. That as to the Summit Holding Corporation that stock had been issued under a permit and was personally owned by the seller thereof and the owner had the right to sell same without a permit;

6. There was no evidence upon which to base a judgment against Stella-Harold Development Company on the seventh cause of action;

7. There was no evidence upon which to base a judgment against Stella on the tenth, eleventh, or twelfth causes of action.

Respondent contends that the order denying the motion to discharge the attachment is res judicata as to the issues (1) whether the sales of the mineral rights and the shares of stock were in violation of the Corporate Securities Act and void, and (2) whether the said assignments and shares of stock were valueless and there was a failure of consideration in so far as plaintiff was concerned.

This contention must be sustained. In order to decide whether the motion to discharge the attachment should be granted or denied, the court was required to determine whether plaintiff was secured by any lien by reason of the assignments to her of the mineral rights, or by reason of the transfer to her of the certificates of shares of stock.

The direct questions presented, for the decision of the trial court and which were decided, upon the motion were:

1. Were the assignments of the mineral rights and the certificates of shares of stock securities within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act?

2. If they were such securities, did the defendants have a permit or broker's license from the Corporation Commissioner to make the sales?

3. Were the sales of such assignments and certificates in violation of the act and were the assignments and certificates therefore valueless?

These same questions were the main questions presented upon the trial, for the decision of the court. The parties were the same upon the motion and the trial. The evidence in both proceedings was identical, it having been stipulated that the evidence upon the motion, as shown by the reporter's transcript, might be deemed the evidence upon the trial. It thus appears that the issues determined upon the motion were not incidental and collateral to the main controversy, but were the principal questions to be determined upon the trial and were determined upon the motion upon the identical evidence submitted at the trial.

It further appears that the attorneys for the parties had in mind at the time of the hearing of the motion that a decision upon the motion would be a decision upon the main issues of the action. The attorney for plaintiff objected to proceeding with the hearing upon the ground that such a hearing would be a trial of the case and that the ruling would render substantially all issues res judicata. The attorney for defendants insisted that the hearing proceed.

An appeal lies from an order dissolving or refusing to dissolve an attachment. Sec. 963, Code Civ.Proc. An appeal was taken by defendants from the order denying the motion to discharge the attachment, and the appeal was dismissed and a rehearing was denied. The order became final.

It is not a requirement that an issue be determined in an independent action in order to apply the rule of res judicata. The rule may be applied when the issue is determined upon a motion. In the case of Lake v. Bonynge, 1911, 161 Cal. 120, 129, 118 P. 535, 539, it is stated: "When * * * a substantial right or the merits of the case are involved and determined, the judgment is res adjudicata, notwithstanding the decision is made on an appeal from a motion." In the same case it is also stated (161 Cal. at page 129, 118 P. at page 539): "Freeman on Judgments, § 323, declares: 'The tendency of the recent adjudications is to inquire whether an issue or question has been in fact presented for decision and necessarily decided, and, if so, to treat it as res adjudicata, though the decision is the determination of a motion or summary proceeding, and not of an independent action.'" (Emphasis added.) And further in that case (161 Cal. at page 129, 118 P. at page 539), quoting from Commissioners v. McIntosh, 30 Kan. 234, 1 P. 572, it is said: "* * * Now, that the decision of a motion can be preserved in a separate record, and taken up by itself, presupposes a full and careful consideration in both the trial and the appellate courts; and when that is had it would seem that the question thus separately and carefully considered should be finally disposed of, and not be thrown back for further litigation at the mere caprice of either party."

Appellant contends that the matter of res judicata is not properly before the court for three reasons: (1) That there is no record on appeal to indicate res judicata, such as the moving papers, findings, conclusions, and order in the attachment proceeding; (2) there was no plea of res judicata; and (3) that the finding of the trial court was that "there has been no previous adjudication of the merits of the action," and the plaintiff (respondent) did not appeal from this finding, and not having appealed cannot on the appeal of the opposite party challenge the correctness of a finding which is contrary to his contention.

These contentions will be discussed in the order in which they are stated.

As to the first: The motion of respondent to file copies of the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Order Denying the Motion to Discharge Attachment in the attachment matter has been granted by this Court, and in addition thereto this Court ordered that the original Notices of Motion to Discharge Attachment, the Amendment, and the original affidavits relating thereto, be transmitted to this court for consideration, and thereby the record on appeal has been completed.

As to the second: It was not necessary for plaintiff to plead res judicata for the reason it was relied upon as evidence of an element of the causes of action. "With respect to a plaintiff, it has been said that the rule requiring a former adjudication to be pleaded defensively 'does not apply to the statement of a cause of action,' since in such case it is merely evidence of some ultimate fact which must be pleaded. * * *" 15 Cal.Jur. 209, sec. 230. In the case of Ahlers v. Smiley, 1909, 11 Cal. App. 343, 346, 104 P. 997, 998, it is said: "While as a general rule, in order to render evidence available in support of a defense based upon matters of estoppel, such matters must be pleaded, the rule does not apply to the statement of a cause of action by plaintiff. * * * Nevertheless, the record may be given in evidence with the same conclusive effect as if it had been specially pleaded."

When the complaint was filed in this case, of course, the facts in the attachment proceedings upon which plaintiff now bases the claim of res judicata had not occurred. The transcript reveals that plaintiff claimed res judicata at the beginning of the trial and that it was discussed extensively by counsel for the parties and by the court. The question of res judicata was properly before the court. Counsel for plaintiff offered "the pleadings and findings and judgment in the attachment matter" in evidence. Counsel for defendants said: "I don't think it is necessary. The whole matter is a matter of record in the case." Counsel for plaintiff then said: "Of course, the question of res adjudicata should be pleaded or raised by evidence, and that was my thought. It is not pled because there was no chance of pleading it; and secondly, if there is any question about the evidence, it is before the court." The court said: "Well, that is satisfactory."

In Beckjord v. Traeger, 1934, 3 Cal.App. 2d 385, 387, 39 P.2d 523, 524, it is said: "It may be admitted that estoppel must ordinarily be pleaded, but an inspection of the transcript reveals the fact that estoppel was discussed in the opening discussion of the case and in the testimony that followed and was in effect carried into the findings. In such circumstances it became an issue of the case as effectively as though it had been pleaded."

As to the third: The objection made by plaintiff that the order on the motion was res judicata had been submitted to the court for a ruling on the objection, and the court announced its ruling on the objection (overruling the objection) in the recitals immediately preceding the formal Findings of Fact. The fact that the court adopted this method of stating the ruling does not alter the fact that it was only a ruling upon an objection, and did not make the ruling an appealable order. The so-called finding that "there has been no previous adjudication of the merits of the action" also appeared preceding the formal Findings of Fact and was an explanation of the ruling upon the objection and a conclusion of the court.

It is true, as claimed by appellants, that the respondent cannot on the appeal of the opposite party ask a court of review to consider any errors against her. The respondent, however, may ask that the judgment in her favor be sustained irrespective of any erroneous rulings against her on objections made during the trial. Respondent had no right to appeal from an adverse ruling upon an objection, and there was no reason why she should appeal. The judgment was in her favor for the amount prayed for and she was not aggrieved. "No rule of decision is better or more firmly established by authority, nor one resting upon a sounder basis of reason and propriety, than that a ruling or decision itself correct in law, will not be disturbed on appeal merely because given for a wrong reason. If right upon any theory of the law applicable to the case, it must be sustained regardless of the considerations which may have moved the trial court to its conclusion." Rapp v. Southern Service Co., 1931, 116 Cal.App. 699, 706, 4 P.2d 195, 197.

An additional issue at the trial was the alleged fraudulent representations, but no additional evidence was offered in support thereof, and counsel for plaintiff stated that "if the court holds with me in this matter [referring to Corporate Securities Act violation] I would not push the representations as to fraud," (referring to the general allegations of fraud) and "those allegations of the complaint I would not attempt at this time to prove." Under these circumstances the findings to the effect that the general allegations of fraud in the complaint are true cannot be sustained.

Another issue at the trial was whether the Stella-Harold Development Company was the alter ego of Stella. The court found that the allegations of paragraph II of the complaint were true, and by such reference, therefore, found: "* * * that said Stella is the owner of a majority of the shares of said corporation, that he controls and dominates said corporation and its acts, and that in truth and fact it is his alter ego." In an express finding (not by reference) the court found: "* * * that it is true that defendant Stella was an officer, to wit, president, thereof and that he controls and dominates it and is in fact its alter ego." Appellant contends that such findings are not supported by the evidence. Stella testified that he "owns" no stock in the corporation; that Mrs. Grace Harold owns all the stock; that he is president of the company; that he was one of the original organizers of the company. There was no testimony that he did not own stock at the time of the transactions involved herein. Stella received the money paid for the mineral rights. In appellants' opening brief it is stated: "In proximity to the development work [referring to two prospective oil wells] that he [Stella] was doing, he acquired, by mineral deed, considerable acreage, taken in the name of Stella-Harold Development Company, giving him the right to explore for oil or gas, with right of ingress and egress to the property. * * * Appellant Stella divided this acreage in parcels of two and a half acres each and sold the same to the public, giving an assignment of all his right, title and interest in and to the mineral rights in and to the said property." Mrs. Harold was a real estate broker in Stella's office, and he paid her a commission when she made sales. When Stella was asked who pays the office rent and for the telephone he said: "I pay it and Mrs. Harold is paying it." The "Agreement" delivered to plaintiff provided thereon as follows: "If official acknowledgment of this agreement or any future payments is not received by purchaser within 5 days from date thereto, notify E. F. Stella, 831 West Second Street, Los Angeles, California." "(Make all checks, drafts or money orders payable to E. F. Stella, Trustee.)" "Notice: E. F. Stella will not be responsible for payments made with currency unless said currency has actually been received by him."

The "Agreement" as to the sale of mineral rights described in the seventh cause of action was signed "E. F. Stella By Dallas M. Steele" and Stella states that he received the money paid for the rights; but the "Assignment" as to those mineral rights was signed "Stella-Harold Development Company, by E. F. Stella, president." Stella admits that he received the money from all sales of mineral rights described in the nine causes of action. His plan was to make the sale in his name and then as president of the Stella-Harold Development Company execute an assignment of the rights, so sold, to himself as an individual, and then as an individual to execute as assignment to the plaintiff.

[1] It is not necessary to decide in this action whether the company was the alter ego of Stella. The judgment was against both of them on the seventh cause of action. They both participated in the sales of the mineral rights and both are charged with the knowledge that the sales were in violation of the Corporate Securities Act and in violation of the order of the real estate commissioner that sales in that section be not made until a survey was made and a map recorded, and that the sales were void and the rights were valueless. Stella acted for himself individually in the signing of the agreement, and as president of the company acted for the company in signing the assignment. A wrong was committed and both participants are liable. The judgment against both Stella and Stella-Harold Development Company on the seventh cause of action was proper.

As to the sales of the stock referred to in the tenth, eleventh and twelfth causes of action, judgment was against Stella and Dallas M. Steele. Mrs. Steele was a saleswoman in Stella's office. She made all of the sales of the mineral rights and shares of stock to plaintiff. The tenth cause of action relates to the sales of 38 shares of stock of Fortuna Holding Corporation for $100. The eleventh cause of action relates to the sale of 10 shares of Summit Holding Corporation for $125. The twelfth cause of action relates to the sale of 10 shares of K. B. P. Holding Corporation for $1,000. Stella acquired all of the stock in the three corporations referred to in these three causes of action. A brief history of these corporations is stated in order that the relationship of Stella and Steele to the stock transactions may be more clearly presented. The Fortuna Holding Corporation was originally known as the R. & B. Knitting Mills, Inc. After he acquired all of the stock of the company he changed the name to Fortuna Holding Corporation and changed the capital structure. The original structure was 2500 shares of the par value of $10 each, and this was changed to 4500 shares of no par value, and new certificates of stock were issued and a permit for the new issue was not obtained. The Summit Holding Corporation was incorporated October 27, 1931, for 50,000 shares. On December 9, 1931, a permit was issued authorizing the issuance of 25,000 shares and said permit expired on June 9, 1932. The application for the permit stated in part: "* * * the applicant does not request, nor will it require, the permission to sell or dispose of any of its capital stock to the public, * * *." The sale of Summit stock to plaintiff was on April 18, 1938. The K. B. P. Holding Corporation was originally known as the Montroy Electric Co., and on July 15, 1937, a permit was issued allowing the issuance of 7800 shares. After Stella acquired all of the stock in the company he changed the name to K. B. P. Holding Corporation, and changed the capital structure from 25,000 shares of the par value of $1 to 4800 shares of no par value, and issued new certificates of stock and did not obtain a permit for the new issue.

The situation is that Stella acquired all of the stock of the three corporations, and as to the companies now known as the Fortuna Holding Corporation and the K. B. P. Holding Corporation he changed the names and the capital structure and issued new shares instead of the outstanding old shares. As to the Summit Holding Corporation there was no change in name or capital structure, and the permit expired on June 9, 1932, and the application for the permit stated in substance that the stock was not to be sold to the public.

Defendant Steele testified that she bought the Fortuna and Summit stock from Stella and some of it was as a bonus for work, and that he gave her the stock in the K. B. P. Company as a bonus for work and to make up for a $150 loss resulting to her from a deal she had with Stella regarding an oil lease; that she did not know how much of the stock she bought or the total amount she had paid or agreed to pay for it; that she endorsed the three checks for $100, $125 and $1,000, which she received from plaintiff for the stock in the three companies and delivered the checks to Stella to apply as payments for mineral deeds which she had received from Stella before she had paid for the deeds; that when she delivered the checks to Stella she did not know the number of acres in which she had purchased mineral rights or how much she had agreed to pay for the rights or how much was still due Stella; that she did not keep accounts of her transactions with Stella.

Appellants contend that the shares of stock sold by Steele to plaintiff were shares of stock personally owned by Steele and that a permit to sell the stock was not necessary and that the sales were not in violation of the Corporate Securities Act. As shown above, however, it was adjudicated in the attachment proceeding that the sales of stock were in violation of the Corporate Securities Act. And further, as above shown in the findings in the attachment proceeding, the court found that the stock was not the bona fide personally owned stock of Steele or Stella. The evidence supports this finding.

Appellants further contend that even if there is a liability to plaintiff by reason of the sales of the stock that a judgment against both Stella and Steele is not proper. The contention is that if she sold her own stock Stella would not be liable, and if she sold it as the agent of Stella she would not be liable.

[2] It will not be necessary to determine in this proceeding whether the relationship of principal and agent existed between Stella and Steele in the stock sales to plaintiff. As above shown the issue as to whether the stock was the personally owned stock of Steele or Stella is res judicata. If the relationship of principal and agent did exist, it is clear that Steele is charged with knowledge that the sales were wrongful in nature and therefore, she would be liable. Sec. 2343, Subdiv. 3, Civil Code. Furthermore, even if an agency relationship did not exist there was a joint participation by Stella and Steele in these wrongful stock transactions, with knowledge of their wrongful nature. The judgment against both Stella and Steele on the tenth, eleventh and twelfth causes of action was proper.

There were no findings of fact upon the eighth cause of action which related to the sale of mineral rights to plaintiff on September 15, 1938, for $350. The thirteenth cause of action was for money had and received and was based upon the transactions involved in the preceding twelve causes of action which, of course, included the transaction involved in the eighth cause of action. There were findings upon the thirteenth cause of action and therein it was found that Stella received from plaintiff for the use and benefit of plaintiff on September 15, 1938, the sum of $350. Although there were no findings on the eighth cause of action the $350 involved therein should not be deducted from the judgment since that item is included in the findings and judgment on the thirteenth cause of action.

Appellants contend further that the judgment, being based upon rescission, was erroneous in that it did not require plaintiff to return to defendants the consideration alleged to have been received by plaintiff, that is, to assign to defendant Stella the mineral rights and the certificates of stock. It having been adjudged that the assignments of the mineral rights and the certificates of stock were void and valueless in that they were sold in violation of the Corporate Securities Act, there was nothing to return. As a practical matter it perhaps would be of convenience to Stella if plaintiff were to execute an assignment of the alleged mineral rights to Stella, however, it would not be proper for the court to direct that plaintiff execute such assignments, or that the same be executed at all, for the reason such assignments have been adjudged to be in violation of the Corporate Securities Act.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN, Justice (concurring in the judgment).

I concur in the judgment of affirmance.

I cannot agree with the opinion of Mr. Justice WOOD in its application of the doctrine of res judicata. The point is not necessary to a disposition of the appeal.

[3] The evidence adduced at the trial, which was the same as that given at the hearing of the motion to dissolve the attachment, was, I think, sufficient to support the findings. The findings and conclusions with reference to the first nine causes of action were to the effect that the assignments or transfers of mineral rights were securities and were subject to the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. Defendant Stella acquired mineral rights in lands situated in Tehama and Glenn Counties. These were subdivided into 2½-acre parcels and were sold to the public. Stella had been sales manager of El Claro Oil and Gas Company, a corporation, which in 1932 was engaged in selling interests in oil leases in Glenn County under a scheme which was denounced by a decision of the District Court of Appeal in El Claro Oil, etc., Co. v. Daugherty, 1936, 11 Cal.App. 2d 274, 53 P.2d 1028, 55 P.2d 488, as in violation of the Corporate Securities Act. Stella's operations which are involved in the instant case were a continuation of the same general promotional activities in different properties under a slightly different scheme. However, the one here under review, I think failed as the one denounced in the El Claro case did, to successfully circumvent the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. The mineral deeds, upon the record before us, constituted securities and they were sold without a permit. The property which was acquired by the investors consisted of a right to extract oil, gas, and other mineral substances from the parcels of land conveyed and, it may be assumed for the purposes of this decision, such surface rights as would have been necessary in order to carry on exploratory and development work for the production of oil, gas, and other minerals. The question before the trial court was whether the scheme under which these deeds were given was one which in practical effect contemplated and involved participation by the investors in an enterprise or business conducted by others for earnings and profit, or more specifically, whether investors were not led to part with their money in the expectation and upon the promise that they would be able at some future time to lease their interests to some oil company upon a royalty basis and whether this expectation, though not expressed, was in reality the main inducement for the making of the investment. If the correct answer to this question is in the affirmative then the deeds in question partook of the very essence of those types of investment contracts which throughout the history of legislation on the subject in this state have been deemed to be proper subjects for regulatory supervision. It is not necessary to assume, and is not assumed, that a conveyance of mineral rights in a parcel of land comprising 2½ acres is necessarily a security within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act. It may or may not be a security. The determination of that question depends upon a great deal more than the mere fact of the conveyance. What is to be said on that subject herein relates exclusively to the facts of the instant case.

[4] In deciding whether a given instrument is a security the courts have invariably looked through mere form to substance. People v. McCalla, 1923, 63 Cal.App. 783, 791, 220 P. 436; People v. Eiseman, 1926, 78 Cal.App. 223, 241, 248 P. 716; People v. Smith, 1931, 111 Cal.App. 177, 186, 295 P. 105; People v. Ratliff, 1933, 131 Cal.App. 763, 772, 22 P.2d 245; People v. Reese, 1934, 136 Cal.App. 657, 672, 29 P.2d 450; El Claro Oil, etc., Co. v. Daugherty, 1936, 11 Cal.App.2d 274, 281, 53 P.2d 1028, 55 P.2d 488; People v. Yant, 1938, 26 Cal.App.2d 725, 735, 80 P.2d 506. For the following discussion we have accepted as a basis of fact certain inferences which we believe were necessary to be drawn by the trial court in order to support the findings and which could be properly drawn from the evidence. They relate, as will be seen, to ultimate and controlling facts with reference to the nature of the rights acquired by the purchasers of "mineral rights," to the reasonable possibilities of the realization of returns in the way of oil or gas production, and to the practical and not merely the theoretical positions they occupied as owners of mineral rights in small parcels of land in a wilderness of undeveloped and unproven acreage. We assume that the trial court believed that it was highly improbable that these parcels could be developed for oil or that either the defendants or the purchasers expected that they would be so developed unless they should be grouped into tracts of sufficient size to justify expensive exploratory drilling. Our statements are to be understood as being predicated in part upon the inferences mentioned.

In the case of the El Claro Oil Company, in connection with purchases of mineral rights, investors had executed transfers of the same in order that they could be leased under community oil leases. By reason of this fact the transfers were held to be securities. In the instant case no such transfers or leases were made, but from the nature of the transactions and the surrounding circumstances it is clear that such leases were contemplated and in a practical sense that they would become necessary in order to accomplish the exploration and development of the land for oil. The lands were located in unproven territory. There was a well producing gas which was under the control of Stella, who was financing the drilling of another well in the same locality. The cost of the latter well, if it should be drilled without mechanical trouble, was estimated by Stella at $75,000. There is no pretense that any of the investors would ever be able to drill oil wells themselves or that they had any intention of doing so. In a letter to the real estate commissioner dated June 21, 1937, Stella said in part, referring to the well he was drilling: "I should complete it within a short period of time providing I am able to meet the financial requirements for the carrying on of the uninterrupted drilling. I find however that since the permit was granted my volume of sales has been very disappointing due to the fact that I am compelled to sell two and a half acre drill sites and must require down payments of not less than $25 and $25 monthly payments thereafter. I know of a good many worthy people who hold fairly good positions and have been steadily employed for many years and have been steadily employed by the same people for whom they are working who are really desirous of acquiring one of these drill sites, but the payment of $25 per month is more than they can possibly stand, and therefore they have to forego the opportunity of purchasing same." The letter was written as a request that the sale of drill sites of one acre each without change of existing prices might be authorized. Of course each owner of a drill site would have the right to drill a well on it or to lease it separately for the drilling of a well (assuming that he also held the necessary surface rights), but the scheme of the promotion cannot be given a pattern drawn on this fantastic possibility. In his testimony defendant Stella frequently referred to sales and leases of small tracts of land in proven oil fields as justifying the prices he was receiving from investors in his own promotional schemes, and the inference is inescapable that these same arguments must have been a part of the stock in trade of the defendants and their salesmen. In theory an oil field might be developed of such great value that each investor would be able to lease each drill site he owned separately and without joining with other owners in a community lease. It is a matter of common knowledge, however, that exploration for new oil fields is carried on under leases embracing large areas and that it is only in proven oil fields which have first been developed by those holding large acreage that further development is carried on under leases of smaller tracts, that the instances are yet more rare in which the development goes into closely subdivided areas under community leases, and that in yet rarer instances small parcels in well proven fields become the subject of independent development. The trial judge was fully justified in believing that the defendants in this case and the investors to whom they were selling the so-called mineral rights had in mind that eventually oil development could only be extended to the lands of the investors through the meduim of community leases and that the scheme was in its essentials no different from the one denounced in the El Claro case, the only difference in form being that under the latter scheme community leases were executed in connection with the original sale of mineral rights, whereas under the scheme involved in the instant case the actual execution of community leases, while essential to the exploration of the lands of the investors, was deferred to some indefinite future time when conditions might warrant the leasing of the land by oil-producing companies financially able to conduct oil development in a normal and businesslike manner. Undoubtedly the trial court was justified in concluding that the sale of the mineral rights involved would be valueless in the hands of the investors and in a practical sense incapable of development except in the event and by means of operations conducted by others in which the several investors, as lessors, would be given the right to share ratably in landowners' royalties.

[5] The case furnishes only another example of the almost infinite number of ingenious devices conjured up by wily promoters designed to give them freedom to operate without regulation by law through the Department of Corporations. Such schemes, however, inexorably fall within the ban of the Corporate Securities Act wherever their essential purposes, regardless of the mere forms of procedure employed, lead investors into enterprises where the earnings and profits of business or speculative ventures must come through the management, control, and operations of others and which, regardless of form, have the characteristics of operations by corporations, joint stock companies, trusts, and similar business structures. The reasoning in People v. Jackson, 1937, 24 Cal. App.2d 182, 74 P.2d 1085, and the cases therein cited has direct application to the facts of the instant case and fully supports the conclusion of the trial court that the mineral deeds herein involved were "securities."

[6] The finding of the trial court that the stocks purchased as alleged in the tenth, eleventh and twelfth causes of action were securities and were illegally sold to plaintiff without a permit is, I believe, likewise supported by the evidence. The stock stood in the name of defendant Dallas M. Steele and was sold by her to plaintiff. All of the sums received by Mrs. Steele were immediately paid over to defendant Stella. The latter was financing the drilling of oil wells on lands and under leases in which the three corporations, Fortuna Holding Corporation, Summit Holding Corporation, and KBP Holding Corporation, were interested and in the returns from which they would share in the event of successful development. He was using the money derived from the sale of mineral rights to finance these oil drilling operations. As stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Wood, Stella had acquired all of the stock of these three corporations, which stock appears to have been issued under permits of the Department of Corporations. It may be conceded that this personally owned stock could lawfully have been sold by Stella. In this connection no consideration will be given to any questions which may arise from the fact that while he was the sole stockholder Stella caused the capital structure of one of the corporations to be altered so as to provide for a greater number of shares of capital stock and that no permit was obtained for the sale of those shares. In some fashion or other, Mrs. Steele acquired from Stella the stock which she later sold to plaintiff. The sums which plaintiff paid therefor, when they were paid by Mrs. Steele to Stella, were credited by the latter upon alleged purchases by Mrs. Steele from Stella of the same type of mineral rights as those sold to plaintiff. Both Mrs. Steele and Stella testified that Mrs. Steele owned the stock and that she had acquired some of it for cash consideration, some of it in exchange for interests she held in the El Claro Oil Company, and other shares as bonuses in connection with the promotional enterprises in which defendants were engaged. The inquiry into the transactions between Mrs. Steele and Stella relating to her alleged purchases of mineral rights and her acquisition of the stocks was exhaustive and, as an effort to learn the truth of the situation, was far from fruitful. The testimony of both defendants on these subjects was contradictory, evasive in the extreme, and disclosed an intention to conceal important facts. Mrs. Steele was utterly unable to tell when she had purchased mineral rights, how many parcels she had purchased, what acreage was embraced in the purchases, how much she had ever owned at any one time, how much she owned at the time of trial, how much she ever agreed to pay Stella for the conveyances, how much she had paid him, or how much she owed him, if anything. Defendant Stella produced some cards which purported to record purchases of mineral rights by Mrs. Steele, but the latter had no knowledge of these records and no records of her own. Equally unsatisfactory was the testimony of these witnesses with reference to the shares of stock supposedly acquired by Mrs. Steele, portions of which were later sold to plaintiff. No records of these transactions were kept by either party, there was no tangible or satisfactory evidence that Mrs. Steele had acquired any of the stock in bona fide business transactions, and the trial court was fully justified in concluding that the shares standing in the name of Mrs. Steele were held for defendant Stella and were to be disposed of for his benefit. It was reasonably to be inferred that the stock was actually sold to plaintiff for the benefit of defendant Stella and that the alleged sales of mineral rights by the latter to Mrs. Steele were but a device set up to justify the payment to Stella of the proceeds from the stock sales. The three corporations whose stock was sold to plaintiff held mineral rights or leases or interests in production and part of the stock of some of the corporations was owned by the other corporations. It was largely to their use and for their benefit that defendant Stella was financing the drilling of the several oil wells. The trial court was justified in drawing an inference that the stock transactions between defendants Stella and Steele on the one side and plaintiff on the other were not bona fide dealings in personally owned stock but were dispositions of the stock for the use and benefit of the corporations themselves, which benefit was received through the use of the proceeds from stock sales to finance the oil drilling operations on behalf or in the interests of the corporations. The plan of the defendants in the larger view was to carry on oil development to attract purchasers of the mineral rights, and to use the money received on sales of mineral rights to carry on the development work and for the purchase of additional mineral rights. By devious means defendants sought to accomplish the same purposes that would have been accomplished in a lawful and legitimate manner by the authorized sale of stock of a corporation holding title to the mineral rights and engaged in developing them with the proceeds of stock sold to investors and for the benefit of stockholders. In other words, defendants had a lawful purpose, which they chose for reasons which we do not know and which are unimportant, to accomplish in an illegal manner. If perchance the conclusions of the trial court, with which we believe we must agree, were reached without complete knowledge of the business transactions between defendants Steele and Stella, the responsibility must rest upon those defendants. Their methods of operations, intricate, devious, and fraught with uncertainty as they were, coupled with the obvious unwillingness of the two defendants to disclose the entire truth, presented to the trial court questions of great difficulty and, unfortunately, left to inference important questions of fact which perhaps could have been decided with more assurance and certainty had the court received the benefit of a greater measure of cooperation from the defendants. An extensive consideration of the record discloses no reason for disturbance of the findings or conclusions of the trial court.

On the questions of liability of the several defendants I agree with the conclusions stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice WOOD.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice (concurring in the judgment).

I concur in the judgment of affirmance and in the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice SHINN that the substantially identical evidence adduced both on the motion to discharge the attachment and at the trial was sufficient to support all essential findings. I do not hold that the doctrine of res judicata has no applicability here but since the judgment must be sustained regardless of such doctrine it seems preferable to dispose of this appeal on consideration of its claimed merits rather than by application of a technical proposition of law. I therefore express no opinion as to the applicability of such doctrine and except as otherwise herein indicated concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice SHINN.

51 Cal.App.2d 61

LINCOLN et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF MADERA COUNTY et al.

Civ. 6758.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 1, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Pleading 🔑8(9)

The statement in complaint, seeking to have four Massachusetts trusts dissolved and trustees of each, after an accounting, discharged, and to compel trustees to reconvey property to grantors from whom they received property, that by reason of filing of a petition for order confirming the trustees, consent of beneficiaries to the confirmation and order confirming trustees, the court had acquired exclusive jurisdiction over trust properties, etc., was a mere "conclusion of law" and would be disregarded.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion of Law".

2. Injunction 🔑26(1)

The word "injunction", as used in statute providing that an injunction cannot be granted to stay judicial proceedings pending at commencement of the action in which the injunction is demanded, unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of such proceedings, is intended to apply to restraining orders as well as to injunctions. Civ Code, § 3423.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Injunction".

3. Injunction 🔑132

If a restraint imposed by order of court is "until the further order of the court", it is a "preliminary injunction", regardless of what the order is called by the court issuing it.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Preliminary Injunction".

4. Injunction 🔑26(1), 132

In suit to dissolve four Massachusetts trusts and to revest trust property in persons entitled thereto, an order purporting to restrain defendants from further prosecution of any of actions described in complaint or filing any other actions affecting the trusts until further order of court was a "preliminary injunction", and, hence, statute providing that injunction cannot be granted to stay a judicial proceeding pending at commencement of action in which injunction is granted unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of such proceedings was applicable. Civ.Code, § 3423.

5. Joint-stock companies and business trusts ⚷1

A "joint stock company", of which a "Massachusetts trust" is one form, is in effect a "copartnership".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Joint Stock Company", "Massachusetts Trust" and "Copartnership".

6. Injunction ⚷26(4)

In suit to dissolve four Massachusetts trusts and to revest trust property in persons entitled thereto, where the four trusts were in reality but one partnership doing business under four different names, and it appeared that four separate actions had been filed against partners for legal services rendered in formation of each of trusts, the entry of an order temporarily restraining pending suits, for purpose of keeping partnership property intact until dissolution could be effected, was proper under the statute on ground that the pending suits constituted a "multiplicity of proceedings". Civ. Code, § 3423.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Multiplicity of Proceedings".

Original proceeding in prohibition by Walter Gould Lincoln and another against the Superior Court of Madera County and another, to prohibit respondents from continuing in force a restraining order.

Alternative writ of prohibition heretofore issued discharged, and peremptory writ denied.

Walter Gould Lincoln, of Los Angeles, in pro. per., for petitioners.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles, David E. Peckinpah, of Fresno, Neice & Crane, of Los Angeles, and David P. Barcroft, of Madera, for respondents.

CURLER, Justice pro tem.

This is an application for a writ of prohibition to prohibit the Superior Court of the County of Madera, from continuing in force a restraining order which prohibited the petitioners, Walter Gould Lincoln and M. W. Beale, from prosecuting or taking any further steps for the prosecution of certain actions pending in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, and in the Municipal Court of the City and County of Los Angeles, until the trial of a certain action in the Superior Court of Madera County, numbered 5992, had been completed, or until the further order of said Madera County court.

The complaint filed in the Superior Court of Madera County which formed the basis for the restraining order issued by that court, alleged in brief, as follows:

That Roger Averill was the owner of certain farming lands situate in Madera County, California, and that there were associated with him in his farming enterprises carried on upon said lands, Paris A. Davis and Jesse F. Lincoln. That upon the advice of Walter Gould Lincoln, attorney at law, who was sole legal adviser and confidential agent of Roger Averill, the said lands and personal property used in farming the same were formed into four Massachusetts trusts. That these trusts were created in the State of Nevada, and that the first trustees of all of said trusts were Nevada residents. That the beneficial interest in each trust was divided into one hundred units. That ten units of each trust were turned over to Jesse F. Lincoln, ten of the units of each trust were turned over to Paris A. Davis, and eighty units of each trust were retained by Roger Averill. That Roger Averill, desiring to secure Walter Gould Lincoln for any attorney fees that might be coming to him as attorney for Averill for any services to be rendered in the probating of Averill's estate, offered to issue to Walter Gould Lincoln an authorization for ten units of each trust, said authorization not to be used until the death of Averill, and only then in case Lincoln had anything coming to him for legal services rendered as above stated. That upon the advice of Walter Gould Lincoln, the authorization was issued in the name of M. W. Beale, Lincoln's secretary, in whose name, Lincoln stated, all of his personal property was held. That contrary to instructions, Walter Gould Lincoln and M. W. Beale had ten units in each trust issued in the name of M. W. Beale. That M. W. Beale is a trustee of each of the four trusts, and refuses to cooperate with the other trustees of said trusts in signing papers necessary to borrow money for the operation of the farming properties. That Roger Averill finds that he cannot efficiently operate the farms under the trusts, and that he no longer has control over the same, because control is vested in the trustees. That each of the trusts is qualified under the laws of California, to do business in this state; and that declarations of all of the trusts were recorded in Madera County. That advice given by Walter Gould Lincoln as to the advantages of putting the farm properties into trusts, was knowingly false and made with the intent of complicating the affairs of Roger Averill and of making business for himself as an attorney. That in the month of December, 1938, Walter Gould Lincoln filed petitions in the Superior Court of Madera County for orders confirming and appointing the then trustees of the three trusts which held the real estate; and that orders were received from said court confirming the trustees of said trusts. That M. W. Beale, on January 25, 1939, by Walter Gould Lincoln, as her attorney, filed in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, action numbered 435987, against Katherine Averill Bridges, for the purpose of having Katherine Averill Bridges removed by the court as a trustee of Lincoln Ranch Company trust, and having the court select and appoint another trustee in her place—also in said action, M. W. Beale asked the court to nullify the removal of herself as a trustee of said trust and to reinstate her as such trustee. That M. W. Beale, on May 20, 1941, on the advice of Walter Gould Lincoln, caused to be filed in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, action numbered 464355, wherein said M. W. Beale, as trustee of one of the trusts, to-wit: Roger Averill and Associates, is plaintiff, and Katherine Averill Bridges, as trustee of the said trust, is defendant. That Walter Gould Lincoln is attorney in said action; and that the complaint prays for an accounting and certain other relief, including attorney fees for the said Walter Gould Lincoln. That said action was brought to harass and interfere with the management of the said trust and its business, and is still pending, being set for trial on October 6, 1941. That M. W. Beale, as trustee of said trust, also commenced action numbered 467192 in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County against her co-trustee Katherine A. Bridges, and the San Joaquin Cotton Oil Company for the removal of Katherine A. Bridges as trustee of said trust. Walter Gould Lincoln is attorney for plaintiff in said action, and asks for a reasonable attorney fee either from Katherine A. Bridges or from the trust's properties. Said action has not been set for trial. That Walter Gould Lincoln commenced, in the Municipal Court of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California, on December 31, 1940, action numbered 569221 against the Lincoln Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, for the recovery of attorney's fees in the sum of $2,000; and on the 31st day of December, 1940, commenced, in the Municipal Court of Los Angeles, action numbered 569222 against the Davis Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, for the sum of $2,000 attorney fees; and on the 24th day of January, 1941, commenced action numbered 571512 in the Municipal Court of Los Angeles County against Averill Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, for the sum of $2,000 attorney fees; and on the 24th day of March, 1941, commenced action numbered 571513 in the Municipal Court of Los Angeles against Roger Averill and Associates, a voluntary trust, for the sum of $2,000 for an attorney fee. The complaint further alleged that Walter Gould Lincoln has threatened to bring, or cause to be brought, other actions against plaintiff and other trustees of said four trusts, and unless restrained, will file other actions against said plaintiffs and against the trustees of said trust. In the complaint it is alleged that all actions affecting the said four trusts, or affecting the trustees or beneficiaries thereof, or to recover compensation for legal services, or for an accounting by said trustees, should be heard in one action in order to avoid multiplicity of suits; and that all actions, other than the one filed in Madera County, upon which the restraining order was issued, should be enjoined. Plaintiffs, constituting part of the trustees of each of said four trusts, desire to terminate the trusts, and liquidate their affairs, and due to differences arising between beneficiaries named in the trusts, desires a declaration of their rights in the County of Madera.

In the prayer for relief, plaintiff in the Madera County action asked that the four trusts be dissolved and the trustees of each, after an accounting, be discharged; that the trustees be required to transfer to the grantors and transferors from whom they received the legal title, the trusts' property; that defendants, Walter Gould Lincoln and M. W. Beale, be enjoined from further prosecution of any of the actions described in the complaint, or from filing or prosecuting any other actions affecting the trusts, until the further order of the court; that defendants Walter Gould Lincoln and M. W. Beale be required to seek any and all relief against said trusts in this action, and not otherwise; that the certificates for ten beneficial interests in each of said four trusts issued to M. W. Beale be declared to be void and of no effect, and be delivered to the court for cancellation; and that the terms upon which the trusts may be dissolved, and the property held by the trustees reconveyed and transferred to the person or persons entitled thereto, be determined.

Upon the complaint being filed, the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Madera, issued an order restraining defendants M. W. Beale and Walter Gould Lincoln from further proceeding with any of the cases mentioned in the complaint, and further restrained them from further prosecuting any other actions affecting the trusts, until the further order of the court.

M. W. Beale and Walter Gould Lincoln petitioned this court for an alternative writ of prohibition, and the same has issued. The question here involved is the validity of the restraining order of the Superior Court of Madera County.

Since the argument on the application for an alternative writ of prohibition, Walter Gould Lincoln and M. W. Beale have moved to extend the record by adding thereto three exhibits, consisting of (A) a copy of the petition filed in the Superior Court of Madera County for confirmation of the trustees of the Lincoln Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, (B) consent of the beneficiaries of the Lincoln Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, to the confirmation of the trustees of that trust, and (C) judgment of the Superior Court of Madera County, appointing and confirming any previous appointment of J. F. Lincoln, F. K. Averill, and M. W. Beale as trustees of Lincoln Ranch Company, a voluntary trust.

[1] In the complaint filed in the Superior Court of Madera County, there is an attempt to state the contents of the petition for confirmation of trustees, and the consent of the beneficiaries to the confirmation. There is also a statement that the court made an order confirming the trustees, and that by reason of these proceedings, the Superior Court of Madera County acquired exclusive jurisdiction over the trust properties, etc. The conclusion of the pleader, that by reason of the filing of a petition, the consent of the beneficiaries to the confirmation of the trustees, and the order confirming the trustees, the court acquired exclusive jurisdiction over the trust properties, etc., is a mere conclusion of law and will be disregarded by this court. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Los Angeles County, 2 Cal.App.2d 600, 38 P.2d 442. Taking this view of the pleading, we see no useful purpose to be served by permitting an extension of the record, and the motion for the same is denied.

If section 3423 of the Civil Code applies in this case, then there are only two questions involved, i. e., (A) Is there a multiplicity of proceedings involved or threatened? (B) Do the petitioners have a plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law in the action brought in Madera County? Section 3423 of the Civil Code, so far as it applies to this case, reads as follows: "An injunction cannot be granted: First—To stay a judicial proceeding pending at the commencement of the action in which the injunction is demanded, unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of such proceedings."

[2-4] Although the order of the Superior Court of Madera County was designated as a restraining order, and although the language of the above section only applies to injunctions, it is clear that the use of the word "injunction" in the section is intended to apply to restraining orders as well as to injunctions; because, unless a preliminary injunction could follow the restraining order, the latter would be without purpose. Furthermore, in the body of the order issued by the Madera County Superior Court, it refers to its order as an injunction. In addition, the order restrains the acts not only until the hearing on the preliminary restraining order, but also restrains the acts "until the further order of this court." It is the law in this state that regardless of what an order is called by the court issuing it, that if the restraint is "until the further order of the court," that it is a preliminary injunction. Neumann v. Moretti, 146 Cal. 31, 79 P. 512. It is, therefore, our opinion that section 3423 of the Civil Code is controlling in this case.

[5] Before determining whether there is a multiplicity of proceedings involved, it will be necessary to determine the status of a Massachusetts trust in this state. Regardless of what conflict of opinion might have heretofore prevailed, it has been settled in the case of Old River Farms Co. v. Roscoe Haegelin Co., 98 Cal.App. 331, 276 P. 1047, that a joint stock company (of which a Massachusetts trust is one form) is in effect a copartnership. The Massachusetts trusts here involved are really copartnerships, with the partnership property vested in trustees.

Turning now to the suit filed in Madera County, it appears that the real object was to dissolve the partnership and to revest the partnership property, which had been held in trust, in the persons entitled thereto. The purpose of the temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, which followed the filing of the suit in Madera County, was to keep the partnership property intact until the dissolution of the partnership could be effected.

Although the partnership business was conducted under four different names, i. e., Lincoln Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, Davis Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, Averill Ranch Company, a voluntary trust, and Roger Averill and Associates, a voluntary trust, P. A. Davis and wife owned ten per cent of each trust in which the partnership property was held, J. F. Lincoln and wife owned ten per cent, Roger Averill owned seventy per cent, and M. W. Beale owned ten per cent. In other words, there were four partners doing business under four different names, but in reality it was just one partnership. The object of the four suits filed in the municipal court of Los Angeles by Walter Gould Lincoln, was to collect an attorney fee from each of the four trusts for legal services rendered in the formation of said trusts. However, the four trusts were formed at the same time—the legal services were rendered for the same parties, and the partners were equally benefited, whether legal services were rendered to one trust, to two, or to all. To permit four different actions to be brought against the partners because they conducted their business under four separate names would amount to the same as permitting an attorney who had rendered legal services to a partnership over a period of several years, to bring a separate suit for services against the partners for each separate piece of legal work rendered. In each of the three suits filed in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, M. W. Beale, as trustee of one of the trusts, is plaintiff, and Katherine Averill Bridges, as a trustee of one of the trusts, is defendant. In one suit, an accounting is sought from the co-trustee of Roger Averill and Associates trust, together with an attorney fee; in another suit, the removal of the co-trustee of Roger Averill and Associates trust, and the appointment of another, is sought; and in the third suit, the removal of the co-trustee of Lincoln Ranch Company trust, and the reappointment of M. W. Beale, as trustee, is sought. Although each suit is filed against Katherine Averill Bridges, instead of against the partnership doing business under one of its four fictitious names, the trustees are simply the names under which the partnership assets are held, and the real purpose of these actions directly affect the partnership. Although there seems to be no California decision covering a definition of the term "multiplicity of proceedings," there are decisions in other states defining "multiplicity of suits." In the case of Illinois Steel Company v. Schroeder, 133 Wis. 561, 113 N. W. 51, 55, 14 L.R.A.,N.S., 239, 126 Am.St. Rep. 977, the Wisconsin court states that the term applies "where one party may be sued several times in relation to the same subject-matter in its entirety, or in respect to some element or elements thereof."

[6] It is therefore our conclusion that a "multiplicity of proceedings" are involved, and that the Madera County Superior Court properly exercised its power in restraining the suits filed in Los Angeles. Having arrived at the conclusion that there is a "multiplicity of proceedings" involved, it is unnecessary to consider whether petitioners have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law in the action brought in Madera County.

It is hereby ordered that the alternative writ of prohibition issued out of this court be discharged, and that the peremptory writ be denied.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 84

PACIFIC STATES SAVINGS & LOAN CO. v. PEREZ et al.

Civ. 11820.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 2, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 2, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑110

An order denying defendant's motion for new trial was not appealable. Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑579

In action to quiet title by purchaser upon foreclosure of street improvement lien, holding absolute title under statute authorizing the improvement, complaint was not insufficient on the ground that complainant's title was equitable. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 75.

3. Evidence 🔑366(11)

In action to quiet title by purchaser upon foreclosure of street improvement liens, city treasurer's deeds were admissible for plaintiff as against contention no proper foundation was laid, under statute providing that a treasurer's deed is "primary evidence" of the regularity of proceedings theretofore had, since quoted phrase means "prima facie evidence". Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 75.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Evidence" and "Primary Evidence".

4. Municipal corporations 🔑579

In action to quiet title by purchaser at foreclosure of street improvement liens against former owners, with defense of fraud of street commissioner in initiating the improvement proceedings, statement of district attorney setting forth the circumstances of commissioner's conviction of conspiracy to commit bribery was inadmissible. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199; Pen.Code, § 1192a.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑488(5)

City treasurer's tax deeds to purchaser upon foreclosure of street improvement liens were not void on ground the tax was confiscatory, in view of failure of property owners to take advantage of statutory provision for appearance before council to protest the contemplated improvement. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 6.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑579

In action to quiet title by purchaser upon foreclosure of street improvement liens with defense of fraudulent instigation of proceeding authorizing the improvement, evidence was insufficient to sustain claim of fraud.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑579

In action to quiet title by purchaser upon foreclosure of street improvement liens, evidence was sufficient to establish that property owners had been given due notice of assessment and sale of their property. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑551

Under statute requiring city treasurer to sell property securing street improvement liens whenever bonds evidencing same were in default and bondholders so demanded in writing, a demand by a corporate bondholder on its letterhead was sufficient notwithstanding individual signature thereto by manager of bondholder's bond department and hence purchaser at sale to satisfy such lien obtained good title against the former property owners. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑577

Certificates of sale of property sold to enforce street improvement liens otherwise complying with the statute were not defective because of failure to set out the preliminary proceedings, the fact of default, and the making of a demand to sell. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 72.

10. Municipal corporations 🔑577

"Sale No. 611" appearing in the caption of a certificate of sale to foreclose a street improvement lien was a sufficient designation of the number of certificate as against claim the caption was no part of the certificate, and hence purchaser thereunder acquired title against the former owner. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 72.

11. Municipal corporations 🔑989(5)

The prescribed mode of procedure must be followed in the sale of land for delinquent municipal taxes so far as that procedure is specific and of possible benefit to the owner.

12. Municipal corporations 🔑577

Where property sold to satisfy a street improvement lien had at all times appeared on city treasurer's records as owned by certain named owners, and statute authorizing street improvements did not require certificates of sale to enforce lien therefor to include property owners' names, certificates reciting property sold had been assessed to unknown owners were not void, since the recitals regarding ownership were superfluous. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 72.

13. Municipal corporations ⚷577

Where certificates of sale of property sold to enforce a street improvement lien recited the property was sold for a specified sum while in fact purchaser had delivered improvement bonds secured by the liens to city treasurer for most of the purchase price, certificates were not void on the ground city treasurer was authorized to accept cash only and that the recitals were false.

14. Municipal corporations ⚷581

Where statute required a notice to redeem property sold to enforce street improvement liens to be served upon the owners before application for a deed, a notice omitting the names of the property owners but including all matters required by the statute was not defective. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 74.

15. Municipal corporations ⚷581

Where statute provided a notice to redeem property sold to satisfy a street improvement lien should state the date of expiration of "right" of redemption and that property so sold could be redeemed at any time before deed was applied for, a notice to redeem giving the date the "time" of redemption would expire and stating the purchaser was the Pacific States Savings and Loan Company, the application being made two days later for a deed to the Pacific States Savings and Loan Company of San Francisco was a substantial compliance with the statute and hence was sufficient. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8199, §§ 73, 74.

16. Municipal corporations ⚷581

Where notice to redeem property sold to enforce street improvement liens stated purchaser would apply for a deed October 4, but deed was not applied for until October 6, property owner could have applied for a deed on October 4 and was not prejudiced because he was given two days longer to redeem than the law required. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, § 73.

17. Municipal corporations ⚷579

A city treasurer's deed to purchaser of property at sale to enforce street improvement liens was not insufficient on ground that affidavits of posting of notice to redeem failing to show the year that the notices were posted, but showing date and year of execution and reciting notices were posted a specified time next preceding a definite date, were defective. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199.

18. Municipal corporations ⚷579

Where demand for sale and deed of property sold to enforce street improvement liens complied with all the statutory requirements, purchaser's title was not defective on the ground that the demand and deed omitted certain matters not required by statute. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199.

19. Appeal and error ⚷931(4)

In action to quiet title to property purchased at sale to enforce street improvement liens, where property owners defended on ground that the improvement had been fraudulently instigated and that the taxes were confiscatory, findings that defendants' claims were without right and that defendants had no interest in the property were sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff notwithstanding absence of finding on issues of fraud and confiscation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199.

20. Appeal and error ⚷931(3)

Where an omitted finding must be inferred from a consideration of the findings actually made, appellate court will recognize the inference and consider the finding as having in effect been made.

21. Municipal corporations ⚷579

In action to quiet title to property purchased at sale to enforce delinquent street improvement liens, where statute authorizing the improvement did not require action for collection of the assessments to be brought against the owners and all persons having an interest in the property, judgment for plaintiff was not defective on ground that certain defendants were sued by fictitious names and were neither served nor dismissed. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Frank M. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Pacific States Savings and Loan Company against L. Perez, and others, to quiet title, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff and order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed. Purported appeal from order denying a new trial dismissed.

Geo. Ingraham, of Oakland, for appellants.

Roy D. Reese and James E. Burns, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

McWILLIAMS, Justice pro tem.

[1] Defendants have appealed from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff. The notice of appeal also attacks the order of the lower court denying their motion for a new trial. The latter order is not appealable and therefore the appeal therefrom must be dismissed. See Code Civ.Proc., § 963.

Plaintiff sued to quiet title to certain real property of which it claimed ownership. Defendants filed an answer denying plaintiff's ownership of the property. They also filed a cross-complaint in which they alleged that plaintiff claimed to have acquired title to the property by purchase at a foreclosure sale held to satisfy a lien on the property which lien was evidenced by certain street improvement bonds. According to defendants' cross-complaint the proceedings incident to that sale were fatally defective and as a result plaintiff did not acquire title to the property.

[2] Defendants also make the preliminary contention that the complaint of plaintiff contained but the general allegations ordinarily found in a complaint to quiet title and that such general allegations are insufficient to oust the holder of the legal title. This claim assumes that plaintiff's title was but an equitable one. It overlooks the fact that under section 75 of the Improvement Act of 1911, Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8199, under the provisions of which act the bonds had been issued, the deed of the city treasurer conveys to a grantee "the absolute title" to the lands described therein.

[3] Upon the trial of the case plaintiff offered in evidence the three deeds issued to it by the city treasurer of Oakland. Defendants contend that no sufficient foundation was shown for their introduction. We cannot agree with this contention. Section 75 of the act provides that the treasurer's deed, when duly acknowledged or proved, "is primary evidence of the regularity of all proceedings theretofore had, and conveys to the grantee the absolute title to the lands described therein, as of the date of the expiration of the period for redemption, free of all encumbrances, except the lien for State, county and municipal taxes.". The phrase "primary evidence" appears in section 3786 of the Political Code in reference to the evidentiary value of the tax deed, and as there used has been held to mean prima facie evidence. Boyer v. Gelhaus, 19 Cal.App. 320, 322, 125 P. 916. Obviously the same meaning should be given to the phrase in construing the act with which we are here concerned.

[4] The next contention of defendants is that plaintiff acquired no title to the property in controversy by reason of the alleged fraud of a former commissioner of streets of the city of Oakland which fraud is claimed to have vitiated the proceedings upon which the deeds to plaintiff are based. Evidence was offered and admitted on behalf of defendants to the effect that the commissioner referred to had initiated the proceedings in the city council and had voted for the resolution which resulted in the improvement of the property in controversy. Defendants claim that at the time this improvement was authorized the commissioner mentioned was engaged in the business of accepting bribes for street work. In support of this contention defendants offered in evidence the testimony of the district attorney of Alameda county to the effect that not long after the initiation of the street improvement on the property in question, the commissioner of streets mentioned had been convicted of conspiracy to commit bribery. In support of their claim of fraud defendants also offered in evidence the statement of the district attorney prepared under the provisions of section 1192a of the Penal Code in which were set forth the circumstances of the offense charged. The objection of the plaintiff to the introduction of the statement referred to was sustained by the trial court. We find no error in this ruling. The trial court properly held that if the proceedings underlying the foreclosure suit were vitiated by fraud, as claimed by defendants, they might offer evidence of that fact, but that the statement offered by them was not competent evidence of such fraud.

[5, 6] Defendants also contend that since neither the assessed nor the market value of the property in question at any time exceeded $100 per lot, and since the street assessments for which the lots were sold far exceeded that sum, the property of defendants has been confiscated. But under the terms of the Improvement Act involved, the property owners could have appeared before the council to present their protest against the contemplated improvement. The act (§ 6) makes the action of the council on such protest final and conclusive. It is true that certain objections of a property owner such as those of fraud are not finally disposed of by the ruling of a city council. But fraud when claimed must be proved by competent evidence. The lower court held that no sufficient showing of fraud was made by defendants and in that holding we concur.

[7] We may add that in their closing brief counsel for defendants for the first time argue in support of a point made but not argued in their opening brief to the effect that defendants were given no notice of the proceedings in connection with the assessment and sale of their property. As pointed out above the deeds to plaintiff under the terms of the act constituted prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings antedating their execution. In view of the tenuous character of the testimony of the one defendant who testified on this point, we cannot hold that the lower court erred in deciding that due notice was given to defendants.

[8] The demands made upon the city treasurer to sell the property in satisfaction of the lien of the outstanding bonds are claimed to be defective in form by reason of the omission therefrom of certain provisions that defendants claim were essential. One such contention is predicated upon the fact that the official signature of plaintiff does not appear at the end of the demands. The demands appear to have been on the letterhead of plaintiff and to have been signed, "C. F. Lewis, Manager Bond Department." They included requests to the city treasurer to "Please advise us as to the date of advertisement." We are of the opinion that the demands complied with the statutory requirement that the city treasurer sell the property whenever the bonds were in default "and the holder of the bonds demands in writing" that he advertise and sell. Without enumerating all the various alleged omissions from the demands that are complained of it is sufficient to say that in our opinion the demands contained all of the matters that are required by the act.

[9] The certificates of sale issued pursuant to the provisions of section 72 of the act are claimed to be defective by reason of their failure to set out certain matters including the preliminary proceedings, the fact of default, and the making of the demands to sell. The statute makes no such requirement. It merely provides that the certificates shall recite the date, number, and series of the bonds under which the sales were made, describing the land sold and giving the date of sale, the purchaser's name, the amount paid, and the numbers of the certificates. The certificates set out all the matters required with one possible exception.

[10] That exception relates to the numbers of the certificates. One of the three certificates of sale that had been executed was read into the record, it being stipulated that the other two were similar in form. It reads in part as follows: "Sale No. 611, Certificate of Sale of Property pursuant to the provisions of Improvement Act of 1911 and amendments thereto, sold for nonpayment of principal and interest of bond issued to represent assessment. * * * This instrument is to certify that on the 10th day of May, 1934 * * *." The lower court evidently held, and properly so in our opinion, that the portion reading "Sale No. 611" constituted the number of the certificate of sale within the requirement of the act. Appellants insist, however, that the number appears in the caption of the certificate and that the caption is no part of the certificate, citing Preston v. Hirsch, 5 Cal. App. 485, 90 P. 965, in support of their contention. In that case the court held that the caption of a certificate of sale could not be considered in aid of the certificate for the purpose of determining the year of the assessment when that fact was not recited in the body of the certificate. The application of the doctrine there laid down that a caption is no part of a certificate must vary with the circumstances and with the precise question presented. A person who read such a certificate of sale would not normally expect to find in the caption a recital of the year for which the taxes involved had been assessed, whereas he would normally examine the caption for the number of the certificate itself.

[11] It is true that, as the supreme court of this state has held, the prescribed mode of procedure must be followed in the sale of land for delinquent taxes so far as that procedure is specific and of possible benefit to the owner. Chapman v. Jocelyn, 182 Cal. 294, 298, 187 P. 962. But we cannot see how the defendants could have been possibly benefited by the inclusion of the numbers of the certificates in the body of the certificates rather than in the caption thereto.

[12] The certificates are also claimed to be defective in that they falsely recite that the property sold had been assessed to unknown owners, whereas, according to the testimony of the city treasurer, the property at all times appeared on his records as being owned by certain named owners. Defendants contend that this discrepancy renders the sales void. In support of this contention they cite the case of Hinds v. Clark, 173 Cal. 49, 159 P. 153. That case involved the provisions of an ordinance of the city of Bakersfield which required that certificates of sale should specify the date upon which the city would be entitled to a deed to property sold to it. The certificate considered by the court in that case did not correctly specify that date and it was therefore held void. The act of 1911 under which the street improvements involved in this case were made includes no requirement that certificates of sale shall include the name of the person whose property is sold. The recitals in the certificates received in evidence in this case to the effect that the property sold had been assessed to unknown owners, were superfluous and of no legal effect. See Campbell v. Shafer, 162 Cal. 206, 210, 121 P. 737.

[13] Defendants next contend that the certificates recite that the three parcels of property in question were sold for $935.80, $1,121.09, and $841.82, respectively, whereas the recitals to that effect are false, the purchaser having merely delivered up to the city treasurer the improvement bonds held by it in payment of substantially all of the purchase price. The testimony of the city treasurer as to the form in which the payments for the property sold were made was allowed in evidence over the objection of defendants They contend that the city treasurer was not authorized to accept bonds in lieu of cash and that in any event if the bonds might be accepted the certificates should have recited such acceptance. We are of the opinion that the contention is without merit. It may be that the city treasurer could have refused to accept the improvement bonds and could properly have insisted on the payment of the purchase price in cash. See Kelly v. Barnet, 24 Cal.App. 119, 140 P. 605. A contention similar to the one here made by defendants was made by a party whose property had been sold on execution. In passing upon his contention the court said: "Accepting the appellant's contention that the statute contemplates that payment should be made in cash, this does not exclude a manner of payment which substantially amounts to the same thing." Mitchell v. Alpha Hardware, etc., Co., 7 Cal. App.2d 52, 58, 45 P.2d 442, 445. The court in that case quotes from an earlier decision of the supreme court of this state, Moore v. Martin, 38 Cal. 428, to the effect that "To pay money to the Sheriff merely to have it returned would be an idle ceremony." The reasoning of the court in the Mitchell case, supra, is applicable to the contention made by defendants in this case.

[14, 15] The notice to redeem is claimed by defendants to be defective in that the names of the owners whose property was sold do not appear therein. Defendants argue that there is nothing in the statute which provides that the owner's name may be omitted. Suffice it to say in response that there is nothing in the statute requiring that the names of the owners shall appear. The act merely provides (§ 74) that such notice to redeem must be served upon the owner or his agent thirty days before application is made for a deed. The notice includes all of the matters required by the act. The point is made by defendants that the notice states "that the time of redemption" of the property will expire on a certain specified date, whereas under the act the notice should have stated the date when the "right of redemption" would expire. Substantial compliance with the statute in this respect is sufficient and in our opinion it was substantially complied with. Reed v. Lyon, 96 Cal. 501, 503, 31 P. 619; see, also, 2 Page & Jones on Taxation by Assessment, p. 1877.

[16] The notice to redeem states that unless the property was redeemed plaintiff would, on October 4, 1937, apply for a deed, whereas, say defendants, plaintiff did not apply for a deed until October 6. Under section 73 of the act property sold may be redeemed at any time before application is made for a deed. Concededly defendants could properly have applied for a deed on October 4. We fail to see how defendants have been prejudiced because they were given two days longer to redeem than the law required.

Complaint is made of the fact that the treasurer's deed to the property ran to Pacific States Savings and Loan Company of San Francisco, whereas the notices to redeem stated that Pacific States Savings and Loan Company was the purchaser. No claim is made that defendants were misled by the variance in the names, conceding that such variance exists. We are of the opinion that the notices were substantially correct which, as pointed out above, is all that the law requires with respect to notices to redeem.

[17] Two of the affidavits of the posting of the notice to redeem are claimed to be defective. Those affidavits state that "on the 3rd of September" affiant posted the notice to redeem without stating the year in which this was done. The affidavits appear to have been executed on September 4, 1937. Moreover they recite that the affiant posted true copies of the notice to redeem the property in controversy. The original notice to redeem appears to have been executed on September 1, 1937. The affidavits recite that the notices were posted "more than thirty days next immediately preceding" the fourth of October, 1937. Hence under a reasonable construction of the affidavits the posting of the copies could only have been done on the third of September in the year 1937.

[18] The demand for the sale of the property of defendants and the deed given to plaintiff are complained of as defective in form. We are of the opinion that both documents comply with all statutory requirements. The omissions complained of by defendants refer to matters that the act does not require to be included.

[19, 20] The findings are in our opinion sufficient to support the judgment. The recitals in the deeds that were introduced in evidence and which were found by the lower court to have been duly and regularly issued, were sufficient under section 75 of the act to indicate that the bonds were delinquent, that the property was duly advertised and sold, and that plaintiff acquired title to the property at the sale. In response to the claim that there is no finding on the issues of fraud and confiscation, it is sufficient to call attention to the finding of the lower court that the claims of defendants to the property are without right and that they have no interest in the property. Where an omitted finding must be inferred from a consideration of the findings actually made, an appellate court will recognize the necessary inference and consider the finding in question as having in effect been made. Reiniger v. Hassell, 216 Cal. 209, 211, 13 P.2d 737; Publishers Distributing Service v. Southern California School Book Depository, 14 Cal.App.2d 448, 58 P.2d 401.

[21] Defendants claim that the judgment is defective in that certain of the defendants who were sued by fictitious names were neither served nor dismissed. In support of their claim that such omission constitutes reversible error they cite Diggins v. Reay, 54 Cal. 525. The statute involved in that case provided that actions for the collection of delinquent street assessments must be brought "against the owners and all persons having any interest therein." Cal.Stats. 1869–70, pp. 890, 898, § 13. No such requirement is to be found in the act with which we are here concerned.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed and the purported appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 775

PEOPLE v. POTTER.

Cr. 1798.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 6, 1942.

Criminal law ⚿1182

Where transcript on appeal from judgment on conviction of felony was filed in District Court of Appeal on March 4, 1942, no brief was filed in appellant's behalf, cause was regularly placed on calendar for oral argument on April 6, 1942, and no appearance was made for appellant when case was called for hearing, judgment must be affirmed. Pen.Code, § 1253.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Harry W. Falk, Judge.

Burton O. Potter was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

S. E. Metzler, of Eureka, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The appellant was convicted in the Superior Court of Humboldt County of the crime of grand theft, a felony.

The transcript on appeal was filed in this court March 4, 1942. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellant. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on April 6, 1942. No appearance was made for appellant at the time the case was called for hearing.

Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code the judgment and the order are affirmed.

51 Cal.App.2d 54

STANISLAUS LUMBER CO. v. PIKE et al.

Civ. 6643.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 1, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Time 🔑10(9)

Where time to file notice of appeal normally would have expired July 2, a Sunday, and governor had declared July 3 a legal holiday, and under the statutes designating as holidays Sundays, the Fourth of July, and days appointed by the governor as such, and excluding from the time within which any act provided by law is to be done, the last day, when it falls on a holiday, a notice of appeal filed on July 5 was within the statutory time. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 939; Pol. Code, §§ 10, 12.

2. Holidays 🔑1

Where the governor set apart a day as a legal holiday with a request that it should be observed by all people generally together with the Fourth of July as Independence Day and Democracy Day in California it was a "general holiday" and not a mere "special or limited holiday". Pol.Code, § 10.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "General Holiday" and "Special or Limited Holiday".

3. Evidence 🔑46

The court takes judicial notice of proclamations of the chief executive of the state designating holidays. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 3.

4. Mechanics' liens 🔑132(1)

In suit to foreclose mechanics' lien, judgment denying the validity of the lien was supported by finding that plaintiff waived his right to a mechanics' lien by failing to file in the recorder's office a claim of lien within the statutory time. Code Civ Proc. § 1187.

5. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)

On an appeal on the judgment roll only, the evidence is not before the appellate court, and it must assume the findings to be adequately supported by the testimony adduced at the trial.

6. Mechanics' liens 🔑132(6)

Where work had ceased on a house for more than 30 days and materialman who had not been paid in full for materials furnished permitted more than 90 days to elapse after the expiration of such 30-day period without filing notice of lien, he "waived" his right to a lien. Code Civ.Proc. § 1187.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

7. Mechanics' liens 🔑132(6)

Where vendor who was indebted to materialman had ceased work on house for over 30 days although house was not completed and subsequently sold property to purchasers who had no knowledge of the previous indebtedness, the statutory limitation of time within which the materialman's lien was required to be filed was not extended, notwithstanding that purchasers afterwards bought and paid for other lumber with which they completed the house. Code Civ.Proc. § 1187.

8. Mechanics' liens 🔑1

"Mechanics' liens" are creatures of statute which are dependent for their existence and enforcement upon substantial compliance with the letter of the law. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mechanics' Lien".

9. Mechanics' liens ⚷132(8)

Where purchasers of a building on which there has been a cessation of work for over four months had no notice of vendor's debt for materials or a claim of lien by the materialman, their subsequent purchase of lumber from the materialman created an "implied contract" to pay for it separate from the obligation of the vendor which was not revived notwithstanding the subsequent completion of the structure by the purchaser. Code Civ.Proc. § 1187.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Implied Contract".

10. Mechanics' liens ⚷132(8)

Where there has been cessation of work on a structure for more than 30 days the resumption of work does not operate to extend the time to file mechanics' liens to 90 days from the actual completion of the building when the owner fails to file his notice of completion. Code Civ.Proc. § 1187.

11. Mechanics' liens ⚷132(7)

The provision prescribing the time within which mechanics' liens may be filed declaring that "cessation from labor for 30 days" shall be the equivalent to the actual completion of the work means that cessation from work for a period of 30 days starts the running of the statute of limitations in the same manner as the actual completion of the structure. Code Civ.Proc. § 1187.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Cessation from Labor for 30 Days".

12. Mechanics' liens ⚷132(7)

The time for filing a claim for mechanics' lien commences to run exactly as though the work or improvement under construction were actually completed upon the occupation or use of the building by the owner, actual acceptance of the building by the owner, cessation from labor for 30 days upon such building, or the filing of notice of completion by the owner. Code Civ.Proc. § 1187.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; Roy B. Maxey, Judge.

Suit by the Stanislaus Lumber Company against Arthur B. Pike and others to foreclose a mechanics' lien to secure the unpaid portion of a bill for lumber. From that portion of the judgment which denied the validity of the mechanics' lien, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Edward T. Taylor, of Modesto, for appellant.

T. B. Scott, of Modesto, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

The plaintiff has appealed from that portion of a judgment which denies the validity of an alleged mechanic's lien to secure the unpaid portion of a bill for lumber furnished for construction of a dwelling house. It was held that the lien was void for the reason that plaintiff failed to file its claim therefor within the time allowed by the provisions of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll only. The evidence is not before us.

The respondent moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the notice thereof was not filed within the time allowed by law.

[1-3] The motion to dismiss the action on the ground that the notice of appeal was not filed within sixty days of the entry of judgment as required by section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is denied. The judgment was entered May 4, 1939. Sixty days for filing the notice would have normally expired July 2d, which was Sunday. The following day was declared a legal holiday by proclamation of the Governor. It became a general holiday and not a mere special holiday, for the Govenor declared that it was set apart "as a legal holiday in the State of California" with a request that it should be observed by "all people generally," together with the Fourth of July, "as Independence days and Democracy days in California." The courts take judicial notice of such proclamations of the chief executive of the state. § 1875, subd. 3, Code Civ.Proc.; 23 C. J. 101, § 1900; 20 Am.Jur. 67, § 44. Sundays, the Fourth of July and "every day appointed * * * by the Governor of this State for a public fast, thanksgiving or holiday," (emphasis added) are declared to be holidays. § 10, Pol. Code. The same section does provide that "all courts, public schools and public offices of this State and of any city, county," etc., "shall be open and shall function in their normal and usual manner" on all special or limited holidays which are set apart by proclamation of the governor. This section, however, defines a special or limited holiday as follows:

"A special or limited holiday is hereby defined as a holiday applying only to a special class or classes of business, or a special class or classes of persons, and not appointed to be generally observed throughout the State by all classes of business and all classes of persons."

Since the proclamation in question set apart July 3d to be observed "as a legal holiday * * * (by) all people generally * * * in California," under the preceding definition, it must be considered a general holiday and not a mere special or limited holiday. It follows that the requirement that all public and county offices shall remain open and shall function in the usual manner on special and limited holidays has no application to the situation which is presented on this case. In computing the time within which the notice of appeal in this case was required to be filed, it becomes necessary to exclude, pursuant to section 12 of the Political Code, the three days of that period, Sunday, July 2d; Monday, July 3d, and Tuesday, July 4th, as holidays. The notice of appeal, which was filed on July 5th, was therefore within the sixty days prescribed by section 939, Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendants, A. Yates and Florence, his wife owned a lot in Modesto containing a small cottage in which they resided, but upon which lot they proposed to construct a new dwelling house. The building was commenced May 24, 1937. It was constructed with the aid of a carpenter by means of day labor. The materials were purchased from plaintiff, all of which were paid for except the sum of $298.97, which has not been satisfied. It appears that the house was not entirely completed. A small amount of lumber, which was purchased for that purpose, remained on hand. For a consideration of $2,350, the property was sold and conveyed to the defendants, Arthur B. and Emma D. Pike, November 2, 1937. The grantees had no knowledge of the fact that the grantors were indebted to plaintiff for any materials which were furnished for the construction of the house. They were informed by the grantors that all materials had been fully paid for and that no work had been performed thereon since June 30, 1937. They relied on a certificate of title to the property issued by the Modesto Title Company which showed that no lien had been filed against it. With the knowledge of plaintiff, the defendants, Arthur B. and Emma D. Pike took possession of the property November 2, 1937, and thereafter purchased and paid for some lumber from plaintiff with which they completed the house on December 23, 1937. The plaintiff thereafter filed for record a notice of lien on January 11, 1938, to secure payment of said sum of $298.97.

The court found that the former owners, A. Yates and Florence Yates, his wife, were indebted to plaintiff for materials furnished for construction of their house in the sum of $298.97, together with interest thereon from June 30, 1937. Judgment was accordingly rendered against them for that sum. The court further found that, in consideration of the sum of $2,350, the property was sold and conveyed to the defendants Arthur B. and Emma D. Pike, on November 2, 1937; that "on June 30, 1937, said improvement, consisting of house in the course of construction remained incompleted," but that "there was a cessation of labor on said house from June 30, 1937 to November 8, 1937," and that "no work of any kind had been done on said house or improvement since June 30, 1937." It was held plaintiff waived its claim for mechanic's lien by failing to file a notice of lien within the time allowed by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[4-6] We are of the opinion the judgment is supported in every respect by the findings and that the plaintiff waived its right to a mechanic's lien by failing to file in the recorder's office a claim of lien within the statutory time allowed by the provisions of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court found that work on the dwelling house in question ceased for a period of over four months, from June 30th to November 8, 1937, and that plaintiff's claim of lien was not filed until January 11, 1938. Since the evidence is not before us we must assume those findings are adequately supported by the testimony adduced at the trial. The last paragraph of the previously mentioned section provides that when owners of property fail to file their notice of completion of the work or contract, as therein authorized, "all persons claiming the benefit of this chapter shall have ninety days after the completion of said work of improvement within which to file their claims of lien." No notice of completion was filed in the present case. Assuming that the work ceased on June 30th, for a period of more than thirty days, as the court found that it did, the plaintiff would then be required to file its notice of lien on or before October 30th of that year in order to secure its right of lien. Having failed to file the notice of lien within the time allowed by law, we are impelled to hold plaintiff thereby waived its right to a lien.

[7, 8] It is immaterial that the purchasers of the property afterwards bought and paid for other lumber with which they completed the structure. They had no knowledge of the previous indebtedness. The statutory limitation of time within which the lien was required to be filed would not have been thereby extended even if they had possessed that knowledge. Mechanic's liens are creatures of statute which are dependent for their existence and enforcement upon substantial compliance with the letter of the law. Holm v. Bramwell, 20 Cal.App.2d 332, 67 P.2d 114; 17 Cal.Jur. 81, § 50.

In the case of Hubbard v. Jurian, 35 Cal.App. 757, 170 P. 1093, it was held that subsequent completion of a building by the owner, after a lien had been lost by failure to file a notice of lien within the time allowed by law, on account of cessation of labor for more than thirty days, does not have the effect of reviving the lien. It is said on page 765 of that opinion 35 Cal. App., on page 1096 of 170 P., in that regard:

"In response to this contention, it will suffice to say that it has been held that a subsequent completion of the building by the owner after a 30 days' cessation from labor thereon by the contractor does not operate as an extension of time for the filing of liens claimed under and created by the original contract. Johnson v. La Grave, 102 Cal. 324, 36 P. 651."

[9] In the present case the subsequent purchase of lumber by Mr. and Mrs. Pike, created a new implied contract to pay for it, separate and distinct from the obligation of the former owners of the property. The principle determined by the Hubbard case applies with greater force when the work ceases for a period of over four months, and the property is thereafter sold and conveyed for a valuable consideration without notice of the previous debt or claim of lien, even though the purchaser subsequently performs the labor of completing the structure.

[10] The appellant contends that since the statute grants one who has furnished labor or material for the construction of a building, a period of thirty days "after the completion of such work of improvement, as a whole," within which to file his lien, that the mere cessation of work on the structure, for any period of time, does not have the effect of forfeiting the right to a lien provided the work thereon is subsequently resumed. In other words, it is asserted a laborer or materialman is allowed by statute thirty days after the actual completion of the entire proposed structure or improvement, regardless of intervening periods during which all work thereon ceases to be performed, within which to file his notice of lien, and that the actual time to file liens is extended to ninety days from actual completion of the building or improvement when the owner fails to file his notice of completion, regardless of any intervening cessation of work. We are of the opinion the section is not susceptible of that construction.

[11] The statute not only provides that every person, other than the original contractor, may file his claim of lien for labor or material furnished at any time "until thirty days after the completion of such work of improvement, as a whole," but it also specifically declares that "cessation from labor for thirty days" shall be equivalent to the actual completion of the work or improvement. This last mentioned statement clearly means that when work on the structure or improvement has ceased for a period of thirty days, the statutory limitation of time within which the claim of lien may be filed, begins to run. It means that after cessation of work for thirty days, a claimant for labor performed or materials furnished, must file his lien within thirty days thereafter exactly as he is required to do "after the completion of such work of improvement," except that when the owner fails to file his notice of completion the time to file the lien is extended to ninety days from the expiration of the thirty-day period of cessation of work. In other words, cessation from work for a period of thirty days has the effect of starting the running of the statute of limitations just as actual completion of the structure or improvement sets it in motion.

[12] The latter portion of the first paragraph of section 1187 specifies four separate conditions, each of which is declared to constitute a situation, with respect to the enforcement of that statute, exactly the same as though the work or improvement under construction were actually completed. These conditions are, (1) occupation or use of the building or improvement by the owner, (2) actual acceptance of the building or structure by the owner, (3) "cessation from labor for thirty days upon any * * * building, improvement or structure," and (4) filing of the notice of completion by the owner.

In the present case work on the dwelling house ceased for more than four months during which time not a thing was done toward the construction. In fact the work was never resumed by the former owners. On the contrary, without further performance, they sold and conveyed the property to the co-defendants, Mr. and Mrs. Pike, who had no knowledge of the existing indebtedness or of the alleged claim of lien. We are satisfied the plaintiff waived its right of lien on the real property by failing to file a notice of claim for a period of over five months after cessation of the work.

The judgment is affirmed.

TUTTLE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 1

HOUSING AUTHORITY OF CITY OF OAKLAND v. FORBES et al.

Civ. 11786.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 31, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Eminent domain 🔑66

It is for the Legislature in the first instance to determine whether the use for which property may be taken is a public one.

2. Eminent domain 🔑169

Under the Housing Authorities Law, before private property can be taken by eminent domain for a housing project, the governing body of the city or county involved by resolution must declare that there is a need for an authority to function in such city or county upon finding that certain conditions exist, and the authority must adopt a resolution declaring that the acquisition sought is necessary for its purposes. Gen.Laws Supp.1939, Act 3483, § 4.

3. Eminent domain 🔑17
Municipal corporations 🔑861

Under Housing Authorities Law and statute extending right of eminent domain to provide proper living accommodations for low-income families and resolution of Oakland Council finding need for a housing authority, the selection of an area by the Oakland Housing Authority for a housing project was for a "public use" for which public money could be expended and private property acquired. Gen.Laws Supp.1939, Act 3483, §§ 2(c), 8(d), 12; Code Civ.Proc. § 1238, subd. 21; § 1241, subds. 1, 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Use".

4. Eminent domain 🔑196

Evidence established that Oakland City Council and Oakland Housing Authority complied with the statutory prerequisite to the seizure of private property by eminent domain for low-rent housing purposes. Gen. Laws Supp.1939, Act 3483, §§ 2(c), 4, 8(d), 12.

5. Eminent domain 🔑67

The unequivocal declaration of the Legislature that the acquisition of land for low-rent housing projects was in the public use would not be disturbed on appeal in an eminent domain proceeding by a housing authority in the absence of anything in the record indicating that the Legislature erred in such declaration. Gen.Laws Supp.1939, Act 3483; Code Civ.Proc. § 1238, subd. 21.

6. Eminent domain 🔑57

Under the Housing Authorities Act, the Oakland Housing Authority was empowered to select the location most desirable for a housing project, and was not limited to the area vacated under the slum clearance provisions of the act. Gen.Laws Supp.1939, Act 3483.

7. Eminent domain 🔑57

The condemning party is vested with wide discretion in the selection of a location.

8. Eminent domain 🔑196

Whether the selection by the Oakland Housing Authority of a location for a housing project was compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury must be determined in the light of evidence of the deliberations with which the selection was made, and the number of families it would affect. Code Civ.Proc. § 1242.

9. Eminent domain 🔑221

In condemnation proceedings for the erection of a low-rent housing project, testimony on the issue of the value of the parcels of land involved was for the jury.

10. Eminent domain 🔑221

In condemnation proceeding for the erection of a low-rent housing project, testimony on the issue of the necessity for the taking and of compatibility of the greatest public good and the least private injury was for the trial judge alone.

11. Eminent domain 🔑196

Evidence sustained finding that selection of site by Oakland Housing Authority for low-rent housing project was of public use and necessity and was compatible with the greatest public and the least private injury. Gen.Laws Supp.1939, Act 3483; Code Civ.Proc. § 1238, subd. 21; § 1241, subds. 1, 2.

12. Evidence 🔑83(1)

It is presumed that public officers will carry out their functions and exercise their powers in accordance with the law.

13. Eminent domain 🔑169

The failure of the Oakland Housing Authority, seeking to condemn land for a low-rent housing project, to prove the recordation of a lis pendens, did not affect the jurisdiction of the Superior Court to try the action, notwithstanding a statutory provision for the recordation of a lis pendens upon the institution of such an action. Code Civ.Proc. § 1243.

14. Eminent domain 🔑169

The owner of land sought to be condemned for a low-rent housing project was not prejudiced by the failure of the Oakland Housing Authority to file a "lis pendens", the effect of which omission was to relieve innocent third parties from the operation of a judgment affecting the land in dispute. Code Civ.Proc. § 1243.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Lis Pendens".

15. Eminent domain 🔑262(5)

An instruction, in condemnation proceedings, permitting jury to reject testimony of any witness expressing opinion of value, if jury did not believe that such opinion was based on full knowledge of circumstances relating to property, when read in the light of other instructions, was harmless error.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Eminent domain proceedings by the Housing Authority of the City of Oakland against James Walter Forbes and others. From judgments for the plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

See, also, Cal.App., 117 P.2d 722.

Alfred Nelson, of Oakland, for appellants.

James R. Agee, Bernard J. Abrott, and James M. Carl, all of Oakland, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem.

Fifteen proceedings in eminent domain were brought to condemn residential property in West Oakland for a low-rent housing project known as Peralta Village. The project itself (officially called Cal. 3–1) embraces seven city blocks lying between 8th and 12th, Cypress and Union Streets, and contains 171 parcels. Of these 171 parcels, only 17 are involved in this litigation and they are found in different parts of the area; they are not all contiguous. The cases were consolidated and tried together. There were fifteen separate verdicts aggregating $60,225, upon which judgments of condemnation were entered. The money awarded by the jury was paid into court for the owners (and in a few cases for lien claimants where there were any) and thereupon final orders of condemnation were entered. By stipulation, all fifteen cases are presented on one record, entitled as above.

On this appeal the adequacy of the awards is not questioned. The principal points raised are (1) that the plaintiff failed to offer any proof of public use or necessity, and (2) that the instructions were erroneous and prejudicial.

The legislation under which these condemnations were carried on was enacted in 1938 and is known as the "Housing Authorities Law" Stats.Ex.Sess. 1938, Ch. 4, p. 9, Deering's 1939 Supp., Act 3483. Its "legislative background" is reviewed at length in Housing Authority v. Dockweiler, 14 Cal.2d 437, 94 P.2d 794, which case held the law constitutional (see, Riggin v. Dockweiler, 15 Cal.2d 651, 104 P.2d 367; Housing Authority v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 336, 115 P.2d 468; Kleiber v. City and County of San Francisco, 18 Cal.2d 718, 117 P.2d 657, and further held the purposes of the act to be public uses and purposes.

Section 1241, Code Civ.Proc. provides that "Before property can be taken, it must appear: 1. * * * That the use to which it is to be applied is a use authorized by law; 2. * * * That the taking is necessary to such use * * *."

[1] The first inquiry is whether this housing project is a public use. It is settled that in the first instance "it is for the legislature to determine whether the use for which property may be taken is a public one." 10 Cal.Jur., p. 290; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 253, 27 P. 604; Kern County, etc., Dist. v. McDonald, 180 Cal. 7, 13, 179 P. 180; Kleiber v. City and County of San Francisco, supra. The legislature spoke directly upon this subject at the extra session of 1938 in chapter 3 (Stats.Ex.Sess. 1938, p. 6) when it amended section 1238, Code of Civil Procedure, by adding subdivision 21, extending the right of eminent domain "* * * to provide dwellings, apartments or other living accommodations for persons or families who lack the amount of income which is necessary (as determined by the body engaging in said work or undertaking) to enable them to live in decent, safe and sanitary dwellings without overcrowding." The section declares all the uses embraced within it to be public uses. On the same day the Legislature enacted the "Housing Authorities Law" (chap. 4, p. 9, Id.), section 2 of which declares "* * * (c) that the clearance, replanning and reconstruction of the areas in which insanitary or unsafe housing conditions exist and the providing of safe and sanitary dwelling accommodations for persons of low income are public uses and purposes for which public money may be spent and private property acquired and are governmental functions of state concern * * *." In section 8, subdivision (d) of the same act there is expressly granted, among others, the power "to acquire by the exercise of the power of eminent domain any real property." Section 12 repeats, with more elaboration, the investment of this power as follows: "Eminent Domain. An authority shall have the right to acquire by the exercise of the power of eminent domain any real property which it may deem necessary for its purposes under this act after the adoption by it of a resolution declaring that the acquisition of the real property described therein is necessary for such purposes. * * *"

In Housing Authority v. Dockweiler, supra, 14 Cal.2d at page 449, 94 P.2d at page 801, the Supreme Court recognized that among the questions there presented "the one of fundamental importance, and upon the determination of which several of the lesser and incidental issues will turn, is whether slum clearance and public housing projects for low-income families are public uses and purposes for which public money may be expended and private property acquired." After remarking that the federal and state statutes are premised upon the expressly declared policy that these are "public uses and purposes" the court continues: "While such a declaration of policy by the legislative branch of the government is not necessarily binding or conclusive upon the courts, it is entitled to great weight and it is not the duty or prerogative of the courts to interfere with such legislative finding unless it clearly appears to be erroneous and without reasonable foundation. [Citing cases.]"

[2] Under the act, however, certain steps must be taken before private property can be taken by eminent domain. Section 4 of the act provides that before any housing authority shall exercise its powers the governing body of the city or county by resolution must declare "that there is need for an authority to function in such city or county" if it finds certain conditions to exist. See Dockweiler case, supra, 14 Cal.2d at page 443, 94 P.2d 794. And section 12 of the act, quoted above, imposes the condition that the authority must adopt a resolution declaring that the acquisition sought is necessary for its purposes.

[3-5] The record shows a resolution of the Oakland City Council based upon a report of the city planning commission finding, in substantially the statutory language of section 4, supra, that "(1) Insanitary and unsafe inhabited dwelling accommodations exist in the City of Oakland; (2) There is a shortage of safe or sanitary dwelling accommodations in the City of Oakland available to persons of low income at rentals they can afford;" and declaring that "there is need for a Housing Authority" therein. A copy of this resolution was attached to the complaint. This was followed in evidence by a certificate of the appointment of the five commissioners, and by notice to the mayor that the resolution had been adopted by the council declaring the need for a housing authority. There was then offered documentary evidence showing that the five commissioners had qualified. Then there was offered in evidence a resolution approving the final plans and specifications for this project ("Cal. 3–1") which had been prepared by the board of architects. The plans and specifications themselves had already been introduced. It was stipulated that identical resolutions and acts applied to each of the parcels under condemnation. The plaintiff then offered in evidence a resolution (required by section 12 of the act) adopted by the Housing Authority on December 1, 1939, authorizing the acquisition of certain land by eminent domain proceedings required for Low Rent Housing Project Cal. 3–1, and directing the filing of condemnation proceedings. A copy of this resolution was attached to the complaint. It was stipulated that a similar resolution was adopted with respect to each parcel involved herein. A comparison of the requirements of the statute with these several pieces of evidence shows that there was full compliance with them. The appellants make no claim to the contrary. On the first question, that of public use, we are satisfied that there was a full and satisfactory showing, and that there can be no question (see the decision in the first Dockweiler case) that the Legislature has unequivocally declared that a housing project such as this, is a public use. There is nothing in this record to indicate that such legislative determination is erroneous.

As to the question of necessity: The chairman of the board of architects of the Oakland Housing Authority, an architect of twenty-five years' experience, identified the plans and specifications for the housing units here involved, which were thereupon admitted in evidence without objection. He described the "layout," testifying as to the boundaries of the site; that there were thirty-nine buildings in it, that there were seven parking areas provided between a row of two-story flat buildings and that there were walks and drives, play areas, clothes drying yards, disposal facilities, a service yard, and an administration building. When asked respecting garden space he answered that "the entire buildings are fronted alongside by a front yard and in the back by a backyard and the tenants maintain garden areas." He was then asked whether, in his opinion, in order to secure a proper layout for the proposed buildings, "that area sought to be acquired is necessary for the buildings and the auxiliary uses" to which he had referred, and he responded that "The entire area is necessary in order to accommodate the number of units which apparently is the maximum that could be placed upon that given ground area and still allow adequate room for front and backyards, parking areas, light and that sort of thing." He was not cross-examined.

[6] From the foregoing it appears that the respondent, acting through its officers, agents and advisers, selected the seven-block area (within which are the homes of the appellants) as the most desirable for this particular project. There is not the faintest suggestion that the area was selected under the slum clearance provisions of the law; it was selected because it was the most available and desirable site for the new project. It is suggested—and no more than suggested—by the appellants that the act contemplates that the new housing project shall be built upon an area which has been vacated under the slum clearance provisions of the law. But that this is not so is definitely decided in Riggin v. Dockweiler, supra. The language of the act is in the alternative; the new project may be built upon the cleared area, but it need not be. The appellants are tax-paying, law-abiding residents who are content where they are, and desire to be undisturbed. Similar situations are presented in most condemnation cases but it must be remembered that the appellants are individual owners within this seven-block project and that the selection of this particular site for the project is the responsibility of the Housing Authority.

[7-10] In the selection of a location the condemning party is vested with wide discretion. City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 257, 27 P. 604; Vallejo, etc., R. Co. v. Home Sav. Bank, 24 Cal.App. 166, 170, 140 P. 974; Tuolumne Water, etc., Co. v.

Frederick, 13 Cal.App. 498, 110 P. 134. Section 1242, Code Civ.Proc. gives the condemning party the right to locate land required for public use but "it must be located in the manner which will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury." There was every opportunity in this case for the appellants to develop their claim with respect to incompatibility. They did not cross-examine the witness Warnecke at all. They cross-examined the witness Bells at some length. He had given considerable testimony for the plaintiff, after having qualified as a real estate operator and appraiser of twenty-two years' experience in Oakland; he was a director of the Oakland Real Estate Board and had been a member of the City Planning Commission for about eight years and was then its chairman. He was questioned with respect to values. On cross-examination he was first questioned with respect to the way in which the "Peralta Village" area had been selected as against other locations. He testified that the Planning Commission had conducted a city-wide survey about 1936, to determine housing conditions in Oakland, under the direction of the Commission's engineer. That survey was reviewed by the Housing Authority to arrive at "the most logical place for a housing project." According to his testimony, it was the recommendation of the Planning Commission's engineer to the Housing Authority "that decided the location for West Oakland." The witness had made an investigation of this property about a year and a half before the trial with another appraiser, who came from Washington, with a view to ascertaining "the probable cost estimate of the land in the area." The second part of the cross-examination had to do with the condition of the houses of the appellants, the evident purpose of the questions being to develop the fact that they were structurally sound, habitable, and in good condition despite their age, and that they were sanitary, and were not of the type needing "clearance" under the act. The third division of the examination was designed to show the accessibility of this area to transportation and its proximity to largely traveled arteries. The last part of the cross-examination dealt with values; first, with those in the area generally, and then, with values of specific parcels. The witness testified that this West Oakland project had been under consideration for about two years, and that within that time values had somewhat enhanced, whether because of the project or not the witness did not say. From this it will be seen that the location of the project was chosen with deliberation and apparently after a broad and comprehensive inquiry into the whole housing problem in Oakland before it ever got into the official stage of resolutions of intention, declarations of necessity, the preparation of plans and specifications and such matters. It must also be borne in mind throughout this discussion that the parcels under condemnation belonging to these fifteen owners are only parts of a large area—the cross-examination of the witness Bells having developed the fact that in the two projects—this and another—two hundred and twenty-five or two hundred and thirty families were moving off the area, and it was suggested by counsel that approximately five hundred families were to be housed when the two projects were completed. All this testimony, and all these factor, developed by the appellants on the cross-examination of the witness Bells must be taken into consideration in connection with the claim now made that there was no showing of compatibility of greatest public good and least private injury. Some of this testimony was of course for the jury to consider on the question, solely theirs (Vallejo, etc., R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 147 P. 238), of the value of the several parcels, and some of it was for the Judge alone on the issue of the necessity for the taking and on the question of least private injury or compatibility (Reed Orchard case, supra). By this witness who, although not connected with the Housing Authority, had been familiar with the project from its inception, and who knew how the choice of sites had been made, the appellants had ample opportunity to develop, if they could, that there were more desirable or available locations, or that there would be less private injury if the project had been located elsewhere or that the end sought was for private, not public purposes. County of San Mateo v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 631, 634, 63 P. 78, 621. The Stimson case, 91 Cal. at page 255, 27 P. at page 608, furnishes this conclusive answer to the argument on claimed incompatibility: "And we think that when an attempt is made to show that the location made is unnecessarily injurious the proof ought to be clear and convincing, for otherwise no location could ever be made. If the first selection made on behalf of the public could be set aside on slight or doubtful proof, a second selection would be set aside in the same manner, and so ad infinitum. The improvement could never be secured, because, whatever location was proposed, it could be defeated by showing another just as good."

[11] It must be concluded that there was ample proof of public use and necessity, and no proof at all of incompatibility.

The case of City of Santa Ana v. Gildmacher, 133 Cal. 395, 65 P. 883, 885, is relied upon by the appellants as holding that "the question of necessity is one of fact, to be determined by the jury in view of all the evidence in the case." The Reed Orchard case, supra, 169 Cal. at page 557, 147 P. at page 244, deals at some length with the Gildmacher case, and concludes as follows: "The case cannot be regarded as a decision that the owner is entitled as of right to a jury trial upon all the issues that may be presented in an action of condemnation. It does not purport to decide that question. If it so held we should feel obliged to overrule the decision as contrary to the statutory law on the subject."

[12] The appellants express the fear that their property may be taken for one purpose and thereafter used for another. There is a ready answer to this. There is a presumption, well recognized by the cases, that public officers will carry out their functions and exercise their powers in accordance with the law. People v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., 211 Cal. 121, 128, 294 P. 3; Ellis Landing & Dock Co. v. City of Richmond, 70 Cal.App. 720, 723, 234 P. 336.

[13, 14] Section 1243, Code Civ.Proc. contains, among others, the following provision: "A lis pendens shall be filed at the time of the commencement of the action in every county in which any of the property to be affected shall be located." Appellants point out that no proof of the recordation of any lis pendens was ever made, and the transcript is silent on that point. They argue that § 1243 refers to the jurisdiction of the Superior Court to try a condemnation action. The head-note of the section, punctuated into four parts, reads as follows: "Jurisdiction and venue: Proceedings commenced, how: Change of place of trial: Lis pendens." It would seem, off-hand, to deal with four distinct subjects. No case is cited by appellants to the effect that the function of a lis pendens is any different in a condemnation case than it is in any other piece of litigation affecting real property. That function is described in Lee v. Silva, 197 Cal. 364, 373, 240 P. 1015, and at more length in Blackburn v. Bucksport, etc., R. R. Co., 7 Cal.App. 649, 653, 95 P. 668, 670. In the latter case it is said, "* * * the legislation does not * * * affect in the slightest degree the question of the court's jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit or of the persons of the parties thereto." See, also, 16 Cal.Jur., 644. Here, as in the Blackburn case, the record is silent as to the filing of a lis pendens; it does not affirmatively show that none was filed. But as said in the Blackburn case, where the situation was the same, "even if there was a failure to file a lis pendens, the appellant [s] could not be prejudiced thereby, for the only effect of an omission to so record such notice would be to relieve innocent third parties (purchasers or incumbrancers) from the operation of a judgment" affecting the land in dispute.

[15] An instruction was given to the jury with respect to the testimony of witnesses on value, concluding as follows: "and you may, in your discretion, reject the testimony of any witness who has expressed such an opinion if it appears to your satisfaction that such an opinion is not based on such thorough knowledge of all the facts and circumstances relating to the property itself as to enable him or her to express a true opinion as to its market value." This, appellants say, "was in effect an instruction that they could utterly disregard the testimony of any witness they desired" and they urge it as prejudicial error, citing Hirshfeld v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 223 P. 451, and Pearson v. Crabtree, 70 Cal.App. 52, 232 P. 715.

In the case of Los Angeles City High School District v. Schumann, 78 Cal.App. 353, 248 P. 737, 740, an instruction which contained almost identical language was given. On appeal the giving of such instruction was urged as error but the judgment was affirmed. After a petition for rehearing had been denied there was a petition for hearing in the Supreme Court. In denying the petition the Supreme Court withheld its approval of the part of the instruction which was criticized, but added "We do not, however, deem the above portion of the instruction, when read in the light of the other instructions given by the court, to be sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal of the case." In view of this comment the instruction cannot be approved, but we are satisfied that when read with the other instructions in the instant case and in connection with all the evidence in the case touching the question of value, that there was no prejudicial error in the giving of the instruction.

As already indicated by stipulation, fourteen other cases have been consolidated with the instant case. These cases were numbered in the Superior Court 156082, 156083, 156109, 156110, 156111, 156159, 156160, 156505, 156523, 156546, 156583, 156806, 156808 and 156849.

The judgment in the instant case is, and the judgments in the fourteen consolidated cases are, affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 148

SHEETS v. CLEVELAND.

Civ. 13414.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 6, 1942.

1. Elections 🔑305(4)

The time for taking an appeal from a judgment of the superior court annulling an election and declaring a vacancy to exist in a particular office is ten days after entry of judgment. St.1939, p. 267, §§ 8575, 8576; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 939, 1859; Civ.Code, § 3534.

2. Elections 🔑305(4)

Under rule that a specific statutory provision relating to a particular subject will govern in respect to that subject as against a general provision, although the latter standing alone would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provision relates, the time for taking an appeal in case of the annulment of an election is determined by special statute; that is, section 8576. St.1939, p. 267, §§ 8575, 8576; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 939, 1859; Civ.Code, § 3534.

3. Elections 🔑305(4)

Where notice of appeal from superior court's judgment declaring that an election to fill a vacancy in office of trustee of an elementary school district was void and that such office was vacant was filed 37 days after entry of judgment in superior court, the appeal was not taken within time prescribed by law and would be dismissed. St.1939, p. 267, §§ 8575, 8576; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 939, 1859; Civ.Code, § 3534.

4. Appeal and error 🔑356

The filing of a notice of appeal within time allowed by law is "mandatory".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Proceedings by Ruby Sheets against Dan Cleveland. From an order that a vacancy existed in a certain office, defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Beach Vasey, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cleves & Patterson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

This is a motion to dismiss the appeal from an order of the trial court that a vacancy existed in the office of trustee of the Mountain View Elementary School District of Los Angeles County, on the ground that the appeal was not taken within the time prescribed by law, to-wit, within ten days after the entry of judgment by the superior court.

These are the undisputed facts:

August 19, 1941, a judgment was entered by the superior court declaring that an election to fill a vacancy in the office of trustee of the Mountain View Elementary School District of Los Angeles County held June 6, 1941, was null and void and that said office was vacant. September 25, 1941, appellant filed its notice of appeal from the foregoing judgment.

Respondent relies upon this proposition:

The time for taking an appeal from a judgment of the superior court annulling an election and declaring a vacancy to exist in a particular office is ten days after the entry of judgment by the superior court.

[1] This proposition is tenable. Section 8575 of the Elections Code, St. 1939, p. 267, reads in part thus: "Any party aggrieved by the judgment of the court may appeal therefrom to the district court of appeal, as in other cases of appeal thereto from the superior court. * * *"

Were this the only provision on the subject, an aggrieved party would have sixty days after the entry of judgment within which to file a notice of appeal. (Sec. 939, Code Civ.Proc.) However, section 8576 of the Elections Code reads thus: "Whenever an election is annulled or set aside by the judgment of the superior court, and no appeal has been taken within ten days thereafter, the commission, if any has issued, is void and the office vacant."

[2] Therefore, under the established rule that a specific provision relating to a particular subject will govern in respect to that subject as against a general provision, although the latter standing alone would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provision relates, the time for taking an appeal in the case of the annulment of an election is determined by the special statute, namely, section 8576 of the Elections Code. (Sec. 3534, Civ.Code; Kahrs v. County of Los Angeles, 28 Cal.App.2d 46, 49, 82 P.2d 29; sec. 1859, Code Civ.Proc.) Section 8576 of the Elections Code constitutes an exception to the general statute. (Sec. 8575, Elections Code; Sec. 939, Code Civ.Proc.)

[3, 4] In the instant case the notice of appeal was filed thirty-seven days after the entry of judgment in the superior court, which was after the time prescribed by law for the filing of notice of appeal in such cases. It follows that the appeal was not taken within the time prescribed by law and, since the filing of a notice of appeal within the time allowed by law is mandatory in order to confer jurisdiction upon this court (Lancel v. Postlethwaite, 172 Cal. 326, 331, 156 P. 486; Irving v. Sheetz, 26 Cal.App.2d 751, 752, 80 P.2d 502), the appeal must be dismissed.

It is so ordered.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

ESTATE OF Daniel A. KELLY, Deceased. SALVATION ARMY OF AND AT PASADENA (a Religious and Charitable Corporation) et al., Appellants, v. Raymond H. CRAWFORD, as Administrator, etc., et al., Respondents.

L. A. 18333.

Supreme Court of California.

April 14, 1942.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Brown, Bissell & Beery, of Pasadena, and F. Walton Brown, Newby & Newby, and Dee Holder, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles F. Hutchins, of Pasadena, W. W. Wallace, Arch R. Tuthill, and Milo V. Olson, all of Los Angeles, Frank C. Dunham, E. DeYoung Vasse, and S. E. Lambert, all of Pasadena, and C. J. Novotny, of San Diego, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Pursuant to the stipulation on file herein among the parties to the appeal in the above entitled cause the order construing will and for partial distribution appealed from is hereby modified in accordance with said stipulation and as so modified said order is affirmed without costs. Upon the going down of the remittitur the trial court is directed to enter the order as so modified. Also pursuant to said stipulation the remittitur shall issue forthwith.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 234

Ex parte CROWLEY.

Cr. 1800.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 13, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑238

"Reasonable and probable cause" for commitment of an accused means such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion that the person accused is guilty.

> The word "probable" means having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, yet leaves room for doubt.
>
> See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Probable" and "Reasonable and Probable Cause".

2. Criminal law 🔑238

To authorize a committing magistrate to hold a defendant to answer, on ground that there is "reasonable and probable cause" for commitment, facts stated before magistrate must induce a reasonable probability that all acts have been done which constitute offense charged, that crime charged was committed by defendant, and that crime is triable in county where prosecution is pending, and also that crime is not barred by statute of limitations.

3. Criminal law 🔑238

A committing magistrate is not bound by the rule of reasonable doubt, and may hold a defendant to answer though the evidence would not support a verdict of guilty.

Habeas corpus proceeding by Justin M. Crowley.

Writ discharged.

Chester Monette, of Eureka, for petitioner.

Jeremiah R. Scott, Dist. Atty., and Carl L. Christensen, Jr., Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Eureka, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

Petitioner was indicted by the Grand Jury of Humboldt County. The record does not indicate the crime, but we assume it was murder. Thereafter, on motion of petitioner, the indictment was set aside, but the court, under the provisions of sections 997 and 998 of the Penal Code, held him to answer for the crime of manslaughter. He now seeks release through habeas corpus, upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient, and that the facts show justifiable homicide.

[1-3] We have had little or no assistance from The People. Neither they nor petitioner were represented when the cause was called for argument. In their "points and authorities" they merely refer to the transcript, which contains several hundred pages of testimony. However, we have satisfied ourselves that the evidence was sufficient to establish the existence of reasonable and probable cause for the commitment upon the charge of manslaughter. In 7 Cal.Jur., pages 982–983, it is stated:

"The term 'probable' has been defined to mean 'having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, yet leaves room for doubt.' And the term 'reasonable or probable cause' has been defined to mean such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion that the person accused is guilty. In other words, to authorize a committing magistrate to hold a defendant to answer, the facts which are stated before him must induce a reasonable probability that all the acts have been done which constitute the offense charged, that the crime charged was committed by the accused, and is triable in the county where the prosecution is pending, and also that the crime has not become barred by the statute of limitations.

"The committing magistrate is not bound by the rule of reasonable doubt, and may hold a defendant to answer though the evidence before him would not support a verdict of guilty."

The writ is discharged.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 206

In re DURAIND'S ESTATE.

GARDNER et al. v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAV. ASS'N et al.

Civ. 11981.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 10, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇨77(2)

An order admitting a formal will and subsequent modifying instruments to probate as will of decedent was a "final order", where appeal was not taken therefrom. Code Civ. Proc. § 939.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Order".

2. Wills ⇨269

A decedent would be presumed to know that instrument executed by her was a formal will.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨32(1)

The refusal to revoke letters of executor named in will was not error, notwithstanding provision in codicil that cousins should take care of decedent's house and affairs, where decedent intended merely to guard her personal effects until executor should take possession.

4. Wills ⇨206

The admission of an instrument to probate as a "codicil" to formal will instead of as "will" was proper, where instrument did not expressly revoke and was not inconsistent with will and merely purported to make some minor modifications.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Codicil" and "Will".

5. Wills ⇨386

A reasonable construction of provisions of instrument admitted to probate as a codicil to a will by probate court would not be disturbed on appeal.

6. Wills ⇨368

An appeal from order admitting will to probate as codicil and refusing to revoke executor's letters and to appoint persons named in instrument as executrices, did not deprive probate court of jurisdiction to entertain petition for partial distribution. Probate Code, §§ 1000–1003; Code Civ.Proc. § 949.

7. Wills ⇨384

Where instrument admitted to probate as codicil was first construed on subsequent petition for partial distribution, any error in construction was not in excess of probate court's jurisdiction, and was before reviewing court on appeal from decree granting partial distribution. Probate Code, §§ 1000–1003; Code Civ.Proc. § 949.

8. Wills ⇨565(1)

The quoted words in codicil leaving "personal property" to cousins meant "personal effects" and not all property not realty, where words had been so used in decedent's writing which was basis of previous codicil composed by attorney disposing of personal effects.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Personal Effects" and "Personal Property".

9. Wills 🔑423

A decree admitting certain instruments to probate as will of decedent was "in rem" and bound the world, where decree had become final, notwithstanding that if thereafter produced, a later will containing revocatory clause could be admitted to probate. Probate Code, § 510.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "In Rem".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of May Rosalie Duraind, deceased, wherein Rosalie Gardner and another filed a petition to admit an instrument to probate as the will of deceased, opposed by the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association and others. From orders admitting the instrument to probate as a codicil to a will and granting partial distribution of the estate, Rosalie Gardner and another appeal.

Orders affirmed.

O'Connor, Neubarth & Moran and Harold H. Cohn, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Thomas P. O'Brien and W. Urie Walsh, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

On the 27th day of September, 1940, the trial court made an order admitting to probate as the will of the decedent three several instruments which were, omitting signatures and attesting clause, in words and figures as follows:

"Last Will and Testament of May Rosalie Duraind

"I, May Rosalie Duraind, also known as May R. Duraind, being of sound and disposing mind and memory, and not acting under the fraud, duress, menace or undue influence of any person whomsoever, do hereby make, publish and declare this instrument to be my Last Will and Testament in the manner following, that is to say:

"First: I hereby revoke all Wills and Codicils to Wills heretofore at any time made by me.

"Second: I declare that I am a single woman, and that I have never been married; that both of my parents are deceased, and that my sisters and brother are deceased, and that my nearest living relatives are cousins.

"Third: I direct that I be buried in accordance with my situation in life, and that the funeral arrangements are to be handled by Ed Kenny of Gantner, Felder & Kenny. Ed Kenny knows my wishes in this respect, he having recently buried my sister, Honore Therese Duraind. I direct that my Executor, hereinafter named, pay all of my just debts and my funeral expenses as soon as this can lawfully and conveniently be done after my demise.

"Fourth: I give, devise and bequeath unto the Province of the Holy Name, a California corporation, all of my property, whether real, personal or mixed, together with all property over which I have the power of testamentary disposition and the power of appointment, and I direct that said Province of the Holy Name dispose of said property in accordance with the instructions given to said corporation by me.

"Fifth: In the event that for any reason the devise or bequest contained in the preceding paragraph hereof should fail or be declared invalid, with respect to the whole or any part thereof, I then hereby devise and bequeath all of the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, together with all property over which I have the power of appointment and the power of testamentary disposition, to the Very Reverend John Leonard Callahan, O. P., in his individual capacity, absolutely, and free and clear of any trust, express or implied. Should the Very Reverend John Leonard Callahan, O. P., die before this Will becomes operative, I then give, devise and bequeath all of said property to the Reverend William Lewis, O. P.

"Sixth: I make no provision in this, my Last Will and Testament, for any other person, whether claiming to be an heir of mine or entitled to share in my estate, and should any person object to this, my Last Will and Testament, or contest the same, I give to such person so objecting or contesting the sum of one dollar ($1.00) and no more; provided they prove in a Court of law that they are entitled to share in my estate.

"Seventh: I appoint the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association as Executor of this, my Last Will and Testament.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 6th day of September, 1939.

"May Rosalie Duraind.

"San Francisco, California, Oct. 27, 1939.

"I hereby appoint my cousins, Doretta Yoell and Rosalie Gardner, to take charge of my personal property and distribute it according to my instructions.

"May Rosalie Duraind.

"I, May R. Duraind, make this instrument a codicil to my last will and testament.

"I. I give and bequeath my household furniture, bric-a-brac and personal effects to Doretta Yoell and Rosalie Gardner and Gladys Atkinson share and share alike.

"In all other respects my said will is affirmed. Doretta Yoell shall make a proper division of this personal property.

"May Rosalie Duraind.

"Dated October 28, 1939."

[1] Said order dated September 27, 1940, has not been appealed from and has become final. (C.C.P. sec. 939.) Thereafter, on the 6th day of May, the trial court admitted to probate as a codicil of said will a document in words and figures as follows, towit:

"Saturday, Aug. 24, 1940

"I hereby declare my wish, if death should overtake me in the night, that my Cousin Rosa and her daughter Dorothy, take care of my house and affairs. The house has been made over to the Dominican Fathers of St. Dominic's Church, but my personal property I wish to leave to my cousins, Rose & Dorothy, also Gladys and Dottie, etc. Give what they do not want to the Sisters of the Holy Family. My Santa Cruz property can be sold and the money used to establish a burse in Mama's name at St. Dominic's Church. God bless you all.

"Signed, May R. Duraind, or May Rosalie Duraind."

Rosalie Gardner and Dorothy Gardner contend that the trial court should have granted their petition to admit said instrument to probate as the will of said decedent and to revoke the letters of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, hereinafter called the bank, as executor under the order dated September 27, 1940. We think the contention has no merit.

[2] There is no contention that the decedent was incompetent. The instrument dated September 6, 1939, was a formal will. It must be presumed the decedent knew that to be the fact. After that date she never stated directly that she revoked that instrument. By the instruments dated October 27 and October 28, 1939, she modified slightly its dispositive terms, and both of the latter instruments were admitted to probate as parts of her last will and testament. However, on August 24, 1940, she wrote again. As shown above it was admitted as a codicil.

[3] We think the court did not err in refusing to revoke the letters of the bank as executor. Its order dated September 27, 1940, was based on the unequivocal words contained in the instrument dated September 6, 1939. The instrument dated August 24, 1940, did not expressly name any one as executor. Bearing in mind decedent was the mistress of a household, that she was the owner of a very large number of items of furniture, bric-a-brac, jewelry, and household effects; that she had given instructions as to the disposal thereof; that Doretta Yoell and Rosalie Gardner at least knew of those instructions, we think it is quite reasonable to hold that, to carry into effect those said instructions, she wrote in the said instrument the words, "that my Cousin Rosa and her daughter Dorothy take care of my house and affairs." She wanted them to care for her house and to impound and hold safely said personal effects until her executor should take possession. That she feared the items might be injured or purloined appears from the expression "if I should die in the night." What else prompted that expression? As material to the naming of executors what mattered it whether she died during the night or during the day? That she was speaking of guarding her personal effects and not of changing the executor of her will we think is clear and the trial court did not err in refusing to revoke the letters of the bank.

[4, 5] Neither are we of the opinion that the instrument dated August 24, 1940, was a will. The instrument dated September 6, 1939, was a formal will. It, as modified by the instruments dated October 27, 1939, and October 28, 1939, had been adjudged the will of the decedent. The instrument dated August 24, 1940, did not expressly revoke the will as so adjudged nor was it wholly inconsistent therewith. It did not purport to dispose of decedent's real estate. It did purport to make some minor modifications which will later be discussed. It contained references to her real estate and tied into the provisions of the will as so adjudged. Under all of those facts the trial court held that it was a codicil. The court was warranted in so holding. 68 C. J. 412, sec. 2; Cheever v. North, 106 Mich. 390, 64 N.W. 455, 37 L.R.A. 561, 58 Am.St. Rep. 499. Moreover, in so holding the court made a reasonable construction of the provisions of said instrument and that construction may not be disturbed on appeal. In re Estate of Maloney, 27 Cal.App.2d 332, 334, 80 P.2d 998.

The instrument dated August 24, 1940, was admitted to probate as a codicil on May 6, 1941. As noted above an appeal was taken from that order. On June 30, 1941, a decree was made granting a petition for partial distribution. An appeal was taken from that decree also. We pass to a consideration of that appeal.

[6, 7] The appellants contend the court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the petition for partial distribution pending the determination of the appeal from the order refusing to admit the document of August 24, 1940, as the last will and testament of the decedent and refusing to appoint appellants executrices of the last will and testament of the decedent. The jurisdiction to hear a petition for partial distribution is set forth in the Probate Code, sections 1000–1003. The appellants do not claim that the order appealed from was made without a full compliance with said provisions. But their contention is that the perfecting of an appeal from the order dated May 6, 1941, "* * * stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from * * *." (C.C.P., sec. 949.) They cite no decision directly in point. We think none can be found. Because the trial court in its order dated May 6, 1941, called the document dated August 24, 1940, a codicil and refused to call it a will, or because it refused to revoke the letters of the bank and appoint the appellants executrices, did not and should not stay the hands of the probate court to proceed with the administration of said estate. In its order of May 6, 1941, the trial court placed no construction on the instrument dated August 24, 1940. Said instrument was first construed June 30, 1941, at a time when the court had jurisdiction. If it was incorrectly construed that was error within but not in excess of its jurisdiction. Such error, if any, is before us on this appeal. We therefore pass to a consideration thereof.

[8] When on June 30, 1941, the petition for partial distribution came on for hearing, the probate court was called upon to construe the instrument dated August 24, 1940, and determine its dispositive provisions. In doing so that court held that the words "personal property" as therein used meant "personal effects." The appellants earnestly contend such interpretation was too narrow and that the words meant, in effect, all property not real estate. It will be conceded at once that said words sometimes have that meaning. But the question before the probate court was what meaning did the decedent have when she used the words? The answer, we think, is to be found in the record. On September 6, 1939, she executed the formal will leaving to the Province "* * * all of my property, whether real, personal or mixed. * * *" On October 27, 1939, she wrote longhand, "I hereby appoint my cousins Doretta Yoell and Rosalie Gardner to take charge of my personal property and distribute it according to my instructions." (Emphasis ours.) The next day she showed that paper to her attorney and he wrote the instrument dated October 28, 1939, which provides: "I. I give and bequeath my household furniture, bric-a-brac, and personal effects to Doretta Yoell and Rosalie Gardner and Gladys Atkinson share and share alike. In all other respects my said will is affirmed. Doretta Yoell shall make a proper division of this personal property." (Emphasis ours.) Those two papers read together show clearly the meaning of the decedent when she used the words "personal property." Her meaning in the use of the words is made clearer by other facts contained in the record. The decedent was the owner and occupied a dwelling in San Francisco. As shown by the inventory she was possessed of a very large number of items of furniture, bric-a-brac, jewelry, and other belongings. In a gift to the church such articles were hardly appropriate. Said items were clearly the subject of the instrument dated October 28, 1939. Doretta Yoell was designated to make "a proper division" thereof. When writing the instrument dated August 24, 1940, the decedent again used the words "personal property." That they were used in that instrument in the same sense in which they were used in the instrument dated October 27, 1939, appears as follows. Referring to the property the decedent said, "Give what they do not want to the Sisters of the Holy Family." That language used regarding cash, stocks and bonds, would hardly be adopted by an individual who made four wills or codicils in less than a year.

At all times herein mentioned the decedent had four cousins. Each was over the age of twenty-one years. In the instrument dated September 6, 1939, she left all of her property to the Province. She provided that if any one contested her will such person should receive $1. She made no mention of any one of the cousins. However, the appellants claim that the instrument dated August 24, 1940, in effect left them about $18,000 in cash, bonds, stock, etc., or about seventy-five per cent of her entire estate. If the decedent intended to make any such change it is manifest that she would have used clear words evidencing the same.

[9] The several points regarding the validity of the order made May 6, 1941, have been discussed because learned counsel for the parties have presented them. However, the order dated September 27, 1940, ordered the instruments dated respectively September 6, 1939, October 27, 1939 and October 28, 1939, admitted to probate as the will of the decedent. That order had become final. It determined what was the last will and testament of the decedent. It was a decree in rem and bound the world. In re Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 585, 150 P. 989. True it is that if a later will containing a revocatory clause was produced it could be admitted to probate. Prob.Code, sec. 510; In re Estate of Moore, 180 Cal. 570, 182 P. 285. But the record in the cited case shows it involved a subsequent will which in terms revoked prior wills. The instrument dated August 24, 1940, does not purport to do so. At most it was a supplementary testamentary instrument. Counsel cite no statute and no decision in this state which is to the effect that it could be admitted to probate after the order dated September 27, 1940, had become final. In other jurisdictions the rule is a subsequent document under such facts will not be admitted to probate. In re Bronson's Estate, 185 Wash. 536, 55 P.2d 1075, 107 A.L.R. 238 and notes, 249. As the point has not been presented by either party we express no opinion thereon.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 195

SMITH v. RANDALL.

Civ. 13228.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
April 9, 1942.

1. Money received 🔑17(1)

A complaint alleging that within four years last past under written agreement defendant received $3,000 for use and benefit of plaintiff, and that demand had been made upon defendant for payment thereof, but that the same had not been paid, stated a cause of action.

2. Money received 🔑17(1)

A complaint in the form of a common count for money had and received states a cause of action and is not vulnerable either to a general demurrer or a special demurrer on ground of uncertainty or unintelligibility.

3. Pleading 🔑428(4)

An objection to the introduction of any evidence on ground that complaint fails to state cause of action is to be treated as in nature of a general demurrer to the complaint, and rules of law applicable to general demurrer are applicable to an objection to evidence on ground that complaint does not state cause of action.

4. Licenses 🔑18½

An individual who is bona fide owner of securities may dispose of them for his own account when such sale is not made for benefit of the issuer or any underwriter of such security or for promotion of any scheme or enterprise with intent of violating or evading the Corporate Securities Act, without first obtaining a permit from the corporation commissioner. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814, § 2(c)3.

5. Licenses 🔑39

If a vendor sells securities which he owns, which sale is made directly or indirectly for benefit of issuer of security or any underwriter thereof or for direct or indirect promotion of any scheme or enterprise with intent of violating or evading the Corporate Securities Act, the sale is void unless the vendor first obtains a permit from corporation commissioner. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814, § 2(c)3.

6. Licenses 🔑39

In action for money had and received to recover amount paid for corporate stock sold without first obtaining a permit from corporation commissioner to sell stock, evidence sustained finding that defendant did not as bona fide owner sell the stock to plaintiff, but that the sale was in fact of stock of the corporation for purpose of financing a mining venture, and sustained judgment for plaintiff. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3814, § 2(c)3.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

Action for money had and received by William L. Smith against C. C. Randall. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Arthur C. Fisher, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Irvin C. Louis, Mildred Gilmore, and Jessie Torrance, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff after trial before the court without a jury in an action to recover a judgment for money had and received, defendant appeals.

The facts so far as material here are:

Plaintiff filed a complaint reading as follows:

"Plaintiff complains and alleges:

"I

"That plaintiff and defendant are now and were at all times herein mentioned, residents of the County of Los Angeles, State of California.

"II

"That within 4 years last past, at and within the County of Los Angeles, State of California, under a written agreement, the defendant received the sum of Three Thousand ($3,000) Dollars, for the use and benefit of plaintiff. That demand has been made upon defendant for payment thereof but the same has not been paid nor any part thereof.

"WHEREFORE, Plaintiff prays judgment against defendant for the sum of Three Thousand ($3,000) Dollars together with interest at the rate of 7% per annum from the date same became due, and costs of suit and for such other and further relief as may seem proper."

Defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This objection was overruled. The evidence discloses that defendant sold plaintiff 2500 shares of the capital stock of C. B. R. Mines Co., Ltd., a Nevada corporation, without first obtaining a permit from the Commissioner of Corporations of California so to do; and that the sale of said stock was for the purpose of financing the mining operations of the corporation. The transactions were evidenced by the following documents:

(a) "Feb. 9, 1937.

"Received of W. L. Smith $500.00 in full payment for 500 shares of my C. B. R. Mines Co., Ltd. stock, certificate for which will be delivered within ten days from date.

"(Signed) C. C. RANDALL."

(b) "July 27, 1937.

"Received of W. L. Smith $1,600. cash, note for $213. payable on or before ninety days from date, which with $187.16 stood by me on discounting of a certain Trust Deed sold by W. L. Smith, makes payment in full for 2000 shares of my C. B. R. Mines Co. Ltd. stock, certificate for which will be delivered upon return of W. E. Covey, Pres. to Los Angeles.

"C. C. Randall."

It is necessary for us to determine two questions which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim:

First: Did plaintiff's complaint state a cause of action?

[1, 2] This question must be answered in the affirmative. The complaint is in the form of a common count for money had and received. The law is established by an unbroken line of decisions in this state that such a complaint states a cause of action and is not vulnerable either to

1) a general demurrer (Kavanagh v. Wade, 42 Cal.App.2d 92, 98, 108 P.2d 475; Doyle v. McPherson, 36 Cal.App.2d 81, 83, 97 P.2d 249), or

2) a special demurrer on the ground of uncertainty or unintelligibility (Pike v. Zadig, 171 Cal. 273, 276, 152 P. 923.)

[3] It is likewise established that an objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that a complaint fails to state a cause of action is to be treated as in the nature of a general demurrer to the complaint, and the rules of law applicable to a general demurrer are applicable to an objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint does not state a cause of action.

Second: Under the facts disclosed in the instant case was defendant required to obtain a permit from the Corporation Commissioner of California before selling to plaintiff the shares of stock of the C. B. R. Mines Co., Ltd.?

[4, 5] This question must be answered in the affirmative. While it is true that an individual who is a bona fide owner of securities may dispose of his own property for his own account when such sale is not made directly or indirectly for the benefit of the issuer or any underwriter of such security or for the direct or indirect promotion of any scheme or enterprise with the intent of violating or evading any provision of the Corporate Securities Act, without first obtaining a permit from the Commissioner of Corporations (Act 3814, sec. 2(c) 3, vol. 1, Deering's General Laws (1937) 1771; People v. Pace, 73 Cal. App. 548, 551, 238 P. 1089); it is likewise settled that, if a vendor sells securities which he owns, which sale is made directly or indirectly for the benefit of the issuer of the security or any underwriter of the same or for the direct or indirect promotion of any scheme or enterprise with the intent of violating or evading the Corporate Securities Act, such sale is void, unless the vendor first obtains a permit from the Commissioner of Corporations of the State of California (Act 3814, sec. 2(c) 3, supra.)

[6] In the instant case there is ample evidence to sustain a finding that defendant did not as a bona fide owner sell the stock of the C.B.R. Mines Co., Ltd. to plaintiff, but that the sale was in fact of stock of the corporation for the purpose of financing a mining venture.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 191

TORREY v. NELSON, et al.

Civ. 12996.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑842(7)

Where evidence establishes uncontradicted state of facts in favor of one party, a "question of law" is presented for appellate court.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Law".

2. Appeal and error 🔑1015(1)

In absence of uncontradicted state of facts, trial court's ruling on motion for new trial may not be disturbed.

3. Automobiles 🔑245(72)

A pedestrian who, in crossing street in brightly lighted marked crosswalk, first noticed approaching automobile about 200 feet away when pedestrian was in center of street, and who continued to cross at an ordinary gait and continued to watch the automobile which struck pedestrian, was not contributorily negligent as matter of law Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

4. Automobiles 🔑206

A pedestrian who in crossing street at marked crosswalk had right of way over approaching automobile, if exercising due care, could presume that motorist would also exercise due care. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

5. New trial ⚿70

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing street in brightly lighted marked crosswalk, granting new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence to support verdict for defendants was not an abuse of discretion. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement L. Shinn, Judge.

Action by John W. Torrey against Martin Nelson and others to recover for injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck by an automobile. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

George P. Kinkle, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John W. Hill, of Pasadena, and Benjamin Lewis, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

In an action for damages for injuries, sustained by the plaintiff when struck by an automobile, defendants appeal from the order granting plaintiff a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury in favor of defendants. The accident in question occurred while plaintiff was crossing a highway in a marked crosswalk. When plaintiff was about three-quarters of the way across the highway he was struck by defendants' car. It was dark at the time, about 6:20 p.m., but the crossing was brightly lighted. Plaintiff was in the center of the street when he first noticed defendants' car approaching, about 200 feet away. He continued to cross the street at an ordinary gait; but also continued to watch the approaching car. When the car had approached to within 50 or 60 feet of plaintiff it appeared to be traveling faster than plaintiff had at first estimated. Plaintiff thought the driver of the car would slacken its speed and give plaintiff an opportunity to get across the street. The driver appears to have slowed up when the car was 50 or 60 feet from plaintiff; but the car did not stop, and continued on until it struck plaintiff. At the time of the accident plaintiff was wearing dark trousers and a light tan or khaki jacket. Some evidence was introduced as to plaintiff having been intoxicated at the time of the accident, but the plaintiff testified that he had nothing intoxicating to drink that day, and the testimony offered on behalf of defendants is not conclusive on this question.

[1-5] Appellants (defendants) contend that the trial court abused its discretion in granting respondent (plaintiff) a new trial; and that the evidence shows respondent to have been guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. However, appellants concede that if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, and if there is substantial evidence in support of respondent's case and a verdict for respondent would not be against the weight of the evidence, then the order of the trial court should be affirmed. Actually, it is only where the evidence establishes an uncontradicted state of facts in favor of one or the other of the parties that a question of law is presented for the consideration of an appellate court. McCann v. McCann, 20 Cal. App. 567, 129 P. 965. In the absence of such a state of facts the ruling of the trial court on the motion for a new trial may not be disturbed. Cases cited by appellants to show respondent to have been guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law are inapplicable to the facts here presented. The cases cited deal with situations in which the injured party either ignored the approaching vehicle, deliberately stepped in front thereof, or took other similar action in disregard of personal safety. It may not be said as a matter of law that respondent here acted in disregard of his personal safety. Section 560 of the Vehicle Code, St. 1935, p. 188, gave respondent the right of way over defendants' car, and respondent, if exercising due care himself, was entitled to presume that the driver of defendants' car would also exercise due care under the circumstances. The evidence presented would support a verdict in favor of respondent, and the trial court cannot be said to have abused its discretion in granting a new trial. The order is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

ALEXANDER et al. v. STATE PERSONNEL BOARD et al.*

Civ. 13040.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 10, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 8, 1942.

1. Officers 🔑72(1)

Where State Personnel Board made a decision discharging petitioners from positions as employees of the state, and statute then in effect authorized petitioners to apply for a rehearing before Board within 30 days after receiving a copy of decision, and petitioners permitted five months to elapse after receiving copy of decision before a petition for rehearing was filed with Board, the petition was not effectual and perfunctory denial of petition by Board added no vitality to it. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1404, § 173(c).

2. Officers 🔑103

Where an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must be sought from the administrative body and such remedy exhausted before courts will act, and this rule is not a matter of judicial discretion but is a fundamental rule of procedure laid down by courts of last resort, followed under doctrine of "stare decisis", and binding upon all courts.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Stare Decisis".

3. Officers 🔑103

Where an administrative remedy is provided by statute and administrative procedure prescribes a rehearing before administrative body, the rule of "exhaustion of remedies" will apply in order that administrative body may be given an opportunity to correct any errors that it may have made before resort may be had to courts.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Exhaustion of Remedy".

4. Mandamus 🔑169

Where State Personnel Board made a decision discharging petitioners from positions as employees of the state, and statute then in effect authorized petitioners to apply for a rehearing before Board within 30 days after receiving a copy of decision, and petitioners permitted five months to elapse after receiving copy of decision before filing a petition for rehearing with Board, and such petition was not filed until after petitioners had filed a petition in superior court for writ of mandate to review Board's decision, dismissal of latter petition was proper. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1404, § 173(c).

5. Constitutional law 🔑318

Where State Personnel Board made a decision discharging petitioners from positions as employees of the state, and petitioners had not filed a petition for rehearing with Board, as was authorized by statute, before petitioners filed petition in superior court for a writ of mandate to review Board's decision, petitioners could not complain that proceedings before Board deprived petitioners of "due process of law" in that Board admitted testimony contrary to rules of evidence and that there was never any determination by a quorum of Board. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 1404, § 173(c).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

6. Mandamus 🔑13

Where State Personnel Board made a decision discharging petitioners from positions as employees of the State, and statute afforded petitioners opportunity for rehearing before Board, if there was any deficiency in evidence introduced before Board, or any weight to that evidence which was offered but excluded, the Board should have been given opportunity to hear other testimony or to reverse its decision before petitioners applied to courts for relief by mandamus to review Board's decision. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1404, § 173(c).

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Mandamus proceedings by Arthur H. Alexander, and another, against the State Personnel Board of the State of California, and others, to review a decision of the Board discharging petitioners from their positions as employees of the State of California and for other relief. From a judgment of dismissal, petitioners appeal.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 120 P.2d 76.

Holbrook & Tarr and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

---

* Subsequent opinion 137 P.2d 433.

SCOTT, Justice pro tem.

An opinion was filed herein on December 22, 1941. Thereafter a petition for rehearing was granted and the matter set down for oral argument on January 28, 1942. Presiding Justice MOORE and Justice McCOMB having disqualified themselves, the issues were argued before Acting Presiding Justice WOOD and Justices pro tempore SCOTT and STEPHENS. Upon due consideration we are satisfied that the former opinion properly disposes of the appeal.

Petitioners appeal from judgment of dismissal of their fourth amended petition for writ of mandate, entered following order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend. It was sought to review a decision of respondent personnel board discharging petitioners from their positions as employees of the State of California. In the action they also sought an order of reinstatement and back salaries.

The judgment of the trial court must be upheld because petitioners had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies before instituting this action and were not entitled to a writ of mandate.

The chronological record shows the omission which was fatal to petitioners' case:

On July 12, 1938, complaints against petitioners were filed with the state personnel board charging petitioners with incompetency, inefficiency, dishonesty, discourteous treatment of the public, failure of good behavior, wrongful behavior and other acts alleged to be incompatible with and inimical to the public service of the state. Petitioner Alexander had held the position of Petroleum Production Inspector with the State Land Commission. Petitioner Sturzenacker had held the position of Chief of the Division of State Lands, with the same commission.

On August 23, 1938, respondent State Land Commission suspended petitioners from their respective positions, and this order has not been vacated.

On September 26, 1938, hearings on the petitioners' cases were commenced before respondent State Personnel Board.

On April 8, 1939, a copy of the board's findings, conclusions of law and decision adverse to petitioners was mailed to, and two days later was received by, petitioners' counsel.

On April 11, 1939, the decision was entered on the official roster of state employees.

On April 21, 1939, the findings, conclusions and decision were entered in the minutes of the board.

On July 5, 1939, this petition for writ of mandate was filed.

On September 11, 1939, petitioners filed with the board a petition for rehearing in their case. It was denied at a meeting of the board held ten days later.

Petitioners assert that the demurrer to their fourth amended petition for a writ of mandate was sustained upon the sole ground that they had not petitioned for a rehearing by the board before they filed their petition for the writ of mandate.

[1] The State Civil Service Act (Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 1404), in effect during the period under consideration, made provision for filing of charges against state employees and hearings thereon. Section 173, subdivision (c), of the act provides in part: "Rehearing. Within thirty days from and after receipt by him of a copy of the decision rendered by the board in a proceeding under this section, the employee or the appointing power may apply for a rehearing by filing with the board a petition in writing therefor." This petition, on notice to the parties affected, must be granted or denied within sixty days. If it is granted the case is set down for further hearing. Whether the time within which such application for rehearing must be made be calculated from the date of service on petitioners herein of a copy of the board's decision or from the date of entry of the decision in the minutes of the board, it is obvious that more than thirty days, in fact about five months, had elapsed before the petition for rehearing was filed with the board. Not being within the time provided by law, it was not effectual for any purpose and the perfunctory denial by the board added no vitality to it.

[2-4] "Where an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must be sought from the administrative body and this remedy exhausted before the courts will act. * * * It is not a matter of judicial discretion, but is a fundamental rule of procedure laid down by courts of last resort, followed under the doctrine of stare decisis, and binding upon all courts. * * * exhaustion of the administrative remedy is a jurisdictional prerequisite to resort to the courts. * * * where the administrative procedure prescribes a rehearing, the rule of exhaustion of remedies will apply in order that the board may be given an opportunity to correct any errors that it may have made." Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, at pages 292, 293 and 302, 109 P.2d 942, at page 949, 132 A.L.R. 715. This rule is grounded in experience and reason. The instant case illustrates its validity and justice.

[5] Petitioners make complaint concerning the proceedings before the personnel board, and assert that they were of such a nature that they deprived petitioners of their rights without due process of law. It is alleged that by reason of various matters, the essential ones of which are set forth below, "there is not and never has been any determination by respondent board, or a quorum of respondent board, or by any unprejudiced or impartial members of said board upon the merits of the charges" against them. It is alleged that the evidence was taken partly before the entire board of five members, partly before less than five members and partly by having one of its members act as referee and report to the board. Prejudice is charged against one board member. It is claimed that an attempt at hasty and ill-advised action evidenced prejudice on the part of two others. Testimony is alleged to have been admitted contrary to rules of evidence. Hearings are said to have been unduly extended, even requiring attendance on a legal holiday, and counsel for petitioners were hurried beyond reason at their sessions before the referee. It is finally claimed that petitioners were required to argue the case before the whole board prior to the time when the transcript of 3,000 to 4,000 pages and 152 exhibits was completed. It is at once apparent that upon petition for rehearing matters of procedure or evidence affecting the substantial rights of petitioners could have received consideration by the entire membership of the board. At that time it appears they would have had the official transcript of the evidence, and if in any respect it failed to support their decision an opportunity would have been afforded to supplement the testimony or to modify their decision.

[6] Appellants in their brief assert: "There is no question as to the meritoriousness of petitioners' application for judicial relief in this matter." Our attention has not been directed by appellants to any portion of the record in this case in which they allege either (1) that there was not sufficient competent and legally admissible evidence to support a finding by the personnel board that the charges against them were true, or (2) the substance or effect of any defense testimony which would avail against that produced against them and which they were actually precluded by the board from presenting in their own behalf. If there was any such deficiency in the evidence introduced, or any weight to that offered and excluded, the personnel board should have been given an opportunity to call for or permit other testimony or to reverse its decision.

Judgment affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., concurred.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. (concurring in the judgment).

I concur in the judgment, because the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715, leaves no room for doubt that where an administrative remedy is provided by statute this relief must be sought from the administrative body, and that exhaustion of the administrative remedy is a jurisdictional prerequisite to resort to the courts.

It is made clear that such remedy has not been exhausted when the petitioners have not sought a rehearing, even though the statutory provision for rehearing is permissive in form. However, in the case of Gantner & Mattern Co. v. California Employment Commission, 17 Cal.2d 314, 109 P.2d 932, 934, the Supreme Court makes this statement: "The exhaustion of remedial procedure as laid down by the statute is required unless the petitioner can positively state that the commission has declared what its ruling will be in the particular case, and that, petitioner is unable to do." If this is to be regarded as in the nature of an exception to the rule, has not the case been brought within the exception where the facts alleged show that the commission, in the same case and upon the identical situation which would be presented upon petition for rehearing, has so definitely and finally passed upon the question that its action upon a formal petition for rehearing would be obvious? If this is not true, then the exception (if exception it can be called) is practically confined to the rare case in which the petitioner can allege that the commission has declared, in so many words, that if a rehearing is asked for it will be denied. With this in mind it may be of value to briefly review some of the facts here presented.

It must be remembered that the matter comes before us after the trial court had sustained a demurrer to the petition without leave to amend. Therefore, all material allegations of the petition must at this time be taken as true. According to such allegations, defendant Wood, a member of the tribunal established by law to hear the complaints, made the statement, before any hearing had been commenced or a word of evidence presented, that "he had personally investigated the charges against petitioners and each of them, and in his opinion the charges were well founded and petitioners and each of them were guilty of the acts alleged therein." If a judge should make such a statement before beginning a trial he would be instantly disqualified. The question of whether or not Wood was disqualified to act was certainly a matter vitally important to petitioners. In fact—particularly in view of the later action of the board—it may even be questioned whether or not any hearing has been held that complies with the statute (sec. 173(b), State Civil Service Act), which says: "It shall be the duty of the board * * * to consider carefully the evidence submitted in the hearing and to render a decision which in its judgment is just and proper." Morgan v. United States, 298 U.S. 468, 481, 56 S.Ct. 906, 80 L.Ed. 1288; Morgan v. United States, 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 82 L.Ed. 1129. The matter of this disqualification was presented to the entire board and the entire board acted in refusing the protest. Subsequently the board itself, over petitioners' protest, again acted upon the same matter by appointing the alleged objectionable member as sole referee to hear the evidence, thus, from petitioners' standpoint, adding insult to injury. Finally, the entire board, over petitioners' protest and acting solely upon a report of the alleged objectionable referee, decided the case adversely to petitioners, although not a single member of the board excepting such sole referee had heard a word of the testimony offered in behalf of petitioners and could not have read the record of it because at that time the transcript had not been written up.

So far as this vital matter of whether or not Wood should be disqualified is concerned, no new facts and no new problems for determination were presented to the trial court or to this court that had not been presented to and passed upon by the defendant board, not only once but at least three times. Is it sound reasoning to now say that all redress must be denied to petitioners because they did not give the commission an opportunity to pass upon the same matter a fourth time?

I have concurred in the judgment herein solely because as I read the Abelleira and Gantner decisions the rule as there laid down does not permit of the additional step suggested by the above discussion. I cannot refrain from observing, however, that if the exception pointed out in the Gantner decision is to be of any practical value this additional step is unavoidable.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 221

PEOPLE v. STEINBERG.

Cr. 3555.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 10, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1942.

1. Receiving stolen goods 🔑8(3)

Evidence sustained conviction for receiving stolen goods of defendant who admitted receiving the goods but denied any criminal intent and who claimed that testimony implicating him in offense was incredible. Pen. Code, § 496.

2. Receiving stolen goods 🔑5

If defendant received stolen goods for his own personal gain and to deprive the true owner thereof, his subsequent repentance would not prevent conviction for receiving stolen goods. Pen.Code, § 496.

3. Criminal law 🔑254

In a trial before the court, the credibility of witnesses is for the decision of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas L. Ambrose, Judge.

Dave Steinberg was convicted of receiving stolen property, and he appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Wyman G. Reynolds, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, Deputy Atty.Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction on two counts of receiving stolen property after a trial before the court pursuant to an indictment. He bases his appeal upon the alleged insufficiency of the evidence. Upon the trial he admitted having received the goods described in the first count of the indictment but denied any criminal intent Pen.Code, sec. 496, and denied having received the goods described in the second count. The case on appeal turns upon the credibility of witnesses, as it did in the trial court, although, of course, under entirely different rules.

On the night of March 15, 1941, four men entered the storage room of a dealer in lubricating oils and greases and stole a large quantity of oil in quart cans and drums and some cans of grease. The oil was contained in 284 cartons, comprising 6816 quart cans and was of the value of $957.43. All of the men had been drinking heavily on the day of the burglary. Three of them, Boroff, Kirtley, and Wilkinson, were arrested and entered pleas of guilty to burglary and applied for and received probation. While their applications were pending they made statements to the probation officer, and after being granted probation they testified before the grand jury and at the preliminary examination of a fourth man, Roy Long, who also was charged with the burglaries. The three testified against defendant Steinberg and the account they gave of his receipt of the property was substantially as follows: Boroff, who was employed by a sign truck display company and who had known defendant for at least several months, talked with him a day or two before the burglary about disposing of oil and grease, and in reply to a question by the prosecutor as to what defendant said on that subject, he answered, "Well, they asked him if he could use any of it if we got some and he said 'Yes.'" No mention was made in the conversation of the type of oil, the brand or the quantity. About midnight Saturday, March 15, the first load was taken from the storeroom and was immediately delivered by automobile and a truck taken from the oil company's garage to defendant's service station on north Spring Street. The quantity so delivered was of the value of $426.60. When the men reached the service station with the oil and grease defendant was at his home. He came to the service station upon a telephone call from an employee at the station, arriving before the truck was unloaded. The oil and grease were unloaded into a shed on the premises and defendant at that time gave Boroff $50 in cash and said he could use some more oil and grease at his service station on Brooklyn Avenue. The thieves then returned to the storage room of the oil company, stole another load of oil and grease and delivered that in another truck of the oil company to defendant's Brooklyn Avenue station. Defendant was there when it was delivered and stored in a shed on the premises. The cans of oil and grease and some drums of oil delivered at this address made a pile some four feet by five feet by nine feet. The $50 received from defendant Saturday night was divided equally among the four burglars. The following day defendant paid Boroff $100 in cash, which likewise was divided among three or perhaps the four men. On Monday, after an argument over the price of the oil and grease, defendant finally agreed to pay $400 for the two lots delivered and gave Boroff three checks for $50 each, postdated, which Boroff cashed at a cafe. This money was likewise divided. Defendant stopped payment on these checks when the bank opened on Tuesday morning.

[1] This testimony, if it was believed by the trial judge, was sufficient to prove all of the elements of the crime of receiving stolen property. Without explanation of the circumstances pointing toward defendant's guilt there would have been no basis for a theory of innocence. The evidence of defendant's guilt upon the second count, arising out of the second delivery of oil and grease, which was made to the Brooklyn Avenue station, in so far as it rested upon the veracity of the witnesses, was equally as strong as that which related to his guilt upon the first count arising out of the delivery to the Spring Street station. The fact that no stolen property was found at the Brooklyn Avenue address when the police visited the premises on Wednesday following the burglaries did not render incredible the testimony as to its delivery there.

Defendant offered the following explanation: that he had had no conversation with any of the men about purchasing oil or grease; that he was not called to the service station until about 6 o'clock Sunday morning, at which time the oil and grease had all been stored in a shed on the premises. The burglars asked him for money, which he refused to give them, saying that he had none; that he asked them how they came to have the property and Boroff told him that he was working for an oil company which did not have sufficient money to pay his wages and that he had been paid in merchandise. Boroff then got some oil and gas for his car and signed a ticket showing the receipt of the same. On the ticket defendant wrote, "Bill Boroff, 05-V812 Packard, 10 (gallons) Sup (Super Shell) 1.50, 7 quarts G S (Golden Shell) 1.75, (total) 3.25. Recd from Bill 109 cases Hyves, 7 cans Hyves, 2 tires." Below this Boroff signed his name. Defendant testified that the circumstances looked "funny" to him; that he called police headquarters Sunday morning and inquired whether an oil burglary had been committed; that a woman who answered the phone said she would connect him with the burglary detail, whereupon a man answered, told him that he had heard of no oil burglary and that the officers who worked in the north Spring Street district where defendant's service station was located were not on duty Sunday and could not be reached until Monday morning; that on Monday morning he again called the police department and in response to the call two officers came to his north Spring Street station. Defendant in the meantime had had the oil stored in a shed, which he locked. When the officers came they were shown the stolen goods and defendant delivered to them the key to the shed. Defendant gave the officers Boroff's name and the license number of his car. He denied seeing the men on Sunday, on which day they had testified he paid them $100, but admitted having given them the three postdated checks for $50 each on Monday. Boroff was arrested on Tuesday and Kirtley and Wilkinson shortly thereafter. On Tuesday the officers went to defendant's Brooklyn Avenue service station but found none of the stolen goods there. No part of the stolen property other than that delivered to defendant's Spring Street service station was ever recovered. Defendant's account of his call to the police on Monday and his cooperation with them afterwards was fully corroborated. There was no corroboration of his testimony as to the telephone call on Sunday.

Defendant was arrested Tuesday night or Wednesday morning. He was subsequently released without a charge having been filed against him. After Boroff, Wilkinson and Kirtley were sentenced and placed on probation they testified before the grand jury, which returned an indictment against defendant. Boroff testified to having seen defendant in jail following the latter's first arrest and that on that occasion defendant had said to him, "No use of all of us taking the rap. You boys go ahead and say you stored it in my place. I will get a lawyer and see what we can do." Defendant denied having made the statement.

At the time Boroff, Kirtley and Wilkinson were before the court for sentence the court referred the matter of the implication of the fourth man and defendant Steinberg to the grand jury and questioned the other three as follows: "There is no reason why the three of you would not be willing to appear before the Grand Jury and tell the same story that you told the probation officer?" to which the three answered that there was no such reason. Boroff was then sentenced, execution of the sentence was suspended and he was placed on probation. Proceedings against Wilkinson and Kirtley for imposition of sentence were suspended and they were placed on probation.

Appellant has called to our attention many contradictions and discrepancies in the testimony of said three witnesses, consisting of conflicting statements made in their reports to the probation officer, in testimony given at the time of their preliminary examinations and at the preliminary examination of the fourth man, Roy Long, and other statements inconsistent with their testimony upon the trial of defendant. Each of the three men made two different reports to the probation officer, stating in the first reports that the burglary had been committed in the daytime on Sunday morning. In the first reports it was stated that the oil and grease had been taken to a place on north Spring Street and stored in a shed, but defendant or his place of business was not named. In the second reports they implicated defendant as the receiver of the stolen property. Other contradictions consisted of statements and testimony involving the fourth man, Roy Long, and contradictory statements and testimony to the effect that they could not recall whether he participated in the burglaries.

[2, 3] It is earnestly insisted by appellant that the three witnesses who testified against him were so thoroughly impeached that their testimony was shown to be wholly unworthy of belief. It is further argued that the conduct of appellant in reporting the receipt of the property to the authorities and thereafter cooperating with them for the arrest of the offenders conclusively proved that he did not receive the property for his own gain or to prevent the owner thereof from again possessing the same, these being elements of the crime of receiving stolen property as the offense is defined in section 496 of the Penal Code. We do not consider it necessary to review at length the arguments made in support of this contention. It may be conceded that the question whether appellant was innocent or guilty was a difficult one for the trial judge to decide. If the testimony of the defendant was to be believed, the stolen property was brought to his place of business without previous arrangement or knowledge upon his part and he proceeded from the time of its delivery with the purpose of aiding the police in apprehending the thieves and convicting them of their crime. In furtherance of this purpose, according to his explanation, he issued the three $50 checks in order to prevent the removal of the oil before the burglars could be apprehended. If such had been his motives and if he had received the stolen property with no intention of keeping it, he would have been innocent of the crime charged. He was ably represented by counsel at the trial and this defense was thoroughly presented and, as shown by the record, was given thoughtful consideration by the trial judge. However, it was not unreasonable for the trial judge to believe that the stolen property was not taken to defendant's place of business without a prior arrangement having been made for its purchase by defendant. The payment of $50 at the time of the receipt of the oil and the further sum of $100 on the following day would have been wholly inconsistent with defendant's protestations of worthy motives and righteous efforts to bring the criminals to justice. The conduct of the defendant in reporting the receipt of the property to the police may well have been the result of an afterthought and of fear on defendant's part that the stolen property might be traced to him. His repentance, if admissions made through fear and for self-protection could be called repentance, would have availed him nothing after he had received the property for personal gain and for the purpose of depriving the true owner thereof. Under the most familiar rules the credibility of the witnesses was for the decision of the trial judge. Defendant, unfortunately for him, where his claimed defense rested almost entirely upon his own credibility, was shown to have suffered two prior convictions of burglary, pursuant to one of which he had been placed on probation and to the other had served a term in the state's prison. We find no ground for holding that the evidence introduced against defendant was without probative force or that it was insufficient in law to establish his guilt under both or either counts of the indictment. The unquestionable contradictions, conflicts, and other weaknesses in the testimony of the three principal witnesses for the People, when considered with the circumstantial evidence relating to defendant's receipt of the stolen property, do not render incredible the testimony which implicated defendant in the criminal acts charged. People v. Dorland, 1934, 2 Cal.2d 235, 243, 40 P.2d 474.

The judgment is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 161

HAGENBURGER et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 12001.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

April 7, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 1, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑121

When a city zoning ordinance establishing a residential district and permitting use of premises for specified purposes, but prohibiting use for other specified purposes is under attack, court need not consider the validity of the ordinance as a whole, but may direct the attack to the reasonableness of the enforcement of the ordinance against the particular property involved.

2. Injunction 🔑85(2)
Municipal corporations 🔑122(2)

A zoning ordinance establishing a residential district and permitting use of lots included therein for specified purposes but prohibiting use for other specified purposes may be assumed to be generally valid for the purposes indicated, but if it is unreasonable, arbitrary and discriminatory as applied to land within the district used as a nursery, from which no sales were made, the owner was entitled to an injunction restraining the operation of the ordinance with respect to those particular parcels.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑601

Where a zoning ordinance establishing a residential district permitted the use of any lot for farming and other specified purposes and made several specific exceptions to such uses not including the raising of plants and flowers, the word "farming" was not used as applying to the cultivation of a large tract of land, but as applying to a cultivation of an indefinite quantity of land, and including gardening or horticulture, fruit growing, raising of vegetables, trees, shrubs, plants and similar products in view of council's knowledge of the area of the lots within the district.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Farming".

4. Injunction 🔑85(2)

Where the use to which property surrounding lots used for a nursery from which no sales were made was such that they were no longer suitable or desirable for residential purposes, the enforcement of a city zoning ordinance establishing a residential district including such property as to the nursery operators would be unreasonable, and hence they were entitled to an injunction restraining its enforcement.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑601

The residential restrictions of a city zoning ordinance establishing a residential district permitting the use of any lot or premises for "farming" did not apply to owners operating a nursery from which no sales were made on lots within such district because such activities consisted of "farming" within the exception.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dudley S. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Carl Hagenburger and others against the City of Los Angeles and others to enjoin the enforcement of a municipal zoning ordinance as it related to property occupied by plaintiffs. From an adverse judgment, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., Frederick von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and William Christensen and Bourke Jones, Deputies City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The plaintiffs instituted this action to restrain the enforcement of a municipal zoning ordinance in so far as it related to the property occupied by them in block 49 of a subdivision in the western section of the city of Los Angeles.

About 1921 they acquired a lot on Santa Monica Boulevard and subsequently acquired three adjoining lots, all in block 50, upon which they established a nursery. This property extended north to Ohio Avenue and was all zoned as business property. In 1931 they leased four lots in block 49 which faced on the south side of Ohio Avenue opposite the nursery, and they acquired these lots by purchase in 1939. These lots extended north to a narrow alley which separated them from property of a local high school, and were zoned as residential property in 1923. At the time of the lease there was a residence on one of the lots and a building occupied and used in the business of a laundry on another. Lot 1 of the same block was used by another in the operation of a dirt and stone hauling business. Upon the school grounds across the narrow alley from the lots in question there were situated an athletic field, bleachers and a school nursery, the latter lying about 100 feet from the parcel of land leased by the respondents. This nursery had been maintained for many years with lath houses, hot houses and other buildings on the school property, and large quantities of trays, pots, containers, dirt and fertilizer lay in plain view from plaintiffs' property. The lots in block 50 upon which the main business of plaintiffs' nursery is conducted have frontages on both Ohio Avenue and Santa Monica Boulevard, both of which are heavily traveled streets within a strictly business territory.

The plaintiffs have for many years carried on a specialized nursery business from the premises located in block 50 with their principal office maintained on Santa Monica Boulevard. The business is chiefly wholesale and is confined to the trade in cactus, succulents and novelty plants. Since their acquisition of the lots in block 49 the plaintiffs have used those lots entirely for the purpose of seeding, planting and raising plants, some of which are grown in flats, some in pots, and an average of about 150,000 a year are grown directly in the ground. Sales are not ordinarily made from these lots, and the plants are not there displayed for sale. Specimens are kept in the main plant on Santa Monica Boulevard from which sales are made. When sales of the plants grown in block 49 are made they are dug out of the ground and taken across Ohio Avenue to the packing shed where they are wrapped and prepared for delivery. This practice had been carried on for about ten years before this proceeding was commenced without serious objection from those in the neighborhood. The lots involved in this proceeding upon which the nursery stock is planted and raised are located in a narrow strip between a well used business section and the rear of the plot of land used by the high school on which are located the athletic field, the athletic bleachers or grandstand, and the school nursery.

It is upon the facts thus presented that the trial court found that the enforcement of the ordinance as to plaintiffs' use of the four lots in block 49 was unreasonable; that plaintiffs had for approximately ten years last past been in possession of "and engaged in farming said lots"; that during said ten years they have improved said property and expended great sums of money thereon and have established a garden thereon, products from which are sold and delivered from the premises on the other side of Ohio Avenue; that the plants raised thereon required constant care, cultivation, attention and irrigation, and that the use which the plaintiffs have made of said lots is that of "farming" within the meaning of the zoning ordinance. Section 12.04 (e) of the zoning ordinance provides in part as follows: "Any lot or premises may be used for farming, the keeping of domestic live stock and the raising of poultry, rabbits, bees, pigeons or other similar enterprises. * * * Nothing herein contained shall be construed as permitting dairies, stockyards, cattle feeding yards, horse corrals or stables except for private use, hog or goat ranches, hog or goat raising establishments or dog or cat breeding establishments."

[1, 2] When a zoning ordinance of this type is under attack it is not necessary for the court to consider the validity of the ordinance as a whole, but it may direct the attack to the reasonableness of the enforcement of the ordinance against the particular property involved. Hence, it may be assumed that this ordinance is generally valid for the purposes intended, but if it is unreasonable, arbitrary and discriminatory as applied to respondents' land, the judgment restraining the operation of the ordinance in respect to those particular parcels should be affirmed. This is the settled rule of decision as recently announced in Reynolds v. Barrett, 12 Cal.2d 244, 83 P.2d 29, where numerous authorities are cited. The trial court based its finding and conclusion that this particular ordinance was unreasonable as to respondents' property upon all the surrounding circumstances, including the showing that because of the use to which the properties surrounding these particular lots were put, they were no longer suitable or desirable for residential purposes, and also because of the fact that the use to which the respondents put these parcels was a farming use within the contemplation of the ordinance.

The question of what constitutes "farming" is one which has been subject to much comment in the decisions. The authorities which define the term are found generally in the cases involving the operation of workmen's compensation acts where "farm labor" is exempted from the operation of the act. Webster defines "farming" as the act or business of cultivating the land; the business of tilling the soil; to produce crops or animals on a farm. He defines a farm as a plot or tract of land devoted to the raising of domestic or other animals; as a chicken farm; a fox farm; a tract of land devoted to agricultural purposes. "Agriculture" he defines as the art or science of cultivating the ground; the art or science of the production of plants and animals useful to man or beast; it includes gardening or horticulture, fruit growing, and storage and marketing. The terms farming, husbandry and tillage are said to be synonymous of or equivalent of the term agriculture. 3 C.J.S., Agriculture, § 1, p. 366. In Ginn v. Forest Nursery Co., 165 Tenn. 9, 52 S.W.2d 141, page 142, where the question was whether an employee in a nursery was a "farm laborer" within the exception of the Workmen's Compensation Act, Code 1932, § 6851 et seq., whose duties were to till the soil, to tend growing plants, shrubs and young trees, to prepare them for market and to deliver them to a shipping point, the court said: "The harvesting and marketing of grain, the transplanting and care of tobacco plants, and the delivery of a bale of cotton from farm to shipping point, are all ordinary incidents of farm labor. The work and labor performed by plaintiff in error differed from that of the ordinary farmer only in the kind and nature of the products of the soil grown and prepared for market. No difference in hours of labor, hazard, or remuneration is pointed out which might induce a Legislature to include the one and exclude the other from the operation of the statute. The labor performed by plaintiff in error and contemplated by his employment was agricultural in the literal sense and meaning of the word, and we think we would not be justified in holding that he was not a 'farm or agricultural laborer.'"

In Hill v. Georgia Casualty Company, Tex.Com.App., 45 S.W.2d 566, 567, the Texas court in defining horticulture said: "The cultivation of a garden or orchard; the science or art of growing fruits, vegetables, and flowers or ornamental plants. Horticulture is a branch of plant production, which is one of the main divisions of agriculture." In affirming the decision the same court held in Guerrero v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 128 Tex. 407, 98 S.W.2d 796, 798, that the Workmen's Compensation Act, Vernon's Ann. Civ.St. art. 8306 et seq., intended the exemption of the "farming and agricultural industry," and that "On the theory that horticulture is one of the main divisions of agriculture, it was held in the Hill case that one who was engaged as a laborer for a nurseryman or in the nursery business was a 'farm laborer' within the meaning of the statute * * *."

In Re Bronxville Nurseries, 258 App. Div. 1019, 17 N.Y.S.2d 95, the employees of a nursery company were held to be farm laborers within the Workmen's Compensation Law, Consol.Laws, c. 67, where it was found that their duties consisted of "the preparation, fertilization, and cultivation of the soil, seeding, budding, grafting, transplanting and related operations, the constant care of the products of the soil which calls for a knowledge of modern scientific methods, and the preparation for market of the finished product, whether it be tree, shrub, bush or plant." In that case it was also pointed out that pending the appeal the statute was amended in 1939 defining the term "farm laborer" to include all the activities above noted.

Appellants rely upon Hein v. Ludwig, 118 Pa.Super. 152, 179 A. 917, 918, where the Pennsylvania court held that workmen employed in the greenhouses of a commercial florist were not farm laborers within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 77 P.S. § 1 et seq. It was therein pointed out that the property of the employer "was devoted to no use other than the operation of her greenhouses, which were artificially heated by means of steam and mechanically watered." The court referred to an early definition of agriculture as contemplating the cultivation of a large tract of land and indicated that the term would also include fruit growing, but it held that since the employee was engaged in the greenhouse alone, and therefore was not engaged in the cultivation or tilling of the soil he could not be deemed an "agricultural worker," and in this connection it emphasized the fact that the plants and flowers were raised under artificial conditions in a commercial plant rather than in the open ground which might be termed a "farm." Appellants also rely upon Chudnov v. Board of Appeals, 113 Conn. 49, 154 A. 161, 162. There the question at issue was whether permission to engage in "farming, truck gardening, nurseries or greenhouses" in any of the residential zones permitted the use of a plot for raising poultry. The court adopted the definition of "farming" found in 25 Corpus Juris, page 674, as "The business of cultivating land, or employing it for purposes of husbandry * * *." It also accepted the expression found in Hein v. Ludwig, supra, that the word "farming" was used to denote a considerable tract of land devoted to the cultivation of crops and produce. Though it was recognized that a farmer who owns a large tract of land under cultivation, a small portion of which is devoted to a dairy or to raising chickens, is nevertheless a farmer, it was held that a small tract devoted exclusively to raising livestock or chickens was not a farm. Story v. Christin, 14 Cal.2d 592, 95 P.2d 925, 125 A.L.R. 1402, is also cited holding that nursery stock does not constitute a crop and does not become part of the realty, but we do not deem this in point here.

[3] The controlling point here is that the ordinance permits the use of "any lot or premises * * * for farming, the keeping of domestic live stock and the raising of poultry, rabbits, etc.," and that it made several specific exceptions to such uses. The use of the lots for the raising of plants and flowers not being included in the exceptions it must be assumed that the city council in adopting this ordinance knew the measurements and area of the separate lots in the territory, and that it did not therefore use the word "farming" as applying to the cultivation of a large tract of land. To the contrary it would seem that the term was used as it is defined in volume 25 Corpus Juris 672, as "an indefinite quantity of land, some of which is cultivated, whether it is large or small, isolated, or made up of many parcels, for a farm may be of any size, of any shape, of any boundaries, and may include less than one lot, or comprise several lots or parts of lots." Though in a restricted sense "farming" has been used to apply to the cultivation of large tracts of land for the production of crops for the use of man and animals, here the city council used the word in its general sense as including gardening or horticulture, fruit growing, the raising of vegetables, trees, shrubs, plants and similar products.

[4, 5] The judgment appealed from is based upon the two findings of fact and the conclusions of law founded thereon that, (1) because of the surrounding circumstances the enforcement of the ordinance as to respondents would be unreasonable under the rule of Reynolds v. Barrett, supra, and (2) that the residential restrictions of the ordinance did not apply to respondents as long as they were engaged in the activities outlined in the findings of fact because such activities consisted of "farming" within the exceptions of the ordinance. We are in accord with both of these conclusions.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 232

LEBAL CO. OF AMERICA, Limited, v. MASTRUP.

Civ. 6685.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 13, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 13, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 12, 1942.

1. Evidence 🔑437

In corporation's action to recover purchase price of stock under written contract of sale showing on its face conformity with requirements of permit to sell stock, the "parol evidence rule" did not preclude defendant from showing that sale was void because it did not conform to requirements of permit.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Parol Evidence Rule".

2. Evidence 🔑437

Parol evidence is competent to show that a written contract, lawful on its face, is illegal or part of an illegal transaction, and the illegality, if serious, need not be pleaded or urged to enable the court to act on it. Code Civ.Proc. § 1856.

3. Evidence ⚿437

The "parol evidence rule" does not preclude the admission of evidence to show that consideration was vicious or illegal.

4. Licenses ⚿39

Where permit authorized corporation to sell stock for cash or for not less than 25 per cent. in cash, balance payable in six equal monthly cash installments, written contract for sale of stock calling for payment in full in cash upon execution was void for nonconformity with permit, where uncontradicted evidence showed that buyer would pay for stock at an uncertain time in future.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Donald Geary, Judge.

Action by Lebal Company of America, Limited, against Louis I. Mastrup to recover the purchase price of stock. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Lounibos & Lounibos, of Petaluma, for appellant.

Geo. B. Keane, of San Francisco, and Murphy & Brownscombe, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

HAWKINS, Justice pro tem.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for the entire purchase price of certain shares of the capital stock of respondent corporation.

Respondent, a California corporation, held a permit from the corporation commissioner to sell this stock for cash or for not less than 25 per cent in cash, the balance payable in six equal monthly cash installments.

A contract in writing for the sale of this stock from respondent to appellant was duly executed by both parties. This contract was in all respects regular upon its face and called for payment in full in cash upon the execution thereof.

However, the evidence shows without contradiction that at no time, either before or after the execution of said contract, was it contemplated by the parties that the sale was to be made for cash, but that appellant would pay for said stock at an uncertain time in the future, when he was able to sell some Transamerica stock owned by him, which at the time of the negotiations was impounded in another transaction. Nothing has been paid on the purchase price.

[1] Appellant contends that the sale was void because it did not conform to the requirements of the permit from the corporation commissioner. Answering this contention, respondent asserts that the written contract of sale shows conformity on its face and that because of the parol evidence rule, the evidence of the actual intentions of the parties should not have been received by the trial court and cannot here be considered.

[2] "Parol evidence is always competent to show that a written contract lawful on its face, is illegal or part of an illegal transaction, and such illegality, if serious, need not be pleaded nor urged, to enable the court to act upon it." 3 Williston on Contracts, sec. 1753, p. 3060; Morey v. Paladini, 187 Cal. 727, 203 P. 760; Endicott v. Rosenthal, 216 Cal. 721, 16 P.2d 673; Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1856.

[3] The parol evidence rule "does not apply so as to preclude the admission of evidence to show that the consideration was vicious or illegal, for if such evidence were excluded the policy of the law in making a deed, contract, or other undertaking founded on an illegal consideration void would be defeated by the parties expressing on the face of the instrument a legal consideration." 22 C.J., p. 1170, sec. 1567.

[4] The contract for the sale of this stock is void for nonconformity with the requirements of the permit of the corporation commissioner. Commercial Building Co. v. Levy, 108 Cal.App. 54, 290 P. 1048; Commercial Building Co. v. Summers, 117 Cal.App. 428, 3 P.2d 1033; Domenigoni v. Imperial Livestock & Mortgage Co., 189 Cal. 467, 209 P. 36; Imperial Livestock & Mortgage Co. v. Tracy, 208 Cal. 205, 281 P. 50.

Since a reversal is to be ordered, it is not necessary to consider other assignments of error made by appellant.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 228

VAN RENNES et al. v. SOUTHERN COUNTIES GAS CO. OF CALIFORNIA.

Civ. 13398.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 13, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 4, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 12, 1942.

1. Trial 🔑45(1)

Where pleadings and proof were based on theory that gas company was negligent in maintaining meter box with hole in the top of box which caused pedestrian to fall and sustain injury, excluding evidence offered for purpose of showing that the pedestrian through her former attorney had represented that pedestrian fell on account of box being higher than surrounding soil was not error.

2. Gas 🔑14½

In action for personal injuries sustained by pedestrian who fell over meter box maintained by defendant gas company, sustaining objection to question asked of plaintiff's expert regarding whether it would require a blow of some force in order to cause break which appeared in photograph of meter box was not error since the question at issue was not the cause of the breaking of the lid.

3. Trial 🔑260(1)

The trial court's refusal to give defendant's requested instructions was not prejudicial error where the subject matter of such instructions was properly given and substantially covered in other instructions.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1032(3), 1064(1), 1067

For a reversal to be ordered on account of errors committed in giving or refusing of instructions to jury, it must affirmatively appear and the court must affirmatively be of opinion that there has been a miscarriage of justice.

5. Appeal and error 🔑977(3, 5)
New trial 🔑6

A motion for new trial is to a great extent addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court and its action either in granting or refusing new trial is conclusive and will not be disturbed in absence of a clear and affirmative showing of a gross, manifest or unmistakable abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Personal injury action by Richard Van Rennes and others against Southern Counties Gas Company of California. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

LeRoy M. Edwards and O. C. Sattinger, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Desimone and S. L. Kurland, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This is the second appeal in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by Katie Van Rennes when she fell over a cement meter box maintained by the Southern Counties Gas Company.

At the conclusion of a jury trial on July 26, 1939, a verdict was returned in favor of plaintiffs Van Rennes. Thereafter, the trial court granted defendant gas company's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, from which judgment the plaintiffs appealed. This court on May 19, 1941, reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and directed the trial court to enter judgment pursuant to the verdict which had theretofore been rendered in favor of plaintiffs. Van Rennes v. Southern Counties Gas Co., 44 Cal.App.2d 880, 113 P.2d 238. Accordingly, judgment on verdict in open court was entered on July 28, 1941, nunc pro tunc as of July 26, 1939.

Defendant's motion for a new trial having been denied on September 5, 1941, it prosecutes this appeal from the aforesaid judgment in favor of plaintiffs, contending that the court committed prejudicial error at the trial of said cause (1) in rejecting certain evidence offered by defendant, and (2) in giving and refusing to give certain instructions. It is also contended that the trial court erred in determining it had no discretion to do other than deny the motion for new trial which was made after filing of the remittitur on the first appeal.

For a statement of facts, the issues drawn by the pleadings and the evidence adduced in support thereof, reference is hereby made in the interest of brevity to the opinion of this court in Van Rennes v. Southern Counties Gas Co., supra.

Apparently in an attempt to establish that respondent Katie Van Rennes, through her former attorney, R. C. Dutton, following the accident had "represented the cause of the accident to be contrary to the contention made by her in her pleadings and proof," appellant made what it now claims was an offer of proof under the following circumstances:

"Mr. Van Rennes, did you have anything to do with hiring an attorney by the name of Dutton, in connection with this litigation?

"Mr. Desimone (attorney for respondents): I object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. * * *

"The Court: What do you expect to show?

"Mr. Sattinger (attorney for appellant): I expect to show by testimony that we can produce that we received a letter from an attorney named Dutton, of Anaheim, which letter sets forth in substance that claim is made against us because of the fact that our meter box, the edges of it, were higher than the surrounding soil; to which I replied denying liability. I expect to show, also, that Mr. Dutton wrote that letter after conferring with Mrs. Van Rennes; and, further, that Mr. Dutton, if produced, would testify that the examination of the box was merely on that basis, the edges being higher than the dirt, and that in the summer of 1938 there was no break in the top of that box. I believe most of those matters are not privileged matters.

"The Court: Were those matters stated in a letter?

"Mr. Sattinger: No, not all those matters. I will be glad to produce the letter. The letter merely makes claim on account of the box being higher than the surrounding soil. There is no claim that there was any hole in the top of the box at the time of the accident. * * *

"The Court: In view of counsel's statement in his offer of proof, the objection is sustained."

Mr. Dutton was later produced as a witness and testified that he was a lawyer, was generally familiar with the situs of the accident, having formerly lived at Buena Park, and that he saw no holes in the meter box when he passed by the place in his automobile. No questions were asked with respect to his employment as an attorney by Katie Van Rennes or her husband, nor was he interrogated as to any of the matters contained in appellant's so-called "offer of proof." No objections were made to any of the questions put to the witness Dutton, and the letter purportedly written by him was not produced. Moreover, respondent Katie Van Rennes was not questioned concerning any of the matters referred to in the said offer of proof.

[1] Whether, instead of the top of the meter box being broken, said box stood up above the soil surrounding it, would not necessarily affect the jury's ultimate conclusion that said meter box was negligently maintained by appellant, hence no error resulted through the ruling of the court rejecting the evidence referred to.

[2] Likewise, no error resulted from the court's ruling sustaining respondents' objection to the question asked of a claimed expert as to whether it would require a blow of some force in order to cause the breaks which appeared in the photographs of the meter box produced at the trial herein. In sustaining said objection, the court properly ruled that the question at issue was not the cause of the breaking of the lid of the meter box, but the condition of the lid on May 20, 1938, the day on which respondent Katie Van Rennes was injured. (Italics added.)

[3, 4] An examination of the instructions given by the trial court reveals that the jury was fully and impartially informed of the law applicable to the facts presented by the evidence. An examination of the proferred instructions of appellant which were refused by the court discloses that the subject matter thereof was properly given and substantially covered in other instructions. The trial court's refusal to give the requested instructions was not prejudicial error. "For a reversal to be ordered on account of errors committed in the giving or refusing of instructions to the jury, it must affirmatively appear, and the court must affirmatively be of the opinion that there has been a miscarriage of justice." Haney v. Takakura, 2 Cal.App.2d 1, 9, 37 P.2d 170, 174.

[5] As to appellant's final contention, there is nothing in the record which shows that the trial court determined it had no discretion to do other than deny the motion for new trial which was made after the decision of this court on the first appeal. It is settled that a motion for a new trial is to a great extent addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court to which the application is made, and that its action, either in granting or refusing a new trial, is conclusive and will not be disturbed, in the absence of a clear and affirmative showing of a gross, manifest or unmistakable abuse of discretion.

For the reasons stated, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 193

TALBOT et al. v. FIRE & POLICE PENSION BOARD OF CITY OF PASADENA et al.

Civ. 10058.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 9, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 8, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1218

A motion to recall a remittitur may be granted in certain unusual circumstances, but action must be taken by the moving party as soon as he learns of the facts on which the motion is made.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1218

Where appellants were informed concerning facts on which their motion to recall remittitur was based, but they delayed more than seven years in asking to have remittitur recalled, motion was denied.

Action by Ida May Talbot and others against the Fire & Police Pension Board of the City of Pasadena and others. From the judgment, plaintiffs appealed, and the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution. On plaintiffs' motion to recall remittitur.

Motion denied.

John N. Metcalf and Elton G. Galusha, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harold P. Huls, City Atty., and Thomas W. LeSage, Deputy City Atty., both of Pasadena, for respondents.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

Appellants have presented a motion to recall the remittitur, which was issued on January 2, 1935. Respondents characterize the matter set forth in the notice of motion as "confused and ambiguous" and charge that many false statements are made therein. Notice of appeal was filed on April 2, 1933, and upon notice duly given to counsel for appellants, the appeal was dismissed on November 2, 1934, for want of prosecution. It appears from the notice of motion now before us that the main reason advanced in support of the motion is based on the fact that appellants were unable to secure a transcript of the notes of the reporter who was on duty at the trial. To this respondents reply that all of the facts were before the court at the time the appeal was dismissed and that counsel for respondents had then offered to assist counsel for appellants in the preparation of the bill of exceptions notwithstanding the absence of the reporter, which offer had not been acted upon by counsel for appellants.

[1, 2] It would be inappropriate to enter into a discussion of the lengthy statements and counter statements concerning the various steps in the litigation, for it is manifest that the motion must be denied because of the great delay on the part of appellants in asking that the remittitur be recalled. A motion to recall a remittitur may be granted in certain unusual circumstances but it is a fundamental rule that the motion must be promptly made. Action must be taken by the moving party as soon as he learns of the facts upon which the motion is based. Gutelius v. General Electric Co., 39 Cal.App.2d 292, 102 P.2d 1108. Although informed concerning the facts upon which the motion is based, appellants have delayed more than seven years in asking to have the remittitur recalled.

The motion is denied.

MOORE, P. J., concurred.

McCOMB, J., deeming himself disqualified, did not participate in the discussion or decision of the foregoing case.

51 Cal.App.2d 180

MORTGAGE GUARANTEE CO. et al. v. SAMPSELL.

Civ. 11907.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1942.

1. Mortgages 🔑375

The statute providing that there can be no deficiency judgment where property is sold under a purchase money mortgage or deed of trust applied only to an attempt to recover a deficiency judgment, and did not either wipe out the debt or prohibit a resort by creditor to a chattel mortgage and assignment of rentals which was given as additional security. Code Civ.Proc. § 580b.

2. Mortgages 🔑199(2)

Where trust deed, which was given along with chattel mortgage, authorized beneficiary to take possession and collect rents and profits in event of default, the assignment of rentals constituted additional primary security with the realty described in the deed of trust and personalty described in the chattel mortgage.

3. Mortgages 🔑375

Where trust deed, which was given along with chattel mortgage, authorized beneficiary to take possession and collect rents and profits in event of default, an action by beneficiary to recover rent pursuant to trust deed was not an action to obtain a money judgment nor was order requiring rentals to be paid a "deficiency judgment", and, hence, a sale of the realty under the trust deed would not prevent creditor from proceeding to foreclose his chattel mortgage and to obtain rentals assigned to him in trust deed for security, even if rentals did not constitute additional security. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 580a, 580b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Deficiency Judgment".

4. Mortgages 🔑375

The sale of mortgaged realty under power given in deed of trust will not bar a subsequent action to recover remainder of the indebtedness. Code Civ.Proc. § 726.

5. Mortgages 🔑199(1)

Generally, unpaid rents accrued prior to taking appropriate steps to subject them, unless conveyed to mortgagee by valid assignment, or expressly pledged by the mortgage, belong to mortgagor.

6. Mortgages 🔑199(2)

Under trust deed authorizing beneficiary to take possession and collect rents and profits in event of default, the date of beneficiary's demand fixed date upon which his right to the rents accrued.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Mortgage Guarantee Company and others against Paul W. Sampsell, as trustee in bankruptcy, etc., to recover possession of property sold by plaintiffs to defendant's bankrupt, and for the rents, issues and profits, wherein R. E. Allen was appointed as receiver. From an order requiring receiver to pay over certain funds, the defendant appeals.

Modified and affirmed.

Loeb & Loeb and Norman Newmark, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fleming & Robbins and C. S. Tinsman, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice pro tem.

On or about October 15, 1937, defendant Villa Riviera, Inc., purchased from plaintiff Mortgage Guarantee Company, a certain apartment house building property, together with all furniture and furnishings therein, for the sum of $1,001,224.50. A down payment of something more than $250,000 was made, partly by exchange of other properties. The balance of $750,000 was evidenced by a promissory note in that amount, secured by a purchase money deed of trust with power of sale on the real property and a purchase money chattel mortgage with power of sale on all personal property. Both the deed of trust and the chattel mortgage provided that the beneficiary at its option should be entitled to rents. The controversy is over the rents. The provision of the deed of trust concerning the rents is as follows:

"In the event of any breach or default by Trustor in the payment of any indebtedness secured hereby, or in the performance of any obligation, covenant, promise or agreement in this Deed of Trust or in any note secured thereby, or in the event of waste as defined herein, the Beneficiary shall be entitled, at its option, without notice, either by itself or by a receiver to be appointed by a Court therefor, and without regard to the adequacy of any security for the indebtedness secured hereby, to enter upon and take possession of the property conveyed hereby, or any part thereof, exclude Trustor and all persons claiming under him, and do and perform any acts which the Trustor is obligated hereunder to do or perform, in such manner and to such extent as may be necessary or proper to conserve the value of said property and protect the security of this Deed of Trust, and collect and receive the rents, issues and profits thereof and apply the same, less costs of operation and collection, including reasonable attorney's fees, upon the indebtedness secured by this Deed of Trust, said rents, issues and profits being hereby assigned to the Beneficiary as further security for the payment of all indebtedness secured hereby." (Italics ours.)

The promissory note was transferred by respondent Mortgage Guarantee Company to respondent Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee or depositary. For the purposes of this appeal both respondents will be treated as a single unit.

On April 22, 1939, Villa Riviera, Inc., defaulted in the payment of an installment of principal under the terms of the note, and in the payment of certain taxes. As a result, respondent elected to declare the entire balance under the note due and payable. On May 23, 1940, respondent made demand upon Villa Riviera, Inc., to deliver possession of all the real and personal property and for all rentals due or to become due for the use and occupancy of said premises. The demand having been refused, respondents on May 29, 1940, brought this action for possession of the property and for the rents, issues and profits. That same day a receiver was appointed ex parte. Thereafter the receiver collected all the rents, issues and profits from the apartment house until pursuant to the stipulation of the parties on October 9, 1940, the court ordered the receiver to deliver possession of the real and personal property to the respondent. None of the moneys received by the receiver have ever been turned over to the beneficiary. On December 12, 1940, the receiver filed his report and account showing the amount of money he had on hand, and asked the court for instructions as to whom to pay this money.

In the meantime and on September 24, 1940, pursuant to the power of sale in the deed of trust, respondents caused the real property to be sold and bought it in as depositary and trustee for the sum of $610,000. On November 22, 1940, Villa Riviera, Inc., was adjudicated a bankrupt and appellant was thereafter appointed and qualified as trustee of its estate. On December 9, 1940, the chattel mortgage was foreclosed, through exercise of the power of sale contained therein. The respondent as trustee and depositary bought in the personal property at $90,000. The total indebtedness due under the note and the instruments securing it was $742,410.88. After deducting the $610,000 paid for the real property and the $90,000 paid for the personal property there remained a deficiency of $43,790.16.

The dispute here is whether the moneys in the hands of the receiver should be paid by him to respondents to apply upon that balance due, or should be paid to the appellant trustee in bankruptcy.

It is the appellant's contention that the exercise of the power of sale under a purchase money deed of trust terminates the right of the beneficiary to the rents collected by a receiver pending the sale, even, though the proceeds of the sale were insufficient to pay the whole indebtedness.

A second contention of the appellant is that, in any event, where the right of collection and possession is granted in such a deed of trust and chattel mortgage to the beneficiary or receiver upon default, such right does not include rents accrued, but unpaid, at time of default and demand therefor.

Appellant's first point rests primarily upon his contention that the order of the court instructing the receiver to pay to the beneficiary the rents in his hands, is in effect the obtaining of a deficiency judgment which is barred by the provisions of section 580b, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides:

"580b. Deficiency judgment forbidden in certain cases. No deficiency judgment shall lie in any event after any sale of real property for failure of the purchaser to complete his contract of sale, or under a deed of trust, or mortgage, given to secure payment of the balance of the purchase price of real property."

Appellant contends that the order of the court requiring the referee to pay over the rents to the respondent is a money judgment and therefore, a deficiency judgment. Moreover, appellant contends that section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, precludes the recovery of the rents, because the mortgagee had elected to follow another form of action to recover his debt, namely, a sale under the power of sale in the deed of trust. Section 726 provides:

"There can be but one form of action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property, which action must be in accordance with the provisions of his chapter." And then goes on to prescribe the procedure for the foreclosure of such mortgages by court action.

Since this case was tried in the lower court, and on January 12, 1942, the Supreme Court has answered every contention of appellant on his first point, by its decision in the four consolidated cases cited as Hatch v. Security-First National Bank, 19 Cal.2d 254, 120 P.2d 869. In those cases, the court had under consideration a situation in which an estate had given a deed of trust on real property to secure an indebtedness. Thereafter the heirs of the estate had executed a deed of trust on different real property which belonged to them individually, as additional security for the indebtedness of the estate. As further and additional security for the same indebtedness, the estate also pledged certain personal property owned by the estate. Upon default, the deed of trust upon the estate real property was first foreclosed under the power of sale contained therein. The proceeds of this sale were applied to the indebtedness but left a large balance due upon the indebtedness. Next a sale of the pledged personal property was had. The proceeds of this sale reduced the indebtedness, but still left considerable of a balance. Finally, the deed of trust upon the individually owned property of the heirs was foreclosed under its power of sale, and the proceeds of such sale likewise applied upon the debt. Thereafter, suits were brought upon behalf of the estate and the individuals to quiet title to the estate pledged personal property and the real property owned and pledged by the individual heirs. In those cases, it was contended that where a creditor holds a mortgage or deed of trust as security for an obligation and resorts to that security, either by judicial foreclosure or by power of sale, he may take no further steps to collect his debt unless he proceeds within three months under sections 580a, 725a or 726, Code of Civil Procedure, to establish the existence of an actual deficiency in the amount realized from the original security. The court there held that these sections impose no such requirement where the creditor merely seeks to realize upon additional security held by him and makes no attempt to secure a personal judgment for the unpaid balance. The court thoroughly reviews the cases in California and points out that it has long been held that this type of legislation is a limitation solely upon the creditor's right to obtain a personal judgment for a deficiency against his creditor, and that the words "money judgment" used in section 580a refers only to a judgment in an action to obtain a deficiency judgment. The court also points out (page 254 of 19 Cal.2d 120 P.2d 869), that cases from other jurisdictions which establish a different rule, cited by the plaintiffs there (and which have been relied upon by the appellant here), do not apply for the reason that the statutes in the other jurisdictions are fundamentally different from those of this state. For example, the New York statute provides that in the event of the failure of the mortgagee to move for a deficiency judgment within a certain length of time and in a certain manner "the proceeds of the sale regardless of amount shall be deemed to be in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt * * *." Civil Practice Act, § 1083-a. Therefore, in that state, failure to request a deficiency judgment at the proper time is tantamount to conceding that the mortgage debt has been paid in full by the proceeds of the foreclosure sale. But our statutes do not even purport to wipe out the debt, but only to apply in the contingency that a deficiency judgment is sought.

[1] The Hatch case was considering section 580a which applies to a non-purchase mortgage or deed of trust, and which in effect prohibits a deficiency judgment until it is shown in the manner and within the time allowed by that section, that the price for which the property was sold was its fair market value. Section 580b, which is the section upon which appellant relies in this case, states, in effect, that there can be no deficiency judgment at all where property is sold under a purchase money mortgage or deed of trust. In other words, for a purchase money mortgage or deed of trust the security alone can be looked to for recovery of the debt. But the decision in the Hatch case that section 580a applies only to an attempt to recover a deficiency judgment and does not either wipe out the debt or prohibit a resort to any other or additional security, answers equally the contention of appellant that under section 580a a sale of the property either wipes out the indebtedness or prevents the creditor from foreclosing upon other security or from obtaining any type of judgment other than one for a deficiency. As said in the Hatch case (page 262 of 19 Cal.2d, page 874 of 120 P.2d), "The statute [580a there, but equally applicable to 580b here] * * * does not provide that failure to sue thereunder for a deficiency judgment is to be deemed a concession that the principal obligation has been fully satisfied." Therefore, there is nothing to prevent the creditor from proceeding to foreclose upon any additional security which he may have, which in the Hatch case, was a pledge of personal property by the estate and a deed of trust upon additional property of the heirs, and which in the case at bar was a chattel mortgage and the assignment of rentals.

[2, 3] There can be no question but that the assignment of rentals in the deed of trust constituted additional primary security with the real property described in the deed of trust and the personal property described in the chattel mortgage. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. v. Monson, 11 Cal.2d 621, 81 P.2d 944. But even if these rentals did not constitute additional security, the action brought for them was not an action to obtain the money judgment mentioned in section 580a, nor was the order of the court requiring them to be paid to the respondent a deficiency judgment in the sense in which it is used in section 580b. Therefore, in no event would the sale under the deed of trust of the real property therein described, prevent the creditor from proceeding to foreclose his chattel mortgage and to obtain the rentals which in the deed of trust were assigned to him for security.

[4] Appellant's contention that section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that there can be but one form of action for the recovery of any debt or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property, prevents the creditor from proceeding to obtain the rentals in this case, is answered also by the Hatch case, page 258 of 19 Cal.2d, page 872 of 120 P.2d, "Since there was no judicial foreclosure in the present cases, these provisions of the statute [referring to sec. 726] have no direct application." To the same effect, Ramsey v. Furlott, 14 Cal.App.2d 145, at page 147, 57 P.2d 1007, at page 1008, "It is well settled that such a sale, under the powers given by a deed of trust, will not bar a subsequent action to recover the remainder of the indebtedness." Also, Merced Secur. Sav. Bank v. Casaccia, 103 Cal. 641, 37 P. 648; Bank of California v. McCoy, 23 Cal. App.2d 192, 72 P.2d 923.

The determination that the sale of the real property under the deed of trust does not wipe out the indebtedness nor prevent the creditor from proceeding to recover upon any other security, makes it unnecessary to consider a point raised by the appellant to the effect that the court should determine the amount of the deficiency actually attributable to the unpaid purchase price of the personalty.

The next contention of appellant is, that the respondent is not entitled to those rentals collected by the referee after his appointment but actually accrued prior to his appointment. When the receiver took charge there was an accumulation of accounts receivable being rentals due from persons occupying the premises. During his administration the receiver collected these accounts. As pointed out hereinbefore, the deed of trust provided that in the event of default the trustor was entitled, either by itself or by a receiver to be appointed by the court, to enter upon and take possession of the property and to collect and receive the rents, issues and profits thereof, "said rents, issues and profits being hereby assigned to the beneficiary as further security. * * *" Appellant contends that this only can refer to rents, issues and profits thereafter accruing and not to those already accrued.

Respondent contends that the language is broad enough to include both.

[5] The general rule on the question of who is entitled to rents of mortgaged real property is set forth in 41 Corpus Juris, page 632, "Unpaid rents accrued prior to taking appropriate steps to subject them, unless conveyed to the mortgagee by a valid assignment, or expressly pledged by the mortgage, belong to the mortgagor, but there is authority to the contrary."

The general rule, too, upon the question of whether the pledge in the mortgage of the rents, issues and profits for the security of the mortgaged debt refers to prior accrued rents is set forth In re Clark Realty Co., 7 Cir., 234 F. 576, at page 582, 148 C.C.A. 342, where the court says, "As to the claim of the mortgagees to the rents and profits: The referee held that these rents belonged to the mortgagees from the time when by intervening petitions they claimed them, but denied their right to them prior to the date of the claim. Much of the brief of counsel for the mortgagees is devoted to the proposition that the clause in the mortgages including with the property mortgaged 'all the rents, issues and profits issuing and to issue out of said premises,' is valid. There can be no question as to the validity of this clause. The question is as to its effect. This clause in the mortgage did not give to the mortgagees an absolute right to the rents. Until there was a default and until the mortgagees made some claim or demand for the rents, they belonged to the mortgagor. Until the mortgagee takes some steps to sequester the rents, he is not entitled to them. 'Ordinarily the mortgagor is entitled to rents and profits accrued up to the time that the mortgagee enters, or brings his right of entry or his bill to foreclose, and this right inheres in a trustee in bankruptcy.' [Citing cases.] Under these authorities the decision of the referee and the District Court, giving to the mortgagees the rents from and after the time they made claim for them and denying the rents accruing prior to such claims, was correct."

That the general rule is followed by the California courts is shown in Bank of America, etc., v. Bank of Amador Co., 135 Cal.App. 714, at page 721, 28 P.2d 86, at page 89. "The fact that the rents, issues, and profits of the mortgaged property 'are expressly pledged for the security of the mortgaged debt, with the right in the mortgagee to take possession upon default, the mortgagee is not entitled to the rents and profits until he takes actual possession, or until possession is taken in his behalf by a receiver.' Simpson v. Ferguson, 112 Cal. 180, 40 P. 104, 44 P. 484, 485, 53 Am.St.Rep. 201. Thus, the fact that in the instant case the trust deed purported to include the rents, issues, and profits as security would not avail, unless the trustees were in actual possession at the time of the execution of the chattel mortgage belonging to the plaintiff." To the same effect, Binney v. San Dimas Lemon Ass'n, 81 Cal.App. 213, 253 P. 346; Casey v. Doherty, 116 Cal.App. 42, 2 P.2d 495; Becker v. Munkelt, 27 Cal.App.2d 761, 81 P.2d 1041.

Respondent cites Steinberg v. Evans, 20 Cal.App.2d 124, 66 P.2d 712, as being opposed to this rule. However, an examination of that case shows that the question involved was not between rentals accrued before steps taken upon default and rentals thereafter accruing, but was a question between the holder of the deed of trust and the purchaser of the property from the trustee in bankruptcy the court holding that the sale was made expressly subject to a certain assignment of rents and therefore the purchaser was not entitled to such rents. The case of Associated Co. v. Greenhut, 3 Cir., 66 F.2d 428, cited by respondent, is distinguished from the case at bar and from the California rule. The issue there was whether rents collected between the adjudication in bankruptcy of a mortgagor who had defaulted and the sale under mortgage foreclosure, belong to the trustee of the bankrupt estate or to the mortgagee. The case holds that the assignment of the rents became absolute, effective and enforceable upon the default which admittedly occurred. There was no question there, as here, of rentals which had accrued prior to the default. This case might be authority for the proposition that the time when the mortgagor's right to the rents ends is at the time of default. However, this question has been answered in California by the case of Title Guaranty & Trust Co. v. Monson, supra, where the court (11 Cal.2d page 627, 81 P.2d 944) fixes the date of demand of possession as the date upon which the mortgagee's right to the rents commences.

The case of Carlon v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.2d 17, 38 P.2d 149, likewise relied upon by respondent, does not consider the question involved here. In the Carlon case there was no question raised as to rents accrued prior to the appointment of the receiver, the sole question being the claim of a senior mortgagee to rents collected by a receiver appointed at the request of, and in a suit by, a prior mortgagee. The court held that a prior mortgagee obtaining the appointment of a receiver is entitled to the rents collected by the receiver as against a prior mortgagee who made no application for the appointment of a receiver, even though the prior mortgage contains a provision assigning the rents as further security upon default. The case uses this significant language, page 22 of 2 Cal.2d, page 151 of 38 P.2d, "Had no receivership been applied for, said rents, issues, and profits from the property would have inured to the benefit of the mortgagor and been wholly lost to both mortgagees." New York and a few other jurisdictions appear to have a different rule but the cases hereinbefore mentioned as well as the quoted language from the Carlon case show clearly that California does not follow the New York rule. On principle, too, as the deed of trust provides for the assignment of the rentals only upon default, the rentals accrued prior to such default are the property of the mortgagor, and, as decided in the case of Title Guaranty & Trust Co. v. Monson, supra, default for this purpose is deemed to have occurred as of the date of demand of possession by the mortgagee.

[6] Although conceding in his closing brief that the date of demand for possession and rents, is the date upon which the mortgagees' right to the rental commences, appellant since has written to this court a letter now contending that the date upon which the receiver was appointed should be the proper date for this purpose, stating that, while, as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the date of demand is the correct date, yet as between the mortgagee and the receiver, the latter should be considered as in the same position as a creditor and that a creditor would not be entitled to claim the rents except upon the levy of an execution, and therefore the receiver would not be entitled to the rents until he had been appointed so he could take actual possession. Therefore, contends the appellant, the receiver should surrender the rents accrued prior to his appointment. The decision in the Monson case, supra, fixes the date of demand as the date upon which the mortgagee's right to the rents accrues, so it is immaterial whether thereafter a receiver is appointed or not. The mortgagee is entitled to the rents from that date on.

Since the oral argument in this case, and at the suggestion of the court, a stipulation has been filed setting forth certain facts as to the moneys held by the receiver. From this stipulation, it appears that of the rentals received by the receiver, the sum of $2,502.54 were rentals receivable, due and accrued as of the date of demand, May 23, 1940. In addition, there were outstanding as of the same date and due and accrued, other accounts receivable amounting to the sum of $1,672.20. In view of the fact that, according to the stipulation, the rentals were payable in advance, and these sums had accrued and were due and payable prior to and on May 23, 1940, the appellant should be entitled to these rentals, without deduction or pro rating. By paragraph 4 of the order appealed from the trial court directs the receiver to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $21,661.37, and to assign to the plaintiff the accounts receivable therein described. In accordance with the views herein expressed, it is ordered that this paragraph of the order be modified by directing the receiver to pay to appellant trustee the sum of $2,502.54, and to assign to the appellant trustee $1,672.20 of the accounts receivable. As so modified the order is affirmed. Both sides to bear their own costs on this appeal.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 198

CROUSER et al. v. BOICE et al.

Civ. 12044.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 10, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 8, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑110

Where jury trial is a matter of right, appeal lies from order granting new trial, though action was not tried by a jury, but if action is wholly equitable, and new trial is granted, appeal does not lie. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

2. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)

The question whether order granting new trial should be appealable whether action is at law or in equity is a matter for the Legislature and not for the courts to determine. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

3. Action 🔑46

Legal and equitable issues may be joined in the same complaint.

4. Set-off and counterclaim 🔑5

Legal issues may be brought in by way of counterclaim or cross-complaint, even though the complaint pleads a purely equitable cause of action.

5. Action 🔑66

Where legal and equitable remedies are sought in the same action, each remedy is governed by the law that would apply to it if the other remedy had not been requested.

6. Jury 🔑13(14)

If the plaintiff requests legal relief in an action that is essentially equitable, the parties are entitled to a jury trial on the legal issue.

7. Appeal and error 🔑110

Action for specific performance of contract for sale of realty for certain amount, or, if defendants could not perform contract to recover damages in amount of purchase price of the realty, presented no legal issues, and the parties were not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right on any issue, and hence there could be no appeal from order granting a new trial. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

8. Specific performance 🔑128(1)

In specific performance suit where vendors are unable or refuse to convey realty in accordance with contract, damages are granted, not in the exercise of a legal jurisdiction, but in the exercise of equity jurisdiction of the court.

9. Equity 🔑39(1)

Generally, where equity has taken jurisdiction over a particular controversy, it will proceed to decide the whole issue and award complete relief.

10. Specific performance 🔑128(2)

If specific performance of contract for the sale of realty is impossible because of a failure of the vendor's title to realty, or any other cause, and purchaser is aware of the true condition before and at the time he brings his suit for specific performance, the court, being of necessity obliged to refuse the remedy of specific performance, will not, generally, retain the suit and award compensatory damages.

11. Specific performance 🔑128(2)

If specific performance of a contract for sale of realty is possible at commencement of action by purchaser, and while action is pending, vendor renders his remedy impracticable by conveying the subject matter to a bona fide purchaser for value, court will not compel the purchaser to bring a second action at law, but, having acquired jurisdiction, will do full justice by decreeing a recovery of damages.

12. Specific performance 🔑128(2)

If specific performance of contract for sale of realty was originally possible, but before commencement of suit, vendor makes it impossible by a conveyance to a third person, or if the disability existed at the very time of entering into the contract on account of a defect in vendor's title, or other similar reason, if the purchaser brings suit for specific performance in good faith, without knowledge of existing disability, court, though it cannot grant specific performance, will retain the case, assess purchaser's damages, and decree a pecuniary judgment in place of the purely equitable relief originally demanded.

13. Appeal and error 🔑803

Where order granting a new trial was not appealable, it was effective as granting a new trial. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

14. Appeal and error 🔑790(2)

Where judgment on which execution was predicated had been set aside by a new trial order, so that execution could not be had, appeal from order in regard to execution was dismissible as involving a "moot question".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Moot Question".

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Kurtz Kauffman, Judge pro tem.

Action for specific performance of a contract for the sale of realty by George E. Crouser and another against Peter D. Boice and another. From an order granting defendants a new trial, and from an order recalling an execution theretofore issued, the plaintiffs appeal, and the defendants move to dismiss the appeals.

Appeals dismissed.

John P. Tobin, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Cook & Obegi, Ernest N. Clark, and Charles E. Cook, Jr., all of Van Nuys, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

By this motion defendants seek to have dismissed appeals taken by plaintiffs from an order granting defendants a new trial, and from an order recalling an execution theretofore issued. So far as the appeal from the order granting a new trial is concerned, the motion to dismiss is predicated on the theory that the case is one in equity where a jury trial is not a matter of right, and that under section 963, subdivision 2, Code of Civil Procedure, an appeal from an order granting a new trial is permitted only in law cases where a jury trial is a matter of right. So far as the appeal from the order recalling execution is concerned, the motion to dismiss is predicated on the theory that this appeal is moot by reason of the finality of the order granting the new trial.

[1, 2] The principal question presented is whether the main action was one in equity. Section 963, subsection 2, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that an order granting a new trial is appealable only "where a trial by jury is a matter of right." Where a jury trial is a matter of right, an appeal lies from the order granting a new trial although the action was not in fact tried by a jury. Raben v. Hamilton Diamond Co., Inc., 17 Cal.App.2d 277, 61 P.2d 940. But if the action is wholly equitable, and a new trial is granted, such order is not appealable. Why the legislature has thus seen fit to distinguish between law cases tried by the court and equity cases does not appear. It may well be that, from a standpoint of policy, the order should be appealable whether the action is at law or in equity, but that is a matter for the legislature and not for the courts to determine.

[3-6] Under our system of code pleading it is permissible to join legal and equitable issues in the same complaint, and it is permissible to bring in legal issues by way of counterclaim or cross-complaint even though the complaint pleads a purely equitable cause of action. Where legal and equitable remedies are sought in the same action, each remedy is governed by the law that would apply to it if the other remedy had not been requested. Thus, even though the action is essentially equitable, if the plaintiff requests legal relief, the parties are entitled to a jury trial on the legal issue. Pacific Western Oil Co. v. Bern Oil Co., 13 Cal.2d 60, 87 P.2d 1045, overruling Bettencourt v. Bank of Italy, etc., Ass'n, 216 Cal. 174, 13 P.2d 659; Hughes v. Dunlap, 91 Cal. 385, 27 P. 642; Farrell v. City of Ontario, 39 Cal.App. 351, 178 P. 740. In Farnsworth v. Hunter, 11 Cal.2d 27, 77 P.2d 840, it was held that upon amendment of the pleadings in an equitable action so as to include a legal cause of action for damages, the parties were entitled to a jury trial on the legal issue. Very recently the Supreme Court has held that where the complaint pleads a purely equitable cause of action and the defendant cross-complains for legal relief, the parties are entitled to a jury trial on the legal issue, and that the order granting a new trial in such action is appealable. Connell v. Bowes, 19 Cal.2d 870, 123 P.2d 456; see, also, Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Cal.2d 671, 62 P.2d 358, 117 A.L.R. 1.

It is at once apparent that in the present case the real question presented is whether or not the parties were entitled as of right to a jury trial on any issue presented by the pleadings. If so, although the other issues may all be equitable, so far as § 963, subsection 2, Code of Civil Procedure, is concerned, the order granting the new trial is appealable. But, if the parties were not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right on any issue, the order is not appealable and the appeal must be dismissed.

The complaint is in the usual form of an action for specific performance. It alleges that by written contract dated October 11, 1940, defendants agreed to sell and plaintiffs agreed to buy certain described real property for $1,122.47; that plaintiffs have complied with the agreement but defendants have refused to perform; that the consideration agreed to be paid is just, fair and equitable. In paragraph VIII of the complaint it is alleged that the reasonable value of the property is $1,122.47 "and that if defendants * * * cannot perform the terms of said written agreement for the sale of said property, plaintiffs have sustained damages" in that amount. The prayer of the complaint is for specific performance, but if the defendants "cannot perform and complete the terms of the written agreement herein," the plaintiffs pray that they "recover judgment against them * * * in the sum of $1,- 122.47." The answer denies the basic allegations of the complaint, and, as an affirmative defense, pleads that the contract was intended as a mere memorandum; that both parties knew that at the time the memorandum was made that defendants did not have title to the premises for the reason that they had sold the premises on a conditional sales contract, and that the purchaser thereunder had until October 14, 1940, to pay up such contract; that the purchaser did pay up on said contract; that defendants had no title to sell to plaintiffs.

On these issues the trial court found in favor of plaintiffs. The court found that all the necessary elements of an action for specific performance were present; that the reasonable value of the premises was $1,122.47 "and that if said defendants are unable or refuse to perform, that, and in such event, plaintiffs are entitled to damages in the sum of $1,122.47." In connection with defendants' defense, the court found that at all times here pertinent defendant Peter D. Boice had title to the property; that although Boice had entered into a conditional sales contract in reference thereto, the purchaser at the time plaintiffs' contract was entered into was in default thereunder; that on October 14, 1940, certain "defaults under the land contract were paid * * * and that said payments were made subject to the agreement herein mentioned; that it is not true that the agreement herein mentioned was understood to be a memorandum." In its conclusions of law the trial court provided that "plaintiffs are entitled to specific performance of said agreement and judgment for same and, if defendant Peter D. Boice are [is] unable or refuse to perform said agreement, plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against the defendants Peter D. Boice and Anna V. Boice in the sum of $1,122.47 * * *." By its judgment the trial court provided "that plaintiffs are entitled to specific performance of the agreement executed or if defendants Peter D. Boice and Anna V. Boice refuse or are unable to perform, plaintiffs are entitled to recover damages in the sum of $1,122.47 and that Peter D. Boice and Anna V. Boice are ordered to perform each and every obligation set forth in said agreement * * *."

[7-12] It is apparent from the pleadings, findings, conclusions and the judgment that the plaintiffs pleaded a cause of action for specific performance, that the trial court found plaintiffs had proved a case entitling them to specific performance, and that, by its judgment, the trial court decreed specific performance. The issue of damages was presented not as an alternative to specific performance in the event the plaintiffs were unable to prove a case entitling them to that relief, but was presented only as an alternative in the event that, because of some act of defendants, they were unable or refused to comply with the specific performance decree. In other words, this is not a case where the plaintiffs were granted damages because they failed to prove that they were entitled to specific performance. If it were, it would be obvious that defendants would have been entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right on the legal issue of damages. Thus, for example, where the plaintiffs' proof fails to show that the consideration is fair and equitable, the plaintiffs are not entitled to the equitable relief of specific performance, but the trial court may grant the legal relief of damages, in which event the parties are entitled as of right, upon demand, to a jury trial. Farnsworth v. Hunter, supra. The present case is one where no legal issues at all were presented by the pleadings. The court found that plaintiffs had proved every element of a cause of action for specific performance, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to that equitable relief. Damages were granted only in the event defendants were unable or refused to convey. In such event, the authorities are practically uniform that damages are granted not in the exercise of a legal jurisdiction, but in the exercise of the equity jurisdiction of the court. This principle illustrates one phase of the general rule that equity having taken jurisdiction over a portion of a particular controversy it will proceed to decide the whole issue and to award complete relief. Pomeroy, in volume 1 of his well-known work "Equity Jurisprudence," 4th Ed., § 237, at p. 374, discusses the problem as follows: "Holland v. Anderson, 38 Mo. 55, was a suit by the vendee to cancel a contract for the sale of land, on the ground of the vendor's fraud. A rescission was found to be impossible, because the property had been changed, and the parties could not be restored to their original condition. The general doctrine was stated that 'a court of equity will sometimes give damages, which are generally only recoverable at law, in lieu of equitable relief, when it has obtained jurisdiction on other grounds.' The application of the principle to the relief of damages has frequently occurred in suits for a specific performance. The following rules have been established by American decisions: If through a failure of the vendor's title, or any other cause, a specific performance is really impossible, and the vendee is aware of the true condition of affairs before and at the time he brings his suit, the court, being of necessity obliged to refuse the remedy of specific performance, will not, in general, retain the suit and award compensatory damages, because, as has been said, the court never acquired a jurisdiction over the cause for any purpose: [Citing cases.] A second rule is, that if the remedy of specific performance is possible at the commencement of a suit by the vendee, and while the action is pending the vendor renders this remedy impracticable by conveying the subject-matter to a bona fide purchaser for value, the court will not compel the plaintiff to bring a second action at law, but having acquired jurisdiction, will do full justice by decreeing a recovery of damages: [Citing cases.] The third rule is as follows: If a specific performance was originally possible, but before the commencement of the suit the vendor makes it impossible by a conveyance to a third person; or if the disability existed at the very time of entering into the contract on account of a defect in the vendor's title, or other similar reason,—in either of these cases, if the vendee brings his suit in good faith, without a knowledge of the existing disability, supposing, and having reason to suppose, himself entitled to the equitable remedy of a specific performance, and the impossibility is first disclosed by the defendant's answer or in the course of the hearing, then, although the court cannot grant a specific performance, it will retain the cause, assess the plaintiff's damages, and decree a pecuniary judgment in place of the purely equitable relief originally demanded. This rule is settled by an overwhelming preponderance of American authorities: [Citing many cases.]" (Last emphasis ours.) See, also, 22 Cal.Law Rev. 208, where the principle is discussed and several cases cited; Hupp v. Lawler, 106 Cal.App. 121, 288 P. 801.

We think this principle is determinative of the present case. Plaintiffs pleaded a purely equitable cause of action. So far as the pleadings, findings, conclusions and judgment are concerned, plaintiffs believed they were entitled to such relief when they filed the action. Defendants pleaded that plaintiffs knew defendants did not have title. The court found that defendants in fact had title and had never informed plaintiffs to the contrary. At the very time judgment was entered the trial court must have believed that specific performance was possible, because it granted that relief. It is obvious, therefore, that the award of damages in the event defendants were unable or refused to perform was intended as a substitute for the relief of specific performance. This being so, such award, under fundamental principles, was made in the exercise of the equity jurisdiction of the court, and defendants were not entitled as of right to a jury trial on that issue. It inevitably follows that under § 963, subsection 2, Code of Civil Procedure, the order granting the new trial is not appealable.

Appellants urge that the judgment recites that defendants "stipulated in open court that judgment may be entered for plaintiffs," and point out that the cases hold it is error to grant a new trial following a consent judgment. In the record appears an affidavit of defendants' counsel in which it is admitted that it was stipulated that a judgment for specific performance could be entered, but in which it is vehemently denied that defendants consented to a judgment for damages. This is the main point urged by appellants in their appeal from the order granting the new trial. Whatever the merits of this point may be, it is obvious that since the order granting the new trial is non-appealable, the error, if any, in granting a new trial following a consent judgment, like other error in the exercise of jurisdiction, cannot be reached by an abortive appeal.

[13, 14] So far as the appeal from the order recalling the execution is concerned, it likewise must be dismissed. The order granting the new trial being non-appealable, such order is effective as granting a new trial. The judgment upon which the execution was predicated has been set aside by the new trial order. Obviously, therefore, execution cannot be had, and the appeal from the order in regard to execution is moot and should, for that reason, be dismissed.

For the foregoing reasons, the appeals from the order granting the new trial and from the order recalling the execution are dismissed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concurred.

METROPOLITAN WATER DIST. OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA v. RIVERSIDE COUNTY.*

Civ. 11904.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 8, 1942.

1. Taxation ⚿183

The term "municipal corporation" as used in constitutional amendment under which property of a municipal corporation located outside of the municipal corporation may be subject to taxation is used in its technical sense and means "city". Const. art. 13, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "City" and "Municipal Corporation".

2. Taxation ⚿183

A metropolitan water district organized for purpose of developing, storing and distributing water for domestic and municipal purposes was not a "city" and therefore was not a "municipal corporation" within constitutional amendment under which property of a municipal corporation located outside of the municipality may be subject to taxation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 9129; Const. art. 13, § 1.

◆

Appeals from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

Actions by the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California against the County of Riverside for taxes previously paid under protest. From adverse judgments, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed with instructions.

James H. Howard, Arthur A. Weber, Ray W. Bruce, Charles C. Cooper, Jr., and Donald M. Keith, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Redwine, Dist. Atty., and William O. Mackey, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Riverside, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice pro tem.

Appeals from judgments of the Superior Court of Riverside County in suits brought by the plaintiff district against the defendant county, under the provisions of sections 3804 and 3819 of the Political Code, to recover taxes previously paid under protest.

The Metropolitan Water District of Southern California was organized under the Metropolitan Water District Act, Deering's General Laws, Act 9129, Stats. 1927, p. 694, for the purpose of developing, storing and distributing water for domestic and municipal uses and purposes. In the performance of its functions, it has acquired and devoted to such uses and purposes certain real property situated in the county of Riverside. This property is outside the boundaries of the district and was subject to tax by the county at the time it was acquired by the district. The county has levied and collected taxes upon the property, which the district paid under protest and now seeks to recover General demurrers to plaintiff's complaints were sustained by the trial court and judgments were entered for the defendant.

The question involved is whether or not property of a metropolitan water district, located outside of its boundaries, and which was subject to tax at the time it was acquired by the district, is taxable by the county in which such property is located, under the provisions of section 1, article XIII of the State Constitution. It is virtually agreed between the parties that the determination of this question depends upon whether the Metropolitan Water District is a municipal corporation within the meaning of said constitutional section, as contended by the defendant, or is not such, as contended by the plaintiff.

Section 1, article XIII of the Constitution provides that property "such as may belong to the United States, this State, or to any county, city and county, or municipal corporation within this State shall be exempt from taxation, except such lands and the improvements thereon located outside of the county, city and county or municipal corporation owning the same as were subject to taxation at the time of the acquisition of the same by said county, city and county, or municipal corporation * * *." (Italics ours.) The taxes in question here were imposed upon the assumption that the Metropolitan Water District is a municipal corporation, and having acquired lands in Riverside County which were subject to taxation by the county at the time of their acquisition, comes within the exception above set forth.

---

* Subsequent opinion 134 P.2d 249.

It seems to be conceded that if the Metropolitan Water District is not a municipal corporation within the meaning of this constitutional provision, it is such a state agency as to entitle its property to be exempt from taxation, under that portion of the above constitutional provision which exempts property of the state, and because of what is referred to in Turlock Irr. Dist. v. White, 186 Cal. 183, at page 189, 198 P. 1060, at page 1063, 17 A.L.R. 72, and cases there cited as "the implications in favor of the exemption of public property."

An interpretation of the words "municipal corporation" under this particular constitutional section has been made in two cases. In Turlock Irrigation District v. White, 1921, 186 Cal. 183, 198 P. 1060, 1061, 17 A.L.R. 72, the Supreme Court determined that an irrigation district, while it is a "quasi-municipal corporation" and even a "public corporation for municipal purposes," is not a municipal corporation within the meaning of this constitutional section. The court calls attention to the argument sent out to the voters of the state when the amendment to the Constitution which contains the section in question here was being submitted for vote, and points out that, in that argument, the voters were informed that the amendment was necessary to protect the counties against municipalities of the type of San Francisco and Los Angeles, which were acquiring large areas in the other counties, which areas could not be taxed by the counties in which they were situated unless the exception to exemption from taxation provided in the new section was adopted. And said the court, "It is apparent that the term 'municipal corporation' was thus presented to the people as synonymous with such corporations as Los Angeles and San Francisco; that is to say, as municipal corporations in the strict technical sense." The court further pointed out that the nature of irrigation, swanp land, drainage, levee and reclamation districts has been a matter of judicial investigation and interpretation in a number of California, as well as other cases, and that it had been held that they were public corporations for municipal purposes, but not municipal corporations.

In Laguna Beach County Water District v. Orange County, 1939, 30 Cal.App.2d 740, at page 743, 87 P.2d 46, at page 48, in which case a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court, the court applied this same rule to a county water district saying, "It is thoroughly settled that among such organizations, irrigation districts, drainage districts, utility districts, and other similar organizations, are not municipal corporations, but public agencies exercising governmental functions and that, under the theory that their properties are in effect properties of the state, they are not subject to taxation. Sec. 85, 24 Cal.Jur. 102, and cases cited. It must also be true that districts organized under special legislative enactments cannot be municipalities for their legality has long been recognized (Argyle Dredging Co. v. Chambers, supra, [40 Cal.App. 332, 181 P. 84]) and the Constitution provides (art. 11, sec. 6) that 'corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws * * *.' It is true that none of these districts are identical in manner of organization and powers possessed. Nor are they precisely similar to county water districts. However, the right of eminent domain and the right of taxation is common to many of them, including county water districts. While our courts have not ruled on the precise question before us, there are several comments in cases which constitute expressions of judicial opinion on the nature of county water districts. The Supreme Court, in Coachella Valley Water Dist. v. Stevens, 206 Cal. 400, 274 P. 538, described a county water district as a governmental agency exercising governmental powers. In Morrison v. Smith Bros., Inc., 211 Cal. 36, 293 P. 53, it was said that a county water district was a public corporation that may be called a quasi-municipal corporation. In Galt County Water Dist. v. Evans, 10 Cal.App.2d 116, 51 P.2d 202, 203, county water districts were defined as 'public corporations inferior in power and scope to a municipal corporation'." The decision then continues, 30 Cal. App.2d at page 746, 87 P.2d at page 50, "We have already concluded that a county water district does not fall within the technical definition of a municipal corporation. As the Supreme Court held that the term 'municipal corporation' was used in the 1914 amendment to section 1 of article 13 of the Constitution in that technical sense, and no other, it follows that the property of plaintiff lying outside of its boundaries cannot be taxed under the provisions of that section."

The lower court in this case completely ignored the fact that the term "municipal corporation" as used in the constitutional provision involved here had already been interpreted in the Turlock Irrigation District and Laguna Beach cases, and treated the question practically as one of first impression. Respondent likewise asks the court, in spite of the holding in these two cases, to follow the dissenting opinion of Justice Sloane in the Turlock case. Justice Sloane's decision agreed with the majority that the purpose of the constitutional amendment was to prevent counties and municipalities from going into other counties and taking from their tax rolls property from which such counties were collecting taxes at the time the property was acquired by the foreign county or municipality. But Justice Sloane contended that it is unreasonable to interpret the Constitution in such a manner that extensive irrigation districts could be permitted to do this very thing. Here the respondents argue that it is likewise unreasonable to interpret the Constitution as permitting municipalities to unite in a metropolitan water district and thereby take from the tax rolls of another county property which the Constitution prohibits them from so taking as individual municipalities. Both Justice Sloane, in his dissenting opinion in the Turlock case, and the respondent here, contend that the real purpose of the constitutional amendment was to prevent abuses threatened, and likely to recur, from permitting private lands subject to taxation in one jurisdiction to be taken over for public uses by other communities and by depriving the territory in which the lands are situated of the revenue from this taxation, thus throw part of the burden of such public use upon territory not benefited by it, and that there could be no possible reason or justification for protecting these outside jurisdictions from the invasion of cities in search of water storage and distribution and leaving them exposed to precisely the same invasion by irrigation districts outside their territory, or, as say the respondents, by allowing municipalities which could not do it singly, to join together in a metropolitan district and accomplish the same result.

There is much to be said for this argument and for Justice Sloane's statement that (186 Cal. at page 193, 198 P. at page 1064, 17 A.L.R. 72), "The direct object of the amendment was to protect and conserve the revenues of the invaded territory, and with that object in view it can make no difference whether the public use acquired is by a city or county, or some other public corporation exercising municipal functions." However, this court is bound by the interpretation given in the majority opinion in the Turlock case, and by the decision in the Laguna Beach case.

Respondent attempts to avoid the applicability of the cases above mentioned and many others which hold that districts such as irrigation, reclamation and county water partake of the character of state agencies and are not municipal corporations in the strict or technical sense, by claiming that there is some fundamental difference between a metropolitan water district and these other agencies, and that because of its broad powers it is a municipal corporation even though the others may not be. However, there is no fundamental difference between a county water district, such as was under consideration in the Laguna Beach case, and a metropolitan water district. In re Orosi Public Utility District, 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004, determined that a public utility district is a public agency or quasi-municipal corporation, rather than a municipal corporation, and it would be difficult to classify a metropolitan water district as being in any different category in this respect from a public utility district. In fact in Morrison v. Smith Bros., Inc., 211 Cal. 36, at page 43, 293 P. 53, at page 56, the court, in holding a public utility district to be a quasi-municipal corporation, stated that the Metropolitan Water District Act is closely patterned on the County Water District and Public Utility District Acts, and permits "the creation of a district which, for all practical purposes, is the same as" the public utility district there in question. In Metropolitan Water District v. Whitsett, 215 Cal. 400, at page 407, 10 P.2d 751, it was held that its general objects and purposes were not municipal affairs.

In a case decided prior to the Laguna Beach case, Metropolitan Water District of Southern California v. Superior Court of Riverside County, 1934, 2 Cal.2d 4, 37 P.2d 1041, 1042, an action brought to determine if the superior judges of Riverside County were disqualified to sit in condemnation cases brought by the district in their county, the district alleged in its petition that it was a municipal corporation. The court there distinguished this type of district from such public agencies as irrigation, levee, swamp land and drainage districts, calling petitioner "a public or municipal corporation" and stating that it more closely resembles a municipal corporation than it does a state agency. While it referred to the district as a municipal corporation it really classified it as a quasi-municipal corporation. In that case the disqualification of the judges depended upon the question of whether the metropolitan water district was included in the term "public agency" as used in section 170, Code of Civil Procedure. While generally speaking, the words "public agency" are broad enough to include a water district, or even a municipality, still the court felt that for the purposes of that act, the words when considered with their context "irrigation, reclamation, levee, swamp land or drainage district, or any public agency," referred to public agencies of the type of "irrigation, reclamation, levee, swamp land or drainage districts," rather than public agencies of the type of cities or quasi-municipal corporations.

In the last-mentioned case, the court was not considering the question of actually what type of entity the Metropolitan District of Southern California was, as between a public corporation for municipal purposes or a quasi-municipal corporation on the one hand and a city or town on the other but merely whether the district came within the designation "or any public agency" in that one particular act. It assumed, because the district so alleged, that it was a municipal corporation. It then pointed out that, in any event, for the purposes of the particular act, such a district "more closely resembles a municipal corporation than it does a state agency such as irrigation and reclamation districts" and that because the legislature in the sentence then under construction only referred to irrigation, reclamation, levee, swamp land or drainage districts, it did not intend to embrace by the words "or any public agency" districts of the metropolitan water district type. For the purposes of that section and that case, it didn't make any difference whether the metropolitan water district was a municipal corporation, or a quasi-municipal corporation or a public corporation for municipal purposes. The later Laguna Beach case, having in mind another question entirely, held the view that a county water district which, as we have pointed out, is similar to a metropolitan water district, was more of the type of the irrigation and drainage districts than a municipal corporation, being "public agencies exercising governmental functions and that, under the theory that their properties are in effect properties of the state, they are not subject to taxation." 30 Cal.App.2d at page 743, 87 P.2d at page 48.

[1, 2] There is an apparent conflict in the decisions concerning the character of the districts of the type of the plaintiff and of even the irrigation, reclamation and drainage district type. In some cases they have been held to be of the public or state agency type, in others of the municipal or quasi-municipal type. An examination of the particular act or statute under consideration in the particular case discloses that the conflict is more apparent than real. In each case the court was determining the status of the particular district for the purposes of that particular act or case, rather than as a broad, general description or designation. There are many cases holding that districts of the type of plaintiff are quasi-municipal corporations and have many municipal powers. In the construction of section 1 of article XIII of the Constitution, the courts in the Turlock and Laguna Beach cases could very well have held that the words "municipal corporation" included quasi-municipal corporations or public corporations for municipal purposes. But they didn't do so. They held that in the argument sent to the voters the only type of public bodies discussed other than counties which are expressly mentioned in the section, were cities. Even the term "municipal corporation" appearing in the constitutional amendment was not mentioned in the argument but only the word "city." They then held that insofar as section 1 of article XIII was concerned, the voters had in mind only cities as exclusive of any other type of municipal corporation. Under this holding, it makes no difference whether or not a metropolitan water district is a municipal corporation or only a quasi-municipal corporation or a public corporation with municipal powers. In any event, it is not a city or town, nor is it "synonymous with such corporations as Los Angeles and San Francisco; that is to say, as municipal corporations in the strict technical sense." Turlock Irrigation District v. White, supra, 186 Cal. at page 185, 198 P. at page 1061, 17 A.L.R. 72.

It may be anomalous that for certain purposes, such as liability for torts, qualifications of judges to try condemnation cases, or the consideration of certain statutes, metropolitan water districts are treated in the same category as municipalities (using the word in its technical sense, meaning cities), and yet for the purposes of taxation be placed in some other category. But, by reason of the determination of the question already made by the holding that the electors, in adopting the constitutional amendment, employed the term in a narrow, technical sense which excluded public corporations and quasi-municipal corporations and included only cities, the matter has already been decided.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is instructed to overrule the demurrer of defendant.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 170

KIRKPATRICK v. HARVEY.

Civ. 2658.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
April 7, 1942.

1. Judgment 🔑470

A "judgment", though only an original debt or liability in new form, has finality, and cannot be indirectly attacked, although it can be set aside through some form of direct attack permitted under California law.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judgment".

2. Judgment 🔑485, 489

A judgment sued on cannot be attacked except in accordance with rule governing collateral attack, including general rule that judgment cannot be collaterally attacked unless void on face of record or entered without jurisdiction.

3. Bankruptcy 🔑428

A wife remained personally liable on joint judgment against husband and wife incurred in connection with community property, even if husband's discharge in bankruptcy discharged wife so far as her community interest was concerned. Civ.Code, §§ 167, 171, 171b.

4. Evidence 🔑386(1)

Parol evidence is not admissible to change the legal effect of judgment or the record of it in any material respect.

5. Judgment 🔑518

In action against wife on joint judgment against wife and husband, wife's proffered evidence that judgment was for debt incurred in connection with community property, and that husband's discharge in bankruptcy discharged wife because husband only is liable for such debts, was properly rejected as a "collateral attack" on judgment.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Collateral Attack".

6. Judgment 🔑916

The question whether certain of defendant's property could be subjected to payment of judgment against defendant could not be raised in action on judgment for which defendant was personally liable on the face thereof.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action on a judgment by W. J. Kirkpatrick against Mary A. Harvey. From a judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Louis Ferrari, G. D. Schilling, C. H. White, D. Bianco, and Thomas M. O'Connor, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action upon a judgment. The complaint, which was filed on December 29, 1939, alleged that on November 28, 1934, the plaintiff's assignor recovered judgment against this defendant in the sum of $5,539.57. The answer set up as a separate defense that the judgment sued upon was a joint judgment against this defendant and her husband; that such judgment was recovered in an action upon a promissory note signed by this husband and wife and secured by a deed of trust on real property; that the money was borrowed for the benefit of the community and the trust deed given was upon community property; that the debt evidenced by the note was therefore the debt of the husband and not of this defendant; and that on October 7, 1935, the husband was discharged in a bankruptcy proceeding in which the debt evidenced by the prior judgment was listed and in which all of the community property of these parties and all of the separate property of the husband were listed and inventoried.

At the trial, the court excluded all evidence proffered for the purpose of establishing the facts alleged in this separate defense of the answer. Judgment for the plaintiff followed and the defendant has appealed.

The appellant contends that section 171b of the Civil Code, which was adopted after the debt here in question was created, is but a codification of the law as it previously existed; that under sections 167 and 171 of that code a wife's separate property is not liable for debts incurred in connection with the community property; that the husband only is liable on such debts; that since a wife's separate property may not be subjected to the payment of a debt incurred in connection with the community property it follows that the discharge of the husband in bankruptcy from such an obligation is also a discharge of the wife; and that the proffered evidence would, therefore, have furnished a complete defense in this action.

The appellant relies particularly upon the case of Bimrose v. Matthews, 78 Wash. 32, 138 P. 319, 322, in which the court said: "When the husband was discharged in bankruptcy from the obligation of the contract, it must of necessity follow that the wife was also discharged, because her separate property is not subject to the community debts." That case differs from the one now before us in that it was a direct action upon a liability arising from contract and not an action upon a prior judgment.

The defense here relied upon rests not only on the fact that the husband had been discharged in bankruptcy, but upon proving a number of other facts relating to the original debt and upon the operation of certain statutes of this state affecting the enforcement of the judgment by limiting the kind of property which may be subjected thereto. The real question here is whether all of these matters, taken together, constitute a defense in such an action to renew a judgment.

[1, 2] While a judgment is but the original debt or liability in a new form (Woehrle v. Canclini, 158 Cal. 107, 109 P. 888), it has, under our system, a certain finality and although it may be set aside through some form of direct attack permitted under our law it may not be indirectly attacked. In an action upon a judgment the judgment sued on may not be attacked except in accordance with the rules and principles governing collateral attack. Hill v. City Cab, etc., Co., 79 Cal. 188, 21 P. 728. The general rule is that a judgment may not be collaterally attacked unless it is void upon the face of the record or it has been entered without jurisdiction.

[3-6] The judgment here sued upon has not been satisfied. If it be assumed that the discharge in bankruptcy of her husband has also discharged the appellant, insofar as her community interest is concerned, this is only a partial release or satisfaction and she remains personally liable on the prior judgment so far as shown by the face of this record. Parol evidence is not admissible to change the legal effect of a judgment or the record of it in any material respect. Hartson v. Dill, 151 Cal. 137, 90 P. 530; Helpling v. Helpling, 50 Cal.App. 676, 195 P. 715. There is a difference between the validity of a judgment and whether it can be collected from certain property. Appellant is personally liable on the face of the judgment sued upon, and whether her separate property may be subjected to the judgment goes merely to the manner in which the judgment may be enforced and not to its validity and depends not only upon the operation of certain statutes but upon certain facts which do not appear in the judgment or on the face of the record.

In our opinion, the facts here sought to be established were not admissible and could not constitute a defense to this particular action. The proffered proof amounted to nothing more than a collateral attack upon the judgment sued on and was properly rejected. It may well be that under certain of our statutes the appellant's separate property may not be subjected to the payment of this judgment. This, however, is another question which may be raised at the appropriate time and in the proper manner, but which is not controlling here.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

MARKS, and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 150

BROWN et al. v. CITY OF OAKLAND et al.

Civ. 11759.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 7, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 1, 1942.

1. Schools and school districts ⚷89

School authorities have the duty to enforce or cause to be enforced regulations for supervision of pupils on school grounds.

2. Schools and school districts ⚷89

School authorities are ordinarily not liable for personal injuries sustained by persons other than pupils as result of the condition of school premises, unless by statute the authorities are expressly or impliedly made liable.

3. Schools and school districts ⚷65

The use of school property for recreation and other purposes than school purposes is authorized.

4. Schools and school districts ⚷78, 89

School boards are liable as such in the name of the school district for judgments against the district for injury to persons or property, and may insure against liability for damages. School Code, § 2.990.

5. Schools and school districts ⚷89

If a child puts equipment on school grounds to use not contemplated by those in charge, and equipment is of such nature that a reasonably prudent child would know that equipment was not intended for that purpose, no liability can attach to school authorities for injuries received by child.

6. Schools and school districts ⚷122

Where broad-jumping pit on school ground was of such a nature that it might be used as a sand box by children, it was a fact question in action against school districts and school authorities for personal injuries sustained by child in playing in the pit, whether a reasonably prudent child would use pit for a sand box.

7. Schools and school districts ⚷89

In action against school districts and school authorities for injuries sustained by child while playing in broad-jumping pit on school grounds during baseball game to which public had been invited, if jury found that pit was of such a nature that it might be used as a sand box, invitation to attend game included an invitation to use equipment in close proximity to the ball game, and it was a fact question whether pit was within extent of invitation. School Code, § 6.740 et seq.; § 6.750 et seq.

8. Schools and school districts ⚷121, 122

In action against school districts and school authorities for injuries sustained by child in broad-jumping pit which child was using as a sand box, whether school authorities used ordinary care in maintaining school ground in close proximity to baseball diamond to which public had been invited, was a fact question to be determined without resort to doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur". School Code, § 2.801.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

9. Appeal and error ⚷842(7)

In action against school districts and school authorities for injuries sustained by child in broad-jumping pit which child was using as a sand box, during baseball game on school ground to which the public had been invited, whether evidence supported conclusion that child was injured by a dangerous condition which was obvious, or which should have been observed by a child of her age, was a fact question.

10. Witnesses ⚷406

In action against school districts and school authorities for injuries sustained by child on school ground when cut by broken glass, testimony that on day following accident witness observed and picked up pieces of broken glass near place where accident happened, was not admissible to impeach testimony of school custodian that he had never seen any glass around place where accident occurred.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action for personal injuries by Beverly Brown, a minor, etc., and others against the City of Oakland and others. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment reversed.

Donahue, Richards & Hamlin and A. R. Rowell, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Ralph E. Hoyt, Dist. Atty., Arthur E. Sugden, Deputy Dist. Atty., and Weinmann, Quayle & Berry, all of Oakland, for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

This is a personal injury action. Judgment upon a nonsuit was granted in favor of all of the defendants. The appeal is limited to the judgment as it affects Oakland School District of Alameda County, Oakland High School District of Alameda County, Board of Education of the City of Oakland and William J. Parry.

The complaint alleges four causes of action. The first two are based upon the provisions of section 2.801 of the School Code, the others upon the Public Liability Act, St.1923, p. 675. Causes 1 and 3 pray for damages for an injury to a female minor child, and 2 and 4, for expenses for hospitalization, services of physicians, etc., incurred or to be incurred on behalf of the minor.

Appellants urge that a sufficient case has been proven under section 2.801 of the School Code by showing facts sufficient to charge the school authorities with constructive notice of the dangerous condition of a designated portion of the school ground, and this irrespective of whether or not appellants have shown notice under the Public Liability Act. Upon their theory we will assume for the purpose of the appeal that the causes of action relating to the Public Liability Act become mere surplusage. Meade v. Oakland High School Dist., 212 Cal. 419, 298 P. 987; Freund v. Oakland Bd. of Education, 28 Cal.App.2d 246, 82 P.2d 197.

[1-4] It is the duty of school authorities to enforce or cause to be enforced rules and regulations in the supervision of pupils on school grounds. Underhill v. Alameda E. School Dist., 133 Cal.App. 733, 24 P.2d 849; Bellman v. San Francisco H. S. Dist., 11 Cal.2d 576, 81 P.2d 894; Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 17 Cal.2d 594, 110 P.2d 1044. School authorities are ordinarily not liable for personal injuries sustained by persons other than pupils arising from the condition of school premises, unless by statute they are expressly or impliedly made liable. Krueger v. Board of Education, 310 Mo. 239, 274 S.W. 811, 40 A.L.R. 1091; 24 R.C.L., p. 604, sec. 60. In California, use of school property is expressly authorized for other than school purposes, including that of recreation. (Goodman v. Board of Education, 48 Cal.App.2d 731, 120 P.2d 665), and school boards are liable as such in the name of the district for judgments against the district based upon injury to persons or property (School Code, sec. 2.801; Goodman v. Pasadena City H. S. Dist., 4 Cal.App.2d 65, 40 P.2d 854; Bellman v. San Francisco H. S. Dist. supra) and may insure against liability for damages. (School Code, sec. 2.990.)

In the present case we are confronted with this question: Was the conduct of the minor under the circumstances shown by the evidence negligent, or that of the defendants free from negligence, as matter of law, making proper the judgment of nonsuit, or did it leave these questions of negligence or freedom therefrom as facts to be determined by the jury?

The injured minor was not a pupil at the school on the grounds of which the accident occurred, nor was she injured during school hours. She was upon the premises to view a baseball game. Some time prior to the injury, two sand pits had been installed near the baseball diamond for the athletic use of high school students in "broad jumping." Later, one of the pits was abandoned for such purpose, and part of the sand had been removed. It was in such pit that the injury occurred. The child had strayed away from the immediate presence of those who accompanied her to the game and, as she testified, was playing in the sand pit, "the one with the weeds. * * * The dog came in the sandbox and I put my hand back real fast and I hurt my hand [on] a broken jelly glass * * * in the weeds in the sandbox." The glass or fruit jar was partly covered by the sand.

Prior to the date of the accident visitors at the school grounds had seen children playing in the sand pit, although there is no proof that such fact had actually been called to the attention of the school authorities, or to those who, under their direction, supervised recreational activities under the permissive use granted by the provisions of division 6, part 3, chapters 1 and 2 of the School Code. There is some evidence from which a fact-finding body might conclude that the authorities had received constructive notice that children played in the sand pit, and there is evidence from which an inference could be drawn that foreign matter other than sand was in fact present in the pit, and that a representative of the school district was aware of such fact, the school custodian in charge of the school grounds, employed by the Board of Education of the City of Oakland, testifying that on different occasions he would examine the box, "kick it [the sand] around to see if I can find anything in there and then I take it out."

[5-8] Respondents argue that the school district did not "maintain" a sandbox for children at large to play in. While the primary purpose of the box was not for the pleasure of children at large, under all of the circumstances on this particular afternoon the public was invited on the grounds to witness a ball game. It may be be assumed that parts of the school ground adjacent to the baseball diamond would be used by the spectators. If a child puts equipment to a use not contemplated or intended by those in charge, and the equipment is of such a nature that a reasonably prudent child would know that the equipment was not intended for that purpose, no liability can attach to the school authorities for injuries received while the equipment is put to such unauthorized use. But where, as here, the sand pit was constructed for one purpose—as a broad-jumping pit, but it is of such a nature that it may conceivably be used for another purpose—as a sandbox—then it becomes a question of fact as to whether a reasonably prudent child would put the equipment to the use to which it was put. If the jury finds in favor of the plaintiffs on this issue, the invitation to attend the ball game included an invitation to use the equipment in close proximity thereto. It becomes a question of fact as to whether this equipment was within the extent of the invitation. Whether the sandbox was in close proximity to the portion of the ground used for recreational activities; whether a duty devolved upon the school authorities to use ordinary care in maintaining such portion of the ground as was in close proximity to the baseball diamond; whether defendants should have anticipated that children would play in the box, and whether under all the circumstances the box was adequately inspected, are questions of fact to be determined without resort herein to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

In Young v. Gautier, 28 Cal.App.2d 494, 82 P.2d 959, the accident would not have occurred had the owner and operator of a swimming pool used proper care. In the present case the pit was not specially used as a play box for children. Whether defendants should have anticipated its use by them was a question of fact to be first determined, which prevents the application of the doctrine. The accident here might have been due to several unexplained causes which the defendants could not reasonably have anticipated and for which they would therefore not be responsible. Olson v. Whitthorne & Swan, 203 Cal. 206, 263 P. 518, 58 A.L.R. 129. In the Young case, the responsibility for the maintenance of the pool was definitely fixed; in the present, responsibility for the maintenance of the sand pit is debatable. Hubbert v. Aztec Brewing Co., 26 Cal.App.2d 664, 80 P.2d 185, 1016; Gibson v. County of Mendocino, 16 Cal.2d 80, 105 P.2d 105; Castro v. Sutter Creek U. H. S. Dist., 25 Cal.App.2d 372, 77 P.2d 509. Defendants may be liable for negligence for failure to reasonably anticipate the use of such equipment by children. Anstead v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 203 Cal. 634, 265 P. 487. In Woodman v. Hemet Union H. S. Dist., 136 Cal.App. 544, 29 P.2d 257, relied upon by respondents, school property was used by an employee for his own business in no way connected with the school district, without even constructive notice to the school authorities. The court applied the familiar rule that the employee in the authorized and usual use of property must be acting within the scope of his employment. The facts are so dissimilar from those of the present case as to be of no assistance to respondents.

[9] Whether the evidence would support a conclusion that the minor plaintiff was injured by a dangerous condition which was obvious, or should have been observed by a child of her years, is a question of fact.

[10] One further question requires mention. The school custodian testified that he never happened "to see any cans or glass or rubbish around these sand pits at any time." Plaintiffs sought to impeach this testimony by proof that on the day following the accident another witness had observed and picked up pieces of broken glass within an area of five feet of the sandbox. Technically this would not impeach a statement made by the custodian that he never saw glass, etc., around the sand pit. Based upon the evidence as it appears in the record, the ruling sustaining the objection to the introduction of such evidence was correct.

Bearing in mind the above evidence, and the principles set forth in Slater v. Shell Oil Company, 39 Cal.App.2d 535, 539, 103 P.2d 1043, the judgment should be and is hereby reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 213

SISTROM v. ANDERSON et al.

Civ. 13182.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 10, 1942.

1. Sales 🔑92

Where original contract for sale of turkeys by Arizona turkey raiser to California partnership was to be performed in Arizona, and written agreement of cancellation was executed by both parties in Arizona, Arizona law was controlling in seller's action in California for damages for breach of contract.

2. Sales 🔑92

Under Arizona law, there must be a consideration to extinguish the obligations created by a written contract for sale of personalty.

3. Sales 🔑179(4)

Where contract for sale of turkeys did not impose on seller obligation to provide cooling facilities, but instead by implication placed duty on buyers, and buyer who issued check for first lot of turkeys was conversant with conditions under which first lot of turkeys was killed and dressed, when he issued check, buyers were obligated to pay full contract price for first lot, though it had deteriorated due to inadequate and improper packing facilities of seller's ranch in hot weather.

4. Sales 🔑288(2)

Where there is a right of inspection of goods sold, there is a "waiver" by the buyer of an implied warranty of fitness by accepting the goods.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waiver".

5. Sales 🔑177

Where seller of turkeys did not engage to supply government certificate for turkeys and did not agree to keep dressed turkeys in such condition as would require or warrant issuance of such certificate, buyers were not entitled to refuse to accept delivery of turkeys because of deterioration from the heat and because buyer could not get a government certificate because of deterioration of turkeys.

6. Sales 🔑92

Under Arizona law the uncertainty of the market price of turkeys did not furnish "consideration" for cancellation of contract for sale of turkeys.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Consideration".

7. Sales 🔑92

Where contract for cancellation of contract for sale of turkeys was bilateral and released both seller and buyers with respect to all executory obligations, the mutual promises supplied the necessary "consideration" under Arizona law, notwithstanding that seller did not in reality wish to be relieved from the executory obligations.

8. Sales 🔑92

Where one of the contracting parties is relieved from an executory obligation with no corresponding relief or gain to the other party, a separate and independent consideration is required under Arizona law for contract for cancellation of contract of sale of personalty.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1177(6)

Where the entire case must turn on a single issue of fact, which was not decided by trial court, the District Court of Appeal will ordinarily resubmit the case to the trial court to determine whether such issue of fact exists.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1175(2)

Where case was submitted to the trial court on a written record, District Court of Appeal could decide essential issue of fact without resubmitting the matter to the trial court which had failed to decide that fact issue.

11. Contracts 🔑95(1)

"Duress of goods", "moral duress", and "business compulsion" all stem from and are but an expansion by courts of equity of the old common-law doctrine of "duress" which embraced within its scope only such acts or threats as resulted from fear of life, the loss of a member, and imprisonment.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Business Compulsion", "Duress", "Duress of Goods" and "Moral Duress".

12. False Imprisonment 🔑2
Threats 🔑10
Torts 🔑11

Where an act is accomplished by imprisonment, by threats, or by exhibition of force which apparently could not be restricted, the act is classed under Arizona law as "duress of the person", but where the act consists of a tortious seizure or detention of property from the person entitled to it, and requires some act as a condition for its surrender, the act is classed as "duress of goods" or "duress of property".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Duress of Property" and "Duress of the Person".

13. Contracts 🔑95(1)

Any transaction is "voidable" under Arizona law where the party seeking to avoid the transaction was not bound to enter into it, and was coerced by fear of a wrongful act by the other party to the transaction.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Voidable".

14. Contracts 🔑95(3)

If unlawful threats overcome the will of a person threatened and induce him to do an act which he would not otherwise have done, and which he was not bound to do, "duress" is effectuated under Arizona law and the person threatened may avoid the act.

15. Contracts 🔑95(3)

The threat to refuse to proceed under a contract, or to refuse to pay what is due under the contract or what is otherwise due, is not unlawful under Arizona law, and hence a threat to stand suit is not in the category of unlawful threats.

16. Sales 🔑92

The fact that seller of turkeys acceded to cancellation of contract of sale in order to obtain money due him for turkeys instead of being required to sue buyers for it, did not establish that buyers were guilty under Arizona law of "duress of goods", "moral duress" or "business compulsion", and seller was not entitled to recover for breach of the contract of sale.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Desmond, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract by William Sistrom against L. V. Anderson and others. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

A. Ronald Button, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph A. Ball and Frank C. Charvat, both of Long Beach, for respondents.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for damages for breach of contract, in which the question for decision is whether a written cancellation of the contract sued upon is binding upon the parties to it.

Appellant, who was plaintiff below, for some ten years, has operated a ranch in Arizona where he raises a considerable number of turkeys. During this same period the defendants, as partners, have been engaged in the retail and wholesale meat business at Long Beach. It was the custom of the defendants to purchase in other states, among them Arizona, their annual holiday supply of turkeys. In these transactions the defendants were represented by defendant Anderson, who not only had visited plaintiff's ranch in Arizona and knew plaintiff was an extensive producer of turkeys, but he knew the buildings and facilities which plaintiff had at his ranch for killing and dressing turkeys. Moreover, he was familiar with the temperature conditions which prevailed annually in Arizona during November and December.

By the terms of the contract, which respondents contend was effectually cancelled, plaintiff undertook to sell and deliver to defendants between November 15, 1936, and January 15, 1937, so much of his entire flock of turkeys, stated to number 3,350, then on his Arizona ranch, as might be ready for market in the period mentioned.

On their part the defendants, as buyers, agreed to accept deliveries at the ranch on such dates in the period as the seller should designate by notice to them. There was a proviso that the notice should state the approximate number of turkeys which would be delivered. Moreover, the buyers undertook on the dates designated to grade, pack and pay for the turkeys tendered at certain designated prices per pound, dressed weight, dependent upon their grade in accordance with a standard set forth in the contract. Except for the fact that the contract required payment on a basis of "dressed weight," there was nothing to indicate which party should kill and dress the turkeys and there was no testimony on the point. Moreover, the contract says nothing about the seller's being required to provide any facilities, such as cooling rooms or ice, nor any restrictions on delivery because of any high temperature conditions which might prevail.

It is undisputed that the seller gave timely and proper notice to the buyers that he would be ready to deliver a certain number of turkeys on November 13 and a further number on the next day. While these dates anticipated the first delivery date as set forth in the contract, no objection was made thereto. Moreover, the evidence discloses that one of the defendants—Anderson—was on hand on November 13 and not only accepted delivery on that date of the first lot of turkeys which plaintiff killed and dressed, but graded and packed them at plaintiff's ranch and gave his check to plaintiff for them. It appears, however, that he did not stay on the ranch the next day to accept, grade and pay for the lot of turkeys which were killed and dressed on that day. Instead he returned to the ranch on the following morning, when he observed that the turkeys killed and dressed on the preceding day had deteriorated over night due to a lack of cooling facilities. While the seller, owing to a heat of 84 degrees outside on the previous day, had brought ice into the room where he placed the dressed turkeys so as to reduce the temperature therein to 70 degrees, he did not maintain the temperature at that point or lower after he had dressed the turkeys. As a consequence the dressed turkeys on the morning of the 15th appeared "green," in the language of the trade, and were no longer in prime condition. Before Anderson observed the condition of this second lot he had information from his partner at Long Beach that the first shipment had arrived in a "green" condition. On the morning in question not only did a dispute arise between plaintiff and Anderson as to the various grades Anderson was then assigning to the lot, but Anderson informed the seller that an agent of the government of the United States would not issue a certificate for the lot. The record does not disclose the meaning or import of such a certificate. In the absence of such proof we assume that such a certificate was necessary in order that the dressed turkeys might be shipped in interstate commerce. At all events, it is undisputed that Anderson advised plaintiff that the first lot of turkeys had arrived in Long Beach "green," and that unless plaintiff would accept his check for the second lot on the basis of his grading, and cancel the executory obligations under the contract, he would refuse to accept delivery of the lot and would not pay for them. In addition he threatened to stop payment of the check which had been given for the first lot, which had, as yet, not been collected. While the plaintiff strenuously objected to this proposal, he was faced with the alternative of yielding to it if he wished to have the outstanding check paid and the second lot of turkeys taken off his hands in accordance with the value predicated on the grading made by Anderson. Accordingly, he was induced to cancel, in writing, the executory provisions of the contract in return for having the outstanding check paid, along with the issuance of a check for the second lot.

[1, 2] In view of these facts appellant contends that the contract of rescission was without consideration, in that what respondents agreed to do they were obligated under the contract to do, and, secondly, that appellant's signature was procured through duress of goods and business compulsion. In answer to these contentions respondents, while agreeing that a consideration was essential, argue in effect that there was a consideration, in that (1) they were not obliged to pay the full contract price for the first shipment, as on its arrival at Long Beach it had deteriorated due to the inadequate and improper packing facilities on plaintiff's ranch in hot weather; (2) they were not required to accept delivery of the second lot because of such deterioration and for the further reason that Anderson could not get a government certificate on the morning on November 15th because of the existing condition of the birds; and (3) the market price for turkeys was uncertain and that this uncertainty supplied a consideration. In response to the contention urged by appellant that there was duress of goods and business compulsion, respondents argue that this doctrine, on these facts, is inapplicable. We think it is obvious from the statement of the contentions of the parties that neither appellant nor respondents come to grips on the precise rule of consideration which is here applicable. However, before proceeding to a discussion of this and other points it is important to note that as the original contract was to be performed in Arizona and the written agreement of cancellation was executed by both parties in that state, its law is determinative of the controversy before this court. Restatement, Conflict of Laws, §§ 358 and 347. On the initial question, whether there was a consideration for the release of the contract sued upon, Arizona follows the rules laid down by the common law. Pleasant v. Arizona Storage, etc., Co., 34 Ariz. 68, 267 P. 794; Miller Cattle Co. v. Mattice, 38 Ariz. 180, 298 P. 640; J. D. Halstead Lumber Co. v. Hartford Accident, etc., Co., 38 Ariz. 228, 298 P. 925. Under those rules there must be a consideration to extinguish the obligations created by a written contract. 6 Williston on Contracts, Rev.Ed., § 1826, note 2.

[3-6] The difficulty with respondents' first argument is twofold. First, the contract did not impose upon the seller the obligation to provide cooling facilities, but instead by implication placed the duty on the buyers. Second, defendant Anderson was conversant with the conditions under which the first lot of turkeys had been killed and dressed, and so when he issued his check therefor that transaction was closed so far as making a claim that subsequent deterioration came about through plaintiff's inadequate facilities. Miller Cattle Co. v. Mattice, 38 Ariz. 180, 298 P. 640. Even in a case where there is a right of inspection, a buyer waives an implied warranty of fitness by accepting the goods. In the instant case the only implied warranty, if there was one, was that the turkeys were of merchantable quality when dressed, not that they would be of such quality thereafter. There is no suggestion in this record that the turkeys were diseased. Therefore there is no basis upon which respondents could have defended against a suit for the amount of the check, had they stopped payment of it. The second argument is not bettered by the additional argument therein based upon the fact that Anderson could not obtain a government certificate for the second lot. The answer to that argument is that plaintiff did not engage to supply such a certificate nor did he agree to keep the turkeys after they were dressed in such condition as would require or warrant the issuance of such a certificate. The third argument obviously is no argument at all.

[7, 8] It follows that the buyers were obligated to take delivery of the second lot of turkeys as they had taken delivery of the first lot, and pay for them on the basis of their grade. That being true, the threat that they would stop payment on the first check and would not pay for the second lot was idle and had no legal basis. They were obligated to pay, and so would have suffered no detriment by making the payment which the law required. However, as the contract of cancellation was bilateral and released each of the parties with respect to all the executory obligations of the original contract, these mutual promises supplied the necessary consideration. Here the seller was relieved from delivering any more turkeys and the buyer was correspondingly relieved from accepting and paying for them. 6 Williston on Contracts, Rev.Ed., § 1826, citing the cases. The fact that the seller did not in reality wish to be relieved does not alter the fact that there was a consideration. This is not a case where a separate and independent consideration is required, such as where one of the contracting parties is relieved from an executory obligation with no corresponding relief or gain to the other party, and for that reason appellant's authorities are not in point.

[9, 10] We come, then, to the question whether on the facts the doctrines of duress of goods or business compulsion are applicable. As the respondents had set up the agreement of cancellation and appellant was contending that it was invalid as a defense, the parties entered into a written stipulation to submit the case to the trial court to determine whether the cancellation was legally effective or whether it had been induced by fraud or duress on the part of the respondents. The court made no finding on the issue thus directly submitted to it. This we think is accounted for by the fact that the court thought such a finding was unnecessary in view of its finding that the plaintiff had not performed his obligations under the written contract and that the defendants had fulfilled all their obligations thereunder, even to the extent of accepting deliveries "of those [turkeys] available for marketing," and had not neglected to pay for them and had not on their part breached performance of the original written contract. This finding is based on the theory that it was the duty of plaintiff to keep the turkeys in marketable condition after they were dressed. But this, as has been pointed out, is not a correct construction of the contract. Hence the finding is not sustained by the evidence, and, moreover, we are without a finding on the vital issue whether the release was or was not induced by duress of goods or business compulsion. Where, as here, the entire case must turn on a single issue of fact, i.e., whether or not there was "business compulsion," we would ordinarily resubmit that question to the trial court. But where, as here, the case was submitted below on a written record, we think we may well decide that fact issue. We turn first to a discussion of the principles of law which govern.

[11-13] Duress of goods, moral duress and business compulsion, so called, all stem from and are but an expansion by courts of equity of the old common-law doctrine of duress. The modern nomenclature is simply an attempt to differentiate between the various recognized modern types of duress with its earlier common-law definition. In its new habiliments the doctrine is generally recognized, but the tests for its application vary. Duress, in the early common law, embraced within its scope only such acts or threats as resulted from fear of life, the loss of a member, mayhem and imprisonment. As the scope of the doctrine was enlarged by the equity courts they soon began to differentiate in the cases between duress of the person and duress of the goods or property of a party. Where an act was accomplished by imprisonment, by threats or by an exhibition of force which apparently could not be restricted, the act was classed as duress of the person. But where the act consisted of a tortious seizure or detention of property from the party entitled to it, and requiring some act as a condition for its surrender, the act was classed as duress of goods or property. Cooley on Torts, 4th Ed., § 367. Where the act of compulsion is not strictly one which may be defined as either duress of the person or of goods or property, but is more nearly analogous to duress of person, the courts often speak of it as involving "moral duress" or "business compulsion." But regardless of these labels, "the modern tendency of courts of law is to regard any transaction as voidable which the party seeking to avoid was not bound to enter into and which was coerced by fear of a wrongful act by the other party to the transaction. The earlier requirements of common-law duress may be regarded as merged in this broader definition." 5 Williston on Contracts, Rev.Ed., § 1603. This represents the rule in Arizona. Lundvall v. Hughes et al., 49 Ariz. 264, 65 P.2d 1377; Potter v. Home Owners' Loan Corporation, 50 Ariz. 285, 72 P.2d 429, 432. See also Restat.Cont. § 492.

[14, 15] The test in any case is whether the complaining party was or was not in a position to exercise his own will. If the unlawful threats overcome the will of the person threatened, and "induce him to do an act which he would not otherwise have done and which he was not bound to do," duress, as it is viewed today, is effectuated. 5 Williston on Contracts, § 1605. It is not, however, unlawful to threaten to refuse to proceed under a contract or to pay what is due under it or what is otherwise due. Hence a threat to stand suit is not in the category of unlawful threats.

[16] In the instant case the most that can be said for the evidence of the plaintiff is that he acceded to the cancellation of the contract in order to get the money that was due him on the first as well as his second delivery of turkeys, instead of being required to sue for it. Accordingly, while defendants took an advantage of the plaintiff, it was not an advantage which would constitute duress under any of the modern doctrines. For that reason the judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

CLARKE v. VOLPA BROS. et al.

Civ. 2679.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 7, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 7, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 1, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⚿=246(39)

In action by truck shovel operator's helper who worked for independent contractor and assisted in loading defendant's gravel trucks at gravel pit, for injuries sustained when truck which was being backed into loading position ran over helper while he was preparing to oil the shovel, wherein evidence established that trucks in backing into position had created well-defined strip marked with ruts in the ground, reference in instructions to the strip as the strip of ground made by the trucks, and track or course followed or traveled by the trucks was not objectionable as misleading.

2. Trial ⚿=194(16)

In action by truck shovel operator's helper who worked for independent contractor and assisted in loading defendant's gravel trucks at gravel pit, for injuries sustained when truck which was being backed into loading position ran over the helper while he was preparing to oil shovel, instructions having effect of withdrawing from jury helper's testimony that he was in position of safety, so far as trucks traveling in usual manner were concerned, were erroneous as invading province of jury.

3. Automobiles ⚿=245(4)

In action by truck shovel operator's helper who worked for independent contractor and assisted in loading defendant's gravel trucks at gravel pit, for injuries sustained when a truck which was being backed into loading position ran over helper while he was preparing to oil shovel, whether truck had right to be where the helper was at time of accident, and whether rights of the helper and the truck driver were equal were questions for jury.

4. Trial ⚿=191(1), 252(1), 296(7)

The province of the jury is invaded by an instruction which assumes existence of fact which is not in evidence or in respect to which there is conflict of evidence, and any error in this respect is not cured by other charges submitting the question.

5. Trial ⚿=194(1)

The province of the jury is not invaded by instruction merely stating claim of party but not intimating that claim has been proved, or merely opening with formula "if you find" certain facts to be true.

6. Appeal and error ⚿=216(1)

That plaintiff failed to request trial court to give instructions based upon his theory did not preclude plaintiff on appeal from complaining of instructions based on the defendant's theory which were objectionable because they invaded province of jury by assuming existence of facts with respect to which there was conflict of evidence.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by Verne Clarke against the Volpa Brothers, a copartnership, and others, for injuries sustained by the plaintiff when he was struck by named defendant's truck. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Rae B. Carter, of Fresno, and Adams & Griswold, of Merced, for appellant.

Chester O. Hansen and John Said, both of Fresno, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

In October, 1940, the Division of Highways of the State of California was constructing a new bridge just west of the town of Minkler, near Fresno. Respondent Pete Volpa was a truck driver employed by the respondent Volpa Brothers and was engaged, at the time of the happening of this accident, in hauling gravel from a gravel pit located on private property to a point on the highway where the new bridge was being constructed. Leading from the highway, and along the edge of the gravel pit, an area had been "bulldozed" to make a private roadway for the loading trucks. Empty trucks coming westerly from the bridge turned off the highway into the roadway and backed along it until a proper position for loading was reached adjacent to the shovel, which was in the gravel pit. An area in the roadway 40 or 50 feet south of the shovel permitted an incoming truck to park if another truck was loading at the shovel or making an exit. The trucks were steel-bodied weighed over five tons unloaded, and were about six feet wide and ten feet long. They were equipped with dual rear wheels and with protective shields back of the cabs. These trucks were loaded by a so-called "truck shovel," similar in many respects to the more common steam shovel, which truck shovel was operated by one John Gale for an independent contractor. The appellant Verne Clarke was the assistant and helper of the operator of the truck shovel. The gravel pit or bed was west of the roadway, below its level, and covered with water. In scooping out gravel the shovel had made a well-defined cut with fairly well-defined banks. The east bank of the cut abutted the west side of the roadway which was made use of by the trucks. Commencing near the truck end of the truck shovel and extending to the shovel end, the wheels of incoming and outgoing trucks had worn ruts about ten inches deep in places in the roadway. It was the practice of trucks to back along these ruts. According to testimony adduced by respondents the most westerly rut was about two feet east of the edge of the east bank of the cut. According to testimony adduced by appellant, the most westerly rut was about four feet from that bank. The version of the accident related by appellant Verne Clarke, and resulting in his injury, may be thus summarized.

After the last truck was loaded on that afternoon, greasing of the shovel was required. At just about quitting time he walked about 150 feet to Gale's automobile which was parked in the area provided for that purpose on the roadway and obtained the equipment for greasing. He returned to the truck shovel (which took from five to ten minutes) with the equipment, and for its use laid a newspaper opposite the cab of the truck shovel and at the edge of the east bank of the cut at a place which would be between the shovel truck and the ruts in the roadway made by the loading trucks. He was squatting down facing north about 6½ or 7 inches from the edge of the bank with the newspaper directly in front of him and preparing the greasing equipment when the truck, which was backing up, struck him. During these movements he never saw nor heard the truck which ran over him while backing into place to be loaded. The right rear wheel of the truck passed completely over the full length of his body, causing considerable injury.

The version of the accident given by respondent Pete Volpa is as follows: He backed the empty truck from the highway along the roadway until he noticed that another truck was loading at the shovel. He accordingly parked the truck in the area provided for that purpose. When the other truck passed by, the driver raised five fingers indicating that it was five minutes until four p. m., and that respondent just had that amount of time to load one more truckful before four o'clock. He then backed toward the shovel, standing up and looking back over his left shoulder. He saw no one on the roadway nor in the vicinity thereof as he continued backing. He backed the truck into the ruts in the roadway and into position before 4 p. m. After backing the truck 50 or 75 feet in the ruts he stopped and then learned that appellant had been caught under the right rear wheel of the truck.

The only contention advanced by appellant on this appeal is that certain instructions offered by respondents and given by the court "deprived plaintiff of the right to a verdict," and "erroneously conferred upon defendants a right to a verdict." These instructions read as follows (emphasis added by appellant):

"I instruct you that the defendant, Pete Volpa, had a right to haul his truck over the strip of ground made by the trucks hauling sand and that such right was equal in every respect to the right of the plaintiff to be where he was at the time of the accident. Just as their rights were equal, so also was the duty of each to exercise ordinary care under all the circumstances equal. The plaintiff could not assume, or act or rely upon the assumption that he would not be injured by defendants' truck or by any other truck passing by the place where he was, but he was required to keep such a lookout for such trucks as under similar circumstances an ordinarily prudent person would have kept for his own safety and protection."

"If you find from the evidence that trucks were backing up over the same path pursued by Pete Volpa's truck with regularity and at brief intervals of time, that these trucks were so constructed and loaded that the driver thereof could not, while backing them, observe objects or persons immediately back of them, and that these trucks in backing followed approximately the same track or course, then I instruct you that any place in the track or course so followed by these trucks was a position of danger."

"In determining whether or not the plaintiff was as vigilant and watchful for his own safety and protection as the law, as stated in these instructions, required him to be, you may consider his position with reference to the course traveled by the trucks, the frequence and regularity with which trucks had been passing by his position, the noise made by the trucks in approaching and passing his position, the speed at which the trucks approached and passed by, his opportunity, if any, for seeing the trucks as they approached and passed by together with any and all other circumstances and conditions surrounding the accident as established by the evidence."

It is argued first that the opening sentence of the instruction first quoted starts with misleading and confusing language by referring to "the strip of ground made by the trucks hauling sand"; that there is no evidence in the record that any strip of ground was made by the trucks or those operating them; that what the evidence shows is that the private roadway between the highway and the truck shovel was made by those who maintained and operated the truck shovel and that a jury would naturally conclude that the instruction referred to the entire length and breadth of this private roadway, and not merely to such part thereof as might be between the ruts made by the trucks. There is no merit to this contention. A careful review of the record in this case will clearly show that the trucks, in backing into such a position that they could be loaded by the "shovel operator," had created a well-defined "strip" marked with ruts in the ground.

The entire roadway, cleared for the use of the trucks, was not "made by the trucks" in the first instance. It was made by use of a "bulldozer." Part of the evidence on this question which clarifies what was meant by the use of the words "strip of ground made by the trucks" in the first instruction quoted, is reflected in the deposition of Pete Volpa, which is as follows:

"Q. In backing your truck into position, how close did you back your truck, how close did you back your truck to that edge or bank along beside the shovel? A. Well, we got—as we back in there, we had formed ruts, the tires had formed ruts. It was kind of soft-like, and when you got in those ruts you could not get out of it, so you just backed up in those ruts.

"Q. Were you backing up in those ruts at the time Clarke was injured? A. When you got in those ruts, you couldn't get out, you had to get in those ruts in order to back out."

[1] Considering the evidence in connection with the instructions given in this respect and on this subject, it is quite apparent that the jury could not have been confused as claimed by appellant, in using the terms "strip of ground made by the trucks," "in the track or course so followed by these trucks," and "to the course traveled by the trucks."

[2] Appellant adduced testimony showing that when the truck struck him he was up on the bank of the cut, three or four feet west of the most westerly rut in the roadway, and in a position of safety so far as trucks traveling in the ruts were concerned. The effect of the portions of the instructions, as given, was to withdraw such testimony from the consideration of the jury and to tell the jury either that when plaintiff was struck by the truck he was on that part of the roadway between the ruts made by the trucks, or that he was bound to anticipate that trucks would depart from the usual practice of following the ruts and without warning travel anywhere over the length or breadth of the roadway made by the "bulldozer." The concluding sentence of the first-quoted instruction emphasized this first error in the instruction by telling the jury that "plaintiff could not assume, or act or rely upon the assumption that he would not be injured by defendants' truck or by any other truck passing by the place where he was." This language placed upon plaintiff the duty of anticipating negligence on the part of the defendants, even if plaintiff was in a position of safety on the bank of the cut and clear of all trucks traveling in the ruts. Rosella v. Paxinos, 110 Cal. App. 299, 302, 294 P. 39.

[3] There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether appellant was in a position of danger. Appellant also adduced testimony showing that the truck struck him after working hours were over and at a time when the advent of a truck was not to be expected. It was a question, therefore, for the jury to determine whether the truck had a right to be wherever plaintiff was at the time of the accident and whether their rights were "equal in every respect."

These basic errors appear in the first quoted instruction and reappear in the other quoted instruction as italicized. Although these instructions offered by respondent and given by the court were patterned almost literally from instructions given in the case of Warnke v. Griffith Co., 133 Cal. App. 481, 491, 492, 24 P.2d 583, they were not, by reason of that fact, proper here. There the evidence was undisputed that the injured person was standing in a position of danger, and it was also undisputed that he knew it was a dangerous place at the time in question. Burke v. John E. Marshall, Inc., 42 Cal.App.2d 195, 202, 108 P.2d 738. The instructions taken from that case, therefore, were not applicable to the instant case because those facts in the instant case were in dispute. In the instruction as given, those disputed facts were not left for a determination of the jury.

[4, 5] The rule here applicable is set forth in 24 Cal.Jur., page 841, section 101, which reads:

> "The province of the jury is invaded where an instruction assumes the existence of a fact which is not in evidence, or with respect to which there is a conflict of evidence, and any error in this respect is not, it has been held, cured by other charges which submit to the jury the question, whether such fact exists. The rule is not violated, however, by an instruction which merely states the claim of a party, but does not intimate that such claim has been proved, or which opens with the formula 'if you find' certain facts to be true."

[6] The application of this rule has been uniform. Preston v. Keys, 23 Cal. 193, 195; Ryan v. Los Angeles I. & C. S. Co., 112 Cal. 244, 254, 44 P. 471, 32 L.R. A. 524; Vinther v. Sunset Mutual Life Insurance Co., 11 Cal.App.2d 118, 123, 53 P. 2d 182. An application of these rules to the challenged instructions clearly demonstrates the error. The unmistakable error of the instruction was to tell the jury that the plaintiff was injured where the truck had an equal right to be at the time of such injury, and the province of the jury was plainly invaded by the instruction which assumed the existence of facts with respect to which there was a conflict of evidence. Respondents argue that their instructions were based on their theory of the case and that since appellant neglected to request the court to give any instructions based on his theory of the case and the evidence, appellant cannot complain of respondents' instructions. Citing Erxleben v. Kaster, Mo.App., 21 S.W.2d 195; Potter v. Back Country Transportation Co., 33 Cal. App. 24, 164 P. 342; Comstock v. Morse, 107 Cal.App. 71, 290 P. 108. This argument is not tenable. In the cases cited by respondents the question was left to the jury whether the disputed facts which would support the legal principle expounded in the instruction had been established. That was not done in the instant case.

For the reasons stated, the judgment should be reversed. The judgment is reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 178

SCULLY v. STATE et al.

L. A. 17810.

Supreme Court of California.

April 16, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Insane persons ⟹41

Where statute under which secretary of Department of Institutions was appointed guardian of incompetent persons' estates provided that secretary should receive reasonable fees and that fees should be paid into state treasury and added to appropriation for management of department, secretary could not maintain action for judgment declaring that he was entitled to fees allowed and for judgment in amount of fees. St.1937, p. 1158, § 6660.

2. States ⟹51

Where secretary of Department of Institutions was appointed by director of department and duration of office was not fixed by law, secretary held office at pleasure of director, and secretary's discharge by director during year in which secretary was appointed was legal. Pol.Code, § 878; St. 1937, pp. 1156, 1158, 1159, 1161, §§ 6655, 6661, 6662, 6729.

3. Pleading ⟹8(6)
States ⟹57

Where secretary of Department of Institutions held office at pleasure of departmental director who appointed him, and secretary sought to be restored to office following discharge by director, allegation that discharge was without right or foundation in law and justification in fact was a mere "conclusion" and was not an "allegation of fact", and secretary was not entitled to salary or other emoluments of office. Pol.Code, § 878; St.1937, pp. 1156, 1158, 1159, 1161, §§ 6655, 6661, 6662, 6729.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion" and "Allegation of Fact".

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Frank Scully against the State and others for a judgment declaring that plaintiff was entitled to certain fees, for judgment in the amount of those fees, and to be restored to the position of secretary of the Department of Institutions. From a judgment for defendants granted on their motion for judgment on the pleadings, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Lucien A. Sauvage and A. Brigham Rose, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

Plaintiff as secretary of the Department of Institutions of the State of California was appointed guardian of a number of estates of incompetent persons, and thereafter the probate court fixed the fees to which the guardian was entitled in the several estates, which collectively amounted to the sum of $2,650. Plaintiff instituted this action to have it declared that he was entitled to said fees and for judgment in the amount of such fees. The first and second causes of action of the amended complaint set forth the above facts. The defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings and the court granted the motion. Plaintiff has appealed from said judgment.

[1] The judgment should be sustained, as section 6660 of the Welfare and Institutions Code in force prior to its amendment in 1941, under which plaintiff was appointed and acted as such guardian of the estates of said incompetent persons, provided that "The secretary of the Department of Institutions shall act as such guardian * * * and shall receive such reasonable fees for his services as such guardian * * * as the court allows. Such fees shall be paid into the State treasury to become a part of and to be added to the appropriation or special fund in the State treasury, made available by law for the support or management of the department." St.1937, p. 1158.

[2, 3] In a third cause of action plaintiff sought to be restored to his position as secretary of the Department of Institutions from which he was discharged by the director of said department on or about the 21st day of October, 1939. In said third cause of action plaintiff alleged his appointment as secretary of the Department of Institutions for a period of four years beginning in the month of January, 1939, and that said Director of said department on or about the 21st day of October, 1939, "caused his name to be removed from the payrolls as an officer," and that said action was without right. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings applied to said amended complaint as a whole and included said third cause of action as well as the other two causes of action referred to above.

We find nothing in the Welfare and Institutions Code, or any other statutory enactment, fixing the term of the secretary of the Department of Institutions at four years or giving to any board or officer authority to appoint a person to that office for the term of four years or for any fixed term whatever. Section 878 of the Political Code provides that "Every office of which the duration is not fixed by law is held at the pleasure of the appointing power." By section 6662 of the Welfare and Institutions Code the secretary of the Department of Institutions is defined as "the employee of the department designated by the Director of Institutions to perform the duties and exercise the powers mentioned in those sections." Secs. 6655, 6661 and 6729 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. We conclude from the foregoing code sections that as plaintiff was designated (or appointed) as secretary of the Department of Institutions and as the duration of said office was not fixed by law, he held his office at the pleasure of the appointing power. The appointing power in this instance was the Director of the Department of Institutions. Plaintiff's discharge, therefore, by the Director of the Department of Institutions was legal. Plaintiff's allegation that the action of the Director of the Department of Institutions "was without right or foundation in law and justification in fact" cannot be regarded in any other light than his conclusion respecting his discharge. It cannot be considered as an allegation of fact, in view of the code section which expressly provides that he held his office at the pleasure of the appointing power. As plaintiff was legally discharged from his position, he was not entitled to the salary or other emoluments of his office.

The third cause of action contained in plaintiff's amended complaint failed therefore to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the order of the court in granting defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, which in this instance consisted of the three causes of action set forth in said amended complaint, was properly made, and the judgment of the trial court should be and is hereby affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, HAUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 167

PEOPLE v. CONTERNO.

Cr. 3528.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 7, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 4, 1942.

1. Rape ⚷52(1)

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for statutory rape.

2. Criminal law ⚷1036(5), 1044

In prosecution for statutory rape, objection that diagram drawn by prosecuting witness, subsequent to date of alleged act of sexual intercourse, purporting to represent defendant's apartment where prosecuting witness testified the alleged act of sexual intercourse had occurred was inadmissible as hearsay, was "waived" and would not be considered where not urged when diagram was received in evidence and no motion was made to strike out on ground that diagram was hearsay.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

3. Criminal law ⚷1036(1)

If a general objection to the introduction of evidence is overruled, such objection cannot avail the objector on appeal, unless it appears that the evidence was inadmissible for any purpose whatsoever.

4. Criminal law ⚷1036(1)

If a specific objection to introduction of evidence is overruled, the specific objection will be effective on appeal to extent of the grounds specified and no further.

5. Criminal law ⚷1036(1)

An overruled objection to introduction of evidence naming a ground which is untenable cannot be availed of on appeal even though there was tenable ground which might have been urged unless it appears there was no purpose whatever for which the evidence could have been admitted.

On Petition for Rehearing.

6. Criminal law ⟹696(3)

Where evidence is received without objection that it is hearsay, the proper procedure to raise such objection at subsequent period in trial is by motion to strike out the evidence as hearsay.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Dominic Floyd Conterno was convicted of statutory rape, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From judgments of guilty on two counts of statutory rape after trial before the court without a jury, defendant appeals.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the people (respondent), the essential facts are:

Defendant on two occasions had an act of sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness, a female sixteen years of age.

Defendant relies for reversal of the judgments upon two propositions which will be stated and discussed hereunder seriatim.

[1] First: There is no substantial evidence to sustain the findings upon which the judgments were necessarily predicated.

This proposition is untenable. An examination of the record discloses substantial evidence which, taken together with inferences which the trial judge may have reasonably drawn therefrom, sustains each and every material finding of fact upon which the judgments were necessarily predicated. For example, the prosecuting witness gave positive testimony that on two separate occasions defendant took her to his apartment and there had an act of sexual intercourse with her. Further discussion of the evidence is unnecessary. (See People v. Pianezzi, 42 Cal.App.2d 265, 269, 108 P.2d 732.)

[2] Second: The trial judge committed prejudicial error in receiving in evidence a diagram drawn by the prosecuting witness subsequent to the date of the alleged acts of sexual intercourse, which diagram purported to represent defendant's apartment, where the prosecuting witness testified the alleged acts of sexual intercourse had occurred, for the reason that such diagram constituted hearsay evidence.

The foregoing proposition will not be considered by this court for the reason that the objection which defendant now makes to the reception of the diagram in evidence, to-wit, that it was hearsay evidence, was not urged in the trial court. Therefore, such objection was waived.

[3-5] The law is uniformly established by a long line of decisions that (1) if a general objection to the introduction of evidence is overruled, such objection cannot avail the objector on appeal, unless it appears that such evidence was inadmissible for any purpose whatsoever, and (2) a specific objection overruled will be effective to the extent of the grounds specified and no further. An objection overruled, therefore, naming a ground which is untenable cannot be availed of on appeal, even though there was another and tenable ground which might have been urged but which was not, unless it appears there was no purpose whatever for which the evidence could have been admitted (People v. Mason, 37 Cal.App.2d 407, 409, 99 P.2d 567).

The judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

Defendant in his petition claims that he objected to the introduction of People's Exhibit 3 on the ground that it was hearsay evidence. People's Exhibit 3 had originally been received in evidence without objection that it was hearsay evidence. Thereafter a session of the court was held at Santa Monica, where the following occurred:

"The Court: Let the record show that the Court has convened at the premises at 2911 Fourth Street, Santa Monica, for the purpose of observing the premises and comparing the premises with the diagram contained in People's Exhibit No. 3. It is not the purpose of the Court to take any testimony or to ask any questions here. It is simply the purpose of the Court to observe the premises and compare them with this diagram as to accuracy. However, if you have any suggestions you want to make, Mr. Myers or Mr. Lavine, I would be glad to hear them.

"Mr. Lavine: I only want to interpose an objection to the consideration of the diagram heretofore made as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and is in effect hearsay and self-serving."

[6] It is obvious from the foregoing that the objection above set forth was not made to the reception of the questioned exhibit (People's No. 3) in evidence. The document, as stated in the opinion, was received in evidence without any objection being made that it was hearsay evidence, and therefore such objection was waived by defendant. Had he desired to raise this objection at a subsequent period in the trial the proper procedure would have been to have made a motion to strike the exhibit on the ground that it was hearsay evidence. This was not done.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 241

ROCKWOOD et al. v. BROWN INTERNATIONAL INV. CO. et al.

Civ. 11994.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 15, 1942.

1. Contracts 🔑123(1)

Evidence that notes and deed of trust required by a creditor in addition to bonds of Home Owners' Loan Corporation for release of creditor's first lien were taken without knowledge or consent of Corporation, authorized judgment declaring notes and deed of trust void.

2. Contracts 🔑123(1)

Evidence was insufficient to establish that notes and deed of trust given to creditor in addition to bonds of Home Owners' Loan Corporation were given in settlement of debtors' obligation under an original second deed of trust and, hence, would not support creditor's contention that notes and deed of trust were not void as violating its consent filed with the Corporation on ground that its consent was to accept the bonds only in satisfaction of indebtedness covered by original first deed of trust.

3. Contracts 🔑123(1)

Where creditor, upon accepting bonds of Home Owners' Loan Corporation, signed a consent which specifically mentioned release of indebtedness covered by original first deed of trust and which further provided that creditor would accept the bonds "in full settlement of the claim of the undersigned", and which provided that creditor agreed "thereupon to release all claim of the undersigned against said property", the consent was sufficiently broad to cover every claim of creditor against the property though not specifically mentioned therein.

4. Contracts 🔑123(1)

A note and deed of trust required by creditor in addition to bonds of Home Owners' Loan Corporation for release of creditor's first lien, if executed without knowledge or consent of Home Owners' Loan Corporation, were void as against "public policy", regardless whether there was sufficient consideration for their execution.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Ray L. Rockwood and another against Brown International Investment Company and International Investment Company, for cancellation of a note, the deed of trust on plaintiffs' home securing the note and a second note which was unsecured. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant International Investment Company, the defendant International Investment Company alone appeals.

Affirmed.

John C. Campbell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles C. Stanley, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiffs brought this action seeking the cancellation of a promissory note for $400, the deed of trust on their home securing said note, and a second promissory note for $360, which was unsecured. The trial court entered its judgment in favor of plaintiffs and against defendant International Investment Company. Said defendant appeals from said judgment.

In 1933, plaintiffs were in default on a note secured by a first deed of trust and also on a note secured by a second deed of trust on their home. Said notes and deeds of trust were held by said defendant. The president of the defendant company then sought to negotiate a loan from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation on behalf of plaintiffs. These negotiations continued over a long period of time, during which defendant executed the required consent to take Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds, which consent provided "and the undersigned hereby consents, if said refunding can be consummated, to accept in full settlement of the claim, of the undersigned, the sum of $1232 face value of the bonds * * * and thereupon to release all claim of the undersigned against said property." The above-mentioned consent was executed on September 11, 1934, and was the fourth and final consent signed by said defendant during the prolonged negotiations. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation transaction was consummated in September, 1934, pursuant to said last-mentioned consent. The several consents had been executed by defendant by reason of the refusal of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to agree to loan the amount covered by any consent previously executed. On May 1, 1934, being the day following the execution of the third of said consents by said defendant, a note in the sum of $760 and a deed of trust on said property to secure the same were procured by said defendant from plaintiffs. This deed of trust was not recorded until October 10, 1934, being approximately one month after the closing of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation transaction. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation loan files showed no consent by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to the taking by defendant of said $760 note and deed of trust or any reference thereto and there was testimony to show that said files would have made reference thereto if the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had had any knowledge thereof. Said deed of trust was not put through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation loan escrow nor was it mentioned therein.

On December 4, 1934, said defendant wrote a letter to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and made a general inquiry as to whether their rules permitted the taking of a second deed of trust in a case where the Home Owners' Loan Corporation loan was insufficient to pay the entire original obligation. While this letter was not answered until January 9, 1935, said defendant apparently learned in the meantime that the $760 note and deed of trust was greater in amount than the Home Owners' Loan Corporation would have approved. It appears from the appraisal that a $400 note and second deed of trust would have been the maximum which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation would have approved under any circumstances and then only provided that the terms were such as to give to the home owner a reasonable opportunity to meet his obligations.

Said defendant then induced plaintiffs to execute the $400 note, secured by a deed of trust on their home, and the $360 unsecured note, to take the place of the above-mentioned $760 note and deed of trust. Plaintiffs executed said instruments but the deed of trust securing said $400 note was not recorded for more than ten months thereafter.

[1] In the trial court, said defendant attempted to establish the validity of the $760 note and deed of trust, and the instruments under attack which replaced the same, upon the theory that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had knowledge of the execution of said $760 note and deed of trust. Said defendant relied upon Shiver v. Liberty Building-Loan Ass'n, 16 Cal.2d 296, 106 P.2d 4. The court there said at page 300 of 16 Cal.2d at page 6 of 106 P.2d, "As stated in the McAllister case [McAllister v. Drapeau, 14 Cal.2d 102, 92 P.2d 911, 125 A.L.R. 800], a note and deed of trust required by a creditor in addition to bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, if executed with its knowledge or consent, are valid and enforceable. However, where such instruments are secretly or fraudulently exacted by the creditor, they are void." The Shiver and McAllister cases discuss fully the rules applicable in such cases. But the most that can be said here is that there was a conflict in the evidence on the issue of knowledge on the part of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The trial court found that said defendant did not at any time disclose to Home Owners' Loan Corporation the fact that it was taking or requiring the $760 note and deed of trust as a condition to its consent and that said Home Owners' Loan Corporation had no notice or knowledge of the execution of said note or of the $400 note or the $360 note or of any deed of trust securing any of them or of the terms thereof or even of the existence thereof at any time until shortly before the commencement of this action. It further found that said Home Owners' Loan Corporation did not consent to the taking by said defendant of said notes and deeds of trust or any of them, or to any plan whereby said defendant would receive any consideration except that received from said Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Our review of the record shows that there was substantial evidence to sustain these findings and, under the rules stated in the authorities above cited, we are satisfied that said findings support the conclusions of law declaring said notes and deed of trust void and the judgment ordering the cancellation of the same.

[2, 3] Said defendant now apparently contends, contrary to the position taken by it in the trial court, that the $760 note and deed of trust was given in settlement of plaintiffs' obligation under the original second deed of trust and, as only the indebtedness covered by the original first deed of trust was specifically mentioned in the recitals of its consent filed with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, said defendant did not agree to accept the bonds in satisfaction of the indebtedness covered by the original second deed of trust. It is a sufficient answer to this contention to state that we find no evidence to sustain the claim that said $760 note and deed of trust were given in settlement of plaintiffs' obligation under the original second deed of trust. On the contrary, the evidence introduced in the trial court by plaintiffs and by said defendant showed that said $760 note and deed of trust were not given for that purpose. But furthermore, the consent signed by said defendant agreed to accept the bonds "in full settlement of the claim of the undersigned" and said defendant agreed "thereupon to release all claim of the undersigned against said property." Said consent was therefore sufficiently broad to cover every claim of defendant against the property including the original second deed of trust and any other note and deed of trust which had been taken by defendant to replace said original second deed of trust.

[4] Said defendant apparently further contends that even if the $760 note and deed of trust were void, there was a moral obligation on the part of plaintiffs to pay said $760 and that said moral obligation was sufficient consideration for the execution of the $400 note and deed of trust and the $360 unsecured note. But the fact that there may have been sufficient consideration for the execution of the instruments under attack is not decisive of this controversy. The $760 note and deed of trust, having been obtained secretly and without the knowledge or consent of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, were void and unenforceable because against public policy. McAllister v. Drapeau, supra, 14 Cal.2d at page 109, 92 P.2d 911, 125 A.L.R. 800. It is obvious that the purpose of the legislation creating the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, as discussed in the authorities above cited, would be defeated if instruments secretly obtained by defendant to replace the void and unenforceable $760 note and deed of trust were not held to be likewise void and unenforceable as against public policy.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 322

LOVELL v. GRIFFIN et al.

Civ. 3026.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 17, 1942.

Appeal and error 🔑781(4)

An appeal from orders terminating proceedings for reporter's transcript, and refusing to relieve appellant from default in failing to have transcript prepared and filed in time, would be dismissed on ground that question involved became "moot" in view of stipulation for reversal of judgment.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Moot Question".

◆

Appeals from Superior Court, Tulare County; Glenn L. Moran, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Caroline A. Lovell against Lillian S. Griffin and others as executors, etc., and others. From an adverse judgment, and from orders terminating proceedings for reporter's transcript and refusing to grant relief from a default, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed, appeal from orders dismissed, and remittitur issued.

Victor T. Watkins, Stanley M. Evans, and F. D. R. Moote, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lewis D. Collings and Edgar C. Smith, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

Two appeals are presented here on the same record. The first is from a judgment entered against plaintiff in an action to quiet title. The parties and their attorneys have stipulated that this judgment may be reversed and the remittitur issued forthwith, each party to pay his own costs.

The second appeal is from an order terminating the proceedings to have prepared and certified a reporter's transcript on appeal, and from an order refusing to relieve plaintiff from her default in failing to have that transcript prepared and filed in time.

An inspection of the record on the appeal from the orders leads us to adopt the following language of the Supreme Court in denying a motion to dismiss the appeals: "The derelictions, if any, as set forth in the respective motions, were those of officers of the lower court, to wit, either its clerk or its stenographic reporter, or both." Lovell v. Deyoe, 16 Cal.2d 650, 107 P.2d 385.

As the judgment must be reversed under the stipulation, it is apparent that the questions presented on the appeal from the two orders have become moot and that the appeal from those orders should be dismissed.

The judgment is reversed. The appeal from the orders is dismissed. Neither party will recover costs of appeal. It is ordered that the remittitur issue forthwith.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

FERRONI v. PACIFIC FINANCE CORPORATION OF CALIFORNIA et al.

FERRONI et al. v. SAME.*

Civ. 11799.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 13, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 12, 1942.

1. Statutes 🔑225

Provision of Vehicle Code imposing liability on automobile owner for negligent operation of automobile by another, and providing that conditional seller shall not be deemed to be the "owner" of the automobile, should be construed with provision requiring dealer on transferring vehicle to give notice immediately of such transfer to department of motor vehicles, in determining whether a conditional seller having neglected to give such notice is attempting to take advantage of such omission. Vehicle Code, § 177, St.1935, p. 115; § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

2. Automobiles 🔑244(32)

In some instances record registration of an automobile is conclusive as to liability under provision of Vehicle Code imposing liability on automobile owner for negligent operation of the automobile by another with owner's consent. Vehicle Code, § 402, St. 1937, p. 2353.

---

* Subsequent opinion 135 P.2d 569.

3. Principal and agent 🔑14(2)

The relation of "agency" need not depend on express appointment and acceptance thereof, but it may be, and frequently is, implied from words and conduct of parties and circumstances of particular case.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Agency".

4. Automobiles 🔑243(2)

On issue whether partnership dealing in automobiles or finance company was conditional seller of automobile involved in accident and was liable for negligent operation of the automobile by conditional buyer, evidence that procedure adopted by finance company, in affixing signature of partner to conditional sales contract as seller, was customary way of transacting business with partnership, was admissible as tending to overcome testimony that the execution of contract on behalf of partnership was not authorized. Vehicle Code, § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1056(1)

On issue whether partnership dealing in automobiles or finance company was conditional seller of automobile involved in accident and was liable for negligent operation of automobile by conditional buyer, exclusion of evidence that procedure adopted by finance company in affixing signature of partner to conditional sales contract as "seller" was customary way of transacting business with partnership, which was offered to overcome testimony that execution of contract on behalf of partnership was unauthorized, was prejudicial error. Vehicle Code, § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1178(6)

Where judgments for damages resulting from automobile accident determined issues of negligence, contributory negligence, and damages in favor of plaintiffs, and correctness of such determination was not challenged on appeal which involved issue whether automobile dealer or finance company was liable for negligent operation of automobile by conditional buyer thereof at time of accident, and judgment was reversed because of exclusion of evidence offered by the company on such issue, cause was remanded for new trial for sole purpose of ascertaining whether company or dealer was liable. Vehicle Code, § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

7. Costs 🔑236

Where judgments for damages resulting from automobile accident determined issues of negligence, contributory negligence, and damages in favor of plaintiffs, and correctness of such determination was not challenged on appeal which involved issue whether automobile dealer or finance company was liable for negligent operation of automobile by conditional buyer thereof at time of accident, and judgment was reversed because of exclusion of evidence offered by the company on such issue, the costs of the appeals were all assessed against dealer. Vehicle Code, § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

◆

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Actions by Aurelia Ferroni, and by Serafino Ferroni and others, against the Pacific Finance Corporation of California and others, for injuries and death arising out of an automobile accident. From adverse judgments the named defendant appeals, and from the judgments insofar as they were in favor of defendant Pacific Motor Sales, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgments reversed and causes remanded for new trial in accordance with opinion.

Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel and Alfred Del Carlo, all of San Francisco, for plaintiffs and appellants.

O'Connor, Neubarth & Moran and Harold H. Cohn, all of San Francisco, for defendant and appellant.

Daniel J. O'Brien, Jr., and R. H. Cormany, both of San Francisco, for defendants and respondents.

WARD, Justice.

These consolidated actions are to recover damages for the death of Gabriello Ferroni and for personal injuries to Julia Ferroni arising out of an automobile accident which occurred when an automobile in which they were riding collided with one being operated by John T. McConnville. The latter had purchased the car on November 2d, the day prior to the accident, under the following circumstances: One Houser, an independent automobile salesman, visited the premises of the Pacific Motor Sales on that day with McConnville; they selected a car; Houser was given the net price thereof, and with the permission of the motor sales company he and McConnville took it out for a demonstration. Upon their return, Houser advised the motor sales company that the purchase had been made; that it was an installment sale, and that Pacific Finance Corporation of California would finance the transaction. Pacheco, one of the partners of the sales company, in its behalf authorized by his signature the purchase order signed by McConnville, which contained the following provision: "It is understood and agreed that the Title of Ownership of car as above described does not pass to me until the final cash payment is made." On the same day the motor sales company confirmed the sale with the finance corporation, received the latter's check in its favor for $319.30 (which amount covered the net price of the car as quoted by the motor sales company to the salesman Houser, plus the salesman's commission and the sales tax), and in turn delivered to the finance company the "pink and white" certificates for the car. It should be mentioned in this connection that these certificates, duly endorsed by former respective owners of the car (neither showing registration nor ownership in the motor sales company) were received by the Motor Vehicle Department for transfer to McConnville as registered owner, and to the finance corporation as legal owner, on November 9th, six days after the accident. McConnville had endorsed the certificate of ownership as "purchaser" and the finance company as "new legal owner."

With regard to McConnville's transaction in the meantime with the finance corporation, an employee of the latter had inserted as "seller" or vendor in the body of the conditional sales contract, the name of Geis, one of the partners of the motor sales company. Such employee had also signed the contract, and an assignment to the finance corporation, "Geo. D. Geis." All details in the sale of the car appear to have been completed on November 2d, the day prior to the accident.

The consolidated actions were tried without a jury. Judgment in favor of plaintiffs Ferroni was entered in each action against defendants McConnville and the finance corporation, and against plaintiffs in favor of defendants Pacheco and Geis, copartners in the motor sales company. The finance corporation appeals from the judgment in favor of plaintiffs in each action. Plaintiffs appeal from both judgments insofar as they are in favor of the motor sales corporation. They urge that the judgment against the finance corporation stand, but the appeals are precautionary interposed for the purpose of preserving the rights of the plaintiffs. In effect, plaintiffs request that in the event the judgment against the finance corporation is reversed, they may hold the motor sales company if upon retrial the liability of the latter should be established. All points urged on appeal are primarily directed to the question of the liability of the finance corporation under Vehicle Code section 402, St.1937, p. 2353, wherein "Every owner of a motor vehicle is liable and responsible for the death of or injury to person or property resulting from negligence in the operation of such motor vehicle * * * by any person using or operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of such owner."

The subject of conditional vendor, and the construction to be placed upon Vehicle Code section 402, have been treated in Guillot v. Hagman, 30 Cal.App.2d 582, 86 P.2d 865; Bunch v. Kin, 2 Cal.App.2d 81, 37 P.2d 744; Schmidt v. C. I. T. Corporation, 14 Cal.App.2d 92, 57 P.2d 1016; Helmuth v. Frame, 46 Cal.App.2d 372, 115 P.2d 846; Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 228 P. 435.

McConnville concededly is the conditional vendee. The question is, which of the firms as vendor transferred rights to him as such. From the facts that, after negotiations with the motor sales company, the "purchase order" form of that company was used in the transaction; that such company made delivery of the car to McConnville and delivered certificates of ownership and registration to the finance corporation, an inference may be drawn that the motor sales company was the vendor, unless it appears from the evidence that the latter, on receipt of the payment made by the finance corporation, had transferred to such corporation its interest therein. There is no evidence of such sale or assignment except by the delivery to it of the "slips" and the payment by it above mentioned. As stated, the finance corporation, although it appears to be registered as the legal owner, prepared the conditional sale contract showing Geis (one of the partners of the motor sales company) as seller and McConnville as purchaser. Such contract was followed by an "Assignment," executed by the seller named in the contract, in favor of the finance corporation.

If the finance corporation was the vendor, such an assignment would appear to have been superfluous. The testimony of both partners of the motor sales company was that the execution of the conditional sales contract by an employee of the finance corporation for and on behalf of Geis as seller or vendor was unauthorized. If the finance corporation was in fact authorized to transact the conditional sale on behalf of the motor sales company, or of Geis, one of its partners, the fact that the motor sales company subsequently refused to ratify the contract would not affect its liability as conditional vendor. If it was not, the transfer by the motor sales company to the finance corporation of the certificates endorsed by their former holders would appear to make the finance company the conditional vendor to the McConnville transaction. The theory of the motor sales company is that it sold the car to the finance corporation and that the latter was in fact the conditional vendor by direct sale. The trial court found that on the date of the accident the finance company was the owner of the motor vehicle in question, and Pacheco and Geis, copartners doing business as Pacific Motor Sales, were not. Whether, by virtue of a prior course of conduct between them the finance corporation was authorized to procure McConnville's signature to a contract of conditional sale binding the motor sales company as vendor, is of importance.

Ordinarily in transactions of the kind the "dealer" is the conditional vendor, the "finance company" simply contracting with the purchaser to finance the sale. In some instances the finance company is in fact the conditional vendor, though it may, as a matter of business convenience, in the preparation of transfer instruments purport to act as the agent of the dealer, and, so far as the record indicates, appear as the vendor.

[1, 2] Vehicle Code section 402 should be construed with section 177, St.1935, p. 115, and, when applicable, other sections, in determining whether a conditional vendor, having neglected to comply with the provisions of the Vehicle Code, is attempting to take advantage of such omission. In some instances, record registration is conclusive as to liability (Helmuth v. Frame, 46 Cal.App.2d 372, at page 376, 115 P.2d 846, and cases cited), but the actual conditional vendor should not escape liability by such a strict interpretation of the sections as will thrust the burden of liability upon one who is only technically liable. Helmuth v. Frame, supra; Schmidt v. C. I. T. Corporation, supra; McCalla v. Grosse, 42 Cal.App.2d 546, 109 P.2d 358.

Appellant finance corporation sought to introduce evidence that the procedure it adopted in the matter of affixing Geis' signature as "seller" to the conditional sale contract was the normal and customary way of transacting business with the motor sales company. An objection to such evidence was sustained and an offer of proof rejected. The offer of proof of a course of dealing theretofore followed was made in an effort to overcome the testimony that the execution was unauthorized. The objection that the offer of proof was insufficient is not well founded.

[3] Previous performance of acts like the one in question, and acquiescence by the principal, is a recognition and approval of an assumed agency, particularly when the alleged principal has accepted the benefits derived from the transaction. In Smith v. Schuttpelz, 1 Cal.2d 158, 161, 33 P.2d 836, 838, the court said: "The relation of agency need not depend upon express appointment and acceptance thereof, but it may be, and frequently is, implied from the words and conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the particular case." 1 Mechem on Agency, 2d Ed., sec. 271; 2 C.J.S., Agency, § 68, pp. 1048–1049; Mischel v. Harnden, 63 N.D. 107, 246 N.W. 644; MacDonnell v. California Lands, Inc., 15 Cal.2d 344, 101 P.2d 479; Pacific Acceptance Corp. v. Jones, 95 Cal.App. 365, 272 P. 1084; Caspary v. Moore, 21 Cal.App.2d 694, 70 P.2d 224.

[4, 5] In the present record as it stands there is sufficient evidence to sustain the judgments of the court. However, under all of the circumstances herein we think it was error, prejudicial to the rights of appellant finance company, to reject the proffered testimony, the admission of which might have resulted in a contrary judgment. It is obvious that either the finance corporation or the motor sales company or both, is or are liable for the damages suffered by plaintiffs. The issues of the negligence of McConnville and the contributory negligence of plaintiffs have been determined by the judgments heretofore entered; likewise the issue of the amounts of damages has been settled by such judgments. On these appeals the correctness of these determinations is not challenged.

No useful purpose would be served by retrying those issues.

[6, 7] The judgments in favor of Aurelia Ferroni and Serafino Ferroni and Julia Ferroni, his wife, respectively entered against the Pacific Finance Corporation of California, and against them in favor of defendants Louis Pacheco and George D. Geis, copartners doing business as Pacific Motor Sales, from which appeals were taken by the plaintiffs Ferroni and the Pacific Finance Corporation of California, are and each of them is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial for the sole purpose of ascertaining whether the finance corporation or the motor sales company is liable. Under the circumstances of these cases justice requires that the costs of all the appeals should be assessed against the Pacific Motor Sales. It is so ordered.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 272

KROEKER et al. v. JACK et al.

Civ. 3003.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 15, 1942.

1. New trial ⇨93

Prior to 1931, a trial court was without jurisdiction to grant a new trial where because of the death of the court reporter a reporter's transcript could not be prepared.

2. New trial ⇨93

Under statute authorizing new trial upon reporter's death or disability rendering it impossible to obtain full transcript, trial court had wide discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

3. Appeal and error ⇨980

An appellate court is not warranted in disturbing the action of a trial court in denying a motion for new trial made under statute authorizing new trial upon court reporter's death or other disability rendering it impossible to obtain full transcript unless it clearly appears that trial court abused its discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

4. Appeal and error ⇨933(1)

On appeal from an order denying a new trial, made under statute authorizing new trial upon court reporter's death or disability rendering it impossible to obtain full transcript, every presumption is in favor of the fairness and regularity of the proceedings in the trial court and party in whose favor judgment was rendered is entitled to benefit of those presumptions unless it is clear that trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion. Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Jake Kroeker against George W. Jack. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals

Affirmed.

H. E. Schmidt, of Bakersfield, Edwin P. Jacobsen, of Delano, and Borton, Petrini, Conron & Borton, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

George A. Westover and Higgs & Fletcher, all of San Diego, Elliott, Vedder, Sullivan & Dunham, of Los Angeles, and Claflin, Dorsey & Campbell, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, made under section 953e of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It appears from the evidence filed in support of said motion that said action was tried before the court on April 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, 1940, and that judgment in favor of respondents was entered on June 13, 1940; that a notice of appeal was filed and a request and order for the preparation of a transcript made under the alternative method and that appellants paid to the reporter the sum of $515 therefor; that the evidence at the trial consisted almost entirely of oral testimony of witnesses and that the various counsel for appellants cannot recall the testimony, rulings and proceedings with sufficient accuracy to prepare a bill of exceptions; that certain oral stipulations were made in open court, the wording of which cannot be recalled by counsel with sufficient accuracy to prepare a record thereof; that after the filing of the notice of appeal, F. Roy Davis, the official court reporter, secured an order extending his time for the preparation of said transcript to November 6, 1940; that commencing about August 14, 1940, counsel for appellants contacted said reporter on numerous occasions and endeavored to have said reporter complete said transcript, but said reporter became ill in November, 1940, and was unable to complete the transcript; that said reporter died on May 20, 1941; that counsel for appellants have been informed by all of the court reporters of Kern County that they could not read or transcribe the notes of said reporter.

[1] Prior to 1931, a trial court was without jurisdiction to grant a new trial in a case where, because of the death of the court reporter, a reporter's transcript could not be prepared. Diamond v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 732, 210 P. 36. The legislature in 1931 added a new section to the Code of Civil Procedure numbered 953e, which section reads as follows: "Impossibility of obtaining transcript because of death or disability of reporter: Vacation of judgment or granting new trial. When it shall be impossible to have the phonographic report of the trial transcribed by a stenographic reporter as provided by section 953a of this code because of the death or other disability of a reporter who participated as a stenographic reporter at the trial, the court or a judge thereof shall have power to set aside and vacate the judgment, order or decree from which an appeal has been or is to be taken and to order a new trial of the action or proceeding."

[2] As was stated by Mr. Justice Jennings in Moore v. Specialty Oil Tool Co., 128 Cal.App. 662, at page 664, 18 P.2d 82, at page 83: "The very language of this statute indicates a clear intention on the part of the lawmaking body to authorize a trial court to grant a new trial in a proper case. But this is the extent of the language employed. There is no intimation or suggestion that there is imposed upon the court a duty to grant a new trial. The words 'shall have power' are not equivalent to 'must.' We are of the opinion therefore that the statute under consideration vests in the trial court jurisdiction to entertain a motion for a new trial under the circumstances herein appearing, and a discretion to grant or refuse such motion. Nor is it a violent assumption that the discretion thus conferred is a wide discretion."

In Conlin v. Coyne, 19 Cal.App.2d 78, at page 83, 64 P.2d 1123, at page 1125, the court said: "The affidavits, as we have said, stated that defendants could appeal only upon the clerk's transcript and, again, that it was 'impossible for defendants to prosecute in any manner whatsoever the Appeal heretofore taken.' Evidently the judge believed that he knew better, and in this he was not shown to have been wrong. The generalities and conclusions in the affidavits were entirely insufficient to support the contentions of defendants, especially in view of the fact that the makers of the affidavits were stating that something could not be done which at the time the statements were made had not even been attempted. The ruling of this court must be that no abuse of discretion appears to have been committed in denying the motion for a new trial made under section 953e."

In both of the above-mentioned cases a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court.

[3] It thus appears that a very wide discretion is conferred upon the trial court in passing upon a motion for a new trial under said section, and it must be made clearly to appear that such discretion has been abused before an appellate court is warranted in disturbing its action. In the instant case, no errors on the part of the trial court are asserted to have occurred, and no statement is made in the affidavits, or otherwise, that there is any likelihood that the court would arrive at a different conclusion upon a retrial.

[4] There may be an occasional hardship in denying a motion for a new trial in a case such as this. On the other hand, an injustice may easily be worked if the rule were otherwise than to vest a wide discretion in the trial court in passing upon such a motion. Every presumption is in favor of the fairness and regularity of the proceedings in the trial court which led to the judgment. The party in whose favor the judgment is rendered is entitled to the benefit of those presumptions and should not be forced to reestablish his claim unless it is clear that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion. Taking the entire record in this proceeding into consideration we do not believe it can be held that the denial of the motion by the trial court was an abuse of discretion.

The order denying appellants' motion for a new trial under section 953e is affirmed.

BARNARD and MARKS, JJ., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 235

VAN GAMMEREN et al. v. CITY OF FRESNO et al.

Civ. 2672.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 13, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 12, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1009(2)

In suit to enjoin city and city officials from interfering with plaintiffs in their delivery of pasteurized milk within city limits, a finding that milk produced and sold by plaintiffs met all the requirements of state law and the city ordinances except an ordinance requiring pasteurization within the city limits, supported by substantial evidence, was final on appeal.

2. Food 🔑1

Ordinance declaring unlawful the sale or delivery of pasteurized milk within corporate limits unless it had been pasteurized within corporate limits and under inspection required by the ordinance was void as respects producers outside the city and within the approved county inspection district as "discriminatory" and unreasonable.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Discriminatory".

3. Injunction 🔑108

Where milk producers had been notified by city chief milk inspector that they must stop selling milk to customers of a subdivition proposed to be annexed on annexation because producer's plant was located outside city limits and an ordinance required pasteurized milk sold within city to be pasteurized therein under city inspection system, producers were entitled to maintain action to enjoin enforcement of the order without applying for a permit to sell and deliver milk and exhausting the right of appeal to city authorities provided by the ordinance.

4. Action 🔑10

The law does not require useless acts from litigants as prerequisites to seeking relief from the courts.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1152

In action to enjoin city and city officials from interfering with plaintiffs in delivery of pasteurized milk within city limits, judgment enjoining enforcement of ordinance requiring pasteurized milk sold within city limits to be pasteurized within the city was not required to be reversed on ground that an additional portion restraining defendants from interfering with plaintiffs' carrying on their business and selling pasteurized milk to customers within the city went beyond plaintiffs' pleadings where the additional portion could be stricken.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Van Gammeren, as administratrix, and others against the City of Fresno, Cal., and others, to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiffs in their delivery of Grade A pasteurized milk within the limits of the City of Fresno. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Judgment modified and affirmed as modified.

C. M. Ozias, City Atty., of Fresno, for appellants.

Frederick W. Docker, of Fresno, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment enjoining appellants from interfering with respondents in their delivery of Grade A pasteurized milk within the limits of the city of Fresno.

Fresno is a chartered city. The individual appellants are the members of its board of health, its city health officer, and the city veterinarian and chief milk inspector.

In 1922, the city of Fresno adopted an ordinance regulating the sale of milk within its limits. Subsection four of section nine provided in part as follows:

"It shall be and is hereby declared unlawful for any person in said City: * * * to sell or deliver any milk or cream for drinking purposes within said City that has been pasteurized, unless it has been pasteurized within the City and under the inspection herein required."

While the ordinance has been variously amended, this subsection has remained substantially unchanged.

Respondents are processors and deliverers of milk for human consumption. They each operate a pasteurizing plant outside the limits of the city of Fresno. The distance of the farthest plant from the city limits is four miles. The closest was about one mile from those limits when this action was instituted, and only about three blocks distant after the annexation of certain territory to the city of Fresno. This annexation took place after this case was started.

In 1940, the proceedings to annex the Sierra Vista Addition to the city were had. After the annexation election, but before those proceedings became final, D. F. Coyner, as chief milk inspector of the city of Fresno, notified respondents that as soon as the annexation proceedings became final they would be required to discontinue delivery of milk to their customers within the annexed district for the sole reason that their pasteurization plants were not within the city limits. Respondents promptly brought this action to enjoin appellants from enforcing this order.

After the complaint was filed another district in which respondents had customers was annexed to the city of Fresno and a supplemental complaint was filed seeking the same relief as to this territory.

The city of Fresno has an approved milk inspection service. The county of Fresno, outside of its municipalities, also has an approved milk inspection service. By a contract between the city and county it was provided that the milk inspection service of the city of Fresno should act as the inspection service of the county. The inspection services were approved by the state department of agriculture. D. F. Coyner and his deputies made the milk inspections in the city of Fresno and D. F. Coyner himself made the inspections in the county territory. He regularly inspected respondents' dairies and each of them received scores of eighty points or higher. There were five pasteurization plants within the city of Fresno which were inspected by Coyner or his deputies. Some of their scores were higher and some were lower than the scores of respondents' dairies.

[1] It was alleged in the complaint, and found to be true, that the milk produced and sold by respondents met all of the requirements of the laws of the state and Fresno ordinances except as to the provisions of the latter requiring pasteurization to be done within the city limits. As there is substantial evidence supporting this finding, it is final here.

It is clear from the reading of the complaint that respondents' only purpose in the action was to enjoin appellants from preventing them from delivering their milk in Fresno for the sole reason that their pasteurization plants were outside the limits of Fresno, while at the same time permitting the delivery and sale of milk of equal or less grade from plants within the city limits. This view was confirmed by their counsel during the oral arguments. We therefore conclude that the sole question presented here is the validity of the quoted subsection of the Fresno ordinance and that we are not concerned with the sale and delivery of milk within the city of Fresno which falls below the quality, grade and purity specified in its ordinances.

Appellants rely principally upon the case of Witt v. Klimm, 97 Cal.App. 131, 274 P. 1039, as supporting their argument that Fresno cannot be put to the expense of inspecting pasteurization plants outside of the city limits as some of them might be many miles away and the expense could become very burdensome. In the Witt case, the ordinance involved, provided that milk brought from another inspection district must be pasteurized in San Francisco if it were to be sold in that city as pasteurized milk.

In a later case, LaFranchi v. City of Santa Rosa, 8 Cal.2d 331, 65 P.2d 1301, 1304, 110 A.L.R. 639, the facts are practically identical with the facts of the instant case. The Supreme Court distinguished Witt v. Klimm, supra, from that case and held that decision not applicable to the facts there presented. In concluding that the portion of the Santa Rosa ordinance, in every respect similar to the portion of the Fresno ordinance in question here, was discriminatory, unreasonable and void, the Supreme Court said:

"A late case along the same general lines is that of Sheffield Farms Co. v. Seaman, 114 N.J.L. 455, 177 A. 372, 375, decided in February, 1935. The board of health refused a permit because of a limited budget which prevented the making of inspections at distant places and also because their city had a sufficient supply. The court there said: 'It will serve no useful purpose to answer or further discuss the purported reason argued upon which the refusal is sought to be justified. Suffice it to say that the meager facts, relevant as to the occasion and history of the refusal, lead us to the conclusion that they are without substance. They are excuses rather than legal reasons. The city just took the position that it had enough milk dealers and that it had the situation "well in hand." Such a position is unreasonable; it is arbitrary, capricious, and discriminatory. It unlawfully curtails prosecutor's common-law right to engage in a lawful business, notwithstanding that it has fully complied with the requirements of the state and city. This the city cannot lawfully do.'

"Again in Grant v. Leavell, 259 Ky. 267, 82 S.W.2d 283, decided in April, 1935, that part of an ordinance was declared invalid which required such plants to be located within the city. In other words, it has been held quite generally that the city limits as the boundary line outside of which plants may not be located if the milk is to be sold within the city do not have a reasonable relationship to a proper legislative object and therefore ordinances fixing such a boundary are invalid.

"In line with the authorities from other jurisdictions from which we have quoted are those from our own courts declaring that ordinances designed for the purpose of erecting tariff barriers are void, such as Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am.Rep. 642; In re Hines, 33 Cal.App. 45, 164 P. 339; In re Hart, 36 Cal.App. 627, 172 P. 610; In re Riley, 39 Cal.App. 58, 177 P. 854, and In re Robinson, 68 Cal.App. 744, 230 P. 175."

[2] For the same reason we must hold that the provisions of the subsection four of section nine of the Fresno ordinance which we have quoted is void and of no effect.

[3, 4] Appellants urge that as the Fresno ordinance gave respondents the right to apply for a permit to sell and deliver their milk in Fresno, and the right of appeal to city authorities if their applications were denied, and as they failed to do this and thus exhaust the remedies provided by the ordinance, their action was premature and the judgment should be reversed. They cite numerous well-considered authorities supporting the general principles upon which this argument is based, but we do not consider those authorities applicable to the facts here.

Respondents had been notified by a responsible officer of the city of Fresno that they must stop selling milk to their customers as soon as those customers became residents of the city of Fresno, for the sole reason of the location of respondents' plants outside the city limits and the provisions of the ordinance. The city officers had been enforcing those provisions and expressed the intention of continuing to do so. The ordinance was prohibitory and prevented the issuance of permits to respondents. As appellants had been enforcing its terms, expressed the intention of enforcing them against respondents and were bound by them, if they were constitutional, the trial court was not required to assume that appellants would violate them before they were held void by court order. When confronted by that ordinance which controlled the action of the city officials it is apparent that applications for permits, and appeals from adverse decisions, would have been useless acts. The law does not require useless acts from litigants as prerequisites to seeking relief from the courts.

[5] Appellants further urge that the judgment goes farther than merely enjoining the enforcement of subsection four of section nine of the ordinance. After enjoining the enforcement of that subsection the judgment proceeds as follows:

"* * * or from in any manner hindering, delaying, interfering with, restricting or preventing plaintiffs or any of them, their agents, servants or employees, from carrying on their respective businesses, and the sale, distribution and delivery of pasteurized Grade A milk to customers of the respective plaintiffs in the City of Fresno, State of California."

Appellants argue that should respondents' milk fall below the quality, purity or grade required by the city of Fresno, the quoted portion of the judgment would prevent the city officials from stopping its sale in Fresno. We are inclined to agree with this argument. The quoted portion of the judgment goes beyond the purpose of respondents in bringing their action as expressed in their pleadings and by their counsel. However, this does not necessitate a reversal of the judgment as it is divisible and the quoted portion may be stricken therefrom, leaving the remaining portion intact.

The judgment is modified by striking the quoted portion therefrom and as so modified is affirmed. Neither party will recover costs of appeal.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 296

TARVIN et al. v. DAVEY et al.

Civ. 2960.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 16, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑612(1)

Where clerk's transcript contained evidentiary matter which was in no way authenticated, such matter could not be considered on appeal.

2. Appeal and error 🔑659(3)

Where record did not disclose that any notice had been given for preparation of transcript and there was no reporter's transcript in appellate court, motion for diminution of record asking to have stipulation added to and made a part of the clerk's transcript was denied since such matter had no place in the clerk's transcript. Code Civ. Proc. § 953a.

3. Appeal and error 🔑635(3)

Where no record was before appellate court with respect to evidence considered by trial court but clerk's transcript was sufficient for presentation of any questions which might be raised on the judgment roll alone, countermotion to dismiss appeal was denied.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

Action by William C. Tarvin, and others, against K. R. Davey, and others. From the judgment defendants appeal. On motion for diminution of record and counter motion to dismiss appeal.

Motions denied.

W. E. Kalbfleisch, of Corona, for appellants.

Alphonse E. Ganahl, of Corona, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is a motion for diminution of the record with a counter-motion to dismiss the appeal.

[1] The judgment appealed from was entered on July 10, 1941. A notice of appeal was filed on December 22, 1941. No reporter's transcript has ever been filed. A clerk's transcript was filed on October 16, 1941, containing some evidentiary matter which is in no way authenticated. This matter may not be considered on this appeal.

[2] There is nothing in the record before us to show that any notice was ever given for the preparation of a transcript under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. However, the notice of motion for diminution of the record has attached to it what purports to be a copy of such a notice to the clerk, stating that the only portion of the reporter's notes which was desired was a certain stipulation made during the trial. In the motion for diminution now made it is asked to have this stipulation added to and made a part of the "clerk's" transcript. It is apparent that this matter has no place in the clerk's transcript, there is no reporter's transcript here, and there is no record which might be augmented through the motion here made.

[3] While there is no record before us with respect to the evidence considered by the trial court, the clerk's transcript is sufficient for the presentation of any questions which may be raised upon the judgment roll alone. For this reason the respondent's counter-motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied.

Both motions are denied.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

MATHER v. MATHER et al.*

Civ. 13266.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 15, 1942.

Rehearing Granted May 11, 1942.

1. Judgment 🔑326

In action to rescind property settlement agreement including assignment of half interest in approved claim against an estate, where answer of the administrators of such estate placed funds held by them for payment of such claims at the disposal of the court and court expressly found that half interest in claim was assigned by agreement, judgment nunc pro tunc did not deviate so materially from original findings as to render it invalid in that it directed payment to assignee of sum admittedly in hands of administrators subject to direction of the court.

2. Judges 🔑32
Judgment 🔑297

Where findings are filed, which constitute the rendition of judgment, court retains power to amend or change the conclusions of law so as to point to a different judgment and to enter a judgment different from that first pronounced, and such power continues until the entry of the judgment, and such change may be made by a judge other than the one who tried the case.

3. Appeal and error 🔑452

Trial court retains complete jurisdiction of a case until the judgment is entered and cannot be divested of such jurisdiction by any unauthorized appeal.

4. Judgment 🔑297

Where an appeal is taken prematurely before entry of judgment, the affirmance of purported judgment does not prevent the subsequent entry by trial court of another and different judgment, since no jurisdiction is acquired by the premature appeal.

5. Appeal and error 🔑460(2)

Appeal from purported judgment, which was in fact void entered upon demurrer to one of three counts contained in complaint did not effect a stay of proceedings in trial court so as to render void further proceedings had therein on the other two counts during pendency of such appeal.

6. Judgment 🔑326

Where purported but actually void judgment as to third count of complaint was entered on demurrer, failure of judgment as entered at the close of trial of first and second counts to dispose of such third count was not a judicial error but a "clerical mistake" or "misprision" only that could be corrected so as to conform judgment to findings filed by court by the entry of judgment nunc pro tunc.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Clerical Mistake" and "Misprision".

7. Judgment 🔑326

The power to correct a clerical mistake or misprision by entry of judgment nunc pro tunc may be exercised by trial court at any time on its own motion or that of a party with or without notice.

8. Husband and wife 🔑279(2)

In action to rescind property settlement agreement, wherein court found that plaintiff should take nothing by his complaint and that defendant was entitled under agreement to a one-half interest in a claim against an estate, the administrators of which had filed answer setting forth that specified sum was being held on account of claim subject to court's direction, defendant was entitled only to judgment directing payment to her of a half of such sum held by administrators and judgment providing for payment of the whole thereof should be modified.

9. Appeal and error 🔑709

Where it was impossible to determine from the record what the proper amount of costs should be or that the amount awarded was incorrect, District Court of Appeal would not pass upon the question of costs.

10. Courts 🔑476

The fact that following the entry of purported but actually void judgments further proceedings were had in the matter in another court did not deprive trial court in which case was first tried of its power to enter final judgment "nunc pro tunc" upon the findings made therein and upon the ruling on demurrer.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Nunc Pro Tunc".

11. Husband and wife 🔑278(1)

The fact that wife obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce in California two months after she and her husband entered into a property settlement agreement in Hawaii established that at the time agreement was entered into, the parties were residents of California and that situs of the property involved was also California, so that the law of that state rather than of Hawaii governed the validity of the agreement and wife's capacity to contract with husband.

---

* Subsequent opinion 126 P.2d 960.

12. Husband and wife ⚷278(2)

The established "public policy" of California regarding the right of married women to contract with their husbands as to property settlements formed an integral part of such an agreement between husband and wife domiciled in California and must control notwithstanding the law of the place where contract was made.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

13. Husband and wife ⚷279(2)

Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to permit further amendment to count seeking rescission of property settlement agreement on the ground of wife's incapacity to contract with husband under law of place where agreement was made, where validity of agreement was not governed by such law but by law of the domicile of contracting parties.

14. Appeal and error ⚷78(1)

An order granting entry of judgment nunc pro tunc was an intermediate ruling of the court and not an "appealable order".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appealable Order".

15. Appeal and error ⚷82(3)

An appeal would not lie from an order denying motion to vacate judgment where the grounds upon which it was sought to vacate the judgment were available on appeal from the judgment and existed before the entry thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Action by A. W. Mather against Anna Inez Mather and others for rescission of a property settlement agreement between plaintiff and named defendant wherein Edna Greenfield, as administratrix, etc., and other, filed an answer in the nature of an interpleader. From a judgment entered nunc pro tunc in favor of named defendant, from order granting motion for entry thereof nunc pro tunc, and from an order denying motion to set aside such judgment and the order granting entry thereof, plaintiff and interpleaders appeal.

Judgment modified and as modified affirmed and appeals from orders dismissed.

Marcel E. Cerf, Robinson & Leland and Gavin McNab, Schmulowitz, Aikins & Wyman, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Don Lake and James R. Jaffray, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

Plaintiff and certain defendants appeal from a final judgment, from an order granting a motion for entry thereof nunc pro tunc, and from an order denying a motion to set aside the said judgment and the order granting entry thereof. The action was one brought by plaintiff for rescission of a certain property settlement agreement between plaintiff and the defendant Anna Inez Mather, plaintiff's wife at the time. The complaint contained three counts for rescission, the first two based upon fraud and misrepresentation, and the third upon the alleged invalidity of the agreement because of its having been made in the Territory of Hawaii at a time when, according to plaintiff's allegations, the laws of that territory did not permit a wife to make a contract with her husband. The other defendants here appealing were joined in the action as administrators of the estate of Louis R. Greenfield, deceased, against which it was alleged plaintiff held an approved claim with an unpaid balance of $38,699, together with accrued interest. Part of the property transferred by the aforesaid agreement to the defendant Anna Inez Mather was a one-half interest in this claim. These defendant administrators filed an answer to the complaint herein to the effect that they held on account of the claim in question, and for whom it might concern, the sum of $12,549.60; and that various assignments and notices of assignment had been served upon these defendants affecting the said fund, defendant Anna Inez Mather, also known as Dorothy Devore Mather, being among the claimants to said fund. The defendant administrators then averred in their answer that they were holding the said sum subject to the order and direction of the court, and asked that they might be dismissed with their costs and released from all further liability toward the parties to the action and towards all claimants to the fund. This answer was in the nature of an interpleader. Successive demurrers to the third count of the complaint were sustained; and upon sustaining the fourth such demurrer the court denied plaintiff's request for leave to amend further. Thereafter, and before trial of the other counts, a purported judgment was entered January 4, 1935, upon the order sustaining the demurrer to the third count. On February 7, 1935, plaintiff filed notice of appeal from this purported judgment. On February 18, 1935, the action proceeded to trial upon the first and second counts of the complaint. At the conclusion of the trial the court found against plaintiff and in favor of defendant Anna Inez Mather. Among other facts, the court found that it was true that the plaintiff assigned and transferred to the defendant Anna Inez Mather a one-half interest in his title to the approved claim against the estate in question. The trial court also found generally that plaintiff and defendant were intermarried on December 18, 1925, separated June 10, 1933, divided their property June 16, 1933; and an interlocutory judgment of divorce of said marriage was entered August 18, 1933; that at the time of the marriage of plaintiff and said defendant each was possessed of separate property, and during their marriage each contributed to their community property; that at the time of their separation the property of plaintiff and defendant was intermingled and consisted of their separate, community and joint property; that at the time plaintiff and said defendant divided their property, June 16, 1933, such intermingled property was distributed between them by mutual consent, without fraud, undue influence or mistake on the part of either party, and such distribution was then and there wholly executed and completed. The trial court thereupon concluded that plaintiff should take nothing by reason of his complaint, that the answering defendants should have their costs, and that a temporary injunction theretofore allowed in the action should be and was dissolved. This injunction restrained the estate in question and the administrators thereof from paying any further moneys to the defendant Anna Inez Mather under the assignment made by plaintiff of the one-half interest in his claim against the said estate. The findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed March 12, 1935. Judgment was then entered March 14, 1935. However, this last document omits any reference to the previous disposition of the third count upon demurrer and on its face purports to be merely a judgment entered upon the findings and conclusions of the court at the close of the trial of the first and second counts of the complaint. Notice of appeal from this purported judgment was filed by plaintiff on March 15, 1935. The record reveals that the "purported" appeal from the "judgment" on the third count was dismissed by the Supreme Court on March 17, 1936; and that the appeal from the "judgment" on the first and second counts was dismissed by the same court on September 10, 1935. On December 7, 1939, defendants Anna Inez Mather and Lessie G. Williams made a motion for entry of a final judgment, nunc pro tunc as of March 14, 1935, which motion was granted; and such a judgment was so entered on December 12, 1939. It is from this judgment that the appeal herein is taken, as well as from the order granting the motion to enter such judgment and from the order denying the motion to set the said judgment aside.

Appellants contend that the motion for entry of the judgment nunc pro tunc was made upon insufficient notice; that the judgment was improper because the judge who ordered the same entered was not even on the bench at the time the case was tried, and made new findings and changed the findings and conclusions previously rendered by the trial judge; that a nunc pro tunc entry of judgment may not be used to correct an erroneous judgment, or to affect rights acquired in the interim; that neither the court nor the clerk may enter a judgment which does not conform to the order for judgment made by the trial court; that, moreover, the appeal taken from the "judgment" upon the demurrer sustained as to the third count stayed all further proceedings in the trial court, and proceedings thereafter taken in the trial court during the pendency of that appeal are void. Appellants also contend that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the amended third count of the complaint.

The status of the two judgments, upon the third and upon the first and second counts, has already been considered by the Supreme Court. Mather v. Mather, 5 Cal. 2d 617, 55 P.2d 1174; Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 93 P.2d 100. These two decisions hold in substance that the entry of such separate judgments constituted an attempt to try piecemeal a single and unseverable cause; that the judgments in question were partial, not final and hence nonappealable. It is apparent, therefore, that no final judgment was ever entered in the action, though the issues including that upon demurrer, appear by the record to have been disposed of by the rulings and findings of the trial court.

[1-7] By the final judgment, entered upon motion of the above named defendants, it was adjudged that plaintiff take nothing by his complaint or any of the counts thereof; that the injunction theretofore issued should be dissolved as of February 27, 1935; that the answering defendants Anna Inez Mather and Lessie G. Williams have their costs; and that the Greenfield estate and its administrators pay to Anna Inez Mather the sum of $12,549.60, admittedly in their hands subject to the order and direction of the court. Examination of the findings originally made by the trial court reveals that the final judgment entered nunc pro tunc is substantially in accord therewith. Appellants complain that the final judgment is void because it provides for the payment to Anna Inez Mather of the sum alleged to be in the hands of the administrators of the Greenfield estate. But the answer of these administrators placed this sum at the disposal of the court; and the court expressly found that plaintiff had assigned and transferred to Anna Inez Mather a one-half interest in his title to the claim against the estate. The recitals set forth in the final judgment reveal no material deviation from the original findings of the trial court. Appellants' contentions in this respect are without merit. Likewise without merit are the contentions with respect to the changes made in the conclusions reached. "Where findings are filed, which constitutes the rendition of judgment, it has been repeatedly held that the court retains power to amend or change the conclusions of law so as to point to a different judgment, and to enter a judgment different from that first announced, and that this power continues until the entry of the judgment, and such change may be made by a judge other than the one who tried the cause. Until the judgment is entered the trial court retains complete jurisdiction of the case, of which it cannot be divested by any unauthorized appeal, and the mere fact that it has been affirmed on such an appeal does not prevent the subsequent entry of another and different judgment, since no jurisdiction was acquired by the premature appeal and the trial court still retained the power to make a different judgment." 14 Cal.Jur. 938, and cases cited. (Italics added.) The foregoing quotation serves to dispose of practically all of appellants' contentions regarding both the entry of the final judgment and a stay of proceedings claimed to have been created by the premature appeal taken from the purported judgment upon demurrer to the third count. Authority of the court to enter judgment nunc pro tunc as in the instant case is established in Kowalsky v. Nicholson, 23 Cal.App. 160, 137 P. 607, and Haug v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.App.2d 547, 37 P.2d 1048. The failure of the court to have included all the issues in the judgment entered at the conclusion of the trial of the first and second counts appears from the record to have been one of clerical mistake or misprision only and not one of judicial error. See Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, v. Radford, 7 Cal.2d 205, 60 P.2d 119. The power to enter judgment nunc pro tunc under circumstances such as here presented is inherent in the courts. Norton v. City of Pomona, 5 Cal.2d 54, 62, 53 P.2d 952; In re Pillsbury's Estate, 175 Cal. 454, 461, 166 P. 11, 3 A.L.R. 1396. And such power may be exercised by the court at any time, on its own motion or that of a party with or without notice. E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Co., 22 Cal.App.2d 548, 71 P.2d 599. Appellants' contentions as to insufficiency of the notice of the motion for entry of the final judgment are therefore immaterial.

[8] However, the court found that Anna Inez Mather had but a one-half interest in the claim against the Greenfield estate. That being so, Anna Inez Mather should be entitled to only one-half of any moneys in the hands of the administrators for payment of the claim, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary. The record does not show that the entire sum was being held for Anna Inez Mather. The answer of the estate merely set forth that the sum was being held on account of the claim itself. It appears, therefore, that the final judgment should be corrected to accord with the finding as to Anna Inez Mather's one-half interest. That Anna Inez Mather was entitled to but one-half of any sums payable by the estate on the claim is further borne out by the indenture attached as an exhibit to plaintiff's complaint, wherein it is stated that "one-half (½) of all sums becoming payable to said grantor from said estate, both by way of principal and interest, shall hereafter be payable to said Dorothy Devore Mather."

[9] That the amount of the costs awarded in the final judgment differs from that previously set forth in the partial judgment, entered after trial on the first and second counts, is of no concern here. The question of costs is not properly before this court, and there is no basis for a decision thereon. It is impossible to ascertain from the record what the correct amount of costs should be, or that the amount thereof as stated in the final judgment is not correct.

[10] The fact that other and further proceedings appear to have been taken in another court before entry of the final judgment in the instant case did not serve to deprive the trial court of its power to enter judgment upon the findings made herein, and upon the ruling on demurrer.

[11-13] Appellants' contention as to the sufficiency of the third count of the complaint as amended is without substantial foundation. The agreement which forms the basis of that count is alleged by plaintiff to have been entered into on June 16, 1933. Upon the face of the complaint and the third count thereof it also appears that the defendant Anna Inez Mather obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from plaintiff in the State of California on August 16, 1933. It follows that when the agreement concerning the property was made the parties were residents of California, and the situs of the property involved was therefore California. The agreement was patently a property settlement, and, as such, vitally concerned the marital relationship of the parties. Under the circumstances, the applicable law should be that of the situs of the property and the domicil of the parties (see 5 Cal.Jur. 448 and 15 C.J.S., Conflict of Laws, § 16, p. 923); and the wife's capacity to make such an agreement should not be affected by the law of the place where the contract was made, where the parties were obviously transients. Moreover to apply the law of Hawaii, assuming the contract to have been invalid thereunder at the time, would violate the established policy of the State of California regarding the right of married women to contract with their husbands as to property settlements. The policy of this state regarding the relationship of husband and wife domiciled therein forms an integral part of any such agreement. (See 15 C.J.S., Conflict of Laws, § 16, pp. 920, 921, as to contracts where the lex loci contractus is contrary to the public policy of the forum.) The trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the third amended third count, and did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow plaintiff to make further amendment, since it is plain that no cause of action would lie on the basis of the law of Hawaii. It is also doubtful, in any event, that the third count in question set forth sufficient grounds for an action in rescission under the Civil Code (see §§ 1689 and 3406, Civ.Code; also § 3407 thereof), though this need not form the basis of the decision here.

Appellants are not correct in contending that the sufficiency of the third count was established by the decision in Greenfield v. Mather, supra. The Supreme Court in that case did not pass upon the sufficiency of plaintiff's cause of action as stated in the third count. The court merely held that there was no final judgment in the action in Los Angeles County and hence there was no valid plea in bar on that ground in an action brought in the City and County of San Francisco.

[14, 15] The order granting entry of judgment nunc pro tunc, being an intermediate ruling of the court, is not appealable. As to the order denying the motion to vacate the judgment, under the settled law of this state an appeal will not lie from such an order if the grounds upon which the moving party sought to have the judgment vacated were available on appeal from the judgment and existed before the entry thereof. Lawson v. Guild, 215 Cal. 378, 381, 10 P.2d 459; Barker v. Ackers, 29 Cal.App.2d 162, 176, 84 P.2d 264. It is obvious that appellants' attempt to appeal from the order denying vacation of the judgment merely constitutes a repetition of their appeal from the judgment.

The judgment appealed from is hereby modified to provide that the estate of Greenfield, Edna Greenfield, as administratrix, and Herman Wobber and Hugo D. Keil, as administrators, thereof, do pay to said Anna Inez Mather, otherwise known as Dorothy Devore Mather, one-half of the sum of $12,549.60, admittedly in their hands subject to the order and direction of the court in this action; and as so modified the said judgment is affirmed. The attempted appeals from the order granting the motion for entry of the final judgment nunc pro tunc and from the order denying the motion to set the said judgment aside are dismissed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 636

In re BAUER'S ESTATE.

BAUER v. WILLIAMS.

Civ. 13577.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

May 1, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 29, 1942.

1. Wills 🔑1

The right to make a will is a statutory privilege, not an inherent right, and hence a will must measure up to the requirements of the statute.

2. Wills 🔑98

A testator may incorporate an extrinsic document into a will, if such document is in existence at the time and the reference to it in the will clearly identifies it, or renders it capable of identification by extrinsic proof.

3. Wills 🔑98

An attempt to incorporate a future document in a will is ineffectual, since a testator cannot be permitted to create for himself the power to dispose of his property without complying with the formalities required in making a will.

4. Wills 🔑97

Where testatrix wrote a dated letter which constituted her holographic will, and thereafter she wrote three undated letters which were not referred to in the first letter, the three subsequent letters could not be read with the first letter as part of deceased's "holographic will". Probate Code, § 53.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Holographic Will".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harold B. Landreth, Judge pro tem.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Kathrena W. Bauer, deceased, wherein four letters in the handwriting and signed by the deceased were introduced as the alleged holographic will of the deceased. From an order of the trial court ruling that the letters constituted a holographic will, Paul S. Bauer, Sr., as guardian, etc., opposed by Elizabeth R. Williams, appeals.

Order reversed.

Joseph Musgrove, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duque & McKinley and Gabriel C. Duque, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

In this case the question for decision is whether four letters addressed to different individuals, all in the handwriting of and signed by the decedent, may together be classed as a holographic will merely because one was dated and all were found in a desk drawer intermingled with other papers.

Each of the three undated letters indicates not only a testamentary intent but that death was immediately impending. Death did occur by suicide. The dated letter specifically directed that upon the death of the writer all of her money in designated deposit accounts along with American Express Company checks should go to her mother. It made no reference to impending death. The other three letters were not shown to have been in existence at the time she wrote her letter of May 1, 1940. Moreover, they cut down the money bequest made to her mother in the letter of May 1st and give every indication they were drafted after that letter. This we think is persuasively shown by the fact that one of the undated letters—all of which were written on a different kind and size of paper from that of May 1st—refers to unsigned checks, all dated in June, 1940. The trial court ruled that all the letters constituted a single holographic will.

[1] By statutory definition a holographic will must be entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of the testator himself. Prob.Code, § 53. The right to make a will is a statutory privilege, not an inherent right, and so the will must measure up to the requirements of the statute. In the instant case the only document which complied with the statute was the letter dated May 1, 1940. May, then, the other letters, each of which standing alone could not be admitted to probate as a holographic will, nevertheless be admitted as being parts of the letter of May 1, 1940, in view of the fact that the letter of May 1 does not incorporate by reference or otherwise the three undated letters but is sufficient in and of itself as a holographic will?

[2-4] In Simon v. Grayson, 15 Cal.2d 531, 102 P.2d 1081, 1082, it is said: "It is the settled law in this state that a testator may incorporate an extrinsic document into his will, provided the document is in existence at the time and provided, further, that the reference to it in the will clearly identifies it, or renders it capable of identification by extrinsic proof. * * * An attempt to incorporate a future document is ineffectual, because a testator cannot be permitted to create for himself the power to dispose of his property without complying with the formalities required in making a will." See, also, to the same effect, In re Estate of Rath, 10 Cal.2d 399, 75 P.2d 509, 115 A.L.R. 836; Garde v. Goldsmith, 204 Cal. 166, 267 P. 104; In re Estate of Doane, 190 Cal. 412, 213 P. 53, and In re Shillaber's Estate, 74 Cal. 144, 15 P.2d 453, 5 Am.St. Rep. 433. Moreover, there is nothing in the three undated letters indicating that they were to be read or construed as a part of decedent's holographic will dated May 1, 1940. In re Keith's Estate, 173 Cal. 276, 159 P. 705; In re Estate of Meade, 118 Cal. 428, 50 P. 541, 62 Am.St.Rep. 244; In re Estate of Hughes, 140 Cal.App. 97, 35 P.2d 204. Even if there had been a statement in any one of these undated letters to the effect that such letter was to be read and construed with the letter of May 1, 1940, the desire of the testator could not be effectuated, as such undated letters failed to comply with the statutory requirement that they be dated.

Only the letter of May 1, 1940, should have been admitted to probate. The order is reversed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 286

SELINGER v. MILLY et al.

Civ. 6629.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 16, 1942.

1. Homestead 🔑135

Statutes in force at the time of husband's death determine the devolution of homestead selected by husband from community property during coverture and recorded while both husband and wife were living. Code Civ.Proc. § 1474 (St.1880, p. 88); Civ.Code, § 1265 (St.1909, p. 972).

2. Homestead 🔑150(2)

A probate court order setting aside the homestead to surviving spouse is ineffective and serves only to withdraw the premises from administration and from further consideration by the court.

3. Homestead 🔑177(1)

Surviving widow may by conduct be "estopped" from claiming the homestead, and devisees of widow being in privity with their testatrix are bound by such estoppel.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

4. Estoppel ⚷52

Estoppel is not favored by the courts.

5. Homestead ⚷154

Exclusive method by which the abandonment of a homestead is accomplished is provided by statute, and courts do not favor a finding of abandonment based on estoppel. Civ.Code, § 1243.

6. Estoppel ⚷54

Where both parties have the same means of ascertaining the truth, there can be no "estoppel".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

7. Estoppel ⚷52

To constitute an equitable "estoppel" with respect to the title of property, it must appear that party to estoppel has made admissions or declarations, or done acts with the intention of deceiving the other party with regard to title, or with such culpable negligence as to amount to a constructive fraud, and that at the time he was apprised of the true state of his own title and that the other party had no knowledge thereof nor any convenient or ready means of acquiring such knowledge.

8. Homestead ⚷177(1)

The conduct of administration of testator's estate by surviving widow as executrix and distribution decree entered therein in accordance with will devising to widow only a life estate in premises that had been selected from community property and recorded as testator's homestead with remainder to children did not "estop" widow and those claiming under her from asserting that homestead vested absolutely in widow as against one who loaned money to one of testator's children and took an assignment of his interest in estate as security for renewal thereof after fact of testator's death had been established and made of record. Code Civ.Proc. § 1474 (St.1880, p. 88); § 1723; Civ.Code, § 1265 (St.1909, p. 972); Civ.Code, § 1243.

9. Judgment ⚷714(1)

Adjudication that creditor had a lien upon the portion of remainder interest in estate of testator which vested in debtor upon testator's death, and which decree of distribution directed be delivered to debtor upon death of testator's widow, was not "res judicata" as to creditor's interest in testator's homestead which notwithstanding provisions of will upon testator's death vested absolutely in his widow. Code Civ.Proc. § 1474 (St.1880, p. 88); Civ.Code, § 1265 (St. 1909, p. 972).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Action by Charles Selinger against Louise Milly and others for partition of certain realty, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint seeking to quiet title in themselves. From an interlocutory decree adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of an undivided one fifth interest in the realty, defendants appeal.

Decree reversed and cause remanded with directions.

Albert J. McGuire and M. M. Getz, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Norman Elkington, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HELD, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is from an interlocutory decree entered in an action brought by plaintiff, Charles Selinger, to obtain a partition of certain real property in the City and County of San Francisco. An answer denying that plaintiff has any interest in the premises was filed; and by cross-complaint, the appellants sought to quiet title in themselves. The trial court adjudged plaintiff to be the owner of an undivided one-fifth interest in the premises, and appellants to be the owners of the remaining four-fifths interest. The latter, claiming title to the property to the exclusion of any interest in plaintiff, have appealed.

The record discloses that Jerome Milly and Louisa Milly were husband and wife, and that Albert J. Milly, Emil F. Milly, Louise Milly (now Rothenbusch), Annie Krueckel, and Jerome M. Milly were their children. Jerome Milly died on January 26, 1911, and Louisa Milly died on June 15, 1935. Emil F. Milly pre-deceased his mother, and left surviving two children, Dorothy and Jerome Milly. During coverture, Jerome Milly and Louisa Milly acquired the premises here involved as community property, and while they were the owners thereof, the husband, on February 23, 1889, selected the same as a homestead by a declaration duly executed and recorded. No conveyance or formal abandonment of the homestead was ever made by the spouses, and it is the contention of appellants that on the death of Jerome Milly, on January 26, 1911, title to the homestead premises vested absolutely in Louisa Milly, his surviving widow, subject to testamentary disposition by her on her death.

[1, 2] Section 1474, Code of Civil Procedure, then in force, provided that "If the homestead selected by the husband and wife, or either of them, during their coverture, and recorded while both were living, was selected from the community property * * it vests, on the death of the husband or wife, absolutely in the survivor." Stats.1880, page 88. Section 1265, Civil Code, then also in force, provided that, "From and after the time the declaration is filed for record, the premises therein described constitute a homestead. If the selection was made by a married person from the community property * * * the land so selected on the death of either spouse, vests in the survivor." Stats.1909, page 972. These sections, being in force at the time of the death of Jerome Milly, determine the devolution of the homestead. In re Wright's Estate, 98 Cal.App. 633, 277 P. 372; Patchett v. Webber, 198 Cal. 440, 245 P. 422. An order by the Probate Court setting apart the homestead to the survivor was held, in Re Simonton's Estate, 183 Cal. 53, 190 P. 442, 445, to be "wholly unnecessary and ineffective," and in Saddlemire v. Stockton Savings, etc., Soc., 144 Cal. 650, 79 P. 381, to serve only to withdraw the premises from administration and from further consideration by the court. 11a Cal.Jur. page 603.

It is the contention of respondent that, though the homestead would ordinarily have vested in Louisa Milly, she, during her lifetime, was estopped, and appellants, being in privity with her, are now estopped from so claiming. Such estoppel, it is contended, arises out of the conduct of Louisa Milly, and the record in the probate proceedings of her husband, Jerome Milly. The latter left a will, whereby he gave to his widow a life estate in the residue of his estate, with remainder over to his children, including Albert J. Milly. The will was admitted to probate, and Louisa Milly was appointed executrix thereof. No order setting apart the homestead was sought or made, and no recognition given the homestead until some years thereafter when, in 1928, a petition by the surviving widow to have the fact of the death of Jerome Milly established, was filed under section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure (now section 1170, Probate Code). A decree establishing the fact of death was entered on May 23, 1928.

During the administration of the estate of Jerome Milly, deceased, the executrix returned an inventory of the property thereof, and included therein, as a portion of her husband's estate, the premises covered by the homestead declaration. In a petition for distribution of the residue of the estate, subsequently filed, she also included the homestead premises, and a decree of distribution was made accordingly on May 6, 1912. This decree purported to distribute to the surviving widow a life estate in the property, with remainder over to the five children, among them, Albert J. Milly.

On March 1, 1925, respondent loaned to Albert J. Milly the sum of $1,500, and received a promissory note therefor. On December 1, 1929, the note remaining unpaid, Albert J. Milly executed a renewal thereof for $1,914, the amount then due for unpaid principal and accrued interest. Prior to the execution of the renewal note, respondent had threatened suit on the original obligation unless the same were paid or security given. Albert J. Milly then represented to the respondent that he was the owner of an undivided one-fifth remainder interest in the residue of the estate of his father, Jerome Milly. As security for the payment of the obligation, he executed to respondent, with the renewal note, an assignment of such remainder interest. Subsequently, respondent brought suit to foreclose the lien created by said assignment; judgment was rendered in his favor; a sale of the property here involved was had, and commissioner's deed was issued to respondent, under which he now claims title to the one-fifth interest purportedly distributed to Albert J. Milly by the decree of distribution entered in the estate of his father.

Louisa Milly died testate. Her will devised the homestead to Dorothy Milly, Jerome Milly, Jerome C. Milly, Louise Rothenbusch, and Annie Krueckel, in the following proportions: One-ninth thereof to each of the first three named, and one-third thereof to each of the last two named. Albert J. Milly was not designated as a devisee under the will. Pending administration of the estate, Annie Krueckel assigned her interest therein in equal shares to Annette Krueckel and Frank Krueckel, Jr. On September 12, 1938, a decree of distribution was entered in the estate of Louisa Milly, deceased, purporting to distribute the homestead premises to Dorothy Milly, Jerome Milly, Jerome C. Milly, Louise Rothenbusch, Annette Krueckel and Frank Krueckel, Jr., the appellants herein, and they now claim title under the terms of that decree, to the exclusion of respondent.

The question arises now whether, on the death of Jerome Milly, the homestead premises vested in his surviving widow, and, under the decree of distribution in her estate, passed to the appellants, or whether appellants, by reason of the conduct of their mother, and the decree of distribution in the estate of Jerome Milly, deceased, are estopped to claim through the homestead.

[3-5] That the surviving widow may, by conduct, be estopped from claiming the homestead, is recognized in 11a Cal.Jur., page 587, and that devisees, being in privity with the testator, are bound by such estoppel, is the rule. 21 Corpus Juris, page 1118. Estoppel, however, is not favored by the courts. Lorenz v. Rousseau, 85 Cal. App. 1, 258 P. 690; Hammond Lbr. Co. v. Weeks, 105 Cal.App. 315, 287 P. 573. Particularly is this true where the abandonment of a homestead is claimed. The statute provides an exclusive method by which an abandonment is accomplished. Civil Code, sec. 1243.

In Flege v. Garvey, 47 Cal. 371, the husband became insane after he and his wife appropriated certain premises as a homestead. A guardian of his estate was appointed. Thereafter, an order was made by the probate court directing the sale of the homestead, and it was sold by the guardian. Subsequently, the wife brought suit to recover the premises, relying on the declaration of homestead. Defendant claimed under the guardian's sale, and contended that the wife was estopped to deny its validity, because "she knew of the pendency of the proceedings in the Probate Court, urged the sale, and received from the guardian a portion of the proceeds thereof." The Supreme Court there held that the deed of the guardian was invalid to transfer the title to the homestead, because of the statutory requirement that a conveyance of the homestead be executed by both husband and wife. Of the defendant's claim that the wife was estopped by her conduct and participation in the proceeds of the sale, the court said that these matters do not amount to an estoppel in pais, and that the proceedings in the probate court did not amount to an estoppel by matter of record. The same strict application of the statute was made in Gagliardo v. Dumont, 54 Cal. 496, where a homestead had been declared by husband and wife. The husband gave to another a power of attorney to sell all the real estate which belonged to him. Subsequently, the attorney in fact of the husband sold and conveyed the homestead premises, the wife joining in the deed. Thereafter, the wife died, and the husband brought an action against the claimant under the purchaser. The supreme court held that on the death of the wife, the title to the homestead vested in the husband, and that he held as against the purchaser. In Dixon v. Russell, 9 Cal.2d 262, 70 P.2d 196, 198, the wife recorded a homestead for the joint benefit of both spouses on community property of herself and her husband. Thereafter, she conveyed the premises to the husband, who executed to the wife a deed of trust to secure an indebtedness to her. In the deed, she expressly released and waived all rights under and by virtue of the homestead laws. Thereafter, she asserted a right in the property, and the husband brought an action to quiet title. The court held that the deed of the wife was ineffective to accomplish an alienation of the homestead, and that the waiver in the deed did not constitute an abandonment. It was there said: "The appellant suggests that by her deed the wife voluntarily surrendered her interest in the homestead and that she should now be held to have waived all claim to the premises. Flege v. Garvey [47 Cal. 371, 376], supra, and Gagliardo v. Dumont [54 Cal. 496, 499] supra, are directly to the point that there can be no surrender except in the mode prescribed by the statute. If there can be no surrender of the interest by such a deed there could be no waiver of the right to assert the interest except by the manner prescribed in the statute."

To the same effect are Hart v. Taber, 161 Cal. 20, 118 P. 252, and Williams v. Williams, 170 Cal. 625, 151 P. 10, as well as Rocha v. Rocha, 197 Cal. 396, 240 P. 1010. In the last cited case, there were involved homestead premises owned by Antonio Jose Rocha and Ventura L. de Rocha, husband and wife. The husband died, and it does not appear that proceedings were taken to adjudicate the fact of his death, nor was administration had upon his estate. After the husband's death, the widow executed a deed of the premises to her son Antonio, who, some years thereafter, sought to obtain a loan on the property, and then discovered that no proceedings had been taken of record to show that the homestead had vested in his mother as surviving spouse. He thereupon prayed for letters of administration on his father's estate, and, in the inventory, he returned the homestead premises as property of the estate. Proceedings were had, culminating in an order setting apart the premises to his mother as a homestead, and thereafter she executed a second deed to him. The heirs of the father, other than defendant, sought to recover the premises. It was their contention that defendant Antonio was estopped to assert that the allegations of the petition for letters of administration and the inventory as to the ownership of the property did not truly state the facts. The supreme court held there was no estoppel arising out of such allegations.

Respondent herein, in support of his contention that appellants are estopped, cites Ions v. Harbison, 112 Cal. 260, 44 P. 572, and Raggio v. Palmtag, 155 Cal. 797, 103 P. 312. In the former case, one Bell and his wife had executed a mortgage to Flagg; thereafter, Mrs. Bell declared a homestead on the property. Subsequently, she died, and the husband was appointed administrator of her estate. A sale in probate was made to Harbison, the purchase price was paid to the administrator, and he expended the major portion thereof in the discharge of the mortgage debt. Thereafter, the husband, in his individual capacity, accepted $10.00 from Ions, the plaintiff in that action, for a quitclaim deed, and he brought suit to quiet title against Harbison, the purchaser at the probate sale. Judgment was rendered in favor of Ions in the trial court, and this, on appeal, was reversed. The Supreme Court [112 Cal. 260, 44 P. 573], cited section 1475, Code of Civil Procedure, and said that the probate court "has jurisdiction over the homestead for some purposes," but added: "But conceding, for the sake of the argument, that the court had no jurisdiction, and that the sale was void, it would seem to be beyond question that Bell would have been estopped to claim title to the land as against the defendant; and, if so, the plaintiff, claiming under Bell, with knowledge of the facts, is equally estopped. Bell asserted in a solemn judicial proceeding that the title to the property was in the estate of his deceased wife, and not in himself. He received the purchase money, and applied it to the payment of the mortgage debt, which was a valid lien upon the land for which he, as well as the estate, was liable, and to the payment of the funeral expenses and costs of administration which he had incurred, and, having conveyed the property to the defendant, put him in possession. There was no surplus arising from the sale. He was the sole beneficiary, and, upon respondent's theory, the sole owner. To retain these benefits resulting from the payment of the purchase money by the defendant, and at the same time recover the property from him, would be a fraud which a court of equity will not permit. He had full knowledge of all the facts affecting his title. His mistake was one of law, as was that also of the defendant; but to permit Bell to retain the purchase money and the property too is to give him a very profitable relief from his mistake, while it would visit upon the defendant a severe penalty for the same mistake."

Of the plaintiff in that case, the court said: "He was not a purchaser in good faith. The price paid for the quitclaim, though sufficient as a consideration between him and Bell, indicates very clearly that he was speculating in a small way upon the supposed misfortunes of another. He understood he was purchasing this lawsuit, which he commenced two days thereafter, and, having had such enjoyment as it afforded, he can not reasonably complain if he gets no more."

In Raggio v. Palmtag, supra, a homestead vested in Maria Ynezia Raggio on the death of her husband, Luis Raggio, and plaintiff was appointed administrator of his estate. Prior to the husband's death, the spouses had executed a mortgage to defendant Palmtag. Subsequently, Mrs. Raggio also died, and thereafter the administrator of the husband's estate obtained an order of court to sell the homestead premises which constituted the entire estate. The mortgagee, Palmtag, bought the property for a sum in excess of the amount due on the mortgage note. When plaintiff brought his action, she, claiming to be a mortgagee in possession, sought to have her note and mortgage reinstated and restored, and granted a foreclosure. The court in following the case of Ions v. Harbison, supra, as to jurisdiction, said: "We can see no reason for recalling or changing anything in that case, particularly in view of the conclusions reached in the decision of the later case of Burns v. Hiatt, supra [149 Cal. 617, 621, 87 P. 196, 117 Am.St.Rep. 157]." [155 Cal. 797, 103 P. 315.] The latter case held that an action will not lie against a mortgagee in possession without paying or tendering the amount due on the mortgage. It is evident that the decision in Raggio v. Palmtag was largely influenced by the conclusions reached in Burns v. Hiatt, supra. Of the plaintiff in the Raggio case, the court said: "He can hardly be looked upon as a suitor to be highly considered by a court of equity."

[6] We have here a case in no way comparable with either Ions v. Harbison, supra, or Raggio v. Palmtag, supra. There is no evidence here that Mrs. Milly ever made any representation to respondent to induce the latter to make a loan to Albert J. Milly, or that she received the slightest advantage from said loan. There is no evidence that the original loan was made in reliance upon any interest that Albert J. Milly claimed in the estate of his father. When the renewal note and assignment were executed, an examination of the public records would have disclosed the declaration of homestead and the subsequent decree establishing the fact of the death of Jerome Milly. The respondent had the means of ascertaining the true state of the title prior to accepting the assignment as a condition to withholding suit on the original note. It has been held that where both parties have the same means of ascertaining the truth, there can be no estoppel. Jones v. Coulter, 75 Cal.App. 540, 243 P. 487. In Eltinge v. Santos, 171 Cal. 278, 152 P. 915, 918, Ann.Cas.1917A, 1143, the court said: "The rights of plaintiff depended upon matters of record which were equally open to the knowledge of both the plaintiff and the defendant. 'An estoppel cannot exist where the knowledge of both parties is equal, and nothing is done by the one to mislead the other.'" (Citing cases.)

[7] In Gioscio v. Lautenschlager, 23 Cal.App.2d 616, 73 P.2d 1230, 1232, the court denied the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel for the reason that the party against whom it was sought to invoke the doctrine had personally never received any benefit from the money paid by the purchaser, nor made any admissions or declarations, or done any act with the intention of deceiving the other party with regard to the title. The court there quoted with approval from Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 85 Am.Dec. 157, as follows: "In order to constitute an equitable estoppel with respect to the title of property, it must appear that the party to be estopped has made admissions or declarations, or done acts with the intention of deceiving the other party with regard to the title, or with such carelessness or culpable negligence as to amount to a constructive fraud, and that at the time of making the admissions or declarations, or doing the act, he was apprised of the true state of his own title, and that the other party was not only destitute of all knowledge of the true state of the title, but also of all convenient or ready means of acquiring such knowledge."

[8] We conclude that upon the death of Jerome Milly, title to the homestead premises vested absolutely in Louisa Milly, his surviving widow; that the provisions of the decree of distribution in the estate of Jerome Milly, deceased, did not divest her of that title; and that her conduct of the administration of the estate of her deceased husband and allegations made by her in that proceeding did not serve to create an estoppel as against her or those claiming under her.

[9] In view of the conclusion we have reached that upon the death of Jerome Milly no interest in the homestead premises vested in Albert J. Milly, it is not necessary to consider the special defense of res adjudicata raised by respondent. The judgment in the action relied on as a prior adjudication, was to the effect that respondent had a lien "upon the portion of the remainder of both the real and personal estate of Jerome Milly, deceased, which vested in said Albert J. Milly upon the death of Jerome Milly, and which is directed by the decree of distribution made and entered in the matter of the Estate of Jerome Milly, deceased, on the 6th day of May, 1912, to be delivered upon the death or remarriage of Louisa Milly, now deceased, to said Albert J. Milly." It thus appears that the judgment affected only the estate which vested in Albert J. Milly, upon the death of his father, and, as the property here involved did not so vest, title thereto was not affected by the judgment in the prior action.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of appellants, quieting their title to said premises in the proportion of an undivided one-third interest to Louise Rothenbusch, an undivided one-sixth interest each to Annette Krueckel and Frank Krueckel, Jr., and an undivided one-ninth interest each to Jerome Milly, Jerome C. Milly, and Dorothy Milly.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 478

BEAUDRY v. PETERSON.

Civ. 6665.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 15, 1942.

Appeal and error 🔑612(4)

Where order granting new trial, notice of appeal, and all other pleadings and proceedings were presented to trial judge for settlement in one document attached to reporter's transcript of evidence, and judge certified to correctness of evidence and further certified that transcript was true and correct and that it was settled and allowed, "transcript" certified included everything attached to document presented to judge. Code Civ.Proc. § 953a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Transcript".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Dal M. Lemmon, Judge.

On petition for rehearing.

Petition denied.

Prior opinion, 123 P.2d 108.

Ronald D. Wolfe, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles L. Gilmore, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Upon petition for rehearing the respondent suggests that the order of the trial court granting a new trial, and the notice of appeal therefrom, are not properly certified by the judge as required by section 953 a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Drummond v. Drummond, 39 Cal.App.2d 418, 422, 103 P.2d 217; 2 Cal.Jur. 607, sec. 329. No motion to dismiss this appeal was made under rule V of the rules for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, for the lack of a proper certificate of the judge, or at all. On examining the transcript on appeal it appears that the order granting a new trial, the notice of appeal, and all other pleadings and proceedings in the case were presented to the judge for settlement in one document attached to the reporter's transcript of the evidence, and that the judge certified on June 18, 1941, to the correctness of the 138 pages of evidence adduced at the trial, and further certified to the proceedings attached thereto, including the order granting a new trial and the notice of appeal, in the following language: "I further certify that the transcript is true and correct, and the same is hereby settled and allowed."

We assume the "transcript" which was certified by the judge, as required by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, included everything attached to the document which was presented to him for the purpose of settling the same.

There is no merit in the suggestion that the proceedings which transpired subsequent to the entry of judgment are not properly certified by the judge.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 275

In re DOWNEY'S ESTATE.

AMERICAN TRUST CO. v. MICKEY et al.

Civ. 12104.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 12, 1942.

1. Wills 🔑52(1)

In will contest burden of proving unsoundness of mind of testatrix sufficient to invalidate a will was on contestants.

2. Wills 🔑53(2)

In will contest, the proof as to alleged unsoundness of mind of testatrix should be directed to the time when the will was executed.

3. Wills 🔑324(1)

In will contest it was the province of jury to draw inferences of fact from evidence before them, regulated by the rules of law stated by the court and assisted in that function by the opinion of experts.

4. Wills 🔑324(1)

In will contest it was the duty of the court to determine whether there was any satisfactory evidence to justify conclusion reached by the jury.

5. Evidence ⚷571(2)

The opinion of a witness that testatrix was of unsound mind is not stronger in evidentiary weight to the reasons upon which witness bases his opinion.

6. Wills ⚷50

A testator is of "sound and disposing mind and memory", if at time of making will he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property, and to remember and understand his relations to the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by provisions of the will.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Sound and Disposing Mind and Memory".

7. Wills ⚷43, 45, 47

In determining alleged unsoundness of mind of testatrix, the administration of morphine, physical disability, and age are all factors to be considered.

8. Wills ⚷324(2)

In will contest based on alleged lack of testamentary capacity, whether the condition of testatrix would not and did not improve within one hour after she was last seen by attending physician prior to execution of will, as testified by physician, was a question for the jury.

9. Wills ⚷303(2)

Where the woman in charge of hospital in which testatrix was a patient signed as a subscribing witness only after questioning testamentary capacity of testatrix and being erroneously assured by scrivener that attending physician had pronounced her competent, witness did not stultify herself by testifying in will contest that testatrix was partially irrational at the time will was executed.

10. Wills ⚷386

In will contest all questions of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses are for the jury and trial court, and if there is any substantial evidence to support the finding or verdict it cannot be set aside, even though reviewing court may believe the great preponderance of the evidence was the other way.

11. Wills ⚷31

If insanity of the testator is proved, the effect of such proof upon the validity of the will must be determined by the general rule regarding the requisites of testamentary capacity.

12. Wills ⚷55(1)

Evidence sustained finding that testatrix who was in a toxic condition as the result of kidney infection which resulted in death approximately 19 days after will was executed and dopey from repeated injections of morphine sulphate lacked testamentary capacity when will was executed approximately an hour after being returned to her room after spending two hours in surgery.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Hilliard Comstock, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Alice Downey, deceased, upon petition filed by Charles Mickey and others contesting the probate of deceased's will which had previously been admitted to probate on the petition of the American Trust Company, named as executor therein. From an order revoking probate of the will, the proponent appeals.

Order affirmed.

A. W. Hollingsworth, of Santa Rosa, and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Geary & Tauser, of Santa Rosa, and A. Dal Thomson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

The will of Alice Downey, deceased, was admitted to probate on June 23, 1939, on the petition of American Trust Company, the executor named in her will. Thereafter Charles Mickey and several other persons, claiming to be heirs of the decedent, filed a contest on the ground of testamentary incapacity. Each and all of the contestants are nephews and nieces of Dr. Wallace Downey, the deceased husband of Alice Downey. The contest was heard before the trial court sitting with a jury. At the close of contestants' case the proponent moved for a nonsuit. The motion was denied. After the conclusion of the introduction of evidence the proponent moved for a directed verdict. The motion was denied. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the contestants. The proponent moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The motion was denied. Thereupon judgment was entered on the verdict and the order admitting the will to probate was revoked on December 24, 1940. From the order of revocation the proponent has appealed.

Prior to the month of May, 1939, the decedent Mrs. Alice Downey had been residing in her home at Bay in Sonoma County, California. She was a widow and lived alone. But nearby Carl Engleman and his wife resided. Mr. Engleman acted as gardener for the decedent and did chores for her. Dr. Wallace Downey, the decedent's husband, died in 1937 and by his will he left all of his property to his surviving widow. Dr. and Mrs. Downey had no children but Dr. Downey left surviving him a number of nephews and nieces.

In the morning of May 8, 1939, when Mr. Engleman called at the home of Mrs. Downey, she was ill. When he entered the house he found her lying on a couch suffering from a pain in the lower part of her abdominal cavity. The pain was so intense that she had remained on the couch all night and she was too ill to go to the door and open it or to speak loud enough for him to hear her. So he opened the door and walked in. Assisted by his wife he placed Mrs. Downey in her car, drove to Sebastopol, and took her to the office of Dr. Marsh. At that time Mr. Engleman testified she was "writhing" in pain. After making a preliminary examination Dr. Marsh directed the decedent to go immediately to Hillside Hospital in Sebastopol and he followed in a few minutes. The patient was put to bed and almost at once she was given an injection of morphine sulphate.

Dr. Marsh diagnosed the decedent's ailment as a disease of the kidneys. He found her to be in such severe pain that he could not operate. Therefore he directed such care and treatment as would build up the patient before an operation should be performed. The patient continued to suffer intense pain. Morphine sulphate was injected in one-quarter grain doses—on May 8, one dose; May 9, six doses; May 10, two doses; May 11, two doses; and on May 12, one dose at 3:30 a. m., one at 10 a. m., one at 1 p. m., one at 6:45 p. m., and one at 8:30 p. m. (As will later be noted the will in dispute was signed at about 8 p. m.)

From May 8 to May 13, the patient was at all times suffering pain and sometimes the pain was intense. The patient had severe vomiting spells commencing May 8, and continuing until after May 12. As shown by the charts she was irrational on May 10, also on May 11 and May 12. On the latter date the patient got out of bed at 3:30 a. m., and again at 6:30 a. m.

While in the operating room on May 12, 1939, at 6:45 p. m. a dose of morphine sulphate was injected by Dr. Marsh. At 7 p. m. she was taken to her bed. At 7:10 she was drowsy and bewildered when Mrs. Custard, the day nurse, left.

The contestants called Dr. Marsh as a witness. At the same time they produced and had in the courtroom the chart kept by the nurses at Hillside Hospital from the time that Mrs. Downey entered the hospital. They also had produced and had in the courtroom X-ray photographs. Among other things he testified as follows: "I first saw Mrs. Downey as a patient on May 8, 1939, at my office in Sebastopol, California. Later on the same day I saw her at the Hillside Hospital in Sebastopol. On that date I made an examination of her body. I was not her doctor but I let her in one of the side rooms and took her temperature. The next day I made a diagnosis of her physical condition. She was cystoscoped in surgery. I found that she had pus coming from the bladder, that organ was quite inflamed. The mucous membrane was very swollen and inflamed and we passed a catheter through the ureter tubes leading from the kidney to the bladder. Her urine was colored. In the kidneys we injected an opaque material which made them show up in the X-rays. There was pus coming from the right kidney also. There was blood in the urine. She was running a fever and she had pain. The right kidney was badly dilated, four or five times the normal size and the examination showed there was a bad infection of that kidney. A cystoscope has two runways where small catheters, small hollow tubes, may be passed up into the kidney pelvis. We were able to do that on Mrs. Downey. We did so on the 9th of May, the day after she entered the hospital. Mrs. Downey suffered pain as the result of this examination and treatment. The passing of the catheter is a very painful procedure. She was in very great pain to start in with and naturally passing the instrument into the bladder, the passing of a catheter up into the ureter gave more pain. A catheter was left in place on the right side for drainage purposes. I also took X-rays of her body on the 20th. The X-rays are present. I took those X-rays myself. (Here the doctor read the X-rays to the jury.) Her condition on the 20th as compared to the 12th was very much worse. Mrs. Downey died May 31. Hospital records were kept with respect to her condition commencing with the 8th of May up to the date of her death. They are the records shown me as Exhibit 2. From time to time while Mrs. Downey was in the hospital under my care I examined those records. They were kept under my supervision. I gave the nurses who cared for Mrs. Downey instructions. One nurse was on general duty for several days. On May 12 she had a special nurse. On that day Mrs. Downey was very much worse and we put special nurses on because she started to get irrational. She seemed to be very much worse, that is the reason we put special nurses on—in order to give her better care. I was the doctor in chief on her case from the 8th until the date of her demise. I looked at the records from time to time. I prescribed on the 8th of May, 1939, narcotics for Mrs. Downey. I prescribed morphine sulphate. The nurse was directed to give her a quarter grain every four hours when necessary for pain. It was to be administered hypodermically. Characterizing Mrs. Downey's illness on May 12, 1939, I would say she was desperately ill. On that date I finished surgery at 7 o'clock that evening. She was in surgery from 5 until 7. During that time she was given an injection of morphine sulphate by me about 6:45. On that occasion the cystoscope instrument which I have described was introduced into the bladder and catheters were passed. The catheters are about eighteen inches long. In diameter they range from the size of a small lead in a lead pencil to five or six times that size. So far as I could see the openings into the bladder were badly inflamed, each member was badly swollen. Putting those catheters into the bladder through the openings which were badly inflamed would cause still more pain. I don't recollect of her objecting, she kept moaning and groaning. To a person not so far advanced with this infection it is a painful process. Her condition on May 12, as compared with the 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th, was very much worse. She seemed to have more pain, she seemed to be more doped. She was taken to the surgery room and returned from it on a stretcher on wheels. She was very sick and naturally a person who has been as sick as she was, running a fever, and toxic from poisoning, and under the influence of morphine, she required aid to get back into bed. She was put to bed about 7 o'clock. At that time she was of sound mind probably but rather doped. Her condition was worse than it had been on the 8th. She was very much doped from having been in surgery. She was doped from the morphine and I would say she was rather doped and not very clear. Her condition would not have improved within a half or three quarters of an hour after I left her.

Mr. Tauzer: Q. Now would you say that between the hours we will say of 7 and 8 o'clock Mrs. Downey in your opinion would be able to know the character, nature and extent of her property, the persons to whom she might determine to take her property, the natural objects of her bounty, and to understand the nature of a last will and testament that she made and allegedly signed? A. She wouldn't probably know the entire extent of it. Probably her mentality was dull from the effects of the morphine, therefore I would say that she was not capable of signing a will during that time. * * *

"Mr. Tauzer: Q. Would you state the reason for your opinion, Dr. Marsh? A. In the first place the woman was very toxic and sick. By toxic I mean by poison from the infected kidney circulating in the blood stream causing a fever, headache, drowsiness. That is separate from the effects that morphine might have upon the individual. It is to start with. In the second place she was brought to surgery which is a very disturbing factor to such a sick person and led to a sort of a shocked state. It was a shock to the nervous system to be brought to the surgery. In the third place she had morphine. That would have the effect to make her drowsy. It affects the senses of sight, smell and taste and depresses the cerebrum—the centers of the intellect, the portion of the brain that we think with. She did not talk to me at all. She could have been aroused so that she could have understood a few words. In expressing my opinion I have taken into consideration the age of Mrs. Downey that would have an effect. A person as he grows older cannot withstand sickness or illness or shock like a younger person.

"On my direct examination I stated that Mrs. Downey was of sound mind. By that I meant that she wasn't crazy. The cause of the dopeyness was not entirely the morphine. Her toxic condition and morphine were some of the causes of the dopeyness. At 7 o'clock the pain was lessening, the morphine would be taking more effect. The patient would be continuing to get more dopey and the pain would lessen. On the 12th the patient had not begun to develop a tolerance for morphine. In three days no one develops a tolerance for morphine. I have stated what was her mental condition for an hour or so after I left the hospital. That opinion was based upon the fact that she was in a toxic condition and had been given morphine at about 6:45. That enters into the opinion also. If I assume that at about 8 o'clock a draft of an instrument was read to Mrs. Downey and that she asked that certain changes be made in it, such fact would not change my opinion. The effect of the morphine starts in ten or fifteen minutes and continues for three or four hours. During two hours after the injection of morphine it should still be in full force as to the killing of pain and deadening the senses. In asking to have the instrument changed Mrs. Downey might remember an item or two but she might not remember everything. Under the influence of morphine a person isn't mentally clear, that is they are dopey. She might remember some property she had in the state and not remember that she had some in Sonoma County. When one is in a toxic condition and having a shot of morphine she doesn't know the full extent of her property. When she asked the draftsman to make a change that does not alter my opinion. She was able to remember certain pieces of her property or parcels of property but I do not believe that she could have remembered all. That opinion is based on my own observation of the patient. It is independent of the assumed directions given to the draftsman. If she had been aroused she might have recalled certain items of property but not the majority, character and extent of it. At the time she gave directions to Mr. Hollingsworth she might have been capable of knowing and understanding that she was giving such directions. I would not go any further than to say she might have been. She might not even realize how much more she had. She might have known at that time that she was making that statement but under the influence of morphine she might have immediately forgotten about it. My particular observation in this particular case had to do with my opinion. When a doctor comes to see a patient the doctor doesn't just look at them and feel their pulse and look at their tongue and probably go in with a stethoscope. You try to get the patient in conversation. At no time during Mrs. Downey's illness was she communicative to me in any way. She was toxic during the entire illness and was more or less bad, didn't communicate to me, I couldn't even speak about the weather. She had no reply to make even about the weather. The fact that Mrs. Downey discussed trust companies and selected one to act as executor does not alter my opinion. She might have known that she was executing a will. She might not have realized that she was disposing of her property after her death. She might not have had the full realization of it. On May 12, the day the will was made, Mr. Hollingsworth did not call on me. He did call on me May 9. At that time I told him that Mrs. Downey was a very sick woman and if he wanted a will made it would have to be done very soon because she was very sick. On January 31, 1940, Mr. Hollingsworth and Mr. Burns called on me at my private office. At that time I made the statement that the nurses would in my opinion be the proper ones to state what Mrs. Downey's condition was at the time she made her will. I made that statement before reviewing the case, having it in mind. They called at the office and I didn't recall the particular case to mind. In using the expression irrational I mean it consists in disorientation as to time and place or what act the person is doing. For instance like getting out of bed, getting out of bed and running out of the hospital would be an irrational act, something that is unreasonable, no reason for doing so. That is a consideration of irrationality I think. A person that is delirious is certainly not rational.

"I mean by toxic a person absorbing the products of a poison or an inflammation in the system, the poisoning into the blood which makes them sick and causes headaches, fever, feeling of sickness. Mrs. Downey was suffering from a toxic condition May 12, 1939. That fact would have effect upon the influence of the morphine stopping her pain and dulling her other senses. Her mental condition was based upon her toxicity due to her in- fection and also that she had a shot of morphine. The morphine would still have its medicinal effect upon a person whose system was toxic. All of the senses would be dulled by morphine."

In connection with the testimony of Dr. Marsh as to the disorientation of the decedent on May 12, 1939, the contestants introduced the will showing the signature thereon. They also introduced many exemplars of decedent's signature. One was a check written the day before, May 11, 1939. The latter is remarkably regular and legible. The former consists of scratches so illegible they cannot be read.

Mr. Engleman testified that for a week after May 8, 1939, he visited the hospital daily. At the time he left Mrs. Downey at the hospital she asked him to care for Bum, her cat. He called on her each day at about noon. On the day the will was made he testified, "I couldn't hardly talk to her at all. I couldn't get her to answer a question intelligently. She would talk a little, and then lapse off unconscious. I stayed there four or five minutes, I tried to ask her a few questions and she would give me a part answer and I couldn't get no satisfaction so I walked out. In appearance she was very weak. She was very much weaker than the day I took her there. I wanted to get some feed for the cat, she was out of feed. She didn't know whether I was talking about a cat or what I was talking about. I told her that the canned salmon—she always fed him canned salmon—was all gone and what should I do. She just said, 'Bum out of salmon, Bum out of salmon,' something like that. On that day she was irrational."

Mrs. Edna Elphick who had charge of Hillside Hospital had a desk in the hallway opposite Mrs. Downey's room. She was at her desk when the will was being prepared. Mr. Hollingsworth called upon her to act as a witness. She went with Mr. Hollingsworth into Mrs. Downey's room and later signed the will as a witness. She testified that at the time Mrs. Downey signed the will the latter was partly irrational.

The proponent called Dr. A. A. Thurlow as an expert and propounded to him a long hypothetical question. Without attempting to summarize his testimony it may be conceded for all the purposes of this decision that he expressed opinions at variance with some of the opinions expressed by Dr. Marsh. The proponent also called Miss C. N. Oliver, one of the nurses attending Mrs. Downey, who testified that she acted as one of the witnesses to the will and that Mrs. Downey was rational. Mr. Alex Sokol, a technician, went to the Hillside Hospital to take a blood test on the evening of May 12. He was an intimate acquaintance of the decedent. He also testified that the decedent was rational. Miss Bobst, the owner of Hillside Hospital, called at the room of Mrs. Downey between 7 and 7:30 and before the will was written. She testified that Mrs. Downey at that time was not in a stupor. John Reeder, a personal acquaintance of several years standing, called on Mrs. Downey May 10, and also on May 17. He testified that she seemed to be of sound mind on each day. Mr. Hollingsworth, the attorney who prepared the will, was an intimate acquaintance of the decedent and her husband. He also testified that at the time the will was executed the decedent was rational.

[1] In its first point the proponent claims the burden of proof is always upon contestant to prove unsoundness of mind and such unsoundness as would be sufficient to invalidate a will. The contestants do not controvert the claim but assert they assumed the burden and established the fact that the decedent was of unsound mind when she made her will. Estate of Gill, 14 Cal.App. 2d 526, 58 P.2d 734.

[2] The proponent also asserts that the time to which the proof should have been directed was the time the will was executed. Estate of Nolan, 25 Cal.App.2d 738, 78 P.2d 456. That assertion is not controverted, but the contestants call attention to the fact that from the time the decedent left the operating room until at least three or four hours later she was incompetent. But it was during that period and only about one hour after she left the operating room that she made the will.

[3, 4] The proponent then quotes from In re Redfield's Estate, 116 Cal. 637, 655, 656, 48 P. 794, 799: "It was the province and duty of the jury to draw the inference of fact from the evidence before them, regulated by the rules of law stated to them by the court; being assisted but not superseded in that function by the opinions of experts. It is equally the duty of the court to determine whether there is any satisfactory evidence to justify the conclusion they reached. * * *" No one would controvert that rule; and, from what has been said above, it is clear that the trial court followed it.

[5] In connection with the last point the proponent contends that the opinion of a witness that a person is of unsound mind can be no stronger than or superior in evidentiary weight to the reasons upon which he bases his opinion. Estate of Campbell, 46 Cal.App. 612, 621, 189 P. 812. That is so, but it is equally true that the reasons given by Dr. Marsh were most convincing.

[6] The proponent in its next point contends that the decedent had testamentary capacity. However, they admit the rule in this regard is correctly stated in Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 251 P. 778. On page 764 of 199 Cal., page 780 of 251 P., the court said: "A testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory if, at the time of making his will, he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property, and to remember, and understand his relations to the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument." But, in the instant case both counsel and the learned judge of the trial court seemed to have had that book and page before them at all times. The testimony on both sides was confined to said rule as written in that decision.

[7] It is also claimed that the administration of morphine is not ground for overturning a will, nor are physical disability and age. No one in the instant case has claimed that, standing alone, they are. But it will be conceded that each is a factor to be considered.

[8] Again the proponent claims that the evidence of Dr. Marsh that the decedent's condition would not and did not improve in one hour after he saw the decedent at 7 o'clock was unwarranted. We find no merit in the claim. It was purely a question of fact to be presented and proved by competent evidence and the question was for the jury to determine after all of the evidence was before it.

[9] Because Mrs. Elphick signed the will as a witness the proponent contends that she stultified herself by giving evidence in the instant case, and that said evidence should not be considered. We find no merit in the contention. Shortly prior to the execution of the will she was at her desk in the hallway. Mr. Hollingsworth went out and asked her to come in and act as a subscribing witness. She demurred and asked him if he thought Mrs. Downey was competent. He replied that Dr. Marsh said that she was. As Mrs. Elphick testified she did not set up her opinion against the opinion of Dr. Marsh. Later it transpired that whatever Dr. Marsh had said, his statement was made and had reference to the condition of Mrs. Downey on May 9, and had no reference to her condition on May 12. Under those circumstances Mrs. Elphick did not stultify herself by appearing as a witness.

[10] In its reply brief the proponent quotes from Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 78, 192 P. 1085, 1087: "Evidence which standing by itself might be sufficient to sustain a verdict may, in the light of all the facts, be wholly inadequate, and that without invading the province of the jury as the judges of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence." Thereupon they apparently claim that in a will contest the rules regarding the burden of proof are different than in other actions. We think they are mistaken. On page 75 of the cited case (184 Cal., page 1085 of 192 P.) the court said: "There was no pretense that the testator was delirious, irrational, or insane or under any delusions * * *." Clearly those are not the facts in the instant case. Furthermore, in Estate of Ramey, 62 Cal.App. 413, 425, 217 P. 135, 140, the court said: "However, in will contests the rule is the same as in other proceedings, that all questions of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses are for the jury and the trial court, and if there be any substantial evidence to support the finding or verdict it cannot be set aside by the reviewing court, although said court might believe the great preponderance of the evidence was the other way." See, also, Estate of Miller, 16 Cal.App.2d 154, 159, 160, 60 P.2d 498. The facts in the instant case are almost parallel with the case entitled Estate of Gill, supra. In that case, as in the instant case, it was claimed that the evidence was insufficient. However, the court held otherwise.

[11, 12] The proponent states facts showing the will was not "unnatural." It then quotes: "If the disposition made of his property is not 'unnatural,' or an apparent injustice is explained, the instrument is to be sustained, notwithstanding proof of insanity. * * *" 26 Cal.Jur. 632. It cites in support of the text Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079; Estate of Casarotti, supra; Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 P. 932; In re Redfield, supra. An examination of those cases discloses that not one of them sustains the text relied on. If insanity is proved the effect of the proof is determined by the rule we have hereinabove quoted from Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 764, 251 P. 778. Moreover there is nothing in any one of the cases cited in 26 Cal.Jur. 632 that is at all in conflict with the Sexton case.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 297

GOODMAN BROS., Inc., v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Civ. 12050.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 17, 1942.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑2100

Under statutes, if an employee is injured in the course and scope of his employment, and the employer is uninsured, the employee may file application for workmen's compensation, and also bring action in regular courts for injuries sustained, but if employer is in fact insured, the regular courts have no jurisdiction. St.1937, pp. 270, 271, §§ 3700, 3706–3709.

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑1789

The Industrial Accident Commission proceeds judicially and its determinations, subject to the same limitations applicable to judgments of courts generally, are "res judicata" in all subsequent proceedings between same parties or those privy to them.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑1791

Where employee brought compensation proceeding before Industrial Accident Commission and brought action against employer in superior court for injuries on theory that the employer was not insured as required by law, compensation award granting compensation, which could have been made only on finding that employer was insured, was "res judicata" in the superior court action on question of insurance. St.1937, pp. 270, 271, §§ 3700, 3706–3709.

4. Workmen's compensation 🔑2100

Where employer is uninsured, the employee may bring an action in superior court or he may pursue relief before both the superior court and the Industrial Accident Commission at the same time. St.1937, pp. 270, 271, §§ 3700, 3706–3709.

5. Judgment 🔑948

A plea of res judicata does not oust the court of jurisdiction and at most it is conclusive evidence on an issue presented to the trial court.

6. Prohibition 🔑10(1)

"Prohibition" attacks only the jurisdiction of the court.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prohibition".

7. Prohibition 🔑10(2)

Prohibition would not lie to restrain further prosecution of superior court action for injuries sustained by employee on ground that a workmen's compensation award was res judicata on controlling issue in superior court action, since plea of res judicata did not oust superior court of jurisdiction, and therefore could not be enforced by prohibition.

8. Judgment 🔑958(1)

Under Code of Civil Procedure, when an answer pleads a prior judgment as a defense, the court may try that issue before trial of the main case. Code Civ.Proc. § 597.

9. Judgment 🔑958(1)

Any error of trial court in deciding issue presented by plea of res judicata is no different than error in refusing to recognize binding force of other types of evidence, and can be corrected only on appeal from the judgment.

◆

Petition for writ of prohibition by Goodman Bros., Incorporated, against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, to restrain further prosecution of a superior court action.

Alternative writ previously issued discharged and petition for peremptory writ denied.

Hadsell, Sweet, Ingalls & Carroll, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

John W. Herron, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Judge.

Petition for a writ of prohibition.

The petitioner, Goodman Bros., Inc., is named as one of several defendants in a superior court action brought by its employee, Clemence Aho, to recover damages for his personal injuries received by him while acting in the course and scope of his employment. So far as petitioner is concerned, it is named as a defendant in that action on the theory that it was uninsured against liability for injuries to its employees as required by section 3700, Labor Code, St.1937, p. 270, and, therefore, under section 3706 of that code, an action may be brought against it in the superior court. Petitioner, by this proceeding for prohibition, seeks to restrain further prosecution of the superior court action, so far as it is concerned, on the theory that the superior court has no jurisdiction of this petitioner. This contention is predicated on the allegation that the employee recovered an award of compensation in a proceeding before the Industrial Accident Commission, in which proceeding it was found that petitioner was insured, and an award was granted its employee Aho against petitioner's insurance carrier. Petitioner contends that this finding in the action before the commission is res judicata in the superior court action as to a jurisdictional fact, that it conclusively determines that petitioner was insured, and that this adjudication deprives the superior court of jurisdiction.

Section 3706, Labor Code, provides that: "If any employer fails to secure the payment of compensation, any injured employee or his dependents may proceed against such employer by filing an application for compensation with the commission, and, in addition, may bring an action at law against such employer for damages, as if this division did not apply." Section 3707, Labor Code, permits the employee to attach the property of the employer in such action, while under section 3708, it is provided that in such action negligence on the part of the employer is presumed, and contributory negligence on the part of the employee is no defense. Under the provisions of section 3709 if an employee obtains a judgment in excess of the amount awarded in the compensation proceeding "the compensation awarded by the commission * * * shall be credited upon such judgment."

[1] Under these sections, if an employee is injured in the course and scope of his employment, and the employer is uninsured, the employee may proceed both before the commission and in the regular courts. If the employer is in fact insured the regular courts have no jurisdiction.

The petition herein alleges that while Aho was employed by petitioner, on March 4, 1941, he received an injury arising out of, and in the course of, his employment, and that on March 31, 1941, he filed his application with the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation, naming petitioner as his employer and the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York as the employer's insurance carrier. In this petition before the commission Aho alleged, in effect, that there was a controversy over whether the employer was in fact insured, and over whether a penalty should be imposed against the employer for being wilfully uninsured. Aho filed this application on his own behalf. The petition for prohibition alleges that a hearing was had in San Francisco on Aho's application on April 14, 1941, at which Aho appeared and testified; that a further hearing was had in Fresno on May 2, 1941, at which only the employer and the Fidelity Company were represented; that on May 23, 1941, an attorney filed a notice of appearance on behalf of Aho; that on May 26, 1941, Aho filed a complaint for damages in the superior court against petitioner in which it was averred that petitioner employer was uninsured. A second count of this complaint was directed against J. G. Johnson, Inc., alleged to be the owner of the premises on which the injury occurred. It should be pointed out that the petitioner in the present proceeding only seeks to restrain the superior court action as to it. The question of the liability of J. G. Johnson, Inc., is not involved in this proceeding.

The petition for prohibition next alleges that on June 23, 1941, the attorney for Aho filed an affidavit in the proceeding before the commission in which he set forth that the insurance policy issued by the Fidelity Company was dated March 4, 1941, at noon; that the accident happened at 10:45 a. m. on that day; that from the face of the policy it was apparent that it was not in effect at the time of the accident; that it was on this theory that the superior court action against Goodman Bros., Inc., had been filed; that after the filing of that complaint affiant learned that the insurance company deems itself liable on the policy because of certain representations made to Goodman Bros., Inc., by the agent of the insurance company; that affiant does "not concede or stipulate that Goodman Bros., Inc., was covered at the time of the accident or had an insurance policy for compensation insurance in effect at the time of the accident, but under the circumstances of this case, it is very questionable whether or not plaintiff would be able to prove non-insurance on the trial of the personal injury action." The petition for prohibition then alleges that on September 8, 1941, the commission made its findings and award in the proceeding pending before it. The commission expressly found that Goodman Bros., Inc., was insured at the time of the accident, and based on this finding, made its award against the insurance company, and released Goodman Bros., Inc., from liability. Thereafter, so it is alleged, Goodman Bros., Inc., filed its answer in the superior court action denying that it was uninsured, and alleging as a separate defense, the prior decision of the commission holding that Goodman Bros., Inc., was insured; that thereafter plaintiff in the superior court action filed a demurrer to the answer and a notice of motion to strike out certain portions of the answer including the defense of res judicata; that on November 19, 1941, the trial court entered its order sustaining the demurrer and granting the motion to strike from the answer the plea of res judicata.

Aho has filed a demurrer and answer to this petition for prohibition. In the answer it is alleged that at all hearings before the commission at which Aho was present the insurance company contested its liability; that at subsequent hearings Aho was not present in person, or by agent or by attorney; that in May of 1941 the insurance company in a letter addressed to the commission stipulated to assume liability; that the findings of the commission were predicated on this stipulation.

[2] The law is settled that the Industrial Accident Commission proceeds judicially, and that its determinations, subject to the same limitations applicable to judgments of courts generally, are res judicata in all subsequent proceedings between the same parties or those privy to them. This problem has been discussed in at least two California cases. In Williams v. Southern Pac. Co., 54 Cal.App. 571, 202 P. 356, the decedent's widow as administratrix brought an action in the superior court against the employer of her husband under the Federal Employer's Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., on the theory that at the time of his death her husband was engaged in interstate commerce. The employer denied the allegation that the employee was engaged in interstate commerce, alleging that he was in fact engaged in intrastate commerce. Thereafter, the widow, in her individual capacity, to protect herself in the event the superior court should hold that her husband was not employed in interstate commerce, filed an application before the Industrial Accident Commission alleging all the facts, including the pendency of the superior court action, and praying that the proceeding before the commission be held in abeyance until final determination of the superior court action. Under the law, in the event decedent had been employed in intrastate commerce, sole jurisdiction was with the commission. The jurisdiction of the superior court depended on the accident having occurred in interstate commerce. After filing before the commission, the widow formally moved for a continuance of the commission proceeding to await the determination of the superior court action, which had been filed first. The motion was denied. The widow then sought a writ of prohibition from the Supreme Court to accomplish this purpose. The petition for the writ was denied. Thereafter, the commission held a hearing, found the accident had occurred in intrastate commerce, and made its award in favor of the widow. The superior court refused to recognize the award as res judicata and proceeded to trial of the action there pending. This trial resulted in a large judgment in favor of the plaintiff based on the implied finding that the employment was interstate in character. This judgment was reversed on appeal on the ground that the award of the commission was res judicata on the issue as to whether the employee was engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce. The court held that proceedings before the commission were "strictly judicial," and its findings were therefore res judicata. The court recognized that the superior court action had been filed first, but held at page 576 of 54 Cal.App., at page 358 of 202 P., that "it is not the final judgment in the first suit, but the first final judgment, although it may be in the second suit, that renders the issues in such a case res adjudicata [sic.] in the other court." On the same page the court pointed out: "A material issue in both proceedings was the character of Williams' employment; if intrastate, the Commission had exclusive jurisdiction to award compensation; if interstate, then the jurisdiction was in the superior court. The Commission determined that the employment was in intrastate commerce, and the fact—'so determined must, as between the same parties or their privies, be taken as conclusively established so long as the judgment in the first suit remains unmodified. * * *'"

The decision in this case is direct authority in the instant case. The question as to whether Goodman Bros., Inc., was in fact insured was an issue in the proceeding before the commission. The commission could not and would not have relieved the employer from liability and made its award against the carrier had a finding of insurance not been made.

A similar problem was involved in Gerini v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co., 27 Cal.App. 2d 52, 80 P.2d 499. In that case a proceeding before the commission by parents of a decedent resulted in an award in their favor based on a finding that the decedent had been an employee of Ramazzotti. Thereafter, the parents brought action in the superior court against the employer and his insurance carrier, claiming that their son was not in fact an employee and that the employer and his insurance carrier, defendants in the action, had conspired to prevent the plaintiffs from bringing a superior court action for the death of their son, and had falsely represented before the commission that the son was an employee of Ramazzotti. The court affirmed judgment entered for defendants after sustaining of their demurrers to the complaint. It was pointed out that the plaintiffs' right of recovery depended on proof that their son was not an employee, and that they would be forced to relitigate in the action the issue of his employment, in order to prove the falsity of the commission's finding. The court said that the "commission's finding was a final and conclusive determination of the fact of the son's employment," (27 Cal.App.2d page 54, 80 P.2d page 501) citing the Williams case, supra. The court was evidently of the view that the allegations of the complaint were not sufficient to state a cause of action for relief from the award of the commission on the ground that it had been procured by extrinsic fraud. Hearings in the Supreme Court were denied in both the Williams and Gerini cases.

[3, 4] It follows, therefore, that the prior decision of the commission in this proceeding, if such decision is final and not subject to attack on the ground of extrinsic fraud or mistake or other grounds permitted by law, is res judicata in the superior court action between the same parties on the question as to whether Goodman Bros., Inc., was in fact insured at the time the accident occurred. It is clear from the above decisions that, subject to the limitations above indicated, the superior court must recognize the determination of that question of fact made by the commission. None of the cases cited by respondent holds to the contrary. They merely establish that where the employer is uninsured the employee may bring an action in the superior court, or he may pursue relief before both the superior court and the commission at the same time. See Marshall v. Foote, 81 Cal.App. 98, 252 P. 1075; Grady v. Canfield, 9 Cal.App.2d 341, 49 P.2d 902; Coffin v. Bloodworth, 28 Cal.App.2d 522, 82 P.2d 953. In People v. Barker, 29 Cal. App.2d, Supp., 766, 77 P.2d 321, it was properly held that in a criminal prosecution for failure to carry compensation insurance an award of the commission finding that the defendant-employer was not insured was not admissible in evidence. The opinion notes the general rule that a judgment in a civil action is not res judicata in a criminal suit. The case is not here relevant.

Nor is the holding of Rosslow v. Janssen, 139 Cal.App. 81, 33 P.2d 705, contrary to what has been here said. In that case the commission had determined that the employer was uninsured, but this decision was being attacked by a petition to reopen when the superior court proceeded to the trial of the action there pending. The employer moved to terminate the proceedings in the superior court, which motion was denied. The appellate court properly held that it was not error to refuse to terminate—that the superior court action could be maintained "independently" of the action before the commission. While it is true that the appellate court stated that the issue of insurance was to be determined in the superior court "irrespective of the proceeding pending before the Industrial Accident Commission," that language must be read in connection with the facts there involved. There was no question of res judicata presented. Both the commission and the superior court held the employer was uninsured. The language was used in connection with the rejection of appellant's contention that having proceeded before the commission the superior court had no jurisdiction.

[5, 6] Although it is the law that the prior final decision of the commission is res judicata in the superior court action on the issue of insurance, that does not mean that the superior court can be restrained by a writ of prohibition from trying the case there pending against Goodman Bros., Inc. The law is settled in this state that the plea of res judicata does not oust a court of jurisdiction—at most, it is conclusive evidence on an issue presented to the trial court—and prohibition is, of course, a writ that only attacks the jurisdiction of the court.

There are many cases holding that the plea of res judicata does not oust the court where it is interposed of jurisdiction over the controversy there pending. In Baird v. Superior Court, 204 Cal. 408, 268 P. 640, the petitioner was seeking by prohibition to restrain the superior court from trying a proceeding there pending on the ground a prior decision was res judicata. The court held at page 412 of 204 Cal., at page 641 of 268 P., that "under no hypothesis does the writ of prohibition lie" and continued, "Res judicata must be affirmatively relied upon and shown in evidence, and in some cases must be pleaded, but in no case is the plea in and of itself sufficient to oust the court of jurisdiction. In its strongest form it is nothing more than conclusive evidence upon all or some of the issues involved. When a former judgment is pleaded either in bar or as an estoppel on some issue, there immediately arise questions as to identity of the parties, the validity of the judgment roll, the legal effect to be given it, and perhaps many other questions. Such matters are for the determination of the trial court, and, whether correctly or incorrectly determined, it is nevertheless the exercise of jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the parties."

The same factual situation was presented in Reidy v. Superior Court, 220 Cal. 111, 29 P.2d 780, where the petitioner sought by prohibition to restrain a trial on the ground that the issue involved had theretofore been decided by another court, and was therefore res judicata. In rejecting the contention that prohibition was proper the court stated at page 112 of 220 Cal., at page 780 of 29 P.2d: "While the plea of a former judgment may be a complete defense and a bar to a pending action, the court in which the second action is pending has jurisdiction to pass upon the merits of said plea and determine whether or not it is well taken. This question has been frequently before the appellate courts of this state and has been determined adversely to the contention of the petitioners. [Citing cases.]" See, also, Boullester v. Superior Court, 137 Cal.App. 193, 30 P.2d 59.

In Anglo-California Nat. Bk. v. Superior Court, 15 Cal.App.2d 676, 59 P.2d 1053, the petitioner sought by writ of mandate to dismiss an action pending in the superior court, after the trial court had denied his application for a nonsuit and for judgment on the pleadings predicated on the doctrine of res judicata. The court denied the writ on the sole ground that, even if it be assumed that the doctrine of res judicata was there applicable, error of the trial court in denying the plea could only be corrected upon an appeal.

In Brown v. Superior Court, 13 Cal.App.2d 693, 57 P.2d 965, the petitioner contended that a writ of prohibition could be used to restrain a court from proceeding where it had improperly refused to recognize a plea of res judicata. The court denied the writ and, in addition to stating the law substantially as it is stated in the quotation from the Baird case, supra, (upon which case it relied) stated at page 695, of 13 Cal.App.2d, at page 966 of 57 P.2d: "Pleas of res judicata and estoppel are defensive matter and the superior court has jurisdiction to determine the merits thereof when interposed properly by pleading or proof; and any alleged error in ruling upon such a plea being reversible on appeal, the pleader is not entitled to a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from proceeding with the trial of the case when the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of the action. [Citing cases.] As stated, any error on the part of the court in its determination of the effect of the prior judgment may be reviewed on appeal." See, also, Brown v. Brown, 26 Cal. App.2d 637, 79 P.2d 1112, where another phase of the same case was involved and where the court came to the same conclusion.

In Rideaux v. Torgrimson, 12 Cal.2d 633, 86 P.2d 826, the employee filed an action in the superior court on the theory that he had suffered injuries in the course and scope of his employment and that the employers were uninsured. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint for the reason that it appeared therein that the employers had died in the same accident, the trial court holding the action did not survive. On appeal it was held that the cause of action created by the forerunner of section 3706 of the Labor Code survived. After the case had been argued in the Supreme Court, and while it was still pending therein, the respondent sought to have the Supreme Court consider a final award of the Industrial Accident Commission determining that the plaintiff was not entitled to an award of compensation because she was not an employee within the meaning of the compensation act. It was urged that this rendered the issue in the action then on appeal res judicata. In discussing this point the Supreme Court stated at page 638 of 12 Cal.2d., at page 828 of 86 P.2d: "A consideration of the nature of a plea of res judicata indicates that this question must be answered in the negative. A defense founded upon the conclusiveness of a former adjudication must be either pleaded or proved. [Citing cases.] Such defense is waived if not raised either by the pleadings or the evidence. [Citing cases.] Since the scope and validity of the prior judgment may require scrutiny, a plea of res judicata does not oust the court of jurisdiction. [Citing cases.] In view of these principles, this court cannot now consider the effect of an adjudication which may never be relied upon as a bar to the action for damages, or which the appellant may be able to show does not estop her from prosecuting this suit."

[7] These cases are conclusive on the point under consideration. The plea of res judicata does not oust a court of jurisdiction and therefore it cannot be enforced by prohibition.

[8] This rule imposes no great hardship on the parties. Under section 597, Code of Civil Procedure, when the answer pleads a prior judgment as a defense, the court may try that issue before the trial of the main case. This supplies a speedy and expeditious method of disposing of that question.

[9] It is true that the trial court may decide the issue incorrectly. If it does so, its error is no different than when it refuses to recognize the binding force of other types of evidence. Such errors can only be corrected on appeal from the judgment. In the present case, it is apparent that if the prior judgment of the commission was final, and, if such prior judgment was properly pleaded and was not subject to attack, the trial court committed error (which error is still correctible in the trial court) in sustaining a demurrer thereto, and in striking the defense from the answer. Such error, if any, however, cannot be corrected by prohibition.

The alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged, and the petition for the peremptory writ is denied.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concurred.

DENIO et al. v. CITY OF HUNTINGTON BEACH.*

Civ. 2924.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 10, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 8, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1002

Conflicts in evidence are settled by the trier of facts.

2. Contracts 🔑245(2)

Preliminary negotiations between special counsel and city concerning contract for legal services were "merged" into written contract which was controlling. Civ.Code, § 1625.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Merge".

---

* Subsequent opinion 140 P.2d 392.

3. Mines and minerals 🔑121
Municipal corporations 🔑658

The city of Huntington Beach owns in fee Ocean avenue, a street paralleling the shore line a few hundred feet distant, and hence can prevent operating oil companies from whipstocking wells on landward side of street, under its surface and into oil sands underlying the ocean. St.1937, p. 2975, and p. 2977, art. 1.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑214(3)

The city of Huntington Beach had authority to employ special counsel to protect city's right to oil within city boundaries. St.1937, p. 2975, and p. 2977, art. 1; Gen. Laws 1937, Act 5233, §§ 850, 862.27.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑221

Oil royalties are received by municipality in its "proprietary" and not in its "governmental capacity".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proprietary Capacity" and "Governmental Capacity".

6. Municipal corporations 🔑214(1)

The governing body of a municipality or quasi municipality may make contracts for special employment in cases where time in which services may be performed will extend beyond terms of office of members of the appointing body.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑214(3)

Where special counsel were employed by written contract to perform services in connection with city's recovery of oil royalties, that services to be rendered might have been but were not completed during terms of office of councilmen authorizing execution of contract did not render the contract illegal.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑220(8)

Whether special counsel abandoned contract to perform legal services in cooperation with city attorney so as to preclude recovery of attorney's fees from city was for jury under conflicting evidence.

9. Appeal and error 🔑930(1), 989

The appellate court will accept as true evidence supporting implied finding of jury and will disregard conflicting evidence.

10. Municipal corporations 🔑220(2)

A city could not disclaim liability for special counsel's attorneys' fees under contract providing for specific compensation on theory that sum paid upon execution of contract was ample compensation for services performed, since if attorneys could recover at all they must recover under contract.

11. Municipal corporations 🔑220(8)

In action against city for attorneys' fees under contract whereby special counsel undertook to secure returns to city from oil in tide or overflow lands within city boundaries, whether any of oil produced by city's lessee came from below the tide or overflow lands within city was for jury.

12. Evidence 🔑10(2)

The appellate court will take judicial notice of boundaries of municipalities.

13. Appeal and error 🔑1033(7)

A party cannot complain of a judgment more favorable to it than one justified by pleadings and evidence.

14. Mines and minerals 🔑79(1)

The word "rental" as commonly understood differs from a "royalty" received under an oil contract.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Rental" and "Royalty".

15. Contracts 🔑346(2)

A party to contract may limit his liability to pay certain sum to funds to accrue to him from a certain source, and then recovery cannot be had without pleading and proof that funds became available from source specified.

16. Appeal and error 🔑1064(1)

In action against city to recover attorneys' fees under contract which entitled special counsel to percentage of royalties received by city from oil, gas, or other hydrocarbons produced from city property, alleged error in instruction that counsel had burden to prove that money was paid to city on account of rental and royalty was harmless where recovery was limited to percentage of royalties received by city.

17. Mines and minerals 🔑79(1)
Municipal corporations 🔑220(4)

A lease which required lessee to pay to city a percentage of oil and gas produced from described premises did not provide for "rental" for use of an easement, but provided for "royalties" so as to authorize recovery of attorneys' fees under contract whereby city obligated itself to pay to special counsel a percentage of royalties received by city for legal services performed.

A "royalty" is a right to receive periodical payment in the nature of a rental of a fraction or percentage of the production or of its proceeds.

18. Mines and minerals ⚷79(1)

The term "bonus" as applied to an oil lease means a sum of money paid by lessee to lessor in consideration for execution of lease as distinguished from return of "royalty" reserved by lessor to be paid by lessee through term of lease.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bonus".

19. Municipal corporations ⚷217(1)

Alleged ambiguities in contract between special counsel and city for fees for performance of legal services must be interpreted most strongly against counsel who prepared the contract.

20. Mines and minerals ⚷79(1)
Municipal corporations ⚷220(4)

Where oil company agreed to pay to city upon execution of oil and gas lease a certain sum and thereafter to pay percentage of gross amount received by company from sale of oil, gas and other hydrocarbons, the sum paid on execution of lease was a "bonus" and not a "royalty" and hence special counsel were not entitled to any portion of specified sum under contract entitling counsel to percentage of royalties received by city.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; George K. Scovel, Judge.

Action by E. C. Denio and others against the City of Huntington Beach to recover attorneys' fees under a written contract between plaintiffs and defendant. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Judgment reduced and as reduced affirmed.

Drumm, Tucker & Drumm, of Santa Ana, and Ray H. Overacker, of Huntington Beach, for appellant.

Forgy, Reinhaus & Forgy, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in the sum of $2,000 for attorneys' fees under the terms of a written contract between plaintiffs and defendant.

[1] Many of the facts of the case are in sharp dispute. As conflicts in the evidence are addressed to and settled by the trier of fact, in this case a jury, we will confine our summary to those facts tending to support the verdict and judgment and will, as far as possible, disregard conflicts in the evidence.

[2] There is much evidence of negotiations between plaintiffs, who are duly licensed attorneys at law, and the defendant city, which resulted in a contract consisting of a written proposal by plaintiffs dated February 25, 1937, and a written acceptance of this proposal under authority of a resolution of the city counsel of defendant passed on March 1, 1937. As these negotiations were preliminary to and were concerned with the terms of the contract we will not concern ourselves with them. They were merged into the written contract which must be controlling here. Sec. 1625, Civ.Code; United Iron Works v. Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co., 168 Cal. 81, 141 P. 917; 6 Cal.Juris., sec. 166, p. 261.

Prior to May 15, 1937, the City of Huntington Beach was a city of the sixth class. After that date it operated under a charter. Stats. 1937, p. 2975. Its uplands lie along and northeasterly of the line of mean high tide of the Pacific Ocean. Its southwesterly boundary parallels that line and is distant three miles from it. Carr v. Kingsbury, 111 Cal.App. 165, 295 P. 586. The boundaries described in the charter conform to the prior boundaries of the municipality. Art. I, Charter.

Oil in paying quantities was discovered within the city limits a number of years ago. Drilling operations approached the water line and operators became satisfied that large quantities of oil lay under the tide and overflow lands and under the floor of the ocean. A controversy arose over the right to extract this oil and over royalties from wells whipstocked into it from wells surfaced on the uplands bordering the ocean. See Carr v. Kingsbury, supra; Joyner v. Kingsbury, 97 Cal.App. 17, 275 P. 255. Defendant was one of the active claimants to this oil. A number of bills were introduced in the legislature granting this oil to defendant. Some were defeated there and others were vetoed by Governors Rolph and Merriam. Two that were approved were subsequently submitted to a referendum vote and were defeated by the people.

Ultimately the State of California took control and is receiving royalties from operating companies recovering this oil. This is under authority of the State Lands Act. Chap. 5, p. 23, Extra Session 1938. Lately the federal government has entered the controversy and legislation has been introduced in congress pointing to its claim of the minerals underlying tide lands and the ocean.

In 1934 the City of Huntington Beach entered into an oil lease with the Southwest Exploration Company which attempted to give that company the right to drill for and remove oil from these oil sands. The area described in this lease is bounded on the northeasterly by the line of mean high tide, on the northwesterly by the northwesterly boundary of the city which extends over the ocean, on the southwesterly by the southwesterly boundary of the city, and on the southeasterly by the southeasterly line of Twenty-third Street produced over the ocean. Upon the execution of the lease, the lessee paid to the city $6,000 as a bonus and agreed to pay it a one-sixth royalty of all oil and gas produced, saved and sold from the leased premises. No development work was done under this lease but, evidently, it has not been cancelled.

[3] Ocean Avenue is a public street of the City of Huntington Beach, 100 feet wide, and parallels the shore line a few hundred feet distant from it. It is believed that the city owns this street in fee (Marshall v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 17 Cal.App.2d 19, 61 P.2d 520) and can therefore prevent operating oil companies from whipstocking wells on the landward side of the street, under its surface and into the oil sands underlying the ocean.

Plaintiffs' letter which contains the terms of the contract between the parties, reads in part as follows:

"February 25, 1937.

"The Honorable, the Mayor and City Council of the City of Huntington Beach, California.

"Gentlemen:

"The firm of Denio, Hart, Taubman & Simpson will act as special counsel for the City of Huntington Beach in cooperation with your City Attorney in:

"(a) The preparation of a freeholders' charter for submission to the electors of the City of Huntington Beach for adoption or rejection as soon as reasonably possible.

"(b) In all suits and legal matters in connection with your proposed efforts to obtain the City's just control and returns from the oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances claimed by it or to which it is entitled, in the tide or overflow lands within the City boundaries of the City of Huntington Beach.

"For the above services we are to receive the following compensation:

"1. A retainer of Twenty-five Hundred Dollars ($2500.00) in cash upon the execution hereof, which shall be, in case no recovery is had as hereinafter specified, in full for all legal services rendered or to be rendered in the above, exclusive of court costs, filing fees, printing, traveling and hotel expenses.

"2. If a recovery is had by the City of Huntington Beach, either by a Court decision or by a compromise or settlement of the City's claims, we are further to be paid out of all moneys paid to the City of Huntington Beach as royalties, or received by it out of the sale of its oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances, if its royalties are paid to it in kind, the following:

"Ten Per Cent (10%) of the moneys so received by the City for the first two (2) years;

"Fifteen Per Cent (15%) of the moneys so received by the City for the next three (3) years;

"Twenty Per Cent (20%) of the moneys so received by the City for the next ten (10) years.

"The above payments to commence with the first returns paid to or received by the City of Huntington Beach on account of royalties, as above.

"In computing the above periods of percentage payments, the time during which the City does not receive royalty payments, directly or indirectly, either in money or in kind, shall be excluded.

"Payments to be made to this firm within ten (10) days after receipt by the City of its royalties.

"It is understood, of course, that your City Attorney will be in charge of all litigation, and that all compromises, if any, will be subject to his approval and to the approval of your Honorable body."

The $2,500 was paid to plaintiffs.

At a meeting of the city counsel of Huntington Beach held on August 29, 1938, the following resolution was passed: "That that certain Resolution No. 769 entitled: 'Resolution of the City Counsel of the City of Huntington Beach, California, Employing Special Counsel,' be and the same is repealed and the contract therein referred to is hereby cancelled and the said attorneys are hereby discharged."

Under date of October 6, 1938, the city attorney of Huntington Beach wrote a letter notifying plaintiffs of the foregoing action.

Under date of October 8, 1938, plaintiffs replied to that letter as follows:

"This day we have received a letter from your City Attorney referring to the action taken August 29, 1938, by the City Council of the City of Long Beach by Resolution No. 814.

"This is to inform you that we remain, as at all times we have been, ready, able, and willing to proceed and perform all services under our contract of employment with the City of Huntington Beach, as special counsel for said city for the purposes, and upon the conditions and compensation set forth in our said contract of employment. We do not concede your right to terminate our right to the compensation set forth in said contract, and we do not consent to any purported termination of the contract or our rights thereunder. We will continue to hold ourselves ready to act as special counsel for the City of Huntington Beach in cooperation with your City Attorney in all suits and legal matters in connection with the matters and things referred to in said contract or relating thereto, and will expect to receive the compensation therein provided."

Under date of September 26, 1938, the State of California entered into a contract called "Agreement for Easement No. 392." This instrument gave the Southwest Exploration Company the right to surface the drilling of oil wells on certain uplands in the City of Huntington Beach and drill them to the oil sands under the ocean.

Under date of November 3, 1938, the Southwest Exploration Company and the City of Huntington Beach entered into a contract called "Agreement and Easement for Right of Ways."

This agreement recited the fact of the execution of the "Agreement for Easement No. 392" by the State of California; that the Southwest Exploration Company is drilling oil wells under that agreement; that the City of Huntington Beach claims it is entitled to certain royalties by reason of those operations and claims the oil and gas underlying the lands; that these claims are disputed by the Southwest Exploration Company. The oil lease of October 4, 1934, was mentioned with the statement that Southwest Exploration Company questioned the right of the City of Huntington Beach to enter into that lease and has not operated and does not intend to operate under it except under circumstances thereafter set forth.

The contract proceeds as follows:

"Now therefore, in order to settle and compromise the claims of Huntington Beach to the payment of monies and royalties to it by Southwest, and in full settlement and satisfaction thereof, it is understood and agreed as follows:

"1. Upon the due execution and delivery of this agreement, Southwest agrees to and has herewith paid to Huntington Beach the sum of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) lawful money of the United States, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged.

"2. Southwest further agrees to pay to Huntington Beach monthly a sum equal to two per cent (2%) of one hundred per cent (100%) of the gross amount received by Southwest from the sale of one hundred per cent (100%) of all the oil, gas, and other hydrocarbons produced, saved and sold by Southwest during the preceding calendar month from the lands described in the above mentioned Agreement, said payments to be made on the 20th day of each month until, in addition to the monies provided for in paragraph 1 hereof, there has been paid to Huntington Beach the further sum of One Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars ($150,000.00)."

It is further provided that after the City of Huntington Beach has been paid $175,000, including the $25,000 mentioned in paragraph 1, it shall receive two per cent of the total royalties paid to the State of California, and that none of the foregoing payments shall be considered made under the terms of the lease of October 4, 1934.

Paragraph 7 of the contract provides as follows: "In the event that either by the final decision of a court of competent jurisdiction or by the terms of a compromise agreement it shall be determined that Huntington Beach is the owner of the oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances within and underlying the tide and submerged lands lying within the city limits of the City of Huntington Beach, including the above mentioned lands, then the Oil and Gas Lease dated October 4, 1934, shall become effective and the parties hereto shall thereafter operate thereunder and in accordance with the provisions thereof, and Southwest shall pay to Huntington Beach the royalties therein contained, provided further that any monies paid to Huntington Beach by Southwest hereunder shall be applied in partial or total payment and satisfaction of the monies provided for in paragraph 11 of said Oil and Gas Lease."

The first ground urged for reversal of the judgment is that the contract under which plaintiffs claim is ultra vires, is contrary to public policy and is void. This contention is based on the arguments that the execution of the contract was the result of a legislative act of the city council acting in a governmental capacity and that the attempt to extend the employment beyond the terms of office of the councilmen who adopted it rendered the entire transaction void.

[4] While there seems to be some intimation to the contrary in its opening brief, if we understand its counsel correctly, it is now conceded that the defendant city had authority to employ special counsel. Secs. 850 and 862.27, Municipal Corporation Act, Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5233; Buck v. City of Eureka, 109 Cal. 504, 42 P. 243, 30 L.R.A. 409; Buck v. City of Eureka, 124 Cal. 61, 56 P. 612; State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Riley, 9 Cal.2d 126, 69 P.2d 985, 111 A.L.R. 1503.

There is a sharp conflict of authority in various jurisdictions of the United States on the right of a board of a municipality or a quasi municipal organization to contract for services to be rendered after the terms of office of the members of the appointing body have expired. The majority rule is thus stated in 70 A.L.R. at page 799: "In most jurisdictions where a board appoints an officer, or contracts for services, and the duties of the officer or the services to be rendered are duties delegated to the supervision of the board, such appointment or contract for a period beyond the term of the board is not valid. And the same rule applies to confidential relations, such as counsel for the board."

In arguing this question defendant cites and quotes from those authorities following this majority rule. If this rule prevailed in California these authorities would be most persuasive.

The minority rule is thus stated on page 802 of the same volume, with California cases cited as following it: "In a few jurisdictions it is held that contracts of employment and appointment of officers may extend beyond the term of the board."

There is a further distinction recognized in some jurisdictions which is stated in McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, 2d Ed., volume 3, at page 952, as follows: "Respecting the binding effect of contracts extending beyond the terms of officers acting for the municipality, there exists a clear distinction in the judicial decisions between governmental and business or proprietary powers. With respect to the former, their exercise is so limited that no action taken by the governmental body is binding upon its successors, whereas the latter is not subject to such limitation, and may be exercised in a way that will be binding upon the municipality after the board exercising the power shall have ceased to exist. Consequently independent of statute or charter provisions, it is generally held that the hands of successors cannot be tied by contracts relating to legislative functions but may as to contracts relating to business affairs."

[5] It has been held in California that oil royalties are received by a municipality in its proprietary and not in its governmental capacity (C. J. Kubach Co. v. City of Long Beach, 8 Cal.App.2d 567, 48 P.2d 181) and that a city acts in its proprietary capacity in maintaining and operating certain utilities and auditoriums. Davoust v. City of Alameda, 149 Cal. 69, 84 P. 760, 5 L.R.A.,N.S., 536, 9 Ann.Cas. 847; South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co., 152 Cal. 579, 93 P. 490; Barsoom v. City of Reedley, 38 Cal.App.2d 413, 101 P.2d 743; Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 P. 670, L.R.A.1917E, 685, Ann.Cas.1918D, 106.

There is some confusion in some of the earlier cases in California on the right of a board to make a contract which could not be performed within the terms of office of its members. Certain phases of this question were settled in affirming the power to make such a contract in the case of McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 P. 358, 31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am.St.Rep. 191. This holding was expressly approved in Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, at page 554, 45 P. 824, 50 P. 670, and has been very generally followed.

[6] It now seems to be settled in California that the governing body of a municipality, or quasi municipality, may make contracts for special employment in cases where the time in which services may be performed will extend beyond the terms of office of the members of the appointing body. See Cope v. Sutter County, 206 Cal. 445, 274 P. 750; City and County of San Francisco v. Boyd, 17 Cal.2d 606, 110 P.2d 1036; Skidmore v. County of Alameda, 13 Cal.2d 534, 90 P.2d 577; Pacific Finance Corp. v. City of Lynwood, 114 Cal.App. 509, 300 P. 50, 1 P.2d 520; King City Union High School Dist. v. Waibel, 2 Cal.App.2d 65, 37 P.2d 861.

[7] We therefore conclude that as plaintiffs were employed to perform legal services in connection with matters pertaining to property affairs for defendant by a written contract, into which the city council had legal authority to enter, the mere fact that the services to be rendered might have been but were not completed during the terms of office of the councilmen authorizing its execution furnishes no ground for holding the contract illegal.

[8, 9] Defendant next urges that plaintiffs abandoned the contract. The evidence on this question is sharply conflicting, but we must accept as true the evidence supporting the implied finding of the jury that the contract had not been abandoned and disregard conflicting evidence.

There is a great deal of evidence showing the amount of work done by plaintiffs. The first work was in connection with the charter that was adopted and the investigation of the ownership of the tidelands and the oil under them and under the bed of the ocean. Mr. Simpson testified, "There was a tremendous amount of research involved." There were numerous conferences with officers of the city in plaintiffs' offices in Long Beach and some trips to Huntington Beach. There were two trips to Sacramento during the legislative session to attempt to secure legislation giving defendant title to the oil.

Mr. Simpson advised defendant that his study had led to the conclusion that the state and not the city owned the oil and that any litigation of that question would lead to a prompt defeat of the city in its claim to any interest in this oil. He further advised at least two councilmen that he had concluded that the city owned Ocean Avenue and the ground under it in fee and could prevent any whipstocking of wells through that ground. He advised that this situation be kept secret and used as a final weapon to attempt to force the operating companies to give the city some benefits from the oil.

He also investigated the legality of a zoning ordinance in force in the city and concluded that it was void. He prepared a pencil outline of a new zoning ordinance which was not used because the city attorney had prepared one to his own liking. One purpose of this ordinance seems to have been to prevent the drilling of oil wells on certain uplands that would tap the oil sands under the ocean.

After the charter was adopted a citizen of Huntington Beach applied to the attorney general for permission to bring a quo warranto proceeding to test its validity. By a formal resolution the city council requested plaintiffs to oppose this application. They held conferences with the deputy attorney general in charge of the matter and filed an extensive brief in opposition to the request to bring the action, which was not granted.

In apparent explanation of why there was not considerable activity in the matter during the first half of 1938, Mr. Simpson testified to a conversation with the city attorney, as follows: "We discussed generally the fact of the pending—of the condition of the legislation then pending concerning the Huntington Beach oil. In other words, we talked back and forth to the effect that the Legislature before its adjournment in 1937 had passed several bills affecting the Huntington Beach tideland oil matters. Two of these had been signed by the Governor. Both of those bills that had been signed by the Governor had been held up by referendum, and as I recall, I think there was also litigation filed trying to invalidate the referendum on the two. * * * That was, I believe, the main contention. In any event, we discussed the fact that everything was held in abeyance at this time because no one knew what the law would be, the statute would be that might be passed concerning the Huntington Beach tidelands proposition as a matter of legislation. * * * Yes, I told Mr. Overacker that we should not do anything on any of the other propositions we had pending, other programs, except we should go ahead with our zoning set-up. I told him that I had checked over as carefully as I could all of the zoning ordinances, restrictive ordinances of the City of Huntington Beach. As a matter of fact, I had them lying on my desk at that time, I believe, because I had procured copies of all of the zoning ordinances of the City of Huntington Beach, and still have such, as a matter of fact, and I told him I had checked those over and I had done considerable research into the legal angles involved and that I had come to the conclusion that their zoning ordinances were invalid and void."

He also testified that he continued his work on the legal problems of defendant "to a more or less extent right up to the time when they attempted to terminate our employment."

M. M. McCallen was elected a councilman of the City of Huntington Beach at the spring election of 1938. G. P. Taubman, Jr., one of the plaintiffs, testified to a conversation had with Mr. McCallen in the late summer or early fall of 1938, which Taubman detailed in part as follows: "I don't know how the subject matter came up. The substance of it was that Mr. McCallen told me—I rather imagine I made inquiry of him as to the status, and he stated that the Southwest Exploration Company, he thought, was in a position to negotiate concerning the matter of the City securing some of the proceeds from the oil production, that the time had arrived when they were ripe, so to speak, for such negotiations. * * * Q. I will ask you, Mr. Taubman, whether or not you ever refused to furnish any advice or to do anything which was requested of you by the City of Huntington Beach, or any of its officers, in connection with procuring returns from the oil on behalf of the City? Witness: A. I did not. In fact, I think on one of these occasions, I offered, when Mr. McCallen told me he was negotiating with these gentlemen, one of whom I told him I had known for many years, I offered to aid if I could and discuss the matter with him and he said no, he had the thing well in hand and he was going to get what the City was entitled to, either that, or no one else would get it."

Much of the foregoing testimony was sharply contradicted. However, the jury apparently accepted it as true and it is sufficient to support the implied finding that plaintiffs did not abandon the contract.

[10] Defendant suggests, if it does not argue, that the $2,500 paid to plaintiffs was ample compensation for the services performed by them. As we are here concerned with a written contract providing for a specific compensation we are not concerned with the reasonable value of the services rendered. If plaintiffs are permitted to recover at all they must recover under the terms of the contract. Cope v. Sutter County, supra.

[11] Defendant next urges there is no evidence showing that any of the oil produced by the Southwest Exploration Company came from below the tide or overflow lands within the City of Huntington Beach. This contention is based on the language of paragraph "b" of the contract whereby plaintiffs undertook to secure returns to defendant from hydrocarbons in the tide or overflow lands within the boundaries of the City of Huntington Beach.

We have searched the record and have failed to find, and have been cited to no parol evidence on this question. However, we believe that there are reasonable inferences to be drawn from the documentary evidence which sufficiently support the implied finding that the oil was drawn from sands below those lands within the City of Huntington Beach.

[12] That we are entitled to take judicial notice of the boundaries of municipalities cannot be questioned. The southwesterly boundary of the City of Huntington Beach lies southwesterly three miles from the line of mean high tide. Carr v. Kingsbury, supra. The lease of October 4, 1934, between the City of Huntington Beach and the Southwest Exploration Company, described the land from which oil was to be extracted as lying in the City of Huntington Beach and between the line of mean high tide and the southwesterly boundary of the city. The contract dated November 3, 1938, between the Southwest Exploration Company and the City of Huntington Beach referred to that lease and provided for its revivor under certain contingencies. That same contract referred to the Agreement for Easement

No. 392 under which the Southwest Exploration Company proposed to extract oil from certain described lands within the City of Huntington Beach lying along and seaward from the line of mean high tide. It is only on oil produced from under such lands that the drilling company promised to pay defendant royalties. The Agreement for Easement No. 392 described those lands particularly.

It is therefore clear that the only oil recovered by the Southwest Exploration Company upon which it was required to pay defendant a royalty is that recovered under property within the city lying seaward from the line of mean high tide.

There is a disputable presumption in California "That the ordinary course of business has been followed." Subd. 20, sec. 1963, Code Civ.Proc. Certainly in the ordinary course of business a drilling company would not pay royalties to a municipal corporation not entitled to receive them. Subdivision 19 of the same section establishes the presumption "That private transactions have been fair and regular." It would be neither fair nor regular for the City of Huntington Beach to wrongfully accept and keep royalties to which it is not entitled.

It is urged that the verdict of the jury is not responsive to the issues raised in the pleadings.

It is both alleged and admitted that defendant received $25,000 in cash from the Southwest Exploration Company on the execution of the contract of November 3, 1938, and the sum of $2,794.09, 2 per cent of the value of the oil produced under that contract. It is argued under this heading that the verdict for $2,000 was neither supported by the pleadings nor the evidence.

[13] It seems clear that if the $25,000 and the $2,794.09 were received as royalties plaintiffs were entitled to a judgment in the sum of $2,794.09 instead of $2,000. However, plaintiffs are not complaining and have not appealed. A party cannot complain of a judgment more favorable to it than one justified by the pleadings and the evidence. McClung v. Moore, 138 Cal. 181, 71 P. 98; Payne v. Commercial National Bank, 177 Cal. 68, 169 P. 1007, L.R.A.1918C, 328; Crocker-Huffman, etc., Co. v. Goss, 203 Cal. 233, 263 P. 802; Guitron v. Rodriguez, 105 Cal.App. 513, 288 P. 134; Archibald v. Schultz, 14 Cal.App.2d 320, 58 P.2d 233; Orfanos v. California Ins. Co., 29 Cal.App.2d 75, 84 P.2d 233.

Defendant urges error in the giving of certain instructions proposed by plaintiffs and in refusing an instruction which it proposed. We have considered these instructions carefully and have concluded that the action of the trial judge on them was proper. They present questions considered elsewhere in this opinion and it should not be necessary to repeat reasons for this conclusion.

[14-17] Defendant complains of an instruction proposed by it and modified by the trial court which in effect told the jury that the burden is on plaintiffs to prove that the money was paid to the City of Huntington Beach on account of rental and of royalty for oil. The emphasized words were added by the trial judge. Plaintiffs' contract gave them the right to receive percentages on royalties paid to defendant or received by it out of the sale of oil. Rental, as that word is commonly understood, differs from a royalty received under an oil contract. La Laguna Ranch Co. v. Dodge, 18 Cal.2d 132, 114 P.2d 351, 135 A.L.R. 546. However, under the view we take of the case, we regard the error, if any, as harmless.

Defendant urges that all of the money was paid to it as rentals for the use of the easement under Ocean Avenue and none of it as royalties on the oil produced; that under their contract plaintiffs, if they could recover at all, were entitled to receive percentages of the royalties but not of the rentals.

It is clear from their contract that plaintiffs are only entitled to be paid a percentage of the royalties received by defendant from oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances produced from the described property. "A party to a contract may absolutely limit his liability to pay a certain sum to funds to accrue to him from a certain source [citing cases] and under such circumstances a recovery cannot be had without pleading and proof that funds became available to the debtor from the source which he specified." Martin v. Martin, 5 Cal.App.2d 591, 43 P.2d 314, 315. Therefore we must examine the definition of "royalty" and determine if the facts of this bring any of the payments made to defendant within the meaning of that term. As a preliminary we must first consider the contention that all payments were made as rental for the easement under Ocean Avenue.

In the lease of October 4, 1934, it is expressly provided the Southwest Exploration Company shall pay to defendant one-sixth of the value, or one-sixth of the oil and gas produced from the described premises, subject to certain specified deductions. Such provisions are common in oil leases and provide for payment of what are generally known as royalties to the lessor by the lessee.

The contract between the State of California and the Southwest Exploration Company provides for the payment of a "royalty" from the latter to the former. This "royalty" is defined as a variable percentage of the production of the wells dependent upon the amount of oil produced.

We have already quoted at considerable length from the contract of November 3, 1938, between Southwest Exploration Company and defendant. $25,000 was paid on the execution of the contract. Two per cent of the gross amount received monthly by the Southwest Exploration Company from the sale of oil, gas or other hydrocarbons was to be paid defendant monthly. This last provision has all of the characteristics of an agreement to pay royalties usually found in oil leases. After $175,000 had been paid defendant, the Southwest Exploration Company agreed to pay to defendant a sum equalling two per cent of the total royalties paid to the State of California. It also appears from the contract that defendant claimed the oil in the sands under the tide lands and the right to receive royalties from that oil and that the Southwest Exploration Company denied that ownership and the claim to royalties. Evidently the contract of November 3, 1938, between the Southwest Exploration Company and defendant was made, as it states, "to settle and compromise the claims of Huntington Beach to the payment of monies and royalties to it * * *," and not in payment for the use of an easement under Ocean Avenue. The ownership of that land may have provided the force that compelled the execution of the contract but nothing in it demonstrates that the payments were rentals for the easement and not a bonus and royalties.

This contract appears to have been drawn by skillful and experienced attorneys. If the sole consideration for the payments to be made to the city had been the use of the easement it would have been a simple matter to have said so. Had there been any such understanding between the parties it is hardly probable that paragraph 7 would have been incorporated in it giving the city a one-sixth royalty in the oil and gas produced in the event the city either by judgment or compromise should establish its ownership of those substances. Taken as a whole the contract negatives the idea that the payments were to be made solely for the use of the easement and that none of them represented royalties from the hydrocarbons produced.

Defendant seriously contends that at best, the $25,000 was paid to it as a bonus and not as a royalty and that the most plaintiffs can recover is ten per cent of $2,794.09, received by defendant as its share of the oil produced.

In 8 Cal.Juris.Supp., pages 690–692, we find the following:

"An owner's right to take oil or gas from his land is often a valuable one, and it is customary, when making a grant of it by way of lease, to include therein very definite provisions for the payment of compensation.

"Royalty.—The most common form of compensation is what is known as royalty—that is, a right to receive periodical payment in the nature of a rental of a fraction or percentage of the production or of its proceeds.

"Bonus.—But it is not unusual in proven territory for the lessee to pay a designated sum to the lessor upon execution of the lease, over and above the promised royalties. This form of compensation is termed a bonus.

"'Bonus and royalties are both consideration for the lease and are income of the lessor.'

"* * * Royalties.—A lease may fix the royalty at a designated sum per barrel, or at a prescribed proportion of the lessee's gross income, etc. But in the majority of modern leases, including governmental leases, the lessor's royalty is fixed at an agreed fraction or percentage of all oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances produced and saved from the leased premises, or, at the option of the lessor, 'exercised whenever settlements are made' a like fraction of the proceeds of their sale." These definitions are supported by the cases cited.

[18] In Geller v. Smith, 130 Cal.App. 485, 20 P.2d 102, 104, the word "bonus" when used in an oil lease is defined as follows: "My opinion is that the term

'bonus' as applied to an oil lease has come to have a definite meaning, to-wit: A sum of money paid by a lessee to the lessor in consideration for the execution of a lease, as distinguished from the return of royalty reserved by the lessor to be paid by the lessee through the term of the lease."

The foregoing definition was quoted with approval in Elsinore Oil Co. v. Signal Oil, etc., Co., 3 Cal.App.2d 570, 40 P.2d 523, 524, and the following definition of "royalty" was given: "It is apparent that the 'rentals' which were to be reduced upon quitclaiming of the land were not the 'bonus' but the 'royalty,' for here, as in the case of a mining lease, the amounts stipulated to be thus paid as royalties are not the purchase price of the oil and gas in place, but are '"the compensation which the occupier pays the landlord for that species of occupation which the contract between them allows." * * * In mining leases, these words "rent" and "royalty" are used interchangeably to convey the same meaning.' Nelson v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., [8 Cir.], 240 F. 285, 290 [153 C.C.A. 211]. '"Royalty" is "perhaps the most appropriate word where rental is based upon the quantity of coal or other mineral that is or may be taken from the mine."' Payne v. Neuval, 155 Cal. 46, 49, 99 P. 476, 478. The same definition applies here."

Among the many cases in harmony with the foregoing definitions we cite the following: Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v. Walden, 4 Cal.2d 637, 52 P.2d 237; Aldridge v. Houston Oil Co., 116 Okl. 281, 244 P. 782; Robinson v. Jones, 119 Kan. 609, 240 P. 957; Byrne v. Fulton Oil Co., 85 Mont. 329, 278 P. 514; Parker v. Riley, 250 U.S. 66, 39 S.Ct. 405, 63 L.Ed. 847.

[19, 20] The contract between plaintiffs and defendant was prepared by plaintiffs who are skillful attorneys. If they intended to claim a percentage of any bonus paid to the city, as distinguished from a royalty, it would have been a simple matter to have so provided in the written instrument. If there are any ambiguities or uncertainties in the contract they must be interpreted most strongly against plaintiffs who prepared it. Bennett v. Potter, 180 Cal. 736, 183 P. 156. As plaintiffs failed to provide in the written contract that a percentage of any bonus received by the defendant should be paid to them, we must conclude that they cannot recover any part of such bonus.

Under the foregoing rules we must regard the $25,000 paid to defendant on its execution of the contract with the Southwest Exploration Company as a bonus and not a royalty, and the $2,794.09 as a royalty of which plaintiffs are entitled to recover ten per cent under their contract.

The judgment is reduced to the sum of $279.40, and as so reduced is affirmed. Neither party will recover costs.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 245

MABRY v. SCOTT et al.

Civ. 13263.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 15, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 12, 1942.

1. Infants 🔑74

When litigation is between them, all beneficiaries of a trust are "indispensable parties" without whose presence trial court has no jurisdiction, except when there are remaindermen not in being and when it is apparent that it is essential in interest of justice to adjudicate the rights of living persons.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Indispensable Party".

2. Infants 🔑74

In determining validity of judgment modifying trust, the unborn contingent remaindermen consisting of unborn issue of settlor's children were virtually represented by settlor's living children unless there was some hostility of interest between children and their unborn issue.

3. Infants 🔑74

In determining validity of judgment modifying trust, settlor's wife, who under modification obtained cash out of corpus of trust could have represented unborn contingent remaindermen where possibilities of gain to the corpus from the modification outweighed the possibilities of loss.

4. Infants ⚷74

That by modification of trust, settlor's living children received income not provided by original trust did not show an "adverse interest" as between children and their unborn issue so as to preclude children from representing the unborn contingent remaindermen, and depriving court of jurisdiction to modify the trust, where children had no interest in corpus except in contingencies which were too remote to destroy children's incentive to protect rights of their unborn issue.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Adverse Interest".

5. Compromise and settlement ⚷15(2)

In action to cancel trust on ground of fraud, undue influence, failure of consideration and mistake, court had duty to adjudicate the case unless action of all the parties except trustee in presenting petition to approve a compromise divested court of jurisdiction.

6. Equity ⚷39(1)

When jurisdiction of equity attaches, it is duty of equity to adjust all differences arising from cause of action presented and to leave nothing for further litigation.

7. Infants ⚷77

Courts have inherent power to appoint guardians ad litem.

8. Trusts ⚷58

A court of equity may do whatever is necessary to preserve a trust from destruction.

9. Compromise and settlement ⚷15(2)

The chancellor having acquired jurisdiction in equity in suit to cancel trust, was not ousted thereof because of approval of compromise notwithstanding interests of contingent remaindermen were affected where compromise was fair and equitable and unless case was thus disposed of, entire trust might have been annulled.

10. Compromise and settlement ⚷15(2)

In action to cancel trust on ground of fraud and undue influence, where it appeared that parties did not realize results which would follow a covenant in trust relating to payments, a compromise of litigation was properly approved by chancellor as equitable.

11. Appeal and error ⚷891

Generally, testimony is taken by an appellate court only when it is necessary as a basis for an affirmance or reversal of a judgment with directions to trial court. Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 38.

12. Appeal and error ⚷891

On appeal from judgment modifying a trust in accordance with compromise agreement of parties, motions to produce additional testimony would be denied where if additional facts shown by such testimony had been known to trial court, it would not have altered findings as to fairness and necessity of compromise. Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 38.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Harry C. Mabry, as executor, etc., against Alzoa Scott and others for cancellation of a trust. From a judgment and from an order authorizing a compromise, the Title Insurance and Trust Company, as trustee, appeals, and moves to produce additional testimony.

Judgment affirmed, order dismissed and motions denied.

Harry C. Mabry in pro. per., Newlin & Ashburn, Gurney E. Newlin, Clyde E. Holley, Hudson B. Cox, and Allen W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for plaintiff and respondent.

O'Melveny & Myers, Pierce Works, W. B. Carman, Jr., and Jackson W. Chance, all of Los Angeles, for defendant and appellant.

William C. Mathes in pro. per., Mathes & Sheppard, Gordon F. Hampton, Freeman R. Brant, and C. H. Hartke, all of Los Angeles, for defendants and respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

March 25, 1931, defendant, Title Insurance and Trust Company, made a declaration of trust, acknowledging delivery to it of real and personal property of a value totaling some $1,350,000, to be held irrevocably in trust, for the use and benefit of named beneficiaries. The income from the trust estate was to be paid, and the corpus finally distributed, in accordance with the terms of the trust agreement. All of the properties placed in trust were owned by William J. Garland, settlor, and were about to be distributed to him from the estate of his deceased father.

Living beneficiaries of the trust were Alzoa Eaton Garland and William J. Garland, then husband and wife, and their four minor children.

The trust was to terminate upon the death of the last survivor of these six people, and then to go (1) to the living issue of the four children of Mr. and Mrs. Garland (grandchildren, and their descendents per stirpes), or, contingently, in the event of their death, to living spouses of these four children; or (2) if there were no living issue of Mr. and Mrs. Garland of any degree, to the heirs of Mr. Garland. Beneficiaries in these two categories must be treated as unborn, unknown, and presently unascertainable, because the four minor children were of tender years, unmarried and had no issue, and Mr. Garland was living. They are all contingent remaindermen. When it is necessary to distinguish between the two classes, issue of the living children will be referred to as unborn contingent remaindermen.

Net income from the trust was to be paid: First—$1,250 per month to Alzoa Eaton Garland. Second—Additional payments to said Alzoa Eaton Garland, or upon her death or at the direction of the settlor to their then living issue, in amounts commencing at $500 per month during the first five years of the trust and increasing each five years thereafter to $1,250 per month during the fourth five years of the trust. Third—All of the remainder of the income, if any, to be paid monthly to settlor.

It would extend this opinion unduly to set out in detail all of the provisions of the trust agreement or all of the contingencies affecting payment of income or distribution of corpus. Such only as appear to be pertinent will be referred to.

July 16, 1931, Mrs. Garland secured in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County an interlocutory decree of divorce from Mr. Garland, which was followed by a final judgment of divorce July 20, 1932. August 17, 1932, Mrs. Garland married Millard L. Scott.

In October, 1933, William J. Garland married Grace O. Hoyt. There is one minor child the issue of that marriage, Jane Mary Garland.

March 7, 1936, Mr. Garland filed a complaint in the superior court, alleging fraud, undue influence and failure of consideration, and praying that the trust be cancelled and set aside, and that title to the real and personal property involved be quieted in him. The complaint also alleged that shortly prior to the time the trust was made the plaintiff deeded to his then wife his dwelling house in Beverly Hills, and prayed that that transaction likewise be cancelled and set aside. The complaint named as defendants, Alzoa Eaton Scott, the former wife of the plaintiff, the four children, and the trustee. Other named defendants were dismissed from the case; others were brought in as will later appear.

In support of his allegations of fraud, undue influence and failure of consideration, the plaintiff alleged a confidential relationship between him and Alzoa; that he had had infantile paralysis, and as a result thereof was in continual pain and suffering, so severe that he was afraid it would impair his mental and physical ability to take care of the property which he was about to receive from the estate of his deceased father; that after discussing this situation with his wife, it was agreed it would be advisable to convey all of this property to a trustee, to manage and control it, and to pay the income to Alzoa, who would disburse it for the support and maintenance of the family; that after conveying all of his property to the trust, and deeding his home to her, he left on a trip around the world; that while on this trip, to his consternation and surprise, he was advised she had sued him for divorce; that unknown to him Alzoa was on friendly terms with Mr. Scott when the conveyances were made to her and to the trust; that she concealed from him her relations with Mr. Scott, induced him to divest himself of all of his property, for the benefit of herself firstly, for their children secondly, and for himself lastly, and then, when this was done and he left on his trip around the world, she straightway took up with Mr. Scott and filed her divorce complaint; and that because of his trust and confidence in Alzoa, and her machinations and his conveyances in consequence thereof, he found himself stripped of his income, deprived of his home, and bereft of his family.

In her answer Alzoa denied all of these allegations; she alleged it was only after her husband left her and told her he was through with her and the children that she brought her action for divorce; that she had always been willing and desirous of living with him as his wife, and making a home for him and their children. She particularly and specifically denied any wrongful conduct or association with Mr. Scott. She also alleged that the trust was coincidental with and contemplated in a property settlement agreement between her and her husband. The property settlement agreement bears the same date as the trust agreement. Some of its recitals corroborate certain of the denials and allegations of the answer.

With the issues thus framed, the plaintiff and the defendant Alzoa agreed upon a compromise of the litigation. They were each to receive from the trust $60,000 cash; the monthly payments from income were to be made on a percentage basis, 25 per cent to the children and the remaining 75 per cent equally to the plaintiff and Alzoa, payable to the latter two persons or their assigns until termination of the trust.

The complaint was amended to allege mistake of fact on the part of the settlor, in that when he conveyed all of his property to the trust, he believed that Alzoa would remain his wife and take care of him and his family out of the monthly payments to be made to her, and in that both he and Alzoa believed in any event there would be sufficient earnings to pay him at least $1,000 a month; that since the creation of the trust, there had not been sufficient income to make any payments to him for his support and maintenance, because the trust had received only enough income to make the payments required to be first made to Alzoa. The amendment further alleged that had the settlor not been acting under mistake of fact, he would have required a provision in the trust agreement for the distribution of income as stated in the compromise. These allegations were denied by answers filed by all of the defendants, including the trustee, all of the living beneficiaries, and all of the contingent remaindermen, appearing either in person or by guardians ad litem.

It is evident that neither Mr. nor Mrs. Garland realized or understood the results which would follow a covenant in the trust agreement requiring the trustee to pay out of income a fixed and definite amount of money monthly; first, to Alzoa; then, second, to her or to the children; and then, and only then, anything which might be left to the settlor for his support and maintenance. Like many a testator, who, with specific devise and bequest has unwittingly impoverished the members of his family after his death, the settlor impoverished himself when he conveyed all of his property in trust, and divested himself of the only means of livelihood he had, in return for a promise to pay income which in the nature of things would never be available because of prior payments required to be made to other persons. This could well have been a mistake, warranting the exercise of the powers of a court of equity in relieving the settlor from covenants and conditions in the trust agreement which otherwise would not have been made.

Then, with the exception of the trustee, all of the parties as thus represented, including contingent remaindermen and the presumptive heirs—the settlor's present wife, Grace O. Garland, Ida May Garland, his mother, and his brother, Grover T. Garland, and his infant daughter by his last marriage, Jane Mary Garland, by her guardian ad litem—joined in a petition to the court to consider, authorize, and approve the proposed compromise of the litigation.

Upon the hearing of the petition to compromise, the guardian ad litem for the unborn contingent remaindermen, and the guardian ad litem for the living children, testified that in their opinion the compromise was fair and equitable, and recommended its approval. Whereupon the court, first, by minute order, and then by formal written judgment, approved the compromise, and ordered the modification of the trust in the particulars named.

By appropriate pleadings, representations to the trial court, and notice of appeal, the trustee, Title Insurance and Trust Company, has raised the principal question involved in this appeal, i.e., by judgment of the court modifying the trust, was property of unborn contingent remaindermen taken without due process of law? It is insisted that the court was without jurisdiction to modify, revise, or in any manner reform the trust because the unborn contingent remaindermen were not before it, either in person or by representation; that their interests were adversely affected in that income and corpus of the trust which eventually would have gone to them were depleted in the following particulars: (a) $120,000 in cash was taken out of corpus; (b) Income in which remaindermen were entitled to share upon the death of ancestors (which in certain contingencies would go to corpus), was depleted; (c) In the event the living children are survived by spouse or issue or both, such persons receive one-fourth of the trust income; whereas, under the judgment, 37½ per cent thereof is taken away.

[1] When the litigation is between them, all beneficiaries of a trust are indispensable parties; without their presence the trial court has no jurisdiction to proceed. First National Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 19 Cal.2d 409, 121 P.2d 729; McPherson v. Parker, 30 Cal. 455, 456, 89 Am.Dec. 129; O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 435, 16 P. 236; Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 P. 145, 6 L.R.A., N.S., 275; Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Henry, 208 Cal. 185, 280 P. 959.

The latest expression of the rule is by Mr. Chief Justice Gibson in the case of First National, etc., Bank v. Superior Court, supra [19 Cal.(2d) 417, 121 P.2d 733]: "The law is settled in this state that, where one of several beneficiaries seeks to fix his share in a trust fund and where judgment in his favor would inevitably determine the amount available for others similarly situated, such other beneficiaries are indispensable parties. A judgment rendered in their absence and purporting to determine their rights is in excess of the court's jurisdiction. Bank of California v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 516, 521, 106 P.2d 879; O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 435, 16 P. 236."

But this rule of indispensable parties has one manifest exception. It is founded on the paramount duty of every court to see that justice be done. It takes effect when there are remaindermen not in being and when it is apparent that it is essential, in the interests of justice, to adjudicate rights of living persons.

This exception has been stated, approved, and applied by our courts in numerous cases in which future estates of unborn or unknown contingent remaindermen in real property and the relationship of such estates to rights of living persons have been under consideration. One of the best statements of it is to be found in section 182, chapter 12, Restatement of the Law, Property, Future Interests: "Prerequisites for binding effect as against interest limited in favor of an unborn person. A judicial proceeding has binding effect as against the future interest limited in favor of a person who was unborn at the time of the commencement of such proceeding when the requirements stated in some one of the clauses of this section are satisfied, but not otherwise: (a) Such person was duly represented in such proceeding in accordance with one of the rules stated in sections 183 and 186; (b) Such person was duly represented by a guardian ad litem appointed to protect the interests limited in favor of unborn persons; (c) The proceeding, duly followed, was one binding the affected thing itself, thus binding both present and future interests limited therein, without either joinder or representation of the persons in favor of whom such interests were limited; (d) The proceeding, duly followed, was one which by statute binds such future interest without either joinder or representation of the person in favor of whom it was limited."

The reason behind the exception is a simple one of human relationships, implicit in the principle that human laws, and all other temporal things, are for the living; not for the dead or for those not yet in being, if to hold otherwise would result in injustice to living persons. Because parties are not in being, and therefore cannot be brought before the tribunal, is not sufficient reason for a court to stand by, helpless and impotent, when rights of living persons, in ordinary common sense, ought to be adjudicated.

Two only of the foregoing clauses of section 182 of the restatement will be used as subdivisions in considering this problem:—Were the unborn contingent remaindermen represented in the litigation? Was the proceeding "duly followed" one binding the affected thing itself?

[2, 3] With reference to representation: The trial court was correct in its determination that there was virtual representation of the unborn contingent remaindermen by the living children of Mr. and Mrs. Garland. There were no living members of this class of unborn contingent remaindermen. The only persons next of kin who could represent the unborn contingent remaindermen were Alzoa Eaton Garland Scott or the living children of Mr. and Mrs. Garland. It is not necessary to hold that Alzoa represented the unborn contingent remaindermen, because representation of them by the living children was sufficient. But, in determining that the parties were properly before it, the trial court undoubtedly took into consideration the fact that while Alzoa was to receive $60,000 out of corpus, the possibilities of gain to the corpus from the compromise outweighed the possibilities of loss, so that she too could have represented unborn contingent remaindermen. That this was possible has since developed by the death of the settlor and payments required by the trust agreement to corpus of moneys from insurance on his life.

Representation of unborn remaindermen by ancestors was given careful consideration in the case of County of Los Angeles v. Winans, 13 Cal.App. 234, at page 244, 109 P. 640, at page 645. In that connection in that case the court said: "The conclusion that the interests in remainder of the defendant grandchildren were and are contingent instead of vested does not preclude the application to them of the principle of virtual representation, if the proceedings in which such representation was exercised were such as to otherwise justify it. The rule as to virtual representation is stated broadly by the Supreme Court of the United States in Miller v. Texas & Pacific R. Co., 132 U.S. [662], 672, 10 S.Ct. [206], 209 (33 L.Ed. 487), by recognizing the holding of Lord Redesdale in Giffard v. Hort, 1 Schoale & Lef. 386, as follows: 'Where all the parties are brought before the court that can be brought before it, and the court acts on the property according to the rights that appear, without fraud, its decision must of necessity be final and conclusive. It has been repeatedly determined that if there be tenant for life, remainder to his first son in tail, remainder over, and he is brought before the court before he has issue, the contingent remaindermen are barred. Courts of equity have determined on grounds of high expediency that it is sufficient to bring before the court the first tenant in tail in being, and if there be no tenant in tail in being, the first person entitled to the inheritance, and if no such person, then the tenant for life.' So, also, the New York court in Kent v. Church of St. Michael, 136 N.Y. 10, 32 N.E. 704, 18 L.R.A. 331, 32 Am. St.Rep. 693, uses the following language: 'Where an estate is vested in persons living, subject only to the contingency that persons may be born who will have an interest therein, the living owners of the estate for all purposes of any litigation in reference thereto and affecting the jurisdiction of the courts to deal with the same, represent the whole estate, and stand, not only for themselves, but also for the persons unborn. This is a rule of convenience, and almost of necessity. The rights of persons unborn are sufficiently cared for if, when the estate shall be sold under a regular and valid judgment, its proceeds take its place and are secured in some way for such persons.' [Citing authorities.]"

It is therefore apparent that in this case the living children of Mr. and Mrs. Garland represented their possible unborn issue, unless there was some hostility of interest as between them. In the Winans case it is said: "The interests of representative and represented must, however, be so identical that the motive and inducement to protect and preserve may be assumed to be the same in each." That case held that there was hostility of interest which precluded representation because a parent life tenant and a child remainderman had acted adversely to the interests of other child remaindermen who might later be born.

[4] Appellant contends that by the compromise in the present case the living children secured a better participation in income than in the trust as originally drawn. Indeed a close reading of the trust agreement supports a theory of the appellant that the living children were to receive no income from the original trust until the death of their mother, or upon the nomination of their father, and that it is necessary to read the property settlement agreement into the trust to give any income to the children. But, assuming that by the compromise the living children received income not provided by the original trust, we are unable to agree with either minor premise or conclusion of appellant's suggested syllogism: that this caused them to profit at the expense of their unborn issue; and that there was thereby created hostility of interest as between the living children and their unborn issue which prevented virtual representation by the living children of the unborn contingent remaindermen.

The principal argument in support of this proposition is that the interests of living children and their unborn issue became adverse when by the compromise agreement the parents of the living children (a) took $120,000 in cash from the trust estate; (b) contingently, income which otherwise would have gone to corpus could be depleted by the compromise, and (c) contingently, depending upon the death of ancestors leaving them surviving spouses and issue, income which might have gone to spouses or issue was cut down 37½ per cent; that the living children consented to these changes in the trust agreement so that they might get the better participation in income provided by the compromise, and thereby deprived the contingent remaindermen of $120,000 which otherwise would eventually have gone to them, and of contingent income. To thus hold would involve conclusions of collusion and conspiracy which the facts of this case will not sustain. The decisive fact still remains that the remaindermen had no interest in the income; the living children had no interest in the corpus, except in the contingencies above stated. These contingencies are too remote to require a decision that the incentive on the part of the living children to protect and preserve the rights of their issue was destroyed. And computations are in the briefs which indicate that should any of these contingencies come to pass, neither income nor corpus will be depleted to the disadvantage of the remaindermen. Therefore, there was no adverse interest as between the living children and their issue which prevented the living children from representing the unborn contingent remaindermen. Under the doctrine of virtual representation the contingent remaindermen were represented and the court had jurisdiction over them and their interests in the trust.

[5] Was this a proceeding binding the affected thing itself? Under the pleadings, when the issues were joined in fraud, undue influence, failure of consideration, and mistake, the court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the controverted facts. If an affirmative finding could have been made as to any such facts, supported by competent testimony, the court had power to terminate the trust. Therefore it had the right and it was its duty to adjudicate this case, unless the action of all of the parties except the trustee in presenting the petition to approve the compromise, divested the court of jurisdiction. Obviously, there is here involved all of the aspects of the case, and the terms and conditions of the compromise.

In this connection there has been presented a most persuasive argument. It is that courts should always have in mind the rights of remaindermen not in being; that by affirming the judgment in this case, there may be sanctioned a method whereby trusts may be destroyed at will by combinations of living beneficiaries; that this may be done by pleadings framing issues giving jurisdiction to courts of equity to modify trusts, and then by securing judgments based on compromises giving to living beneficiaries property of unborn remaindermen.

The answer to this argument is equally persuasive. It is that courts may be safely entrusted with the protection of rights of unborn remaindermen. And it is in cases of this sort, in which there is jurisdiction in equity of the controversy, that such rights are protected by the courts themselves. In the present case we can confidently assume that this duty was performed by the trial court.

[6] In actions for rescission, when a jurisdiction of equity attaches, it is the duty of equity to adjust all the differences arising from the cause of action presented and to leave nothing for further litigation. Walsh v. Majors, 4 Cal.2d 384, 398, 49 P.2d 598.

[7] To aid it in the exercise of its jurisdiction to hear and determine this matter, the court appointed a guardian ad litem to represent and protect the interests of the contingent remaindermen. Courts of justice as an incident of their jurisdiction have inherent power to appoint guardians ad litem. Crawford v. Neal, 1880, 56 Cal. 321; Estate of Cahill, 1887, 74 Cal. 52, 15 P. 364; Carraway v. Lassiter, 1905, 139 N.C. 145, 51 S.E. 968, 971; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1935, 208 N.C. 578, 182 S.E. 341.

[8] A court of equity in its general jurisdiction over trusts has power to do whatever is necessary to preserve a trust from destruction, including the power to modify and change the terms of the trust. Wood v. American Nat. Bank, 125 Cal.App. 248, 261, 14 P.2d 110, concurring opinion of Justice Marks; Security-First Nat. Bank v. Easter, 136 Cal.App. 691, 697, 29 P.2d 422; Adams v. Cook, 15 Cal.2d 352, 101 P.2d 484; Young v. Young, 255 Mich. 173, 237 N.W. 535, 77 A.L.R. 963; In re North Jersey Title Ins. Co., 120 N.J.Eq. 148, 184 A. 420, 425; Cutter v. American Trust Co., 213 N.C. 686, 197 S.E. 542, 549; Gavin v. Curtin, 171 Ill. 640, 49 N.E. 523, 40 L.R.A. 776; 65 C.J., Trusts, § 549, pp. 683, 684; 26 R.C.L., Trusts, § 133, p. 1282; note, 28 Cal.Law Review, 785.

[9] In this case it was proper for the chancellor to approve the compromise agreement, having in view the preservation of the trust itself. Having once acquired jurisdiction in equity, the court was not ousted thereof because of its approval of the compromise. This is so, even though interests of contingent remaindermen were affected, it being evident that the compromise was fair and equitable and that unless the case was thus disposed of, the plaintiff had presented a bona fide contention which, if found true, would have required the annulment of the entire trust. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Conkling, 159 App.Div. 337, 144 N.Y.S. 638; Reynolds v. Reynolds, supra; Wolf v. Uhlemann, 325 Ill. 165, 156 N.E. 334; Burgess v. Nail, 10 Cir., 103 F.2d 37; Bennett's Guardian v. Cary's Executor and Trustee, 210 Ky. 725, 276 S.W. 818, 820; Williams v. Williams, 204 Ill. 44, 68 N.E. 449, 452.

There has been considerable argument in the briefs, and citation of authority, as to whether the trustee in this case represented the interests of the unborn contingent remaindermen. In view of there being virtual representation and equitable jurisdiction, it is not necessary to go into this question to any particular extent. There is strong authority for the statement that if it were necessary in order that justice might be done to living parties, the interests of contingent remaindermen in this trust estate could be represented by the trustee. Indeed, the trustee has consistently and vigorously and ably presented to the trial court and to this court its opposition to the judgment approving the compromise and modifying the trust. There is no reason for criticism of the trustee in opposing the judgment here under review.

It is stated in 120 A.L.R. at page 886: "In many cases involving trust estates the trustee, or the trustee together with the holders of other interests, are regarded as sufficiently representing unborn contingent remaindermen."

[10] Appellant suggests that the compromise was unfair and inequitable. It should be apparent from what has already been said that it is our conclusion that the trial court, having before it all of the facts in the case, properly held the compromise to be fair and equitable.

This leaves one final thing to be considered in this case, which requires a continuance of the narrative of events in the history of the Garland family. Mr. Garland died July 25, 1940. The petition to compromise was filed August 15, 1939. Without the knowledge of any of the other parties to the compromise, and without bringing it to the attention of the court, it appears that September 17, 1937, Mr. Garland assigned to his last wife, Grace O. Garland, and to his minor child by that wife, Jane Mary Garland, his right to receive 37½ per cent of the income from the trust from and after his death. Also by his last will and testament, dated May 11, 1939, the terms of which were unknown to any of the other parties to the compromise or to the court, he disinherited his children by Alzoa and willed to Grace O. Garland and Jane Mary Garland his entire estate, including his interest in the trust. These facts first appeared in a brief filed by the guardian ad litem for the living children mentioned in the trust agreement.

The guardian ad litem for the living children, and the defendant trustee, have filed separate applications to this court for leave to produce additional evidence, in accordance with rule XXXVIII of the rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. In these applications the facts just stated are set forth and supported by exhibits and affidavits.

[11, 12] As a general rule, testimony is taken by an appellate court only when it is necessary as a basis for an affirmance or reversal of a judgment with directions to the trial court. Tupman v. Haberkern, 208 Cal. 256, 280 P. 970. If these additional facts had been known to the trial court, in view of all of the other facts in the case, it would not have altered the findings as to the fairness and equity and the necessity of the compromise. Inasmuch as the unborn contingent remaindermen were represented by the living children, it is not necessary to consider whether these additional facts would have rendered it impossible for presumptive heirs to represent contingent remaindermen.

All of the parties and the court were familiar with the recitals in the petition to approve the compromise. It is apparent therefrom that Mr. Garland was not forbidden to assign his interest in the payments under the trust to any one of the classes mentioned, to wit: "children, wife or mother." Among these classes were included his then wife and his youngest child. There can be no question but that everyone concerned knew Mr. Garland had the right to will his property to whomsoever he pleased.

Nothing hereunder is to be understood as approving the concealment by anyone of any essential element which a court should consider when there has been presented to it a petition to approve the compromise of pending litigation. In such cases, it is the duty of everyone concerned to advise the court to the fullest extent of every detail involved in the transaction. We are loath to believe that any of counsel in this case wilfully withheld from the court any information pertinent to a decision on the fairness and equity of the compromise. But, as indicated, if these facts had been fully presented to the trial court, they would not have changed the findings which support the judgment modifying the terms of the trust.

The motions to produce additional testimony are denied; the appeal from the minute order granting the petition to compromise is dismissed; the judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

BOWES et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.

Civ. 12070.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 16, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 12, 1942

1. Process 🔑65

Personal service obtained by enticing person to be served into territorial jurisdiction of court, by means of fraud and deceit or by trick or device or by use of force, is void and will be set aside.

2. Process 🔑65

The rule that personal service obtained by enticing person to be served into territorial jurisdiction of court by fraud and deceit or by trick or device or by use of force is void, applies to jurisdiction between counties of the same state.

3. Process 🔑118

Where pending plaintiff's appeal from order granting new trial in action for specific performance of option to sell capital stock of a corporation, plaintiff cited defendant to appear in county not of defendant's residence to give his deposition and in such county defendant was made a tender and thereafter plaintiff commenced a new action for specific performance of same option based upon the tender, defendant was immune from process in such county. Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

4. Prohibition 🔑10(2)

Prohibition was proper remedy to restrain superior court from proceeding in action for specific performance of an option, based upon a tender which was made to defendant when he was brought into jurisdiction upon an order to take his deposition which was procured for sole purpose of bringing him into county in order to make the tender and thus create venue in county not of defendant's residence. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

◆

Proceeding in prohibition by E. L. Bowes, and others, to restrain the Superior Court of Alameda County and John J. Allen, judge thereof, from taking any further proceeding in an action upon a tender which was made to named petitioner when he was brought into the jurisdiction upon an order to take his deposition.

Peremptory writ of prohibition issued.

J. Paul St. Sure, of Oakland, and Bradford M. Melvin and Charles A. Christin, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

James R. Agee, of Oakland, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The petitioners seek a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from taking any further proceedings in an action based upon a tender which was made to E. L. Bowes when he was brought into the jurisdiction upon an order to take his deposition, which petitioners assert was procured for the sole purpose of bringing him into the county in order to make the tender, and thus "create" venue by trick and device.

The individual petitioners are residents of the city and county of San Francisco where the corporation has its principal place of business. They were sued in the superior court in Alameda County where they appeared and filed a cross-complaint. A judgment went to the plaintiff in that action on both the complaint and cross-complaint, but the defendants' motion for a new trial was granted. The plaintiff then appealed to the Supreme Court and the defendants' motion to dismiss that appeal was denied. Connell v. Bowes, 19 Cal.2d 870, 123 P.2d 456. Pending the appeal the plaintiff commenced a new action in Alameda County growing out of the same transaction. It is this proceeding which the petitioners seek to restrain.

The theory of the petition is that the plaintiff misused the process of the superior court to bring one of the petitioners into Alameda County by trick and device in order to make a tender there which was a necessary prelude to the commencement of the second suit, and that this tender made in Alameda County made that county the proper county for the trial of the action as "the county where such obligation is to be performed * * * or * * * the county in which such obligation is incurred * * * ." Section 395, Code of Civil Procedure.

It is alleged in the petition and not denied that both suits involve the same subject matter—an action seeking specific performance of an option to sell capital stock of a corporation, for an accounting, and for an injunction. After the judgment in the first action, and pending the appeal from the order granting a new trial, the plaintiff cited petitioner E. L. Bowes to appear in Alameda County to give his deposition in the first action on October 25, 1941, though his deposition had theretofore been taken, and he had testified at length in the former trial. Suspecting that the only purpose of the citation was to compel him to enter Alameda County so that a tender might be made to him in that county, this petitioner duly appeared before the superior court and objected to the taking of his deposition upon all legal grounds. These objections were overruled by the court; the petitioner appeared in response to the citation; some frivolous and immaterial questions were asked him, and he was then made a tender of $5,000 in cash and notified that plaintiff elected to exercise the option. Thereafter, on November 15, 1941, the plaintiff commenced a new action for specific performance of the option based upon the tender made on October 25th. Summons was served upon the petitioners in San Francisco. They appeared specially in this second action and moved to quash service upon the ground that the tender under the alleged option was made while petitioner Bowes was in Alameda County solely because of the citation ordering him to appear and give his deposition, that those proceedings were all designed to lay the venue of the action in Alameda County, and were not taken in good faith, or for any legal purpose. The motion to quash was denied and the petitioners allege that, unless restrained, the superior court will compel them to stand trial in Alameda County and deny them their legal right to have the cause tried in the county of their residence.

[1] The theory upon which the petition is based rests upon the settled rule that "Personal service obtained by inveigling or enticing the person to be served into the territorial jurisdiction of the court, by means of fraud and deceit, actual or legal, or by trick or device, or by the use of force, is void and will be set aside." 50 C.J., p. 488. In accord are Hammons v. Superior Court, 63 Cal.App. 700, 219 P. 1037; Ewing v. Elliott, 51 Ga.App. 565, 181 S.E. 123; Parker v. Marco, 136 N.Y. 585, 32 N.E. 989, 20 L.R.A. 45, 32 Am.St.Rep. 770; Filer v. McCornick, D.C., 260 F. 309; Stewart v. Ramsay, 242 U.S. 128, 130, 37 S.Ct. 44, 61 L.Ed. 192, where the Supreme Court, giving the reasons for the rule, quoted from Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1849, Fed.Cas.No.10,739, 1 Wall Jr. 269, as follows: "'The privilege which is asserted here is the privilege of the court, rather than of the defendant. It is founded in the necessities of the judicial administration, which would be often embarrassed, and sometimes interrupted, if the suitor might be vexed with process while attending upon the court for the protection of his rights, or the witness while attending to testify. Witnesses would be chary of coming within our jurisdiction, and would be exposed to dangerous influences, if they might be punished with a lawsuit for displeasing parties by their testimony; and even parties in interest, whether on the record or not, might be deterred from the rightfully fearless assertion of a claim or the rightfully fearless assertion of a defence, if they were liable to be visited on the instant with writs from the defeated party.'"

Respondents do not question the application of the rule as it relates to "process" as that term is generally used. They contend that it does not relate to a tender upon which subsequent process rests, but they concede that they had planned and intended prior to the taking of the deposition to make the tender while the witness was in attendance under the citation, and insist that they had a right to make it at that time. They assured the superior court before the deposition was taken that they were acting in good faith, and have repeated those assurances here.

There are three questions which require consideration—(1) does the rule apply to jurisdiction between counties of the same state; (2) does it apply to a tender of this character; and (3) have the petitioners pursued the proper remedy.

[2] The first question is answered in the affirmative in State v. Superior Court, 175 Okl. 632, 54 P.2d 317; Groce v. Skelton, 206 Mo.App. 471, 230 S.W. 329. Since the fundamental basis of the doctrine is the right of the courts "to be open, accessible, free from interruption, and to cast a perfect protection around every man who necessarily approaches them" (Filer v. McCornick, supra [260 F. 314]) there is no sound reason for a limitation of the rule to parties residing in separate states and not to those residents of the same state, but of separate counties, when the venue rests upon such residence.

[3] The second question can be answered only by analogy, since we have been unable to find any authority directly upon the subject. All the cited cases refer generally to the service of "process," and respondents contend that the doctrine should be limited to some service of a writ or summons compelling a party to appear or attend upon a judicial proceeding. But in some of the cited cases a broader use of the rule is recognized. In Ewing v. Elliott, 51 Ga.App. 565, 181 S.E. 123, 124, 125, it was said that this "immunity" is not "simply a personal privilege, but it is also the privilege of the court, and is deemed necessary for the maintenance of its authority and dignity and in order to promote the due and efficient administration of justice." Others place it upon the ground of public policy. In Wood v. Wood, 78 Ky. 624, 629, it was said that where a party induces another into the jurisdiction by fraud and device for the purpose of service he "will not be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong, and thus receive benefits that would not have accrued but for the fraud." In Filer v. McCornick, supra at page 315 of 260 F., it was said: "It is these considerations which have actuated the courts in extending the protection of the rule, so limited in the beginning, until it has come to embrace practically every one who may be called to a strange jurisdiction in connection with a cause, and every proceeding or step in the action, either heard before the court or any of its officers." (Emphasis ours.) In Groce v. Skelton, supra [206 Mo.App. 471, 230 S.W. 330], it was said: "Legal fraud is measured by the facts and actions of the parties and the net result * * * that process procured by fraud or misrepresentation cannot be permitted to stand * * *." (Emphasis ours.)

There can be no question that but for the tender made in Alameda County all the petitioners were entitled to defend the action in the city and county of San Francisco, the county of their residence. § 395, Code Civ.Proc. The respondents concede that "The new action was identical to the prior action, except that it was alleged that a new tender was made on October 25, 1941." The purpose of this tender was to fix the venue of the new action in Alameda County as "the county where such obligation is to be performed * * * or * * * the county in which such obligation is incurred * * *." as these exceptions to the general residence rule are stated in section 395 of the code. The fact that both actions involved the same contract should not affect the application of the "immunity" rule. Von Kesler v. Superior Court, 109 Cal.App. 89, 292 P. 544, and similar cases cited by respondents, where the "nonresident" was served with process while voluntarily within the jurisdiction as a suitor are not in point.

[4] The petition alleges that relief was sought in the superior court and denied. It may be assumed that any other motion based upon the same grounds will likewise be denied. The petitioners are therefore forced either to waive the attack upon the jurisdiction and defend on the merits, or stand upon the defense of lack of jurisdiction and waive their statutory right to a trial on the merits in the county of their residence since the grounds here urged do not appear to be grounds for a motion for a change of the place of the trial. In such cases prohibition is the proper remedy. Jardine v. Superior Court, 213 Cal. 301, 305, 2 P.2d 756, 79 A.L.R. 291; Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 696, 195 P. 390.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 260

METZ v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

Civ. 6671.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 15, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 15, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 12, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑854(1)

On appeal from judgment for plaintiff, relying on res ipsa loquitur doctrine to sustain cause of action for accidental death, reviewing court is not bound by plaintiff's theory of cause of accident as disclosed in briefs, if record adequately supports judgment on another theory within issues of pleadings.

2. Death 🔑58(1)

In action for accidental death, "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine, relied on by plaintiff, is founded on theory that plaintiff does not know what caused accident.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

3. Master and servant 🔑278(20)

In action against railroad company under Federal Employers' Liability Act for death of sign painter as result of derailing of motor car, which he was operating along defendant's track, evidence held sufficient to show that decedent was propelling car backward at time of accident and to warrant jury's findings that car was dangerous and defective when so propelled at normal speed, that defendant and its agents knew of and failed to warn decedent of such defect and danger, and that decedent did not know thereof. Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

4. Appeal and error 🔑994(2), 1003

The weight of evidence and witnesses' credibility are for jurors to determine, and appellate court may not interfere with their exclusive province in that regard.

5. Master and servant 🔑265(5)

The res ipsa loquitur doctrine applies, under proper circumstances, to employees' actions against their employers.

6. Negligence 🔑121(2)

The mere fact that one is injured from unknown cause does not raise presumption of negligence of owner of instrumentality used at time of accident, but further facts must be shown to create inference of negligence against owner of device through medium of which another person is injured.

7. Negligence 🔑121(2)

The "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine may apply when thing causing injury sued for is shown to be under defendant's management and accident is such as does not happen in ordinary course, if those having management of such thing use proper care.

8. Negligence 🔑121(2)

The "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine prescribes a mere rule of evidence, and requirement that instrumentality causing injury sued for be under defendant's management and control, in application of such doctrine, does not mean and is not limited to actual physical control, but applies to mere right of control.

9. Master and servant 🔑111(2), 150(2)

A railroad company, employing man to travel along its tracks within designated district and keep company's signs adjacent to tracks freshly painted, owed duty to supply him with motor car reasonably suitable and safe for operation in usual manner and to inform him of fact that machine was not constructed or intended to be propelled backward.

10. Master and servant 🔑280

In action against railroad company under Federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries to sign painter as result of derailment of defective motor car which he was operating along defendant's track, evidence held insufficient to show facts relieving defendant from liability for negligence on ground of deceased's "assumption of risk". Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Assumption of Risk".

11. Master and servant 🔑204(1)

The doctrine of "assumption of risk" is inapplicable under Federal Employers' Liability Act to workman injured in performance of his duties in customary manner because of dangerous and defective machine negligently provided for his use by employer without workman's knowledge of defect. Federal Employers' Liability Act § 3, subd. 4, 45 U.S.C.A. § 53, subd. 4, note.

12. Master and servant 🔑203(1)

An employee "assumes risk" of dangers normally incident to occupation in which he voluntarily engages, so far as they are not attributable to employer's negligence, but has right to assume that employer has exercised proper care to provide safe place of work and suitable and safe appliances for work and does not assume risk arising from defect attributable to employer's negligence until employee becomes aware of such defect or unless it is so plainly observable that he may be presumed to have known thereof.

13. Master and servant ⚷228(1)
Negligence ⚷101

An employee's contributory negligence does not defeat cause of action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, but merely authorizes jury to reduce damages accruing from employer's negligence in proportion to amount of negligence attributable to employee. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 3, 45 U.S.C.A. § 53.

14. Appeal and error ⚷932(1)

In action against railroad company under Federal Employers' Liability Act for employee's accidental death, District Court of Appeal must assume, on appeal from judgment on jury's verdict for plaintiff, that if jury believed that deceased was contributorily negligent, it properly reduced ascertained damages in accordance with court's admonition and pursuant to statutory provisions. Federal Employers' Liability Act § 3, 45 U.S.C.A. § 53.

15. Trial ⚷296(3)

In action against railroad company under Federal Employers' Liability Act for death of defendant's employee, instruction merely advising jury that administratrix of estate of workman killed in course of his employment may maintain action against employer under such act for damages in behalf of deceased's widow and children, without specifically stating that defendant is liable for damages only if its negligence is proved, held not prejudicial to defendant, in view of court's previous admonitions and instructions to jury. Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James M. Allen, Judge.

Action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act by Katherine Rueb Metz, as administratrix of the estate of Emil George Metz, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company to recover damages for intestate's death. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

George R. Freeman and Elmer Laine, both of Willows, and Tebbe & Correia, of Yreka, for appellant.

Hildebrand & Bills, of Oakland, J. Everett Barr, of Yreka, and Goodman & Brownstone, of San Francisco, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

The defendant has appealed from a judgment which was rendered against it, pursuant to the verdict of a jury, in a suit for damages for the death of plaintiff's husband, Emil George Metz, which occurred in the course of his employment with the railroad company as a sign painter, as the result of the derailing of an alleged defective motor car which he was operating along the track in the vicinity of Tulelake. The suit was brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

To establish her cause of action the respondent relied chiefly on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The appellant contends that the judgment is not supported by the evidence; that the principle of res ipsa loquitur has no application to the facts of this case, since the deceased person was in actual control and operation of the motor car at the time of the accident, and that the court erred in giving to the jury certain instructions.

The Southern Pacific Company is engaged in interstate commerce. It maintains a branch track from Klamath Falls, Oregon, in a southeasterly direction through the northeastern corner of California, to Sparks, Nevada. The accident occurred at a point between the stations of Tulelake and Alturas, in Modoc County, California, where the track is comparatively level. Mr. Metz was an able-bodied man forty-six years of age. He left surviving him the plaintiff, his widow, and a nineteen-year-old son who is enlisted in the United States Army at Honolulu. Mr. Metz had been employed by the railroad company, as a painter, for seventeen years. It was his duty to travel along the track within a designated district and to keep the railroad signs, adjacent to the track, freshly painted. For that purpose he was supplied by the company with a light motor car which he personally operated, and upon which he carried his equipment and materials. His motor car required replacement. June 1, 1939, two weeks before the accident occurred, the company supplied him with a used Adams Motor Car, No. 2-A, which had been formerly operated by another employee in the vicinity of Black Butte. It was a gas-engine car weighing 385 pounds. It was of a type different from the one he was accustomed to use. There is no evidence the deceased was familiar with that model of machine. Before delivering this car to Mr. Metz, it was overhauled and repaired under the direction of Ernest W. Carlton, the company's motor car mechanic. There is some evidence this particular car was defectively constructed or adjusted and dangerous to operate. Although Mr. Carlton denied the statements, Mr. Sam Aldrich, a retired section foreman, who had formerly been employed with the company for forty-two years, testified that he had a conversation with Carlton at Dunsmuir on June 21, 1939, a few days after the accident occurred, in which he said the motor car which was used by Mr. Metz at the time of his accident "should have been put out of service because of its dangerous and defective condition." He further said that the car on that occasion had caused a lot of trouble and was not a safe car to operate. There is no evidence the deceased had any knowledge of that fact.

The evidence which was adduced at the trial very satisfactorily shows that the motor car which was involved in this accident was so adjusted as to render it dangerous to operate the machine backward. While it could be slowly run in reverse at a rate of three or four miles an hour, evidently the car was designed to be propelled forward only, at a rate of speed not to exceed fifteen or twenty miles per hour. The machine is constructed to carry the main portion of the load over the heavier right-hand wheels which are seventeen inches in diameter. The left-hand wheels are only fourteen inches in diameter and serve to guide the machine and keep it running on the track with the flanges of the right-hand wheels close to the adjacent rail. The left-hand guide-wheels are adjusted by means of bolts and nuts, at a slight angle from the line of the rail. On that account, the operation of the car in the reverse direction tends to cause the small guide-wheels to jump the rail along which they travel, especially when the car is run at a normal rate of speed. Mr. Carlton testified in that regard:

"In running this motor car forward, the weight is distributed so that if you keep the front main wheel running against the rail it will run steady and it will stay there and the car will run constantly ahead and it won't run backwards at all. They found that out very soon after we got these cars, some of them tried it, and found out it didn't work. If anybody would run that car backwards the Lord would have to have his arms around them, but they wouldn't get far. * * * The wheels were just aligned for the car to go in one direction, and that was forward."

Mr. Carlton claimed that he cautioned Mr. Metz against running the machine backward. He said: "I also cautioned him about running the car backwards, because the wheels were just aligned for the car to go in one direction, and that was forward."

Mr. Harry C. Crawford, an assistant railroad inspector, testified in behalf of the defendant that he told Mr. Metz about June 1st, just before the accident occurred, that the company "was going to send up a side-load motor car and to be careful when he operated it and not to operate it backwards. * * * They will leave the track if you run them backwards very fast." However, Mr. Francis M. Hrubanik, an investigator belonging to the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, testified that he had a conversation with Mr. Crawford at his home in Dunsmuir sometime after the accident occurred, in which Crawford told him that he never instructed Mr. Metz or any other person with regard to the manner of operating the motor car, and that the first time any orders were ever issued to anyone regarding the manner of operating motor cars was on June 26, 1939, after the accident occurred.

The motor which furnishes the power with which to operate the car in question is attached to the axle which connects with the rear right-hand drive-wheel. Extending along the entire right-hand side of the machine there is a frame which is built to about sixteen inches in height above the level of the floor, enclosing the right-hand wheels. This frame is covered with boards to serve as a seat. The rear end of the bench is supplied with a cushion where the operator of the machine sits directly over the drive-wheel. Beneath this seat there is a box in which the battery is installed. The motor and crankcase are at the driver's feet, inside the rear drive-wheel. The motor is controlled by means of a lever and an electric-contact device accessible from the rear seat. When the contact is tightly grasped by the operator it develops sparks causing combustion from which the power is derived. When the grasp on this device is released the power is automatically disconnected. At this rear seat there is also a lever which controls the brake. It should be recalled this driver's seat is stationary at the rear right-hand side of the car over the drive-wheel. Resting on the frame of the machine there is a tool-tray fourteen inches in width and fifty-seven inches in length extending from front to rear. In this box the paint cans, materials and equipment of Mr. Metz were carried.

In the vicinity of the place where the accident occurred, on the southerly side of and adjacent to the railroad track, between Tulelake and Alturas, there is a stock corral and cattle chute. About two hundred feet northwesterly from that chute, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Reynolds and their two children lived in a small house situated on the same side of the track. Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth E. Thomas and their two children lived in another house nearby. It was also situated on the same side of the track. These two families were engaged in raising potatoes in that locality.

About ten o'clock on the morning of June 14, 1939, Mrs. Reynolds, who was then standing in the front doorway of her home, saw Emil Metz sitting alone on the seat at the rear right-hand side of the motor car as he drove it southerly along the track in the direction of Alturas. After he passed from sight and had been gone about twenty minutes, she again stepped to the door and saw him returning. She said "He was on the left front going towards Tulelake." This clearly indicates that he had not turned the machine around, but was driving it backward toward Tulelake. The machine was moving slowly. She said "I wouldn't say he was going fast."

It appears that during the twenty minutes which elapsed after Mr. Metz passed the Reynolds' house driving southeasterly toward Alturas, he painted one railroad crossing sign and a whistling sign, both of which were within a distance of about 600 feet from her house. After Mrs. Reynolds observed Mr. Metz pass her home upon his return toward Tulelake, she turned away from the door. Almost instantly she heard the children scream. They were then playing in front of the house, near the track. She also heard an unusual commotion and realized that the chug of his motor had ceased. She rushed back to the door and saw that the motor car had jumped the track on the northerly side and stood close to and at an acute angle from the northern rail. The body of Mr. Metz lay upon the embankment close to his machine. He was badly injured, helpless and suffering great pain. Mrs. Reynolds ran to the home of her neighbor, Mrs. Thomas, for assistance. Both women immediately went to the scene of the accident. Within a few moments Mr. Reynolds arrived. He said that he found Mr. Metz lying in a semi-conscious condition "between the track"; that the motor car stood on the northerly side of the rails "with the wheels flush against the track parallel so that one end of his speeder would be facing directly north." Mr. Reynolds proceeded to roll the motor car onward five or six feet farther away from the rail. The car remained in that position for several days. Mr. Reynolds assisted in conveying Mr. Metz to the motor car upon which he was placed, and then drove down the road a short distance where he had seen a section crew at work. He found Carl Tonole, a section track foreman, and notified him of the accident. Tonole soon arrived at the scene of the accident and made a careful inspection of the track and car to try to ascertain the cause of the accident. Mr. Metz was unable to talk. He never recovered his speech so as to tell anyone how the accident happened. He was soon removed to a hospital, and died the following day from the effect of his injuries.

There is no dispute over the fact that the flanges of the heavy wheels of the motor car left a distinct crease across the surface of each wooden tie in a curved line from the point where the car evidently left the rail, a distance of about twenty-four feet, directly to the place where the car jumped the northern rail and came to a stop. All witnesses agree to that fact. Since the car was found directly at the end of that mark with the front wheels nearest the track, we are convinced it must have been traveling backward when it was derailed. This conclusion is corroborated by the fact that the small guide-wheels were adjusted at an angle to crowd the flanges of the heavy wheels against the rail on the opposite side of the track, when the machine was running forward. It seems reasonable to assume that, on the same principle, when the machine was running in the opposite direction, the slant of the guide-wheels would tend to make them jump the rail upon which they rolled just as it did on this occasion. We have no doubt that is exactly what occurred.

However, that does not necessarily mean this judgment should be reversed. Notwithstanding the fact that the respondent strongly urges in her briefs that there are circumstances and inferences in the record from which the jury was warranted in concluding the deceased was running his motor car in a forward direction when the accident occurred, we assume that if the evidence supports a finding that the defendant was guilty of negligence in furnishing their employee with a defective and dangerous motor car, without informing him of that fact, and that he was not charged with knowledge of his danger and did not assume the risk of those defects under the circumstances of this case, then the judgment should be affirmed.

[1, 2] The plaintiff relied on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur for her cause of action. In effect, she asserted she did not know how the accident occurred. On appeal, a reviewing court is not bound by the respondent's theory of the cause of accident as disclosed in the briefs, when he relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, provided the record adequately supports the judgment on another theory which is contained within the issues of the pleadings. The very theory upon which res ipsa loquitur is founded is that the plaintiff does not know what caused the accident.

[3, 4] We are of the opinion the record does not contain substantial evidence that Emil Metz was engaged in running his motor car in a forward direction at the time of the accident. On the contrary, we are satisfied he was then propelling it backward. There is, however, ample evidence from which the jury was warranted in determining that the car was dangerous and defective when it was propelled backward at a normal rate of speed; that the defendant and its agents knew that fact, and failed to warn the deceased against such defect and danger; that the deceased was not acquainted with that particular type of car, and that there is no evidence Mr. Metz knew of the defect of the motor car or of the danger of propelling it backward. It is true that both Mr. Crawford and Mr. Carlton testified they warned the deceased against driving the machine backward, but evidence in rebuttal was adduced by the plaintiff tending to impeach those witnesses and the jury was therefore warranted in disbelieving them in that regard. The weight of their evidence, in that respect, and the credibility of these witnesses were matters for the determination of the jurors. We may not interfere with their exclusive province in that regard.

[5-8] The California cases, and the weight of authorities in most jurisdictions, hold that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies, under proper circumstances, to actions by employees against their employers. Nolen v. F. O. Engstrum Co., 175 Cal. 464, 166 P. 346; O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 P. 674; Ronconi v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 35 Cal.App. 560, 170 P. 635; Lippert v. Pacific Sugar Corp., 33 Cal.App. 198, 164 P. 810; 6 Thompson's Comm. on Negligence, 632, §§ 7649, 7650. It is true the mere fact that one is injured from an unknown cause does not raise the presumption of negligence on the part of the owner of the instrumentality which is used at the time of the accident. 38 Am. Jur. 989, § 295. Further facts are required to be shown to create the inference of negligence against the owner of a device through the medium of which another person is injured. California cases have frequently stated that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may apply "when a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care." 19 Cal.Jur. 704, § 123. This doctrine prescribes a mere rule of evidence. The requirement that the instrumentality must be under the management and control of the defendant, in the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, does not mean, nor is it limited to, actual physical control. It has been held to apply to the mere right of control of the instrument which causes the injury at the time of the accident. Van Horn v. Pacific Refining & Roofing Co., 27 Cal.App. 105, 109, 148 P. 951; McCloskey v. Koplar, 329 Mo. 527, 46 S.W.

2d 557, 92 A.L.R. 641; 38 Am.Jur. 997, sec. 300. In the Van Horn case, supra [27 Cal.App. 105, 148 P. 953], it is said in that regard:

"The rule declared in this and the other cases cited by appellant, to the effect that the exclusive control and management of the appliance causing the injury must be shown to have been in the defendant, must be taken to refer to the right of such control; otherwise, as we have seen, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur could seldom if ever be given application." (Italics added.)

And in the text of 38 American Jurisprudence, at page 997, it is likewise said in that regard: "The requirement that the instrumentality be under the management and control of the defendant does not mean, or is not limited to, actual physical control, but refers rather to the right of control at the time of the accident."

[9] In the present case the railroad company had continuous exclusive control over the motor car. The defendant's motor car mechanic, who was employed for that express purpose, actually repaired and adjusted that particular machine before it was delivered to Mr. Metz. It was the mechanic's duty to keep it in suitable repair. The deceased had no duty or authority to repair or keep that machine in proper mechanical condition. The real cause of the accident was the defendant's adjustment of the guide-wheels on that car in such a manner as to render it dangerous to operate it backward. We assume the jury found that the car was turned over to the deceased in that defectively adjusted condition without warning him of the danger. It was the duty of the railroad company to supply Mr. Metz with a motor car which was reasonably suitable and safe for operation in the usual manner that such cars are used. If the machine was not constructed or intended to be propelled backward the workman should have been so informed.

We find no substantial evidence to support respondent's theory that the accident was caused by the existence of a low joint of the rails or any other defective condition of the track.

[10-12] We are satisfied the evidence does not show facts which will relieve the defendant from liability for negligence on the ground of the assumption of risk on the part of the deceased. The doctrine of assumption of risk has no application when the workman is injured in the performance of his duties in the customary manner, through a dangerous and defective machine which is negligently provided for his use by the employer, if the workman has no knowledge of the defect. Gila Valley, G. & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 232 U.S. 94, 34 S.Ct. 229, 58 L.Ed. 521; 45 U.S.C.A. § 53, subd. 4, note; Crabtree v. Western Pac. R. Co., 33 Cal.App.2d 35, 43, 90 P.2d 835. In the case last cited the court quoted with approval from the Gila Valley, G. & N. R. Co. case, supra [232 U.S. 94, 34 S.Ct. 231, 58 L.Ed. 521], as follows:

"An employee assumes the risk of dangers normally incident to the occupation in which he voluntarily engages, so far as these are not attributable to the employer's negligence. But the employee has a right to assume that his employer has exercised proper care with respect to providing a safe place of work, and suitable and safe appliances for the work, and is not to be treated as assuming the risk arising from a defect that is attributable to the employer's negligence, until the employee becomes aware of such defect, or unless it is so plainly observable that he may be presumed to have known of it." (Italics added.)

[13, 14] The alleged contributory negligence of the deceased is not a defense to this action, which is maintained under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Contributory negligence does not defeat the cause of action. If the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in operating the motor car backward, and recovery is not barred by the doctrine of "assumption of the risk," then the jury was authorized to merely reduce the damages accruing from defendant's negligence "in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee," on account of his contributory negligence. 45 U.S.C.A. § 53. The jury was fully and fairly instructed in that regard. We must assume that if the jury believed the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, it properly reduced the ascertained damages, in accordance with the admonition of the court, and pursuant to the provisions of section 53 of the act above cited.

[15] The appellant was not prejudiced by the giving of plaintiff's instruction number sixteen which, in effect, merely advises the jury that the administratrix of the estate of a workman who has been killed in the course of his employment, under the provisions of section 51 of the U.S.C.A.

Federal Employers' Liability Act, may maintain an action for damages against the employer in behalf of the widow and children of the deceased person. The appellant complains of that instruction because it omits to specifically state that the railroad company is liable for damages only in the event of proof of its negligence.

The jury was previously repeatedly and clearly told the burden was on the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of evidence that the deceased was killed in the course of his employment by the Southern Pacific Company as the proximate result of the negligence of the company or its agents, or their verdict must be rendered in favor of the defendant. Following these admonitions several instructions were given in a group upon the specific application of the Federal Employers' Liability Act to the facts of this case. These instructions were separated only by Roman numerals which, we assume, were not even read to the jury. The jury had no means of knowing these charges upon the subject of the application of the Federal Employers' Liability Act were not all a part of one instruction on that general subject. The context of those instructions clearly identifies them as a continuous charge on the same subject-matter. The jury could not have been misled by the challenged instruction. Immediately preceding that criticised instruction the jury was charged as follows:

"Plaintiff's cause of action is based upon the act of Congress known as the Federal Employers' Liability Act and the statute of the United States governing the same reads as follows:

"'Every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several states or territories * * * shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, * * * for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, * * * or other equipment.'" (Italics added.)

The foregoing instruction clearly and unequivocally informs the jury that liability exists only when the injury or death results from the negligent acts of the defendant in supplying the dangerous or defective machine or appliance to the workman. All that the criticised instruction adds to that statement of principle is that the administratrix or other representative of the estate of the dead man may maintain the action for damages in behalf of the widow or children.

We find no reversible error in the charge to the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEEL, J. pro tem., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

BOLLINGER v. NATIONAL FIRE INS. CO. OF HARTFORD, CONN.*

Civ. 11810.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 17, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 16, 1942.

1. Insurance ⊂⇒622(2)

Contracting parties may agree to fix a period within which an action on a fire policy must be filed, and such period may be less than that provided by the statute of limitations, as long as the lesser period is not unreasonable.

2. Insurance ⊂⇒622(2)

A period of 15 months, within which action on a fire policy is required by the fire policy to be filed, is not unreasonable.

3. Insurance ⊂⇒146(3)

Fire policy was required to be construed most strongly against insurer.

4. Insurance ⊂⇒622(3)

Where fire policy provided that insured must give insurer preliminary proof of loss within 60 days after fire, that insured should have 20 days to approve or disapprove the loss, that loss was payable 30 days thereafter, and that no action could be maintained until after compliance by insured with such requirements nor unless action was begun within 15 months after commencement of fire, insured had 15 months from time he could first file action on policy within which to file action on policy, rather than 15 months from date of fire.

---

* Subsequent opinion 147 P.2d 611.

5. Insurance ⚷146(3)

When contractual provisions shortening the statutory period for bringing action on a fire policy appear in the policy, they must be strictly construed against the insurer.

6. Courts ⚷91(1)

Where there was a conflict between two Supreme Court decisions, and the later case did not purport to overrule the earlier case, the District Court of Appeal was free to follow the rule of the prior case, which the District Court of Appeal thought was the sounder rule, and which was the rule supported by the weight of authority.

WARD, J., dissenting.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. F. Bray, Judge.

Action by Fred M. Bollinger, as trustee in bankruptcy, etc., against the National Fire Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, to recover for fire loss under fire policy issued by defendant to the bankrupt. From a judgment in favor of the defendant following an order sustaining defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed, and trial court instructed to overrule demurrer.

Jack J. Miller, of Stockton, and Kenneth M. Johnson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Long & Levit, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant entered following an order sustaining defendant's demurrer without leave to amend.

So far as pertinent here, the complaint alleges that a fire, partially destroying property insured by the defendant, occurred on September 27, 1939; that prior to that date plaintiff had been appointed trustee in bankruptcy of the insured's bankrupt estate; that on November 18, 1939, plaintiff and the insured furnished the defendant with proof of loss as required by the policy; that by such proof of loss plaintiff claimed the sum of $1,333; that on December 22, 1939, plaintiff entered into an agreement with the Fire Companies' Adjustment Bureau, agent of defendant, fixing the amount of loss at $1,160.25; that shortly thereafter the defendant notified the insured that it denied all liability under the policy upon the grounds that at the time of the fire the original insured was not the sole and unconditional owner of the insured property, and that under the terms of the policy such a change has made the policy void; that on January 15, 1940, plaintiff commenced an action on the policy in the Superior Court of San Joaquin County; that on motion of the defendant, that action was transferred to the Municipal Court of the City and County of San Francisco; that said case proceeded to trial on January 8, 1941; that after plaintiff had completed the presentation of his evidence, defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the action had been prematurely brought in that it had been commenced before the expiration of thirty days from the date the loss payable under the policy had been ascertained, and that under the policy the commencement of any action thereon was prohibited for thirty days after the loss had been fixed; that the trial court on February 20, 1941, granted the motion for a nonsuit and judgment was entered on February 21, 1941. The present action was brought in the Superior Court of Contra Costa County on February 25, 1941. The policy upon which this action is predicated is pleaded as an exhibit to the complaint.

The policy contained a provision requiring the insured to comply with all provisions of the policy, and to bring any action based thereon "within fifteen months next after the commencement of the fire." The theory of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer was that, inasmuch as this action was brought more than fifteen months after the commencement of the fire, it was barred by this contractual provision. On this appeal it is the contention of appellant, that when this clause is interpreted with the other provisions of the policy, the action was commenced in time, and, in any event, certain facts pleaded in the complaint are sufficient to estop respondent from relying on this clause.

The policy provides that when a loss occurs the insured must give to the company written notice thereof without unnecessary delay; that within sixty days after the fire the insured must render a preliminary proof of loss; that the company has twenty days thereafter to approve or disapprove the loss; that the loss is payable thirty days after the loss has been ascertained; and that "No suit or action on this policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustained, until after full compliance by the insured with all of the foregoing requirements, nor unless begun within fifteen months next after the commencement of the fire." Various provisions concerning arbitration of the loss could extend the period before suit could be instituted for over another one hundred days.

It will be noted that the insured has up to sixty days to file proof of loss, the company has twenty days to pass on such proof, and the loss is not payable until thirty days thereafter. No action may be commenced until full compliance with these requirements. It follows, therefore, that, under the policy, a period of one hundred and ten days—over three and one-half months—may expire before suit may be commenced. If arbitration is resorted to, an additional period of over one hundred days could expire before suit may be brought. In the present case the relevant dates are as follows:

September 27, 1939—Fire occurred.

December 22, 1939—Loss agreed upon.

January 15, 1940—First action commenced.

February 21, 1941—Judgment entered dismissing first action.

February 25, 1941—Present action instituted.

It will be noted that the present action was instituted within fourteen months from the date the loss was agreed upon, about eighteen months from the date of the fire, and about thirteen months from the date suit could have first been instituted—i. e., January 21, 1940, thirty days after the loss was agreed upon. Appellant did not sit back and allow the contractual period to expire without action on his part. He immediately instituted the first action—in fact, that action was filed on January 15, 1940, some six days before such an action could properly be filed. For over a year this action was pending. On February 21, 1941—more than fifteen months "next after the commencement of the fire"—that action was dismissed because prematurely filed. The present action was filed four days later.

[1-4] There can be no doubt that in this state contracting parties may agree to fix a period within which an action must be filed, and that such period may be less than that provided by the statute of limitations, as long as the lesser period is not unreasonable. Tebbets v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 155 Cal. 137, 99 P. 501; Fitzpatrick v. North American Accident Ins. Co., 18 Cal. App. 264, 123 P. 209; Harlow v. American Equitable Assur. Co., 87 Cal.App. 28, 261 P. 499; Beeson v. Schloss, 183 Cal. 618, 192 P. 292; Fageol T. & C. Co. v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 18 Cal.2d 748, 117 P.2d 669; see Annotation 121 A.L.R. 758. There is also no doubt that fifteen months is not an unreasonable period. But in every case there is always presented the question as to when the contractual period is to start. In the instant case, if the fifteen months' provision concerning the bringing of an action on the policy stood alone there can be no doubt but that the fifteen-month period would start to run from the date of the fire. The provision reads that no suit or action on the policy may be sustained "until after full compliance by the insured with all of the foregoing requirements, nor unless begun within fifteen months next after the commencement of the fire." But that provision does not stand alone. It refers back to other provisions of the policy and requires "full compliance" with those provisions in reference to the fixing of the loss before an action may be commenced. The question is immediately presented as to the proper interpretation of these seemingly conflicting provisions in the policy. The policy purports to give the insured a fifteen-month period after the fire to commence his action. Actually, under other clauses of the policy which had to be complied with before suit could be commenced, the action in this case could not be filed until January 21, 1940—some four months after the date of the fire. If the position of respondent is sound, then appellant did not have fifteen months from the date of the fire to file his suit—he had but eleven months. Although the provision that the action must be commenced within fifteen months "next after the commencement of the fire" standing alone is clear and unambiguous, when that provision is read with the other provisions of the policy, an ambiguity is created. That clause implies that the parties have contracted that the injured party shall have a full period of fifteen months within which to file his action in place of the usual four years provided by the statute of limitations. But when that clause is read with other clauses referred to in the very clause under construction, it is seen that in this very case it was held in the prior action that the insured had no legal right to file his action until four months "next after the commencement of the fire," thus cutting down the fifteen-month period apparently contracted for to eleven months. Had resort been had to arbitration, this eleven-month period could have been reduced another three and a half months. Thus, instead of permitting the insured a period of fifteen months within which to file his action, if respondent is correct, in this case he had but eleven months, and under some circumstances would have had but seven and a half months. Keeping in mind that this is a provision in an insurance policy which must be construed most strongly against the company, and also keeping in mind that by this provision the normal period of the statute of limitations is greatly reduced, it seems quite clear that when the policy is construed as a whole the only reasonable construction is that the insured is granted fifteen months from the time he could first file his action to file his complaint.

[5] This is not the first time this problem has been presented to the appellate courts of this and other states. Although there is a definite conflict in the authorities, according to the weight of authority, such policy provisions are interpreted as excluding from their operation the period that must expire before suit properly may be commenced. Stated another way, regardless of the language used in such clauses, the majority of courts have held that the contractual period does not start to run until suit may be first filed. The rule is thus stated in 29 Am.Jur., page 1043, section 1397: "There is a sharp conflict in the cases on the question when the time begins to run within which a suit is required to be brought under the usual policy provisions. It is usually provided that the insurer shall have a certain time within which to pay the loss, postponing the time of payment, and that no action shall be sustained unless commenced within a certain time. Whatever may be the term employed in the latter provision, whether it is within a certain time 'after loss,' 'after the fire,' or 'after death,' many courts hold that the provision for immunity from suit and the one of limitation must be construed together and that the period of limitation does not begin to run until the loss is payable and an action might be brought against the insurer." Cases from many jurisdictions are cited in support of the rule. The reasons for this rule are obvious. While contractual provisions shortening the statutory period, if reasonable, are valid, they do give one of the contracting parties an advantage over the other. When such provisions appear in insurance policies they must be strictly construed against the insurance company. By providing that suit may not be commenced until after thirty days from the date the loss is agreed upon, if that period is deducted from the fifteen-month period, obviously the period fixed by contract has been shortened to that extent. This raises an ambiguity. Did the parties intend that the contractual period should thus be shortened? In answering that question the majority of courts have held that the policy should be interpreted most strictly against the company, and for that reason have held that the parties intended that the insured should have the full contractual period during which he could file his action. These courts hold, therefore, that the contractual period does not start to run until the insured could first file the action—in the present case thirty days after the loss was ascertained, or January 21, 1940.

This rule has been expressly adopted by the Supreme Court of this state in the only case where that court has fully discussed the problem. In Case v. Sun Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 473, 23 P. 534, 8 L.R.A. 48, the policy compelled compliance with the provisions requiring the fixing of the loss before suit could be commenced and also provided that such suit "shall be commenced within twelve months next after the fire shall occur." The fire occurred September 12, 1884, and suit was not commenced until November 22, 1885. Compliance with the other provisions of the policy was not completed until October 16, 1885. After reviewing the pertinent authorities at length, the court squarely held that the provisions requiring proof of loss as a condition precedent to bringing suit, created an ambiguity as to the proper meaning of the twelve-month provision, and that properly construed, the contractual period did not start to run until the insured could first file the action. The court based its decision directly upon the reasoning of the early case of Spare v. Home

Mut. Ins. Co., C.C., 17 F. 568, 9 Sawy. 142, from which it quoted at length. In that quotation, it is first pointed out that the clause fixing twelve months as the period within which suit must be commenced was valid, and then the court referred to the contentions of the plaintiffs in that action concerning that clause, as follows: "'* * * they contend that it must be read in connection with that other clause which provides that a loss does not become payable until 60 days after the proof of that fact is made; and that, taken together, the reasonable construction of them is that, the right to sue on the policy being postponed until the loss is payable, namely, sixty days after proof thereof, the twelve-months limitation upon such right does not commence to run until that time. This construction is supported by the decided weight of authority, and, in my judgment, is correct in principle.'" The court then cites many cases from other jurisdictions approving that rule. The court then quotes from Steen v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 89 N.Y. 315, 42 Am.Rep. 297, as follows: "'We think the intention of the defendant was to give the insured a full period of 12 months, within any part of which he might commence his action, and having, by postponement of the time of payment, secured itself from suit, it did not intend to embrace that period within the term after the expiration of which it could not be sued. In other words, the parties cannot be presumed to have suspended the remedy and provided for the running of the period of limitation during the same time. Indeed, the actual case is stronger; not only was the remedy postponed, but the liability even did not exist at the time of the fire, nor until it was fixed and ascertained according to the provisions of the policy. Having thus made the doing of certain things, and a fixed lapse of time thereafter, conditions precedent to the bringing of an action, the parties must be deemed to have contracted in reference to a time when the insured, except for that contract, might be in a condition to bring an action. Under any other construction, the two conditions are inconsistent with each other.'" The court expressly refused to follow the case of Garido v. American Cent. Ins. Co. of St. Louis, 2 Cal.Unrep. 560, 8 P. 512, recognizing that its holding was "not altogether in harmony with the cases which we follow in this case." It should also be noted that the court did not hold that the company was estopped to plead the contractual provision because the loss had not been ascertained until after the contractual period had expired, as it could have done. Instead, it elected to and did place its decision squarely upon the sole ground that, properly construed, such contractual provisions do not commence to run until suit can first be filed. It will thus be seen that the Supreme Court as early as 1890 adopted the rule that was then, and still is, the so-called majority rule. See Annotations, 83 A.L.R. 748, particularly at page 760; 112 A.L.R. 1288, particularly at page 1297.

The respondent contends, however, that a later case of the Supreme Court, and one in the appellate court, have adopted the minority view, and that the Sun Insurance Co. case, supra, has been overruled. It must be conceded that these two later decisions have applied the minority view, but in neither of them was the problem here involved fully discussed, nor was the real holding of the Sun Insurance Co. case at all analyzed. The first case that is relied upon as establishing the minority rule in this state is Tebbets v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 155 Cal. 137, 99 P. 501, 502, a department decision of the Supreme Court. That case involved an interpretation of a life-accident policy. The insured died September 4, 1904. Action was commenced April 5, 1905. The policy provided that proof of death must be furnished within two months of its occurrence, and that action could not be brought until three months after filing such proofs, "nor brought at all unless begun within six months from time of death." The opinion does not state when proof of death was made. It is to be noted that under this policy a period of five months could expire before suit could be commenced. If the six-month period started from death, this would leave but one month in which to file the action, a period so short that it is very doubtful if it would be upheld as reasonable. The court did not note or discuss this fact. The opinion is two pages long. All but six lines of the decision are devoted to a discussion of the validity of the contractual provision shortening the statutory period of limitation. The contention of the insured was that the contractual provision was void as against public policy, relying on certain cases from other states so holding. The court properly held that such a provision, if reasonable, was valid. Then, at the very end of its opinion, the court, without recognition of the fact that such rule was directly contrary to its earlier decision in the Sun Insurance Co. case, supra, stated (page 139 of 155 Cal., page 502 of 99 P.): "The six months' period was not in itself unreasonable. It began to run from the date of the death, and was not affected by the provision that legal proceedings could not be brought before the expiration of three months from the date of filing proofs," citing an Ohio case [Appel v. Cooper Ins. Co., 76 Ohio St. 52, 80 N. E. 955, 10 L.R.A.,N.S., 674, 10 Ann.Cas. 821], that state being one of the states that has adopted the minority view. The court had cited the Sun Insurance Co. case, supra, with approval, in its discussion of the validity of the contractual provision, but it nowhere recognized that, by its decision, it was overruling that well-reasoned case. Although, it must be conceded that the rule of this case is directly contrary to its prior decision, in my opinion, it should not be held that the court intended to and did overrule, in this cavalier fashion, its prior holding. The court not only did not discuss its earlier decision, but did not mention the many convincing, and, to my mind, compelling, arguments in favor of the majority rule. In fact, the later decision did not recognize that there was a conflict on the important principle involved.

The second case relied upon as establishing the minority view in this state is Fitzpatrick v. North American Accident Ins. Co., supra. The case involved a policy of accident insurance. The insured was injured January 18, 1909. He died on January 23, 1909. Suit was commenced February 16, 1910. The policy provided for notification to the company of any injury within ten days of an accident; that proof of claim must be made within two months after death; and suit must be brought within twelve months of the date of the accident. The opinion does not mention whether suit could be commenced prior to filing of proof of loss—the very clause which creates the ambiguity in the instant case. The court first holds that contractual clauses fixing the time for commencement of the action are valid. It then holds that under this policy the period started to run from the date of the accident. It places this holding squarely upon the holding above-quoted from the Tebbets case, supra. In addition, it cites, in support of its holding, the case of Garido v. American Cent. Ins. Co. of St. Louis, supra—a case that had been disapproved in the Sun Insurance Co. case, supra. The court discusses the Sun Insurance Co. case, supra, and holds that the real basis of that case was estoppel. The appellate court obviously misinterpreted the earlier Supreme Court decision. The Supreme Court, as demonstrated from the quotations above set forth, placed its decision solely upon the proper construction of the policy. It should be mentioned that no hearing was asked in the Supreme Court from the appellate court decision. Other cases cited by respondent on this issue are not in point. Neither the Tebbets case nor the Fitzpatrick case has been cited in any subsequent California case on the point here under discussion.

[6] We are thus faced with a situation where there are three California cases where the problem here involved was discussed. One of these is the Sun Insurance Co. case, supra, which is the only case where an appellate court of this state has fully discussed the problem, and where the Supreme Court clearly and unequivocally adopted what we consider to be the reasonable and proper rule, and the rule adopted by the majority of courts of this country. Another of the cases—the Tebbets case, supra,—is one where the Supreme Court admittedly laid down a rule contrary to its prior decision, but failed to discuss its prior decision, failed to discuss the arguments in favor of the majority rule, and failed to recognize that there was a conflict in the authorities on the subject. The third decision is by the intermediate appellate court in which no hearing by the Supreme Court was asked. It blindly followed the brief holding of the Tebbets case, and not only misinterpreted the holding in the Sun Insurance Co. case, but cited, in support of its holding, a case that had been disapproved in that case. Although, of course, this court, as an intermediate appellate court, is bound to follow prior decisions of the Supreme Court, under the circumstances here disclosed the least that can be said is that there is a conflict in the Supreme Court decisions, and that the later case did not purport to overrule the earlier one. Under such circumstances, I think this court is free to follow what we consider to be the sounder rule, and the rule that is supported by the weight of authority.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider or discuss appellant's contention that under the facts pleaded, regardless of the above-discussed rule, respondent is estopped from contending the action was not filed in time.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the trial court is instructed to overrule the demurrer of defendant.

E. P. MURPHY, Justice pro tem., concurred.

WARD, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

Appellant urges (1) that the complaint states a cause of action; (2) that a proper application of the doctrine of estoppel shows that a cause of action was stated, and (3) assuming the complaint was faulty, it was error not to grant leave to amend. Appellant's position is stated in the opening brief as follows: "From the complaint as it now stands it is ascertainable that there was a delay of four (4) months from the date of the fire to the time when an action could be brought. If during trial it should be shown that any portion of this delay was occasioned by the acts of the defendant * * * the fifteen (15) month period would be extended by such time." Appellant relies upon the doctrine of estoppel.

The majority opinion holds that when the several provisions relating to the time when an action may be filed are read together "an ambiguity is created." This point was not raised by appellant in his statement of questions involved on appeal nor does it appear to have been called to the attention of the trial court as is evidenced by its opinion which appears in the transcript. I fail to find any doubtful, indistinct or equivocal language (Kraner v. Halsey, 82 Cal. 209, 22 P. 1137) in the provisions of the policy with reference to the time within which suit may be brought. A definite maximum time is fixed; the minimum period may be uncertain depending upon compliance with designated requirements. Whether read together or separately no ambiguity appears. In Fitzpatrick v. North American Accident Ins. Co., 18 Cal.App. 264, 265, 123 P. 209, referring to a policy somewhat similar in its terms, the court said: "The provision in this policy limiting the time within which suit might be brought, is free from ambiguity." Contracts, particularly insurance policies containing provisions that suits must be filed within specified periods but not until the happening of certain events, have been upheld in this state. The rule is stated and insurance cases cited in Beeson v. Schloss, 183 Cal. 618, 622, 192 P. 292, 294 as follows: "It is a well-settled proposition of law that the parties to a contract may stipulate therein for a period of limitation, shorter than that fixed by the statute of limitations, and that such stipulation violates no principle of public policy, provided the period fixed be not so unreasonable as to show imposition or undue advantage in some way. Tebbets v. Fidelity [& Casualty] Co., 155 Cal. 137, 99 P. 501; Case v. Sun Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 473, 23 P. 534, 8 L.R.A. 48; Fitzpatrick v. North American [Accident Ins.] Co., 18 Cal.App. 264, 266, 123 P. 209; Garido v. American Ins. Co. [2 Cal.Unrep. 560], 8 P. 512; 1 Wood on Lim. (4th Ed.) 145; 25 Cyc. 1017." The majority opinion relies upon Case v. Sun Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 473, 23 P. 534, 8 L.R.A. 48. Referring to that case, the majority opinion states: "* * * the court squarely held that the provisions requiring proof of loss as a condition precedent to bringing suit, created an ambiguity."

The Sun Insurance Co. decision does not hold that an "ambiguity was created." It sets forth certain provisions of a policy including one that any action "shall be commenced within twelve months" etc., the court at page 477 of 83 Cal., at page 535 of 23 P., 8 L.R.A. 48, saying: "In this case it was more than 12 months after the fire before an action could be commenced." In Steen v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 89 N.Y. 315, 42 Am.Rep. 297, quoted with approval in Spare v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., C.C., 17 F. 568, 9 Sawy. 142, it was held that the distinct and definite conditions in the policy "are inconsistent." This is the holding in Case v. Sun Insurance Co., supra, based upon the facts of that case. The court in the Sun Insurance Co. case further said, page 477 of 83 Cal., at page 535 of 23 P., 8 L.R.A. 48: "This case is distinguishable from Garido v. [American Cent.] Ins. Co. [of St. Louis, 2 Cal.Unrep. 560], 8 P. 512, in which the plaintiff had ample time after his right of action accrued to have commenced it within 12 months after the loss occurred." This seems to be a clear recognition of the fact that if in the Sun Insurance Co. case the insured, after compliance with certain conditions in the policy had remaining to him a reasonable time to file the action, a contrary conclusion would have been reached.

The majority opinion holds that there is a "conflict on the important principle involved" in the Sun Insurance Co. decision and that of Tebbets v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 155 Cal. 137, 99 P. 501. When analyzed such seeming conflict disappears. In each case the clause or clauses in the policy limiting the period within which an action may be commenced is or are valid. In the Sun Insurance Co. case such clause, when read with others, demonstrates not ambiguity in language, but rather an incongruous or inconsistent condition as applied to the facts of that case. In the Tebbets case no such difficulty arose. It was stated at page 138 of 155 Cal., at page 502 of 99 P.: "The general rule, supported by the great weight of authority, is that a condition in a policy of insurance, providing that no recovery shall be had thereon unless suit be brought within a given time, is valid, if the time limited be in itself not unreasonable." Citing the Sun Insurance Co. case as recognizing this principle. And, as applied to the facts of the Tebbets case, it was held that "The six months' period was not in itself unreasonable. It began to run from the date of the death, and was not affected by the provision that legal proceedings could not be brought before the expiration of three months from the date of filing proofs."

The rule, "supported by the great weight of authority" (Tebbets v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., supra, 155 Cal. page 138, 99 P. page 502), that such conditions in insurance policies are valid "if the time limited be in itself not unreasonable," was followed in Fitzpatrick v. North American Accident Ins. Co., supra. The majority opinion depreciates and attempts to minimize the value of this decision as an authority upon the ground that "no hearing was asked in the Supreme Court." Conceding such fact, and that a denial of a petition therefor would have added weight, still the failure of a losing litigant to request such hearing does not diminish the soundness of the reasoning or the logical conclusion reached in the Fitzpatrick opinion. In Perry v. Magneson, 207 Cal. 617, 279 P. 650, an action upon a surety bond, it was agreed by the parties that the amount of the liability should be paid when the exact sum was ascertained. The court under the facts of that case held that a surety cannot hold out hope of amicable adjustment and thus delay action against it, further saying at page 621 of 207 Cal., at page 652 of 279 P.: "The provision for the limitation of time for the commencement of suit upon the bond was no doubt reasonable in point of time under ordinary circumstances, and, had the surety merely insisted upon a strict compliance with the provision, its position here would be tenable. Fitzpatrick v. North American Accident Ins. Co., 18 Cal.App. 264, 123 P. 209. But the appellant here did not do that."

The principle laid down in the Tebbets case, that if the limitation is not unreasonable the parties may stipulate as to conditions and the time within which an action may be brought, has been generally or specifically upheld in Beeson v. Schloss, supra; Colma Vegetable Ass'n, v. Bonetti, 91 Cal.App. 103, 267 P. 172; Harlow v. American Equitable Assur. Co., 87 Cal.App. 28, 261 P. 499; Frankini v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 31 Cal.App.2d 666, 88 P.2d 790. In Fageol T. & C. Co. v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 18 Cal.2d 748, 117 P.2d 669, 672, the court said: "Such a covenant shortening the period of limitations is a valid provision of an insurance contract and cannot be ignored with impunity as long as the limitation is not so unreasonable as to show imposition or undue advantage. One year was not an unfair period of limitation." When the conditions are practically impossible of fulfillment, in the interest of administering substantial justice a rule in consonance with the rights of the parties is invoked. Case v. Sun Insurance Co., supra; Bennett v. Modern Woodmen, 52 Cal.App. 581, 199 P. 343.

The majority opinion concedes that "there is * * * no doubt that fifteen months is not an unreasonable period." Admittedly the present action was not filed within the fifteen months' limitation stipulated in the policy. It is also admitted that appellant, after compliance with the provisions of the policy relative to proof of loss, etc., had over eleven months in which to file the complaint. Under ordinary circumstances that would be a reasonable period and the record shows that a proper complaint was not filed within that period. The majority opinion does not hold that the filing of the complaint within the eleven months was practically impossible. Such opinion is based upon the fact that "If arbitration is resorted to, an additional period * * * could expire before suit may be brought." No such fact of resort to arbitration appears in this case. An appellate court is not permitted to speculate on what might have occurred. Roy v. Smith, 134 Cal.App. 240, 25 P.2d 251, 26 P.2d 650. The facts of the Sun Insurance Co. case are entirely dissimilar to those herein.

The main contention, estoppel, urged by appellant, is not decided in the majority opinion. The contention that the doctrine of estoppel should be applied is without merit. Where the insurer's conduct renders it impossible for the insured to file suit within the period stipulated in the policy, or the latter is lulled into a sense of security by deception or a violation of duty, the doctrine of equitable estoppel may be invoked. Miles v. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, 17 Cal.App.2d 389, 62 P.2d 177. There is no claim that the respondent company or its legal representatives ever stated or indicated that their differences might be settled, or that for any reason, legal or factual, it would be to the advantage of appellant to delay the trial of a previous action to recover the loss. Neither is it claimed that the attorneys by unethical or irregular procedure imposed upon the court or counsel to the disadvantage of appellant. Albert v. Patterson, 172 Mich. 635, 138 N.W. 220.

Appellant argues that the trial of the first action was delayed through motions, extensions of time, etc., and that the defendant did not disclose its actual defense to that action, resulting in nonsuit, until after fifteen months from the date of the fire. It would be a harsh rule that would estop a party from raising a jurisdictional question based upon stipulations extending time, or considered in relation to motions or orders, particularly where, as in the present case, the record indicates that the motion for change of venue in the first proceeding was made in good faith and, as appears, was meritorious. It is appellant's contention that the above facts constituted misrepresentation. Appellant's contention with reference to defendant's defense of premature filing of the first action is answered in Wilhelmi v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 103 Iowa 532, 72 N.W. 685, 686, wherein the court said: "It is said that the defendant did not, in the original action, plead that it was prematurely brought, until after the time for bringing an action on the policy, as fixed by its terms, had expired. The thought expressed is that the defendant was guilty of bad faith in thus delaying to plead that defense, for the reason that, had it been urged sooner, the action could have been dismissed, and a new one commenced within the time allowed by the policy. We do not know of any duty upon the part of the defendant to protect the interest of the plaintiff by pointing out the defects in his proceedings before the case was reached for trial." See Howard Ins. Co. v. Hocking (Hocking v. Howard Ins. Co.), 130 Pa. 170, 18 A. 614; Arthur v. Homestead Fire Ins. Co., 78 N.Y. 462, 34 Am.Rep. 550.

The trial court determined that the facts presented were not sufficient to constitute a misrepresentation which would bar respondent from the right to a nonsuit. I believe the conclusion reached to be correct. An estoppel to claim the benefit of a contractual or statutory limitation provision may not be based upon legal and proper proceedings taken in good faith.

Appellant's final contention is that, assuming the complaint in the present action to be faulty, it was error not to grant leave to amend. In his brief he states: "Obviously it would have been an idle act for plaintiff to make an offer to amend in the lower court," and he thereupon seeks an order from this reviewing court to reverse the judgment and direct that he be permitted to amend the complaint. He states that he desires to amend by pleading facts showing the reason for the "delay" between the date of the fire and the commencement of the present suit; that is, the facts and circumstances surrounding requests for continuances of the first action, etc. The "reasons" or the "facts and circumstances" other than as above outlined are not disclosed to this court, and they were not presented to the trial court. The allegations of the complaint show that there was no "delay" or at least no unusual delay on the part of the respective parties in reaching an "agreement" on the amount of loss. All acts on the part of the insurer and the insured were within the periods fixed in the policy of insurance. If appellant desired to amend the complaint relative to stipulations or otherwise, there was ample opportunity to do so. The complaint in the present case was filed February 25, 1941. The demurrer thereto was filed March 26, 1941, subsequently argued and submitted on briefs, and sustained on May 2, 1941. That careful consideration was given to the points is indicated by a three-page opinion which appears in the record. Judgment was entered five days later. The record indicates that appellant cannot plead sufficient facts, and the law precludes the maintenance of this action.

Section 472c of the Code of Civil Procedure, adopted in 1939, provides: "When any court makes an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend the question as to whether or not such court abused its discretion in making such an order is open on appeal even though no request to amend such pleading was made." This section does not permit plaintiff to stand on his complaint, then, when on appeal he discovers the possibility that the complaint is fatally defective, urge to the appellate court that the trial court abused its discretion by not giving him leave to amend because he has now discovered that he can amend by setting up a new theory, or by changing materially the original allegations, which new theory or changes were never disclosed to the trial court. In order to avail himself of the section, the burden is on the appellant to show that the trial court "abused its discretion" in making the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. That burden has not been sustained by this appellant. In my opinion the law and the facts require an affirmance of the judgment.

EVERTS v. MATTESON et al.*

Civ. 12985.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

April 13, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 8, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 12, 1942.

1. Guaranty 🔑9

Where purchasers of land encumbered by trust deed executed instrument reciting that in consideration of extension of maturity of note, executed by vendors, purchasers guaranteed payment of note together with interest, the agreement constituted a "guaranty of payment" of the note rendering the purchasers liable as guarantors.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Guaranty of Payment".

2. Guaranty 🔑85(1)

In action, after sale under trust deed, against maker of note and against guarantors, failure of original complaint to allege compliance with statute prescribing procedure for obtaining deficiency judgment could not be urged by guarantors as ground for reversal of judgment against them. Code Civ. Proc. § 580a.

3. Guaranty 🔑85(1)

In action founded upon a contract of guaranty, it is unnecessary for plaintiff to allege compliance with statute prescribing procedure for obtaining deficiency judgment, in order to state a cause of action against a guarantor. Code Civ.Proc. § 580a.

4. Appeal and error 🔑880(1)

A party cannot on appeal urge errors which affect only his nonappealing codefendants.

5. Guaranty 🔑85(1)

In action after foreclosure sale under trust deed, against makers of the secured note and against guarantors, statute restricting obligation of guarantor to that of principal was inapplicable notwithstanding complaint did not state cause of action against the makers of note because of failure to allege compliance with statute prescribing procedure for obtaining deficiency judgment. Civ.Code, § 2809; Code Civ.Proc. § 580a.

6. Evidence 🔑441(12)

In action, after foreclosure sale under trust deed, against guarantors, refusing guarantors leave to file proposed amended answer that at time they executed guaranty they were informed that they would not be called on to pay note and that they would not be liable for any deficiency, was not error since parol evidence would not have been admissible to establish the allegations.

7. Evidence 🔑429

"Parol evidence" of fraud to establish invalidity of an instrument must tend to establish some independent fact or representation in the procurement of the instrument or some breach of confidence concerning its use and not merely a promise directly at variance with the promise contained in the writing.

---

* Subsequent opinion 132 P.2d 476.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Parol Evidence".

8. Appeal and error ⟹1170(10)

In action against guarantors where pleadings did not raise issue of fraud or mistake, conclusion of law that execution of guaranty was neither induced, obtained nor procured by false or fraudulent representations or by reason of any mistake of law or fact was not prejudicially erroneous where appropriate conclusions based on findings supported judgment against guarantors since the conclusion was "surplusage". Const. art. 6, § 4½.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Surplusage".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Goodwin J. Knight, Judge.

Action by H. W. Everts against C. A. Matteson and another on a note and against Raymond H. Vanderbush and another on a guaranty. From an adverse judgment, Raymond H. Vanderbush and another appeal.

Affirmed.

See, also, 46 Cal.App.2d 14, 115 P.2d 207.

A. P. G. Steffes, of Las Vegas, Nev., for appellants.

Edmund Nelson, John E. Walter, and Freston & Files, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff predicated upon a guaranty executed by Raymond H. Vanderbush and Mamie H. Vanderbush of payment of a note of which their codefendants were makers, the defendants Vanderbush appeal.

The essential facts are:

In August, 1934, the Mattesons executed a note in favor of the Bank of America in the sum of $22,500, which note was secured by a deed of trust covering certain real property. In February, 1935, defendants Vanderbush purchased the real property described in the trust deed from the Mattesons, at which time the note which the Mattesons had executed was in default. At the time of this transaction defendants Vanderbush executed a guaranty of payment of the above mentioned note. In June, 1938, the note being in default, the property secured by the deed of trust was sold, pursuant to the power of sale contained therein. Prior to the commencement of the present action the note was assigned to plaintiff. The amount of the judgment, $2,635.28, represents the unpaid balance.

On July 20, 1938, plaintiff filed an original complaint in the above entitled action and service was made upon all defendants. A default judgment on August 15, 1938, was entered against defendants Matteson. On October 4, 1938, plaintiff filed an amended complaint which was never served upon defendants Matteson. The amended complaint contained the following allegation which did not appear in the original complaint:

"That the reasonable value of said real property on June 24, 1938, was the sum of $19,000.00."

Thereafter defendants Vanderbush filed an answer which contained among others, the following denial:

"Deny that the reasonable value of said real property on the 24th day of June, 1938 was the sum of $19,000.00 and allege that said property upon said date was reasonably valued at the sum of $28,000.00."

Subsequently the trial court granted plaintiff's motion to strike the foregoing paragraph of defendants Vanderbush's answer. During the course of the trial the trial judge refused to permit defendants Vanderbush to file a proposed second amended answer which in effect alleged that appealing defendants had been told by the defendant Bank of America, when they executed the guaranty above mentioned, that they would not be called upon to pay the note they were guarantying and that under the law they would not be liable for any deficiency if the security for the note was actually worth more than the indebtedness.* [See page 688 of 124 P.2d for pleading.]

It is necessary for us to determine four questions, which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim.

[1] First: Were defendants Vanderbush liable to plaintiff as guarantors?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. The document executed by the appealing defendants read in part thus:

"FOR AND IN CONSIDERATION of the extension for two (2) years and four (4) months of the maturity of the last installment, said maturity date being October 28, 1935, of that certain promissory note dated August 28, 1934, executed by C. A. Matteson and Martha Daley Matteson, which extension is hereby granted by Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, I hereby guarantee the payment of the aforesaid note, together with all interest due or to become due thereon, and any renewal or extension thereof, and this guaranty shall not be affected by any forebearance to any successors in interest of the undersigned." (Italics added.)

It needs no argument to demonstrate that the foregoing provision in the agreement executed by the appealing defendants constituted a guaranty of payment of the note in question.

[2] Second: Since the original complaint did not allege compliance with the provisions of section 580a of the Code of Civil Procedure and thus did not state a cause of action against defendants Matteson, may defendants Vanderbush urge this omission as reversible error?

This question must be answered in the negative, and is governed by the following rules:

[3] (1) In an action founded upon a contract of guaranty it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to allege compliance with the provisions of section 580a of the Code of Civil Procedure in order to state a cause of action against a guarantor (Security-First Nat. Bank. v. Chapman, 41 Cal. App.2d 219, 221, 106 P.2d 431; see, also, Hatch v. Security-First National Bank, 19 Cal.2d 254, 120 P.2d 869.)

[4] (2) A party cannot on appeal urge errors which affect only his nonappealing codefendants. (Nichols v. Nichols, 135 Cal.App. 488, 491, 27 P.2d 414.)

[5] Since the appealing defendants were guarantors, the alleged error in the instant case affects only their nonappealing codefendants and are therefore not available to appellants. In view of the holding in Loeb v. Christie, 6 Cal.2d 416, 419, 57 P.2d 1303, section 2809 of the Civil Code is inapplicable to the facts of the instant case. The case of Bank of America v. Sanchez, 3 Cal.App.2d 238, 38 P.2d 787, is factually distinguishable from the instant case and, therefore, is not in point.

[6, 7] Third: Did the trial court err in refusing appealing defendants leave to file their proposed second amended answer?

This question must be answered in the negative. The proposed amended answer in substance offered as a defense that appealing defendants were told by the officers of the Bank of America at the time they executed the guaranty in question that they would not be called upon to pay the note which they were guarantying to pay and that under the law they would not be liable for any deficiency if the security for the note was actually worth more than the indebtedness. Evidence of such allegations would have been inadmissible, for the law is established that parol evidence of fraud to establish the invalidity of an instrument must tend to establish some independent fact or representation in the procurement of the instrument or some breach of confidence concerning its use, and not merely a promise directly at variance with the promise contained in the writing. (Bank of America, etc., Ass'n v. Pendergrass, 4 Cal.2d 258, 263, 48 P.2d 659; W. Ross Campbell Co. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 136 Cal.App. 765, 769, 29 P.2d 910.)

It is evident from a reading of the allegations of the proposed amended answer that any evidence tending to support such allegations would fall within the inhibition of the foregoing rule.

[8] Fourth: As there was no issue raised by the pleadings of fraud or mistake, was the following conclusion of law of the trial court prejudicially erroneous:

"The execution of the instrument described in the findings of fact herein as a guaranty by defendants Raymond H. Vanderbush and Mamie H. Vanderbush was neither induced, obtained, nor procured by any false or fraudulent representations or by reason of any mistake of law or fact."?

This question must likewise be answered in the negative. The conclusion was surplusage. It was not in response to any issue after the special defenses of fraud and mistake had been stricken. Such surplusage is harmless. The appropriate conclusions derived by the court from the findings abundantly justify and support the judgment. (Art. VI, sec. $4\frac{1}{2}$, Const. of Cal.)

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

---

* The proposed pleading read as follows:

"SECOND AMENDED ANSWER OF DEFENDANTS RAYMOND H. VANDERBUSH AND MAMIE H. VANDERBUSH TO AMEND COMPLAINT.

"Defendants, Raymond H. Vanderbush and Mamie H. Vanderbush, having obtained leave of court, file this, their second amended answer to amended complaint, and admit, deny, and allege:

"I

"Answering paragraph IV of said amended complaint, these defendants admit signing the instrument, a copy of which is set forth in said paragraph IV, but deny generally and specifically that they or either of them guaranteed the payment of the promissory note set forth in paragraph II of said amended complaint.

"Allege that these defendants were induced to sign and did sign said instrument set forth in Paragraph IV, as the result of certain representations and promises made to them for the purpose of inducing them to sign said instrument, as will more particularly hereinafter be alleged.

"II

"Answering Paragraph V, these defendants deny generally and specifically each and every allegation contained therein.

"These defendants deny generally and specifically that the reasonable value of the real property mentioned in said paragraph V was on the 24th day of June, 1938, the sum of Nineteen Thousand ($19,000.00) Dollars, and allege in this respect that said real property upon said date was reasonably worth not less than the sum of Twenty-four Thousand ($24,000.00) Dollars.

"III

"Answering Paragraphs VI, VII, VIII, and IX, of said amended complaint, these defendants allege that they have not sufficient knowledge, information or belief to enable them to answer the allegations contained in said paragraphs, and upon that ground deny, generally and specifically each and every allegation contained therein.

"IV

"Answering Paragraph X, these defendants deny, generally and specifically each and every allegation contained therein and allege in this respect that said promissory note has been fully paid.

"AND FOR A SECOND, FURTHER AND SEPARATE ANSWER AND DEFENSE, THESE DEFENDANTS ALLEGE:

"I

"That at all times hereinafter mentioned, and at all times mentioned in plaintiff's amended complaint, H. L. Perry was an officer, agent, servant, and employee, to wit, vice-president and branch manager of plaintiff's assignor, Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, in its branch bank at Whittier, California.

"II

"These defendants are informed and believe, and upon such information and belief allege that H. W. Everts, plaintiff herein, was at the time of the commencement of the above-entitled action, and now is an officer and employee of said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association; that said H. W. Everts paid no consideration to said bank for assignment to him of the promissory note mentioned in plaintiff's complaint, and took the same with notice of any and all defenses thereto; that the said H. W. Everts became the owner and holder of said promissory note after its maturity.

"III

"That for many years prior to the 7th day of February, 1935, these defendants and particularly the defendant Raymond H. Vanderbush, enjoyed friendly business relations with the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association and its predecessors in interest; that said friendly business relations commenced in the year 1924 when the defendant Raymond H. Vanderbush opened an account with the Hellman Bank, one of the predecessors in interest of the bank of America National Trust and Savings Association; that said defendant continued to carry his bank account with said Hellman Bank, and its successor in interest, the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, until after the 7th day of February, 1935; that said defendant always had a substantial amount of money on deposit with said bank and at various times borrowed money from said banks in sums ranging from Five Hundred to Five Thousand Dollars.

"That at all times prior to the 7th day of February, 1935, and on said date, the business relations of said defendant with banks were most friendly; that said defendant on numerous occasions consulted with various officers of said banks about financial and estate matters which concerned said defendant and his business affairs; that on one occasion said defendant paid to said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association the sum of Twenty-five Hundred ($2,500.00) Dollars in payment of the balance due on a certain promissory note which had been executed by a corporation which became insolvent; that at said time the officials of said bank expressed great gratitude and thanks to said defendant for his payment of said note, and by reason thereof said defendant felt and believed that said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association would at all times treat him fairly and would not attempt to take advantage of him in any business transactions that he might have with said bank.

"That during said entire period of time these defendants, and particularly the defendant, Raymond H. Vanderbush, placed great confidence in the integrity and honesty of said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, its officers, agents, servants, and employees, and placed great confidence in the truth of whatever representations said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, its officers, agents, servants, and employees, made to defendants with regard to transactions had between them.

"That by reason of the knowledge and belief acquired by said defendant during said period of time and by reason of the numerous transactions involving promissory notes secured by mortgages and trust deeds in which said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association was interested and involved, said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association obtained and had superior means of information and possessed a knowledge of law superior to the knowledge possessed by these defendants; that by reason thereof these defendants believed that said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, its officers, agents, servants, and employees, had a superior knowledge of the law and these defendants sincerely believed that said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, its officers, agents, servants, and employees would correctly state said law to these defendants and would not mislead them in any manner or to any extent with respect to the law applicable to the transaction existing between these defendants and said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association.

"IV

"That on or about the 7th day of February, 1935, these defendants desired and intended to purchase the real property described in the trust deed mentioned in paragraph III of plaintiff's amended complaint, on condition, however, that a certain extension of time for the payment of certain installments provided for by the promissory note be granted; that the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, through its vice-president and branch bank manager, H. L. Perry, agreed to the extension of time that was requested, but stated that it would be necessary for these defendants to sign the instrument which is set forth in Paragraph IV of plaintiff's amended complaint.

"That these defendants refused to sign said instrument if by doing so they would render themselves, or either of them, liable under any deficiency judgment based upon said promissory note.

"V

"That for the purpose of inducing these defendants to execute said instrument, the said H. L. Perry, while acting within the scope of his employment for plaintiff's assignor as aforesaid, made the following representations to these defendants, to wit:

"1. That he was familiar with the law with respect to deficiency judgments and with recent changes in said law.

"2. That if these defendants would execute said instrument, neither of them would be liable to pay any deficiency judgment under the law as it then existed. And that the present law provided that persons executing similar instruments, could not be held liable for any deficiency judgment in the event of a foreclosure of any trust deed securing a promissory note.

"3. That in any event, if there was a foreclosure, a court of law would appoint an appraiser and that it would be necessary for the property to be bid in at the price which the court appraiser would fix as the reasonable market value of the property at the time of sale; that such appraisal would not be less than the sum of Fifty-four Thousand ($54,000.00) Dollars.

"4. That the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association had had an appraisal made of said property for its own use and that by virtue thereof said bank showed the property on its books to be worth not less than the sum of Fifty-four Thousand ($54,000.00) Dollars.

"VI

"That by reason of the foregoing, a misapprehension of the law by all parties resulted, all supposing that they knew and understood it and all believing that said law was substantially the same as the said H. L. Perry had represented to these defendants said law to be; that if the said H. L. Perry did not at said time and place understand and believe said law to be as he represented the same to these defendants then the said H. L. Perry was aware at the time he induced these defendants to sign said instrument, that these defendants were laboring under a misapprehension of the law and that said H. L. Perry did not rectify or attempt to rectify such misapprehension on the part of these defendants.

"VII

"That these defendants, had they known or believed that the law was different than as represented to them by the said H. L. Perry, and had they known or believed that they would become liable to a deficiency judgment by signing said instrument, they would not have signed the same, nor would they have purchased the property in question.

"VIII

"That these defendants believed each and every representation and statement made by said H. L. Perry and Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association as aforesaid, and these defendants relied upon such representations and were induced to sign said written instrument as the result of such reliance thereon.

"IX

"That if the said H. L. Perry was not laboring under the same misapprehension of law as these defendants, then the said H. L. Perry made the representations set forth above falsely and fraudulently, and himself did not believe the representations and statements made by him, to be true.

"That as part of the same transaction these defendants received a grant deed from C. A. Matteson and Martha Daley Matteson, husband and wife, conveying the property in question to them, which said grant deed was prepared by the escrow department of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, and said grantors above named acknowledged their signature before R. A. Downing, a notary public, who was also an escrow officer of said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association.

"AND FOR A THIRD, SEPARATE, AND FURTHER ANSWER AND DEFENSE, THESE DEFENDANTS ALLEGE:

"I

"And refer to Paragraphs I to IX inclusive, of their second affirmative defense and incorporate the same and each and every allegation thereof, herein, as if herein fully repeated and set forth.

"II

"That the said H. L. Perry and Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, by their acts, declarations, and omissions above mentioned, intentionally and deliberately led these defendants to believe that the law of the State of California was such that if they signed the instrument set forth in Paragraph IV of plaintiff's amended complaint they would not render themselves liable to a deficiency judgment, and that in the event of a foreclosure sale an appraiser would be appointed by the court who would fix the reasonable value of the property sold, at the time of such sale and that such appraisal would exceed the balance due on the promissory note in question.

"III

"That these defendants believed this to be true and acted thereon; that as the result of such belief and in reliance on the truth of the foregoing, these defendants executed the instrument in question.

"IV

"That the said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, H. L. Perry, and plaintiff herein are now estopped to deny or falsify the statements and representations made to these defendants as aforesaid.

"V

"That if the plaintiff or the said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association or the said H. L. Perry are permitted to falsify said representations and statements to these defendants then these defendants will be greatly and irreparably damaged and plaintiff and the said Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association will obtain an unconscionable advantage over these defendants.

"WHEREFORE, these defendants pray that plaintiff take nothing by his action for costs incurred herein, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and proper."

51 Cal.App.2d Supp. 779

PEOPLE v. HAWKINS.

Cr. A. 1864.

Superior Court, Appellate Department,
Los Angeles County, California.
April 21, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⚷335

A pedestrian who finds himself on his way across a street when a traffic signal changes from "go" to "stop" is not compelled to retrace his steps to safety of nearest curb, and by continuing on his journey to opposite curb he may be guilty of "negligence" but not of a "crime". Vehicle Code, § 83, St.1935, p. 98; § 476, St.1939, p. 1607; § 563, St.1935, p. 188.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence" and "Crime".

2. Automobiles ⚷335

A construction of a statute prohibiting pedestrians from crossing intersections against red or "stop" traffic signals which would result in danger to trapped pedestrians and in a snarl of traffic was to be avoided, if another solution was reasonably possible. Vehicle Code, § 83, St.1935, p. 98; § 476, St.1939, p. 1607; § 563, St.1935, p. 188.

3. Automobiles ⚷335

Under statute providing that pedestrians shall not "cross" roadway against a red or "stop" signal at intersections where traffic is controlled by a traffic control signal device, the word "cross" means to pass from side to side. Vehicle Code, § 563(a), St.1935, p. 188.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Cross".

4. Automobiles ⚷335

Under statute prohibiting pedestrians from crossing roadway against a red or "stop" signal at intersections where traffic is controlled by a traffic control signal device, a pedestrian who has advanced into roadway, even though but a few steps, before appearance of "stop" signal does not "cross" roadway against signal, whether pedestrian returns to curb from which he came or continues on to opposite curb. Vehicle Code, § 563(a), St.1935, p. 188.

5. Automobiles ⚷335

A pedestrian may not, where traffic control signals are in operation, enter upon roadway until green or "go" signal is shown, but when it is shown pedestrian may not only enter upon but proceed across to opposite side of roadway, even though signal changes to red or "stop" before pedestrian completes his passage. Vehicle Code, § 83, St.1935, p. 98; § 476, St.1939, p. 1607; § 563, St.1935, p. 188.

Appeal from Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Leo Aggeler, Judge.

W. S. Hawkins was convicted of an offense, and he appeals.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Hiram T. Kellogg, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., W. Jos. McFarland, Asst. City Atty., and David Hoffman, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Judge.

[1] A pedestrian who finds himself on his way across a street when the traffic signal changes from "Go" to "Stop" may be impelled by his common sense to retrace his steps to the safety of the nearest curb, but he is not compelled by the law to do so; by continuing on his journey to the opposite curb he may be guilty of negligence, but not of a crime.

The charge upon which the defendant was convicted was that he "being a pedestrian crossing the roadway of Hill Street * * * at an intersection where traffic was then and there controlled by a traffic control signal device and by police officers, did wilfully and unlawfully cross said roadway against a red and stop signal." This charge was based upon the provisions of law which first appeared (in 1931) as a part of section 131½ of the California Vehicle Act, and which now appear, an immaterial alteration having been effected in 1935, as paragraph (a) of section 563, Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 188, reading: "At intersections where traffic is controlled by a traffic control signal device or by police officers, pedestrians shall not cross the roadway against a red or stop signal." At the intersection involved in this case the roadways were those parts of the streets between curbs, for by section 83 of the Vehicle Code, St. 1935, p. 98, "roadway" is defined as being: "* * * that portion of a highway improved, designed or ordinarily used for vehicular travel."

The evidence discloses that at the time the defendant was arrested traffic was being controlled at the intersection of Sixth and Hill Streets by traffic control signal devices. It further appears, without conflict, that the defendant did not cross Hill Street, as charged, but crossed Sixth Street. Without pausing to consider whether or not this variance between charge and proof amounts to a failure of proof, we note that it also appears, without dispute, that the defendant began his journey across the roadway while the traffic was advised by the signal devices in operation that it could "Go" and that he was already several steps into the roadway when the signal changed. Two or more persons who had progressed as far as had the defendant before the signal changed to "Stop," ventured no further in the direction they had been going, but turned about and returned to the sidewalk they had lately quitted; the defendant walked on to the opposite sidewalk.

[2] In order to avoid being classed as a criminal, what is a person caught in progress across a roadway, when the traffic signal changes from "Go" to "Stop," to do? Is he to stop in his tracks (and possibly in those of the street car company also) and await the release of a "Go" signal? Such a construction of the code provisions would result in so much danger to the trapped pedestrian and in such a snarl of traffic that it is to be avoided if another solution of the question is reasonably possible. Department of Motor Vehicles v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 1939, 14 Cal.2d 189, 195, 93 P.2d 131. Equally absurd would be the requirement that he turn at right angles to the course he had been following, so as to proceed with the new flow of traffic and in the path of the vehicular traffic. Only two alternatives are left him; either to retrace his steps or to go on. But if either of these choices violates the injunction that "pedestrians shall not cross the roadway against a red or stop signal," both do, for movement in either direction would be against the signal.

[3, 4] There is a construction of the code provision which avoids the absurdities noted, and does so without placing any strain upon the words the legislature selected. Of the many meanings in which the word "cross" may be employed, there is one in common use that aptly fits the word as it appears in the section we are considering. It is the first definition of "cross" as a verb given in 25 C.J.S. p. 10: "To pass from side to side." It is among the definitions given in Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed.: "To pass or extend from one side to the other of; * * * as, to cross a stream * * *." Within this definition, a person born in the Middle West does not cross the continent if he journeys either to the Pacific Coast or to the Atlantic Seaboard. Nor does one cross the continent by plane between sunrise and sunset, if the first hundred miles of the trip is made before sunrise, or the last hundred miles is made after sunset. So also, one who has advanced into the roadway, even though but a few steps, before the appearance of the "Stop" signal, cannot be said to cross the roadway against that signal, whether he returns to the curb he has just left or continues on to the opposite curb.

Support of some strength is found for our conclusion in cases holding that it is not a violation of an ordinance prohibiting the crossing of roadways except in crosswalks for one alighting from a street car in a safety zone to cross from the zone to the curb outside a crosswalk. In Croxall v. Broadway Department Store, 1932, 127 Cal.App. 153, 156, 15 P.2d 546, 547, the court stated: "* * * the pedestrian crossing from the safety zone to the curb does not come within the strict letter of the ordinance relating to those who are crossing the roadway from curb to curb." (The ordinance, whose pertinent provisions are quoted, uses no such term as "curb to curb"; that appears to be the court's interpretation of what it means to cross a roadway.) See, also, Brockway v. Western Union Tel. Co., 1938, 29 Cal.App.2d 244, 247, 84 P.2d 524, and Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hudson, 1936, 82 F.2d 992, 995.

[5] Further support for our conclusion is found in the provisions of section 476, added to the Vehicle Code in 1939, St. 1939, p. 1607. This section deals with the respective conducts of vehicular traffic and of pedestrians as affected by green or "Go," yellow or "Caution" and red or "Stop" signals. So far as pertinent to our problem it is provided that when the green or "Go" signal appears, "Pedestrians facing the signal may proceed across the roadway within any marked or unmarked crosswalk," but that when the red or "Stop" signal is shown, "No pedestrian facing such signal shall enter the roadway until green or 'Go' is shown alone." Reading sections 563 and 476 together, they appearing as parts of the same code, we conclude that a pedestrian may not, where traffic control signals are in operation, enter upon the roadway until the green or "Go" signal is shown, but that when it is shown, he may not only enter upon but proceed across to the opposite side of the roadway, even though the signal changes to red or "Stop" before he completes his passage.

The judgment of conviction is reversed and the cause is remanded to the Municipal Court for a new trial.

SHAW, P. J., and FOX, J., concur.

20 Cal.2d 191

PEOPLE v. WELLS.

Cr. 4404.

Supreme Court of California.
April 20, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⚿741(1)

It is exclusive province of jury to weigh and resolve contradictions in evidence.

2. Homicide ⚿253(1)

Evidence supported conviction of first-degree murder.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank A. Leonard, Judge.

Alfred Horace Wells was convicted of murder, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Theodore G. Krumm, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerome B. Kavanaugh, Dist. Atty., of San Bernardino, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of San Bernardino County, the appellant Wells was charged with the murder of three persons. He entered pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. Following the trial on the general issue, the jury returned a verdict on each count, finding appellant guilty of murder of the first degree without recommendation. He thereupon withdrew his insanity plea. Judgment was entered imposing the death penalty on each of the three counts and motion for new trial was denied. This appeal from the judgment and order is an automatic one under section 1239 of the Penal Code.

No brief has been filed on behalf of appellant. We have nevertheless examined the entire record and find substantial evidence of appellant's guilt.

Wells, approximately 31 years old, had been living for several months with his half-sister, aged 20, in an illicit relationship. She testified that appellant frequently threatened to kill anyone who might attempt to interfere with their relationship, and made such threats to his brother, Raymond, aged 25. Appellant's employer testified that appellant confided that his brother and sister-in-law "were endeavoring to break up his relationship with Violet and that if they succeeded in doing that he would get a gun and kill them." In time Raymond and his wife Jean persuaded Violet to leave appellant. Her mother, appellant's stepmother, testified that appellant immediately sought to locate the girl, stating that he could not get along without her. The owner of the premises where appellant had lived with his half-sister testified that Wells had blamed his brother Raymond and sister-in-law Jean for taking the girl from him and had threatened to "get" them for it. In later conversations, appellant told the witness that he would kill his brother and sister-in-law "as soon as he could get a gun." Several other witnesses testified that appellant arranged to procure a gun from one of them stating, "I have been out of the penitentiary for two years. * * * I might as well go ahead and get my revenge." Several of these witnesses saw appellant in the company of two of his victims just before their deaths.

Following his apprehension in Spokane, Washington, approximately one month after the triple homicide, appellant made a voluntary confession in the presence of a deputy district attorney, a court reporter and certain law enforcement officers. He admitted procuring a gun, calling at his brother's home on May 7, 1941, and inquiring of his sister-in-law as to his brother's whereabouts. She told him that her husband was working late that evening and offered to drive appellant to his place of employment. She took her baby, and a young woman, Rose Destree, who was visiting her at the time, in an automobile with appellant to take him to his place of employment. Appellant directed them into the hills where he ordered the car stopped. He thereupon directed his sister-in-law to write a note to her husband, and when that was done he admittedly shot her in cold blood. She died almost instantly. Rose Destree, a comparative stranger to appellant, was shot by him as she attempted to flee, and died several hours later. Appellant wrapped his coat about the baby and left.

Appellant, by his own admission, then returned to his brother's home and awaited his arrival on the front porch where he was observed by certain neighbors who appeared as witnesses at the trial. Some of these witnesses also saw appellant's earlier departure with the two women and the baby and his return alone. When his brother arrived appellant greeted him and gave him the note from his wife. As the brother finished reading, appellant commanded him at the point of a gun to get into the automobile, and they proceeded into the hills. Again in cold blood appellant shot and killed his victim. In his statement appellant related how he then fled the scene in his dead brother's car and drove it to Las Vegas, Nevada, where he parked it in a garage. The garage attendant identified appellant as the person who had left the car. Thereafter he moved from place to place until his apprehension in Spokane. He further stated that he had murdered his victims in this "raw" fashion as the possible foundation for an ultimate insanity defense.

There is much additional evidence definitely linking appellant with the homicides. A friend who had seen appellant, apparently between the time he shot the women and the time he saw his brother, testified that appellant was "perspiring awfully heavy and seemed nervous" and had asked the witness to go to his house and pick up some things for him because he had "left [his] coat wrapped around a baby" and wanted to get his "business attended to before they catch me," adding "I don't want the police to get me before I get him."

The convincing character of the evidence pointing to appellant's guilt warranted the jury in rejecting as wholly lacking in credence his testimony as a witness in his own defense that "I don't remember shooting nobody no place." It is significant, however, that when on the stand he admitted the illicit relationship with his half-sister and the fact that she ultimately left him. He related that after unsuccessfully seeking her return he had done some drinking and smoked some marihuana cigarettes. He admitted obtaining a gun from one of the prosecution witnesses, driving to Las Vegas in his brother's car, which he parked in a garage, and leaving that town by freight train. He testified that he had "rigged" up his statement to the authorities in order to secure permission to see his half-sister privately and to keep her name clear. The prosecution produced witnesses who saw appellant on the day of the homicides in a sober condition and other witnesses who testified that he had told them subsequent to the homicides that he had never used narcotics of any kind.

[1, 2] It was the exclusive province of the jury to weigh and resolve the few contradictions that exist in the evidence. As we read the record the jury had no alternative but to return a verdict of guilty on each of the three charges. We have found no errors in the rulings on the evidence or in the giving of instructions, which were full and fair. The verdicts and judgment are amply supported by substantial and credible evidence.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are therefore affirmed.

---

20 Cal.2d 195

CAMPBELL v. REALTY TITLE CO., Limited, et al.

L. A. 17835.

Supreme Court of California.

April 21, 1942.

1. Usury 🔑76

The inclusion in note secured by trust deed of an amount allegedly usurious with correct amount due did not render the whole note "usurious".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Usurious".

2. Usury 🔑76

Where, in consideration of discharging property from lien of deed of trust, mortgagor executed a second deed of trust to secure a note which included an allegedly usurious item, mortgagor as condition of redeeming property from second deed of trust was properly required to pay the amount which discharged first deed of trust and expenditures for fire insurance, taxes, attorney's fees, and foreclosure costs, which expenditures were authorized by second deed of trust and were not affected by alleged usury.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Myron Westover, Judge.

Action by A. Campbell against the Realty Title Company, Limited, and another, to enjoin a sale of realty under a deed of trust. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Charles J. Kelly, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ben Gould, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

The plaintiff is the owner of a parcel of real property situated in the city of Los Angeles on which there was a deed of trust given to secure the payment of a promissory note. He defaulted in the payment of said note and his property was being advertised for sale in pursuance of the terms of said deed of trust. The day before the date of sale he met an associate of the defendant Weisbrod and offered to pay him $1,500 if he could "save the property and arrange a new loan." The matter was taken up with defendant Weisbrod the next morning and Weisbrod agreed to advance the money and did so before the sale of the property. The proceedings under the deed of trust were stopped and the property was discharged from the lien of said deed of trust. Subsequently a loan was obtained and a deed of trust given on said real property to secure the loan. The loan was sufficient, after deducting certain expenses incurred in securing it, to pay Weisbrod in full for the amount of money he had advanced to plaintiff to discharge the deed of trust under which the property was to be sold, except the sum of $145.24. This amount, together with the sum of $1,500 which plaintiff agreed to pay for saving the property from the sale under the earlier deed of trust, was included in a new note which was executed by plaintiff in favor of defendant Weisbrod and secured by a second deed of trust upon said real property.

Claiming that plaintiff was in default in the payment of said last mentioned promissory note, the defendant Realty Title Company, Ltd., the trustee named therein, gave notice of default and was proceeding to sell said real property pursuant to the terms of said last mentioned deed of trust. Plaintiff instituted this action to enjoin said sale, contending that the transaction of which said last mentioned note and deed of trust were a part and the said note and deed of trust were usurious and therefore unenforceable against the plaintiff. The action came up for trial before the court upon a stipulation of facts and without further evidence.

[1] We are satisfied from a study of the stipulation of facts that the implied finding of the trial court, that there was due and unpaid to defendant Weisbrod from plaintiff the sum of $145.24 as hereinbefore set forth, was correct. Conceding that the agreement of plaintiff to pay defendant Weisbrod the sum of $1,500 for the services rendered as above stated was usurious, the inclusion in one promissory note of that amount with the item of $145.24 did not render the whole note usurious. Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 622, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A.L.R. 725; Rice v. Dunlap, 205 Cal. 138, 139, 270 P. 199, and Wolpert v. Gripton, 213 Cal. 474, 483, 2 P.2d 767.

The case of Rice v. Dunlap, supra, is squarely in point. In that case the defendant had executed a note for $5,550. Previous to the execution of said $5,550 note, plaintiff held defendant's note for $5,000 which had become due and which defendant desired plaintiff to renew. Plaintiff exacted an additional sum of $550 for the renewal and the note in suit was then executed which included said bonus of $550. The trial court concluded that the consideration exacted by plaintiff for the execution of said note was usurious and that plaintiff should recover nothing in the action and that defendants should recover their costs. This court stated: "The judgment is erroneous under the rule laid down in the case of Haines et al. v. Commercial Mortgage Co. et al., 200 Cal. 609, 622 [254 P. 956], 255 P. 805, 806, (53 A.L.R. 725), wherein it was said: 'Even a casual reading of the statute itself shows that the legislative intent was not to declare the whole contract void, but only the portion thereof relating to interest.' Judgment should have been entered for plaintiff for the amount of the original note, $5,000, plus attorney's fees and costs *, * *."

Evidently the trial court followed the rule announced in the authorities just cited, as it rendered judgment that before the plaintiff secure a release of said deed of trust he should make certain payments, and when said payments were made, the deed of trust should be released of record, but in the event of failure to make said payments as directed therein, the injunction against the foreclosure of said deed of trust was "thereupon to be at once dissolved, without the further order of the court."

[2] The payments which the court ordered plaintiff to make before said deed of trust was to be released, amounted to the sum of $1,780.21. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment as a whole, which includes of course the portion thereof respecting said payments. The consideration of the questions raised thereunder requires a further statement of the facts in the case. As noted before, the deed of trust here involved is a second deed of trust on said property of plaintiff. The first deed of trust was given to secure a promissory note for $5,000 and interest payable $75 per month. The one here involved, which we will refer to as the second deed of trust, recited the fact that it was subject to the deed of trust given to secure the sum of $5,000, and then provided that plaintiff should pay the taxes and all encumbrances and liens which appear to be part of the second deed of trust, and in case of his failure to do so, the beneficiary or trustee could make said payments and the sum so paid would be deemed secured by said deed of trust.

It might be well to here state that while there is no direct statement in the stipulation of facts, nor any finding, nor any conclusion of law, nor any declaration in the judgment that the $1,500 charge for procuring funds to pay the original deed of trust under which plaintiff's real property was noticed for sale was usurious, yet it is evident that the trial court did not include this amount in the payments which it required plaintiff to make in order to redeem his property from the second deed of trust.

In the "Findings and Judgment" entered by the court in this case is the statement and finding that "This court finds * * * that there is now due to defendant Peter O. Weisbrod from the plaintiff * * * $1,780.21 advanced by said defendant * * * for the purpose of paying principal and interest on the deed of trust (the $5,000 deed of trust) set forth on page 7 of said stipulation, and fire insurance premiums and taxes * * * and other charges." The stipulation of facts shows that defendant Weisbrod paid out the sum of $1,400.97 on account of taxes on said real property and installment payments of principal on the $5,000 note secured by said first deed of trust, and that he paid out other miscellaneous amounts, all of which together with said sum of $145.24, hereinbefore discussed, less a credit of $140 paid by plaintiff, amount to the sum of $1,780.21, the amount the court required plaintiff to pay in order to secure a release of said deed of trust.

Plaintiff objects to the five miscellaneous items amounting to $374, made up of attorney's fees and foreclosure costs. These expenditures were all authorized by the second deed of trust and their payment secured by its terms.

Therefore, it appears from this discussion of the judgment that none of the payments which the plaintiff was required thereby to make in order to obtain a release of his property from the lien of the second deed of trust was a part of nor was any of them in any way affected by any usurious contract to which the parties hereto may have agreed. It also satisfactorily appears that all items of expenditure to which plaintiff has objected were authorized by said deed of trust and covered by said stipulation of facts.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 223

HIZAR v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 18123.

Supreme Court of California.

April 22, 1942.

1. Attorney and client 🔑53(2)

In proceeding to disbar attorney, handwriting experts' testimony and inconsistencies in attorney's testimony held to justify finding of local administrative committee of state bar that attorney affixed signatures of certain persons to deeds and other instruments, on which he acted as notary, without such persons' authorization.

2. Attorney and client 🔑42

An attorney's false testimony, with intent to mislead bankruptcy referee, that certain deeds and other instruments were signed by persons whose signatures were affixed thereto by witness without their authorization, held ground for disbarment, though no creditors of bankrupt were injured thereby.

3. Attorney and client ⚿52

In proceeding to disbar attorney, who contended throughout that he did not affix signatures of certain persons to deeds and other instruments in bankruptcy trustee's possession, as charged, but that such persons appeared before him and signed instruments, his contention, first made in reply memorandum, that it was not shown that he had no power of attorney or authority otherwise to sign instruments for such persons, is without merit.

4. Attorney and client ⚿54

In proceeding to disbar attorney, where his prior conviction of felony in federal court was not referred to at hearing before local administrative committee of state bar, board of governors thereof did not accord such conviction any controlling significance, and state bar's brief in proceeding to review board's recommendation of disbarment does not mention such conviction, disbarment will be ordered as against contention that undue emphasis was placed on such conviction.

◆

In Bank.

Proceeding by J. C. Hizar to review a recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that petitioner be disbarred from the practice of law.

Order that petitioner be disbarred.

Dempster McKee, of San Diego, for petitioner.

W. Eugene Craven, of Merced, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a proceeding to review the recommendation of the Board of Governors of The State Bar recommending disbarment.

Petitioner, J. C. Hizar, is about seventy years of age and has been practicing law in California since 1894. He is charged with the commission of acts involving moral turpitude and with the violation of his oath as an attorney. The Local Administrative Committee in San Diego found that the petitioner was guilty of the offenses charged. On August 16, 1941, following a hearing the Board of Governors adopted the findings of the Local Administrative Committee and recommended that the petitioner be disbarred.

On the first charge the petitioner was found guilty of having forged numerous documents and of having falsely acknowledged these instruments for the purpose of deceiving the public. The findings show that Joseph W. Murphy, a client of the petitioner, died in 1929. He had been doing business as the Joseph W. Murphy Mortgage Company. He left considerable property and mortgages to his wife and petitioner became attorney for the estate and for the widow Bertha Murphy. Early in 1930 Forest C. Walden, a brother-in-law of Mrs. Murphy, came to San Diego from St. Louis where he had been living, to assist Mrs. Murphy in the management of her affairs. The business of the mortgage company had been inactive. It was decided to continue it so Walden caused a certificate to be filed showing that he was doing business under the fictitious name of the Joseph Murphy Mortgage Company and that he was the owner thereof. Mrs. Murphy turned over certain mortgages and property and capital to Walden to be used in conducting the business.

In 1933 both Walden and Mrs. Murphy were sued by C. A. Carlson and Eva Carlson in a wrongful death action. To avoid financial responsibility Walden and Mrs. Murphy transferred the real estate and mortgages to one Graybill, a nephew of Mrs. Murphy who had come to San Diego from Wichita, Kansas, to work for the mortgage company as a salesman. In 1934, Graybill decided to go back to Kansas and Walden asked the petitioner if he could secure some one to hold the assets in the place of Graybill. James Jackson and William Kehoe were selected by the petitioner and a certificate was filed showing Jackson to be the owner and doing business as the Joseph P. Murphy Mortgage Company. Most of the property was transferred to Jackson and Kehoe. After this transfer it was necessary from time to time to have deeds executed by the legal title holders. The practice at the office of the mortgage company was to prepare these instruments for signature and to send them to petitioner's office. Petitioner would return them after the signature and the acknowledgment had been made and attached. A judgment was entered against Mrs. Murphy and Walden in the wrongful death action but the judgment was reversed. Carlson v. Murphy, 8 Cal.App.2d 607, 47 P.2d 1100.

In 1939 Walden was declared a bankrupt. The trustee in bankruptcy took into his possession certain documents which purported to be grant deeds and other instruments signed by Jackson and Kehoe. The effect of these deeds was to re-transfer to Mrs. Murphy or to her nominee all the property which had been previously transferred by her to Jackson and Kehoe. The petitioner acted as notary on these instruments and it was found that neither Jackson nor Kehoe appeared before him and acknowledged their signatures and that the signatures of Jackson and Kehoe were affixed to the instruments by the petitioner. It was established by the testimony of the petitioner that Jackson and Kehoe were not fictitious persons and there was no claim made by petitioner that he had authority to sign their names.

On the second charge it was found that the petitioner swore falsely before the referee in bankruptcy in that he testified that these instruments were signed by Jackson and Kehoe as they purported to be and that they had in fact appeared before him when in fact they had not. It was found that this testimony was given for the purpose of deceiving the referee and misleading a judicial officer.

[1] The petitioner testified that the documents in question were signed before him by Jackson and Kehoe and that the only testimony to the contrary was the testimony of two handwriting experts employed by The State Bar. Petitioner contends that the whole case against him depends upon the evidence given by these experts and that their testimony should not be permitted to be effective to support the findings as against his own testimony to the contrary, because such experts were, he asserts, more likely to favor the party who employed them. The petitioner concedes that the testimony of the experts, if credited, is sufficient to support the findings.

The record fails to disclose any satisfactory reason why such evidence should not be credited. Moreover, the committee based its findings not only on the testimony of the experts but also on the inconsistent statements by the petitioner as to the whereabouts of Jackson and Kehoe, the times and places where the instruments were purportedly signed, and other inconsistencies which indicated that he had forged the instruments. Undoubtedly the attitude and demeanor of the petitioner as he appeared and testified had an important bearing on his credibility. The committee was justified in finding that the petitioner had affixed the signatures of Jackson and Kehoe to the instruments without their authorization.

[2] In answer to the second charge, regarding the alleged false testimony of the petitioner before the referee in bankruptcy, petitioner contends that even conceding his testimony to be false no one was hurt or deceived thereby; that the Carlsons had lost their suit, were not creditors, and were not injured; that the trustee had in his possession all of the property that was owned by the bankrupt and that it could not be said that any creditors were injured.

Conceding that no one suffered any pecuniary loss the fact remains that the petitioner upon oath falsely testified before the referee in bankruptcy with intent to mislead that public officer. The forging of the documents and the giving of false testimony were unlawful and dishonest acts and unquestionably involved moral turpitude. They were committed for the purpose of deceiving those who might examine the public records and to deceive a public officer. The fact that it might develop that no one had been injured in no way justified the artifice and false practices of the petitioner.

[3] In his reply memorandum petitioner for the first time makes the contention that it was not shown that he did not have a power of attorney or authority otherwise to sign the instruments for Jackson and Kehoe and that it cannot therefore be said that he was guilty of forgery. The contention is without merit in view of the position of the petitioner throughout the proceeding that he did not affix the signatures and that Jackson and Kehoe appeared before him and signed the instruments.

[4] Petitioner finally contends that undue emphasis has been placed upon his prior conviction of a felony in 1918 in the federal court for a violation of the Neutrality Act. However, it does not appear that any weight at all has been given to this conviction. The conviction was not referred to at the hearing before the local administrative committee. It was mentioned at the hearing before the Board of Governors, but it does not appear that any controlling significance was accorded to it by that body. The brief presented by The State Bar does not even mention this prior conviction and the case against the petitioner is based entirely on the two charges considered herein.

The petitioner has not sustained the burden of showing that the findings and recommendations of The State Bar are unsupported by the record.

It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be disbarred from the further practice of law in this state, and that his name be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors at law of the State of California at the expiration of thirty days from and after the filing of this order.

---

20 Cal.2d 199

EGGERT v. PACIFIC SAVINGS & LOAN CO. et al. (EVANS, Building and Loan Com'r, et al., Interveners).

L. A. 18079.

Supreme Court of California.

April 21, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑148

Only a party to the record can appeal.

2. Appeal and error 🔑148

In class action by holder of certificate issued by loan company, other certificate holders who were not named as parties to the action and who did not take appropriate steps to become parties to the record could not appeal, and fact that their names and extent of their interest in the action appeared in exhibit attached to complaint and judgment did not make them "parties" to the record.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Party".

3. Appeal and error 🔑792

The Supreme Court may dismiss an improper appeal on its own motion.

4. Appeal and error 🔑478

Where appellants had no right to appeal, application for writ of supersedeas to stay execution of order pending appeal was denied.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Class action by John Eggert, as holder of a fidelity definite term certificate, against Pacific Savings & Loan Company and others, wherein Ralph W. Evans, as Building and Loan Commissioner, etc., and others intervened. From an order regarding allowances for attorneys' fees, Jessie C. Kelley and others appeal Appeals dismissed.

Otto A. Ehlers and John C. Campbell, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hugo H. Harris, David E. Field, Richard W. Katerndahl in pro. per., Vincent Morgan, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, Guy Richards Crump, Wood, Crump & Rogers, Christian H. Hartke, and H. W. Hoag, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

On October 28, 1938, John Eggert, as a holder of a Fidelity Definite Term Certificate commenced this action against the Pacific States Savings and Loan Company and the State Guaranty Corporation, on behalf of himself and some 1,500 other certificate holders. The complaint included a prayer that plaintiff's attorneys of record be allowed attorneys' fees for filing and prosecuting the action. The court held the suit a proper class action, and in its judgment for Eggert and the other certificate holders whom he represented decreed that they recover from the defendant Pacific States Savings and Loan Company the sum of $1,851,740.95 to be apportioned pro rata among them after deduction of expenses and fees. The court expressly reserved jurisdiction to determine the fees to be paid plaintiff's attorneys. The complaint and the judgment incorporated by reference an exhibit containing the names of the holders of the outstanding certificates and the number and face value of the certificates held by them. The names of Jessie C. Kelley and Dorothy C. Given appeared in the exhibit. The court appointed a receiver to facilitate the collection and payment of the judgment. The court also made an order, directed to plaintiff and all other persons interested, to show cause why it should not make an order fixing reasonable attorneys' fees. Notice of the order was published daily until the return date. The court fixed the fees of plaintiff's attorneys at 15 per cent of the total recovery, excluding the share of the Building and Loan Commissioner. Subsequently Eggert petitioned for an order directing the receiver to obtain and turn over the balance of the money due to him and the other certificate holders after deducting the 15 per cent allowed the attorneys. At the hearing on this petition John C. Campbell, representing Jessie C. Kelley and Dorothy C. Given, Definite Term Certificate Holders, appeared and objected to the granting of the petition insofar as it concerned the payment to the attorneys. The court made an order granting the petition, however, and Jessie C. Kelley and Dorothy C. Given filed a notice of appeal for themselves and all other holders of Fidelity Definite Term Certificates not otherwise represented by counsel from the order fixing the amount of the attorneys' fees and from the order directing the receiver to pay to plaintiff's attorneys 15 per cent of the amount recovered by the holders of the Fidelity Definite Term Certificates. They also petitioned this court for a writ of supersedeas to stay the execution of these orders until the determination of their appeal. Plaintiff Eggert and his attorneys have moved that the appeal be dismissed as to all certificate holders other than Jessie C. Kelley and Dorothy C. Given.

[1, 2] The motion to dismiss the appeal is properly made, for it is a settled rule of practice in this state that only a party to the record can appeal. Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 77 P. 1109, 103 Am.St. Rep. 102; Braun v. Brown, 13 Cal.2d 130, 87 P.2d 1009; Estate of McDermott, 127 Cal. 450, 59 P. 783; Estate of Crooks, 125 Cal. 459, 58 P. 89; Altpeter v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., 22 Cal.App. 63, 66, 133 P. 329. Appellants were not named as parties to the action nor did they take any appropriate steps to become parties to the record. The fact that their names and the extent of their interest in the action appeared in an exhibit attached to the complaint and the judgment did not make them parties to the record. See Estate of McDougald, 143 Cal. 476, 77 P. 443; Estate of Kent, 6 Cal.2d 154, 57 P.2d 901. Although their attorney appeared at the hearing on the petition for the payment of the money to plaintiff's attorneys and objected to such payment, he did not ask that appellants be made parties, nor did the court order them brought into the action. See Pomeroy, Code Remedies, 5th Ed., 445, § 293. Appellants had ample opportunity even after the court had made its orders to become parties of record by moving to vacate the orders to which they objected. They could then have appealed from the order denying the motion. Elliott v. Superior Court, supra.

[3] Since appellants have no standing to appeal, it is unnecessary to consider their right to appeal in a representative capacity on behalf of other certificate holders. The motion to dismiss the appeal was made only as to certificate holders other than Jessie C. Kelley and Dorothy C. Given, but this court may dismiss an improper appeal on its own motion. See cases cited in 2 Cal.Jur. 765; 4 C.J.S., Appeal and Error, § 1368, p. 1981. The appeal is therefore dismissed as to all appellants.

[4] As appellants have no right to appeal, the application for a writ of supersedeas to stay the execution of the orders for the payment of attorneys' fees to respondents pending the appeal is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 218

WHEELAND v. RODGERS.

L. A. 17900.

Supreme Court of California.

April 22, 1942.

1. Husband and wife 🔑14(3)

Where husband purchases real property with funds from a joint tenancy account and takes such property in his own name, the property is owned by the parties as a "tenancy in common", the husband holding the legal title to one-half interest therein in trust for the wife.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Tenancy in Common".

2. Husband and wife 🔑14(5)

Where property purchased by husband with funds held in joint tenancy is personal property, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary the property so purchased is held in "joint tenancy" rather than "tenancy in common".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Joint Tenancy".

3. Joint tenancy ⚷3

A joint tenancy in real property cannot be created by oral agreement as may be done in personal property. Civ.Code, § 683.

4. Appeal and error ⚷1008(1)

In action by wife's administrator against husband to have husband declared a trustee for wife's estate of a half interest in new house, whether evidence that husband under agreement with wife deposited proceeds of sale of house which was husband's separate property in joint tenancy bank account prior to enactment of statute and then used money for erection of new house also on husband's separate property overcame presumption of gift to wife by creation with his separate funds of joint tenancy bank account was for trial court. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 652, § 15a.

5. Husband and wife ⚷49½(8)

In action by wife's administrator against husband to have husband declared a trustee for wife's estate of a half interest in new house, where husband under agreement with wife deposited proceeds of sale of house which was husband's property in joint tenancy bank account, and then used money for erection of new house also on husband's separate property, evidence supported implied finding that no gift was made to wife, precluding her estate from asserting claim against the new house.

6. Husband and wife ⚷258

Where improvements are made upon husband's separate real property with community funds, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the improvements have the character of husband's "separate property" and belong to husband.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Separate Property".

7. Husband and wife ⚷258

Where improvements are made upon husband's separate real property with community funds without the wife's consent, wife is entitled to reimbursement upon the dissolution of the marriage and has a claim against the property improved, since to permit husband as manager of the community property to use with impunity the community funds to improve his separate property would be a "constructive fraud" upon the wife.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Constructive Fraud".

8. Husband and wife ⚷14(3)

A wife's interest in a bank account held in joint tenancy with husband is a "separate property" interest in which the control of both husband and wife is equal.

9. Husband and wife ⚷258

Where husband sold some of his separate property and with wife's consent deposited proceeds in joint tenancy bank account and thereafter used proceeds to erect house on land also his separate property, finding that wife acquired no interest in new house or land upon which it was erected was not error.

10. Appeal and error ⚷1011(1)

The Supreme Court would not review the conflict in evidence on an issue on which there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial court.

11. Executors and administrators ⚷194(1)

Where husband as surviving spouse was entitled to remain in possession of household furniture which was the separate property of deceased wife until an inventory was filed in the estate proceedings and then have such furniture set apart to him by probate court, refusal of trial court to order delivery of furniture to wife's administrator was not error. Probate Code, § 660.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Action by Charlie Grier Wheeland, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Lena P. Rodgers, deceased, against Clarence S. Rodgers, to establish that defendant holds in trust for the decedent's estate certain household furniture and a one-half interest in certain real property. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

E. S. Patterson, Aubry Miller, and Don F. Tyler, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

V. A. Morgan, of Alhambra, for respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiff, as the administrator with the will annexed of the estate of his mother, Lena P. Rodgers, deceased, brought an action against defendant, Clarence S. Rodgers, the surviving husband of the decedent, and others, asserting a claim to certain property held by said defendant. From a judgment in favor of defendant, Clarence S. Rodgers, plaintiff appeals.

Decedent and defendant Clarence S. Rodgers were married in 1911. At that time defendant owned, as his separate property, real property consisting of a lot upon which was located a brick house. Defendant followed his vocation of foreman bricklayer in which he earned $7.00 to $8.00, and sometimes as high as $14.00 per day, until his retirement in 1929. On August 23, 1920, a joint tenancy savings bank account was opened by defendant and decedent. Defendant informed decedent that he would sell the brick house property and place the proceeds thereof in the joint tenancy account and use them to construct a new house on other real property which was the separate property of defendant, title thereto being in his name. To that decedent agreed. The sale was finally consummated in July, 1924. During 1924, funds obtained by defendant from the sale of his separate property were deposited in the joint tenancy account and used therefrom to construct the new house in which defendant and decedent resided until her death in 1937. Defendant is in possession of the new house. After his wife's death, he encumbered it with a trust deed given to his sister, one of the defendants herein, to secure a promissory note for $5,000. Certain furniture and household equipment had been given to decedent during her lifetime by plaintiff. Plaintiff claimed that because the funds for the construction of the new house were derived from the joint tenancy account, the decedent acquired a half interest therein as her separate property, which defendant now holds in trust for her estate; that the furniture being a gift to decedent was her separate property and now is an asset of her estate. The trial court found against those contentions, finding particularly as to the furniture that its value was "practically exhausted" and that defendant would be entitled to have it set aside to him as exempt property.

[1-5] On this appeal plaintiff urges that defendant holds a half interest in the new house in trust for decedent's estate because it was paid for from the joint tenancy account, relying upon Estate of Harris, 9 Cal.2d 649, 72 P.2d 873. That case held that where, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, a husband and wife have a joint tenancy account and the husband purchases real property with it and takes it in his own name, the property is then owned by the parties as tenants in common, the husband holding the legal title to a one-half interest therein in trust for his wife. In that case there was an agreement between the husband and wife that the property of each of them would be owned and held in joint tenancy by them. Estate of Harris, 169 Cal. 725, 147 P. 967. If the property purchased by the husband with the funds held in joint tenancy, is personal property, however, then that property so purchased is held in joint tenancy rather than tenancy in common, there being of course no agreement to the contrary. Estate of Harris, supra. The reason for the difference in the rule between real and personal property is that a joint tenancy in real property cannot be created by oral agreement. Civ.Code, § 683; Estate of Harris, supra. But in the instant case the parties agreed that the proceeds from the sale by the husband of his separate property, the brick house, would be used for the construction of a new house on the land of the husband, the separate property, and that to accomplish that result and while the new house was being constructed the money was placed in a joint tenancy account and was withdrawn therefrom and used for that purpose. The trial court found that the decedent never had or acquired any interest in the new house, and also: "That prior to the time the dwelling house and garage (the new house) was constructed upon the parcel (described in the complaint) * * *, the defendant, * * * talked over the matter of its construction with his wife, * * *, and informed her that he would sell the 'brick house' in which they were then living and which was his separate property, and from the moneys received would build the new house; to which the said Lena P. Rodgers agreed; and following such agreement between the parties, the said Clarence S. Rodgers, did sell the brick house and another parcel, and did use said moneys to pay for the construction of said new house, though during said construction period said moneys were deposited in a joint bank account in the name of both parties." It should be mentioned that the deposit in the joint tenancy bank account was created prior to the enactment of section 15a of the California Bank Act which provides, that the making of a bank deposit in the form of a joint tenancy account with the right of survivorship shall be conclusive evidence of the intention of the depositors to vest title in the survivor. Stats.1909, p. 87; Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 652; Estate of Gaines, 15 Cal.2d 255, 100 P.2d 1055. While the creation by defendant with his separate funds of a joint tenancy bank account gave rise to a presumption of a gift to decedent, his wife, the issue was a question of fact for the trial court and we are satisfied that the evidence contrary to that presumption is sufficient to support the implied finding that no gift was made, and the wife, decedent, did not become vested with any title. That being the case, it follows that neither she nor her successors acquired any interest in or claim against the new house. The Harris case, supra, has no application because there the joint tenancy relation was founded upon the agreement of the parties.

[6-9] Furthermore, even if it be assumed that the creation of the joint tenancy bank account amounted to a gift by defendant to decedent of his separate property, it is clear that plaintiff cannot prevail. It has been held that, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, where improvements are made upon the husband's separate real property with community funds, the improvements have the character of his separate property and belong to the husband. See Dunn v. Mullan, 211 Cal. 583, 296 P. 604, 77 A.L.R. 1015. However, when the funds are so paid out of the community assets without the wife's consent the wife is entitled to reimbursement upon the dissolution of the marriage and has a claim therefore against the property improved, the theory being that inasmuch as the husband is the manager of the community property, to permit him to use with impunity the community funds to improve his separate property would be a constructive fraud upon the wife. Dunn v. Mullan, supra; Provost v. Provost, 102 Cal.App. 775, 283 P. 842; Callnon v. Callnon, 7 Cal.App.2d 676, 46 P.2d 988; Spreng v. Spreng, 119 Cal.App. 155, 6 P.2d 104. But in the case at bar we are not concerned with community property over which the husband has control. The decedent's interest in the account held in joint tenancy was, if anything, a separate property interest in which the control of both husband and wife would be equal. Combined with that is the circumstance that the funds making up the account were his separate property and the decedent wife agreed that they were to be deposited in the account and thereafter used to improve the husband's separate property. Under those circumstances the court was justified in holding that she acquired no interest in the new house or the land upon which it was erected.

[10] Plaintiff asserts that the finding that the new house cost $3,500 is not supported by the evidence. Suffice it to state that there is merely a conflict in the evidence on that subject which the trial court resolved against the plaintiff. There being evidence to support the finding, we are not concerned with the conflict.

[11] It is claimed that the trial court erred in failing to order the delivery of the furniture to the plaintiff as administrator of the decedent's estate. It was her separate property, but it was household furniture, and inasmuch as defendant is a surviving spouse, he is entitled to remain in possession of it until an inventory is filed in the estate proceeding, and then it may be set apart to him by the probate court. Probate Code, § 660.

Plaintiff urges that the trust deed executed by defendant to his sister upon the real property in question, is invalid, but in view of the conclusion we have heretofore reached, that decedent had no interest in this property, consideration of that claim is unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

20 Cal.2d 186

EVANS, State Building and Loan Com'r, v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

L. A. 18199.

Supreme Court of California.

April 20, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 18, 1942.

1. Execution ⚷161

The court has power and duty to recall writ of execution if it was improvidently issued.

2. Mandamus ⚷4(4)

Where building and loan commissioner in connection with liquidation of loan society filed motion to recall and quash a writ of execution levied against the society, commissioner's remedy by appeal from order denying motion did not preclude consideration of merits of subsequent application for writ of mandamus to compel superior court to recall and quash the writ. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.11.

3. Building and loan associations ⚷42(3)

Under act prohibiting levy of execution on property of building and loan association pending process of liquidation of association, the building and loan commissioner's act of taking possession of assets of association is a prerequisite to liquidation and is to be considered as part of process of "liquidation", regardless of whether association seeks to enjoin proceedings by commissioner. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, §§ 13.11 to 13.13, 13.16.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Liquidation".

4. Building and loan associations ⚷42(6)

Under statute providing that no execution should be levied upon property of building and loan association pending process of liquidation thereof, where action against loan society was commenced prior to date when building and loan commissioner took possession of society's assets, but judgment was not recovered or execution levied until after such date, although commissioner had not yet filed notice of determination to liquidate, commissioner was entitled to have writ of execution quashed on theory that taking of possession of assets was a part of process of "liquidation", and that hence the writ of execution was improperly issued. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 986, §§ 13.11 to 13.13, 13.16.

5. Judgment ⚷752

A judgment lien is a statutory right which attaches to property not exempt from execution, and such right may be taken away by statute.

6. Building and loan associations ⚷42(3)

Under statute providing that no execution should be levied upon property of building and loan association pending process of liquidation thereof, a judgment which could not be enforced under the statute would be a mere adjudication of the creditor relationship and of the amount due. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.16.

* * *

In Bank.

Mandamus proceeding by Ralph W. Evans, as State Building and Loan Commissioner, against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, to compel the respondent to recall and quash a writ of execution levied on the assets of the Pacific States Savings & Loan Society to satisfy a judgment rendered in an action against the society.

Writ issued.

For prior opinion, see 117 P.2d 886.

Alan G. Campbell, Wood, Crump & Rogers, and Guy Richards Crump, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, Douglas DeCoster, Deputy Co. Counsel, Mathes & Sheppard, William C. Mathes, and J. Stanley Mullin, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

The petitioner, as building and loan commissioner, applied for the writ of mandamus to direct the respondent superior court to recall and quash a writ of execution levied on the assets of Pacific States Savings and Loan Society to satisfy a judgment rendered for the plaintiffs, Terry et al., in an action against the society. The facts are not disputed.

On September 30, 1937, Terry and others commenced an action against Pacific States Savings and Loan Society to recover sums claimed to be due on certain fidelity definite term investment certificates and fidelity participating certificates of the society which matured May 23, 1936.

March 4, 1939, the petitioner took possession of the property and assets of the society pursuant to section 13.11 of the Building and Loan Association Act. Stats.

1931, page 483, as amended, Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 986. The next day pursuant to section 13.12 of the act the society commenced an action to enjoin further proceedings on the part of the commissioner.

June 12, 1939, the plaintiffs in the Terry action recovered judgment for $15,696.71 and on August 23, 1939, execution was levied, but nothing has been paid on the judgment by virtue of the levy.

October 30, 1939, pursuant to section 13.16 of the act, the commissioner filed a notice of determination to liquidate. August 2, 1941, the commissioner in the Terry action moved the respondent court to recall and quash the writ of execution on the ground that said section 13.16 forbade the lien of said judgment and any execution thereon. The motion was denied, and on September 4, 1941, the present proceeding was commenced for the purpose of compelling the respondent court to recall and quash the writ of execution. On December 29, 1941, the court in the injunction proceeding filed by the society on March 5, 1939, found for the commissioner and entered its judgment of dismissal.

[1] The foregoing statement of facts is sufficient upon which to resolve the problem here involved. Section 13.16 of the act provides in part: "The determination by the commissioner to liquidate any association, evidenced by filing written notice of such determination with the court, shall operate to stay or dissolve any or all actions or attachments instituted or levied within thirty days next preceding the taking of possession of such association by the commissioner, and pending the process of liquidation as herein provided no attachment or execution shall be levied or lien created upon any of the property of such association." The respondent court had the power and it was its duty to recall the writ of execution if it was improvidently issued. Creditors' Adjustment Co. v. Newman, 185 Cal. 509, 511, 197 P. 334.

[2] If the taking of possession under the act was a part of the process of liquidation within the meaning of the quoted provision, as contended by the petitioner, then the jurisdiction of the respondent court might be exercised in but one way, namely, by granting the motion to recall and quash the writ.

The petitioner's remedy by appeal from the order denying his motion to recall the writ in a case of this character, may not be deemed sufficient to preclude a consideration of the merits of the present application and the issuance of the writ if the application should be found to be meritorious. See Betty v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 619, 116 P.2d 947.

[3, 4] Since the Terry action was brought more than thirty days prior to the taking of possession, it was not stayed by the above provisions of section 13.16 of the act. But whether the judgment or execution in that action created a lien depends upon the answer to the question of when under the act the process of liquidation commences. By section 13.11 of the act the commissioner is empowered to take possession of the property, business and assets of the association by reason of the conduct of its affairs in an injurious and unsafe manner, or for other reasons therein stated, and he may "retain such possession until such association shall with the consent of the commissioner resume business, or until its affairs be liquidated."

By section 13.12 any association affected by the commissioner's order of possession may within thirty days apply to the superior court to enjoin further proceedings. In the injunction proceeding the court may dismiss the application or enjoin the commissioner from further proceedings and direct him to surrender the business and assets to the association. By section 13.13 the commissioner has certain specified powers upon taking possession and, unless he is enjoined from further proceedings, he may proceed to liquidate the affairs of the association, "as hereinafter provided." Section 13.16, in addition to the above quoted provision, enumerates the general powers of the commissioner in liquidating the association's affairs. There is also provision for ratable distribution of dividends from the liquidation of assets; for a hearing on the payment of a final dividend, and the closing of liquidation with the return of any balance to the shareholders after payment of all claims. In practice, when no injunction has been applied for, and at the end of thirty days following the taking of possession, the commissioner files his notice of determination to liquidate and proceeds immediately to liquidate in accordance with the provisions of the act. The question whether a judgment rendered (in an action not stayed), or execution levied during the thirty-day period, created a lien upon the property of the association will first be considered. Undeniably it may be said that the thirty-day period is provided as an automatic stay of the exercise of the powers of liquidation by the commissioner, as distinguished from a stay of the process of liquidation, in order to give the association an opportunity to obtain an injunction. Absence of justification for the taking of possession may then be shown. This is so for the reason that possession under the act is primarily for the purpose of liquidating the affairs of the association. True, it may develop that liquidation will not follow, but that consequence does not alter the obvious fact that under the act possession is a prerequisite to liquidation and must be deemed to be the first step in that process. Since it is such a prerequisite it should be considered as part of the process of liquidation in a case when an injunction proceeding has been commenced as well as in a case where the association has not applied for an injunction; and indeed with greater necessity in the former case inasmuch as the delays which might ensue upon an application for injunction might defeat the purposes of the act. In this connection it is significant that, if no injunction had been sought and the commissioner had filed notice of his determination to liquidate upon the expiration of the thirty-day period, and if the judgment in the Terry action had been entered thereafter, no execution could have issued on said judgment by virtue of the provisions of section 13.16 of the act. That section operates to prohibit the levy of any execution pending the process of liquidation. It makes no exception of an action which was commenced more than thirty days prior to the taking of possession by the commissioner. Obviously it could not have been the legislative intent to permit such an advantage to accrue to some creditors by reason of the delays attending an injunction proceeding. Therefore one of the ends to be achieved by the legislation, namely, the ratable distribution of assets among creditors, furnishes support for our conclusion therein. In Crane v. Pacific Bank, 106 Cal. 64, 39 P. 215, 27 L.R.A. 562, concerning somewhat similar legislation, it was said that if the Bank Commissioners' Act there involved took banks out of the operation of the Insolvency Act to procure equitable distribution of its assets among its creditors, it was equally clear that it was not intended that the moment a bank closed its doors its assets should become the prey of the first creditors who might obtain the issuance of process. If the process of liquidation were deemed not to commence until, for instance, an adjudication of dismissal in an injunction proceeding, it would be a simple matter for the association to apply for an injunction and thus effect a period of delay within which actions not stayed could be prosecuted to judgment with resulting preferment, while in the absence of injunction proceedings judgments would not create a lien on the association's property.

[5, 6] A judgment lien is a statutory right which attaches to property not exempt from execution. Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 181, 183, 76 Am.Dec. 516. The right thus created may also be taken away by statute, altogether or conditionally, as in cases of insolvency. By the enactment of the Building and Loan Association Act the legislature has seen fit to withdraw the right of a judgment lien and execution process from judgment creditors in certain cases during the process of liquidation. The only effect of the judgment in an action not stayed by the provisions of the act, such as in the Terry case, would be an adjudication of the creditor relationship and of the amount due.

In Evans v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 563, 572, 96 P.2d 107, 112, this court referred to the sections of the act here under consideration and related sections and said: "The above-mentioned sections of the act should be considered together (Yager v. Superior Court, 139 Cal.App. 84, 33 P.2d 451) and when so considered, it is apparent that the legislature intended to provide a comprehensive plan for the supervision of building and loan associations generally and for the liquidation of particular associations under certain conditions. * * * It has been held that a liberal rather than a strict construction should be placed upon said sections in determining the powers of the commissioner. * * * Respondents argue for a strict construction of the word 'liquidation' in this connection but it is apparent that the taking of possession by the commissioner under section 13.11 is a necessary and integral part of the process of liquidation * * *."

It is true that the question now to be determined is not the question which was involved in that proceeding. But the foregoing quoted declarations were necessary to the determination of the question there involved, and we are not now presented with authorities or argument which would justify a disapproval of them.

The respondent relies on Lanz v. Fresno L. & S. Bank, 125 Cal. 456, 58 P. 63, and Argues v. Union Savings Bank, 133 Cal. 139, 65 P. 307. In the Lanz case the plaintiff had been overlooked in the distribution of the bank's assets by the trustees in the process of liquidation. It was held that he could recover judgment on his claim. In the Argues case it was held that an ordinary action for the collection of a debt could not be maintained against a bank while it was in process of liquidation, and that the only permissible action would be one against the liquidating trustees for some dereliction of duty. The Lanz case involved such a permissible action. Neither case therefore is inconsistent with our interpretation of the provisions of the act here involved.

Let the peremptory writ of mandamus issue as prayed.

CURTIS, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

HOUSER, J., concurred in the judgment.

---

20 Cal.2d 181

PEOPLE v. HOCHWENDER et al.

L. A. 17816.

Supreme Court of California.
April 20, 1942.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑224

Under statute providing that all claims arising upon contract must be filed or presented against a decedent's estate within the time limited by notice, a claim for delinquent sales taxes against a deceased retailer's estate was not a "claim arising upon contract" but arose by operation of law notwithstanding statutory provision that such tax constituted a direct obligation of the retailer and hence a claim therefor filed upon expiration of the time fixed by notice was not barred. Probate Code, §§ 700, 707; Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8493, § 30.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Claim Arising Upon Contract".

2. Taxation 🔑1

"Taxes" are not "debts" nor "founded upon contract" but they are charges upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes and the general relationship of sovereign and taxpayer is not founded on nor does it create any contractual rights.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Debt", "Founded Upon Contract" and Taxes".

3. Licenses 🔑32(1)

Under statutes relating to assessment and collection of delinquent sales taxes and interest and penalties attaching thereto, the legislature intended that the payment of the additional tax should not become delinquent until the penalty for nonpayment attached. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8493, §§ 9, 17, 20, 21, 30.

4. Limitation of actions 🔑58(6)

Where an additional assessment of delinquent sales taxes to correct an insufficient return against a retailer covered a period commencing July 1, 1934, and a notice of assessment was mailed October 6, 1937, an action commenced more than three years and eleven months after the earliest period for which the delinquent assessments were claimed was not barred by the three-year statute of limitations as to the period ending prior to three years before the complaint was filed. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8493, §§ 9, 17, 20, 21, 30.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, San Diego County; Robert B. Burch, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California against Jean Hochwender, as special administratrix of the estate of Fred Hochwender, deceased, for delinquent sales taxes. From a judgment for plaintiff, both parties appeal.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Burdette J. Daniels, James E. Sabine, and Adrian A. Kragen, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

C. C. Pease and Edward J. Schwartz, both of San Diego, for appellants.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiff and the defendants have appealed from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action to recover additional sales taxes.

Fred Hochwender died testate May 1, 1936. During his lifetime he operated a retail used car business under permits issued to him by the State Board of Equalization. Returns were filed for the period from July 1, 1934, to June 30, 1936, showing taxable sales of $72,435.72, and the sales tax thereon was paid.

On May 28, 1936, the first publication of notice to creditors was made by the then acting executor, and the six months period for presentation of claims against his estate under section 700 of the Probate Code expired November 28, 1936. No claim for sales taxes was filed in the probate court or presented to the legal representative of the estate within that time.

More than a year after Hochwender's death, and in September, 1937, the State Board of Equalization made an audit of his books which disclosed a total of taxable sales for the aforesaid period, July 1, 1934, to June 30, 1936, of $188,886.43, or $116,450.71 more than the total reported by the retailer. The State Board of Equalization mailed a notice of additional assessment, dated October 6, 1937, seeking to impose a further tax of $4,634.78. On October 8, 1937, sixteen months after the first publication of notice to creditors, the claim for the latter amount was presented against the estate. The claim was rejected on March 11, 1938.

Thereafter, on June 9, 1938, the plaintiff commenced this action for the enforcement of the claim including interest and penalties. The state thereby sought to collect taxes on sales from July 1, 1934, a period commencing more than three years and eleven months prior to the filing of the complaint. Section 30 of the California Retail Sales Tax Act as amended, Stats.1935, page 1265; Deering's Gen. Laws, 1937, Act 8493, provides that an action to collect delinquent sales taxes must be brought within three years after delinquency.

The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $3,239.04, but denied recovery for any taxes on sales during the taxable period ending prior to June 9, 1935, or more than three years before the suit was filed.

The appeal of the defendants will first be considered.

They contend that the state's entire claim is barred by Probate Code sections 700 and 707, because the claim was not presented in the probate matter within six months after the first publication of notice to creditors. Section 700 requires that the notice specify six months for the presentation of claims and section 707 provides: "All claims arising upon contract, whether they are due, not due, or contingent, and all claims for funeral expenses, must be filed or presented within the time limited in the notice * * * and any claim not so filed or presented is barred forever * * *."

[1, 2] The defendants insist that the tax is a claim arising upon contract within the meaning of section 707. The contention cannot be sustained. In the early case of Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318, 350, it was held: "Taxes are not debts * * * due by contract, express or implied." That case has been consistently and uniformly followed. It was cited and approved in Spurrier v. Neumiller, 37 Cal. App. 683, 174 P. 338, 341, where it was said: "Taxes are not debts, nor founded upon contract; but they are charges upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes." This court recently reiterated the rule in Southern Service Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 15 Cal.2d 1, 97 P.2d 963, 969, stating, "The general relationship of sovereign and tax payer is not founded on nor does it create any contractual rights," citing Perry v. Washburn, supra, and Spurrier v. Neumiller, supra.

The defendants rely upon the case of the People v. Sischo, 31 Cal.App.2d 345, 87 P.2d 862. That case holds that a liquidated demand for sales taxes made by the State Board of Equalization on a retailer, a business trust, is a claim on which the trustees of the business trust are personally liable in accordance with the rule that trustees of such a trust are personally liable for the obligations of their trust except when exempted either expressly or by implication. The case lends no support to the contention that the tax obligation is contractural in nature. Nor does section 9 of the Retail Sales Tax Act, which states that "the tax levied hereunder shall be a direct obligation of the retailer * * *." render the tax contractual. The fact that the tax may be an obligation does not make it a contractural obligation. Section 26 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that obligations may arise by contract or by operation of law. The tax liability here involved is one that arises by operation of law and not by contract.

Defendants also stress one of the reasons for the six months' provisions for filing claims against estates which is said to be based upon "the special nature of probate and the vital necessity for winding up the affairs of a decedent's estate within the shortest time possible." However, it is clear that a tax claim should come within the terms of the probate statute before the reason would be applicable. Here it does not. It is significant that the statutory limitation does not apply to other law imposed obligations, such as tort claims and alimony allowances. Hardin v. Sin Claire, 115 Cal. 460, 47 P. 363; Millar v. Millar, 51 Cal.App. 718, 197 P. 811.

[3] On the plaintiff's appeal the contention is that none of the additional taxes here assessed is barred by the statute of limitations provided by section 30 of the Retail Sales Tax Act. The additional assessment covered a period commencing July 1, 1934. The notice of additional assessment was mailed on October 6, 1937. The action was commenced on June 9, 1938. It is not disputed that if additional assessments become delinquent on the 15th day following the first quarter for which the additional tax was assessed, then the trial court was correct in its conclusion that as to a portion of the additional assessment the action was commenced too late. We do not, however, agree with the defendant's contention that delinquency of the additional assessment occurred at that time. Section 30 provides that at any time within three years after the delinquency of any tax, the board may bring an action in a court of competent jurisdiction to collect the amount delinquent together with interest and penalties. Section 17 provides for an additional assessment if the board is not satisfied that the retailer's return is sufficient. It also provides that notice thereof be served upon the retailer and that any such additional assessment shall bear interest at the rate of one-half of one per cent per month from the fifteenth day after the close of the period for which the assessment is imposed to the date of payment. By section 20 assessments made under the provisions of section 17 become due and payable at the time of service of notice thereof, and if not paid at that time a ten per cent penalty is added to the amount of the tax. Section 21 provides that notice of such additional assessment be mailed to the retailer within three years after his return was filed. Section 9 requires the retailer to file his return on or before the fifteenth day following the close of the taxable period. No contention is made that notice was not mailed within three years from the filing of the return covering the first quarterly period involved herein.

The defendants argue that because interest is added from the fifteenth day following the close of the period for which the additional assessment is made, an intent is shown that the additional assessment be deemed delinquent on that day. That possibility is negatived by the provisions of sections 20 and 21 which establish the due date of the assessment, the fixing of a ten per cent penalty upon failure to pay on the due date, and the requirement that notice of additional assessment be mailed within three years after the filing of the return. Approval of the defendant's contention would lead to the absurd result that the board might notify the retailer just before the close of the three-year period but must file an action at the same time and before the time expires within which the taxpayer is permitted to comply with the notice without suffering the addition of the penalty for nonpayment. It is obvious that the legislature intended that payment of the additional tax under those sections should not become delinquent until the penalty for nonpayment attaches.

[4] The court was therefore in error in concluding that the provisions of section 30 barred the right of the plaintiff to collect the entire amount of the additional assessments.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the plaintiff for the full amount of the additional taxes, interest and penalties.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

TRAYNOR, J., did not participate herein.

20 Cal.2d 208

STUB et al. v. BELMONT.

L. A. 17715.

Supreme Court of California.
April 22, 1942.

1. Pleading 🔑350(3)

The affirmative allegations in defendant's answer must be taken as true in entertaining plaintiffs' motion for judgment on the pleadings.

2. Chattel mortgages 🔑21
Mortgages 🔑15

A mortgage on either chattels or real property, given as security for performance of a contract, is valid and may stand as security for such performance, at least as between mortgagor and mortgagee. Civ.Code, §§ 2875, 2891, 2905, 2909, 2911, 2912, 2920, 2924, 2928.

3. Chattel mortgages 🔑236

Where note, chattel mortgage and consignment contract were given by plaintiffs to defendant as part of same transaction, the mortgage specifically providing that it was given not only as security for payment of loan and advances, but also for performance of the contract, and there was independent consideration supporting contract, the payment of loan and advances during term of contract did not entitle plaintiffs to a satisfaction of the mortgage and cancellation of the contract.

4. Compromise and settlement 🔑22

Defendant's pleading which alleged that under a consignment contract defendant would have made a certain profit during its term, that a dispute arose between parties as to defendant's right to have contract continued, and to be secured by a chattel mortgage during the term, that dispute was in good faith, and that there was an offer of compromise by one of plaintiffs and an acceptance of the offer by defendant, was sufficient to present defense of compromise and settlement in an action to recover money paid for cancellation of the contract and a statutory penalty for failure to give satisfaction of a chattel mortgage on payment thereof. Civ.Code, § 2941.

5. Compromise and settlement 🔑6(4)

The consideration necessary to support a compromise need not always consist of surrender of a claim that is necessarily valid and enforceable.

6. Compromise and settlement 🔑6(4)

An agreement entered into on supposition of right or of doubtful right is binding, although it later develops that right was on other side.

7. Accord and satisfaction 🔑25(2)
Compromise and settlement 🔑22

In action to recover money paid for cancellation of consignment contract and a statutory penalty for failure to give a satisfaction of a chattel mortgage on payment thereof, where defendant's pleading showed a bona fide dispute as to right of defendant to have contract continued and to be secured by chattel mortgage during its term, and that a release was given upon payment to him by one of plaintiffs of $2,000, defendant's pleading was sufficient to set forth defense of accord and satisfaction, it being immaterial whether defendant's claim was legally enforceable.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Peirson M. Hall, Judge.

Action by I. A. Stub and others against Frank Belmont to recover money paid for cancellation of a contract and a statutory penalty for failure to give a satisfaction of a mortgage on payment thereof. From a judgment for the plaintiffs, rendered on the pleadings, the defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Monta W. Shirley and Taylor H. Snow, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for $2,000 and a penalty of $100 entered against him pursuant to plaintiffs' motion for judgment on the pleadings. The penalty of $100 was awarded pursuant to section 2941 of the Civil Code providing therefor in cases where a mortgagee fails to give to the mortgagor a satisfaction of mortgage upon the payment thereof.

[1] The following facts appear from the affirmative allegations in defendant's answer, which must be taken as true in entertaining a motion for judgment on the pleadings (Cuneo v. Lawson, 203 Cal. 190, 263 P. 530), and the undenied allegations of plaintiffs' complaint. Plaintiff Underwood obtained title to an orange grove, having purchased it from a Mr. Wilcox. The purchase price was $29,000 to be paid $5,000 in cash, $15,000 according to the terms of a promissory note secured by a second trust deed on the grove property, and the balance of $9,000 by the assumption of a trust deed then encumbering said property. In order to consummate the transaction, plaintiff Underwood executed the note and second trust deed for $15,000 to Wilcox and assumed the first trust deed. Not having the $5,000 cash she borrowed it from defendant for which she gave defendant on May 23, 1936, a promissory note, a crop mortgage securing the note, and a consignment contract having a three-year term. The latter contract did not contain a proper description of the land but was corrected on August 1, 1936. Thereafter, plaintiffs failed to properly care for the grove or crops thereon, and plaintiffs requested defendant to care for the same and advance the money necessary therefor, to which defendant agreed if new notes, mortgages and contracts would be executed. Accordingly, on October 3, 1936, the following instruments here directly involved were executed. A promissory note for $5,000 executed by plaintiffs to defendant payable on or before five years after date. The note was secured by a chattel mortgage, in which plaintiffs were mortgagors, on the crops growing and to be grown on the grove for the years 1936-1937 to 1940-1941, inclusive. The mortgage provided that it was given to secure: (1) the performance of "the terms and obligations of this mortgage," and the promissory note for $5,000. (2) The payment of any further loans or advancements not exceeding $5,000, "exclusive of any expenditures, advances, or expenses made or paid by said Mortgagee, or due or to become due to said Mortgagee from said Mortgagor by reason of any of the terms, provisions or conditions herein contained, or by reason of any contract secured hereby." (3) "The faithful performance by said Mortgagor, in the manner therein provided, of that certain contract in writing of even date herewith signed, executed, and delivered by said Mortgagor to said Mortgagee and which said contract, in the possession of said Mortgagee, is made a part hereof and referred to for further particulars and by which said Mortgagor in consideration of the said loan made by said Mortgagee to said Mortgagor and evidenced by said promissory note, has placed and agrees to deliver the said crops hereby mortgaged to and into the hands of the said Mortgagee to be packed and sold by said Mortgagee for the account of said Mortgagor, in the manner in said contract provided." (4) "The faithful delivery of said crops when harvested to said Mortgagee for the purposes thereof and the payment to said Mortgagee of the commission to be paid by said Mortgagor under the terms of said contract, for the services to be rendered in the packing and selling of said crops thereunder." (5) "The payment of all other sums due or to become due to, and all advancements or payments made or which may be made by, said Mortgagee for and on account of said Mortgagor, under the terms or for the purposes of said contract, which said contract, each and all of the terms thereof, together with the commissions therein provided for said Mortgagor promises to keep, make and pay as therein provided."

The consignment contract executed on the same date as the note and mortgage, and referred to in the latter, is between plaintiffs as owner and defendant, as consignee and provides: "That the Owner, in consideration of one dollar and the promises herein on the part of Consignee, employs said Consignee to pick, haul, pack, ship and market All Valencia Oranges, now growing on his land and that during the term of this agreement may be grown upon his lands * * *"; that there is no lien against the crop except defendant's $5,000 chattel mortgage; that defendant accepts the employment and "agrees to pick, haul, pack, ship and market all or part of said crop or crops in such manner, at such time or place as will in his judgment yield the maximum returns therefor, subject to the following conditions"; that before payment of the net proceeds from the crops to plaintiffs, defendant may deduct 70 cents per box for packing oranges, 15 cents per box for selling, 5 cents for sweating, 15 cents for export shipments and also all expenses involved in transportation; that if plaintiffs dispose of any of the crops they shall "pay to the Consignee [defendant], as liquidated damages for such breach, the sum of fifteen cents (15 cts.) for each and every commercial package or box, known in the trade as 'field box,' or the equivalent thereof, which may be so disposed of, sold, marketed or consigned by said Owner, it being spec ifically agreed that it is impracticable and extremely difficult to fix the actual damage which would thereby be suffered by the Consignee." The term of the contract is until October 3, 1941, and gives to defendant broad authority and discretion with respect to marketing the crops.

Defendant took care of the grove and between May 23, 1936, and August 1, 1937, advanced therefor $8,000 more than he received from the sale of fruit. He alleges that he would have made a profit of $5,000 under the consignment contract during its term had he continued operations pursuant thereto. Plaintiffs desiring to sell the grove, requested defendant to cancel his mortgage and consignment contract upon payment of the amount he had expended on the grove and loaned to plaintiffs. Defendant agreed to cancel the mortgage upon payment of the loans and advancements, but insisted that the consignment contract and the mortgage insofar as it secured its performance remain in force. Finally, in August, 1937, it was agreed between the parties that plaintiffs would pay defendant $2,000 and defendant would cancel the contract. Pursuant to escrow instructions therefor, $10,598.28 was paid on behalf of plaintiffs to defendant, $8,598.28 representing the loan of $5,000 and advancements, and $2,000 for the cancellation of the contract. Defendant released plaintiffs from all liability under all the instruments.

Plaintiffs brought this action to recover the $2,000 paid by them and a penalty of $100, claiming that they were entitled to a satisfaction of the mortgage without the payment of the $2,000 because the performance of the consignment contract was not secured by the mortgage and did not create an independent obligation. We believe it is clear that defendant has stated a good defense to the action and the judgment on the pleadings must be reversed.

[2] The trial court apparently based its decision upon the case of Hayashi v. Pacific Fruit Exchange, 43 Cal.App. 677, 186 P. 174. In that case the action was by the mortgagor to compel satisfaction of a chattel mortgage on crops given to secure the payment of a $200 loan, the mortgage reciting that it was given as security for that payment "'and also all other indebtedness that may hereafter be due, owing or existing from said' mortgagor" and for the performance of the other covenants in the mortgage. It was also recited that in consideration of the loan the mortgagor gave the mortgagee the right to market the crops for which services he was to receive a commission, and the mortgagor was to purchase packing material from the mortgagee. The court held that the last-mentioned provisions were placed in the mortgage only for preserving the security for the payment of the $200, and that when it was paid, the mortgage did not stand as security for the performance by the mortgagor of the marketing agreement embodied in the mortgage. That construction placed upon the instrument is extremely doubtful, but in any event it is not controlling in the case at bar because in the cited case it is stated:

"It will be observed that it is not by language expressly provided, nor is it reasonably susceptible to that construction when it is considered in connection with the other provisions of the instrument, that 'the mortgage is intended to secure and does secure the right of the defendant to the possession of the fruit when harvested.'" (Emphasis added.) In the case at bar as heretofore seen, the chattel mortgage expressly states it is to secure the performance of the consignment contract. In any event, however, the Hayashi case must be disapproved because it further holds that a mortgage may not be given to secure the performance of a contract such as the consignment contract here in question, and that a mortgage may not stand as security for damages for the breach of a contract. Approval of that portion of the decision was specifically withheld by this court on denial of a petition for a hearing. Hayashi v. Pacific Fruit Exchange, supra, 43 Cal.App. at page 684, 186 P. 174. At least as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, a mortgage on either chattels or real property, given as security for the performance of a contract is valid and proper, and may stand as security for such performance. The statutory law recognizes that rule. Section 2920 of the Civil Code defining a mortgage provides:

"Mortgage is a contract by which specific property is hypothecated for the performance of an act, without the necessity of a change of possession." See, also, Civ. Code, §§ 2875, 2891, 2905, 2909, 2911, 2912, 2924, 2928; Congregational Church Bldg. Soc. v. Osborn, 153 Cal. 197, 94 P. 881;

Falkner, Bell & Co. v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 167; Purser v. Eagle Lake L. & I. Co., 111 Cal. 139, 43 P. 523; 41 C.J. 454-459; 36 Am. Jur. 720; Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Banaka, 150 Kan. 334, 92 P.2d 63; Seid Pak Sing v. Barker, 197 Cal. 321, 240 P. 765; Dover Lumber Co. v. Case, 31 Idaho 276, 170 P. 108; McNeff v. Southern Pacific Co., 61 Or. 22, 120 P. 6.

[3] Turning to the transactions in the instant case, we think there is no doubt that defendant has stated a sufficient defense to plaintiffs' action. The three instruments, the note, mortgage, and consignment contract were executed on the same day, October 3, 1936, and should be construed together as a part of the same transaction. The mortgage specifically and expressly provides that it was given not only as security for the payment of the $5,000 loan and advances, but also for the performance of the terms of the consignment contract. This is clear from the hereinabove quoted excerpts from the mortgage. As before noted, the court in the Hayashi case stated that there was no express term of the mortgage there involved making it security for the marketing agreement with reference to the crops. The loan of $5,000 and advancements were made in consideration of the execution of the consignment contract, but independent thereof there was adequate consideration supporting the contract expressed upon its face, that is, a promise for a promise. Plaintiffs agreed to employ defendant at certain rates to market the crop for five years and defendant promised to accept the employment and market the crops. We do not believe the consignment contract was merely an additional method of preserving the security (the crops) and therefore terminated when the loan of $5,000 and advances were paid, or that it was not secured by the mortgage. There were definite advantages gained by defendant in entering into the contract such as the fixed payments for the various types of services rendered. This is clearly indicated by the clause for liquidated damages payable to defendant, which is hereinabove quoted. That it was contemplated that defendant would benefit under and during the term of the contract in addition to merely receiving the money he loaned and advancements is indicated by the following clause that the property is not to be sold even after the term of the contract unless all advances have been paid:

"It is understood and agreed that any claim of the said Consignee for advances or other money paid on account of the said Owner under the terms of this agreement shall be fully satisfied before the consummation of any sale of all or part of the above described property. This applies only after expiration of this contract." (Emphasis added.) While the mortgage does contain provisions such as the making of the consignment contract a part of the mortgage; that it is to secure the repayment of every other item mentioned therein and all other liabilities incurred for the protection of the indebtedness; that the mortgagor shall pay all advances made under the contract with interest; and that the mortgagee may take possession of the crops when harvested and pay his commissions, it is clear that the mortgage was specifically made security for the performance of the contract; the performance of that contract was therefore an independent affair. The contract thus created an arrangement under which certain benefits accrued to defendant along with definite obligations assumed by him for a fixed period of time, namely, five years. It follows that insofar as appears from the pleadings, the consignment contract was binding upon plaintiffs for five years and a discharge of the $5,000 loan and advances did not entitle plaintiffs to a satisfaction of the mortgage because it would still stand as security for the performance of the contract during the term thereof. Defendant was thus not required to cancel the consignment contract or satisfy the mortgage until the covenants in the contract had been performed. There is nothing contrary to these views in Western Loan & Bldg. Co. v. Scheib, 218 Cal. 386, 23 P.2d 745, where a third party lien claimant was involved, and no obligation was owed by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, or in Miller v. Salomon, 100 Cal.App. 756, 281 P. 89, where the lease, the performance of which was secured by the mortgage was terminated.

[4] It is also urged by defendant as a ground for the reversal of the judgment that his pleading sufficiently establishes a compromise and settlement of the controversy between the parties as a sufficient defense to plaintiffs' action. With this contention we also agree. It was pleaded by defendant in that respect that he would have made a profit of over $5,000 under the consignment contract during its term. He then alleges:

"* * * that during the month of July, 1937, the plaintiffs herein had an opportunity to sell the orange grove * * * upon condition that they could convey the title thereto free and clear of encumbrances, * * * except the trust deed securing the $9,000.00 trust deed note * * * and * * * plaintiffs * * * requested * * * defendant to forward to the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, as escrow holder a release of the crop mortgage * * * and a cancellation of the consignment contract * * * said documents to be recorded when said escrow holder could pay to * * * defendant the sums of money which * * * defendant had expended in the care and maintenance of said orange grove and the balance due on the advancement by * * * defendant to * * * plaintiffs in connection with the purchase of said orange grove by the plaintiff * * *; that * * * defendant notified said escrow holder that he had expended large sums of money in caring for said orange grove and protecting same during the freeze of January, 1937, and that there was no reason why he should cancel said consignment contract, that if the plaintiffs herein desired to pay off the crop mortgage * * * defendant would receive said sums of money and release the crop mortgage so far as it affected said loans or advancements, reserving his rights thereunder, however, to secure the performance of the terms of the consignment contract.

"* * * defendant refused to cancel said consignment contract in view of the fact that plaintiffs did not have any money invested in said orange grove and had not cared for same during the time that the plaintiff * * * held legal title thereto, and because * * * defendant had advanced the money which was used as the down payment on said orange grove and advanced all sums of money in connection with the care and maintenance of said orange grove and had advanced large sums of money and had done considerable work in connection with the protecting of said orange grove and the crop growing thereon from the freeze during the month of January, 1937; that * * * defendant felt he was entitled to the profit on said consignment contract * * * and to any profit which he might make in carrying out the terms of said consignment contract, and for this reason * * * defendant refused to cancel said consignment contract when requested to by the plaintiffs herein.

"* * * a conference was held by the plaintiff I. A. Stub, W. H. Wadsworth, his attorney, * * * defendant * * * and Henry O. Wackerbarth, his attorney, and in the course of said conference said plaintiff I. A. Stub agreed to pay this answering defendant the sum of $2,000.00 if he would cancel said consignment contract * * * and thereafter * * * defendant deposited with * * * such escrow holder, all documents necessary to clear the title to the real property * * * so far as the same was encumbered by any of the documents executed by the plaintiffs * * * in favor of * * * defendant, and instructed said escrow holder to use them in accordance with the instructions of the plaintiffs herein upon payment to * * * defendant of the sum of $10,598.28 within the time provided in said escrow instructions, upon condition that the plaintiffs herein waive any and all future claims against * * * defendant in connection with said escrow, the documents deposited therein or the transactions between the plaintiffs and * * * defendant; and the plaintiffs herein, in connection with said escrow, signed a waiver of all future claims against * * * defendant in connection with the transaction out of which said consignment contracts, notes and mortgages * * * arose, * * * there was due * * * to * * * defendant from the plaintiffs * * * the sum of $8,598.28, and the difference between said sum of $8,598.28 and $10,598.28, to wit, $2,000.00, was paid to this answering defendant as the consideration for the cancellation of the consignment contract * * * and a waiver of all profits which * * * defendant would have made under said consignment contract, which said profits, as hereinbefore alleged, would have exceeded $5,000.00 under the terms of said contract." It cannot be doubted that the necessary elements for a compromise were present. There was a dispute between the parties, namely, whether defendant had the right to have the consignment contract continue for the balance of its term and be secured by the mortgage during that time. It is clear from the foregoing allegations that the dispute was in good faith and nothing to the contrary appears. There was nothing illegal about defendant's claim. There was an offer and acceptance of the compromise.

[5, 6] The only question that might arise is with respect to the consideration for the settlement. From what we have heretofore stated, it is obvious that the giving up of the consignment contract was a surrender of a legal right by defendant. But even if it were not, the consideration necessary to support a compromise need not always consist of the surrender of a claim that is necessarily legally valid and enforceable. The rule is thus stated in Bennett v. Bennett, 219 Cal. 153, 159, 25 P.2d 426, 428:

"The agreement herein involved was a compromise agreement entered into between Bennett and his wife to settle a disputed claim, and as such is binding upon the parties. 'An agreement entered into upon a supposition of a right, or of a doubtful right, though it afterwards comes out that the right was on the other side, is binding, and the right shall not prevail against the agreement of the parties, for the right must always be on the one side or the other, and therefore the compromise of a doubtful right is a sufficient foundation of an agreement.'" (Emphasis added.) See, also, Hamilton v. Oakland School Dist., 219 Cal. 322, 26 P.2d 296. Plaintiffs assert that there was no bona fide dispute between them and defendant, especially, as the relations between them were of a fiduciary character. It is apparent from the defendant's pleadings that the dispute was honest and bona fide. Defendant was claiming no more than that to which he believed he was entitled. There was nothing in the record to establish that the dispute was not in good faith, or was the result of fraud or undue influence, or was wholly groundless and known by defendant to be so.

[7] Defendants' defense may be treated as an accord and satisfaction inasmuch as the $2,000 was paid and the release given. Treated as such, it follows that as far as the pleadings show there was a bona fide dispute as to the claim for the $2,000. Whether in fact the claim was legally enforceable is immaterial. Everhardy v. Union Finance Co., 115 Cal.App. 460, 1 P.2d 1024; B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, 23 Cal.App. 164, 137 P. 624. It remains for the court to determine the issue upon the evidence at a trial of the action from all the circumstances of the transaction.

Defendant contends that judgment should be directed for him because of certain statements made by plaintiffs' counsel in the course of his argument on the motion for judgment on the pleadings. We do not believe those statements were sufficient as a basis for a directed judgment. Justice will be best served by a trial of the action.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 202

BRUNTON, City Council Member, et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

L. A. 18140.

Supreme Court of California.

April 21, 1942.

1. Contempt 🔑67

The jurisdiction of a lower court to issue a final judgment of contempt may be reviewed on petition for a writ of certiorari, and the question whether the acts complained of can constitute contempt is a jurisdictional one for purpose of such review.

2. Injunction 🔑219

To hold a person guilty of "contempt" for violating an injunction, the acts constituting contempt must be clearly and specifically prohibited by the injunction, and the party bound by injunction must be able to determine from its terms what he may and may not do, and cannot be held guilty of contempt for violating an injunction that is ambiguous.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Contempt".

3. Mines and minerals 🔑87

Findings, on which judgment enjoining the enforcement of city ordinances was based, that plaintiff flood control district in applying for a permit to drill for oil under the ordinances acted through its officers in their official capacity, and that their fees are payable for official services of the city officials, did not constitute a holding that all fees of this type were prohibited by statute providing that no political subdivision should be required to pay any fee for performance of any official service, or that the injunction was intended to prohibit the charging of any such fees under any ordinance. Pol.Code, § 4295.

4. Municipal corporations ⚿170

The statute prohibiting state, county, and township officials from performing any official services without payment of lawful fees except for the state, county, city, or other political subdivision was concerned with fees paid to state, county, and township officers and did not expressly apply to fees paid to city officers. Pol.Code, § 4295.

5. Mines and minerals ⚿87

The fee imposed by ordinance requiring payment of license fees by each person operating an oil well within the city limits, if a tax, was not a tax upon the value of property owned by applicant, but a tax upon the privilege of drilling for oil.

6. Taxation ⚿246

A "privilege tax" is not a "property tax" within the meaning of constitutional provision that property owned by a municipal corporation shall be exempt from taxation. Const. art. 13, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Privilege Tax" and "Property Tax".

7. Injunction ⚿221

A finding on which judgment enjoining the enforcement of city ordinances was based requiring each person drilling for oil to obtain a permit that the fees required therefor were imposed for revenue as well as regulation was not sufficient to charge city officers with "notice" that all fees in the nature of the ones in question were prohibited by constitutional provision against taxing property of municipal corporations, in determining whether the refusal of city officers to issue permit required by a materially different amending ordinance without payment of fees required thereby constituted contempt. Const. art. 13, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Notice".

8. Injunction ⚿230(3)

Evidence that city ordinances requiring licenses with fees payable to the city clerk for use as part of the general fund for oil operations anywhere within the city limits were materially different from amended ordinances, the enforcement of which had been enjoined, requiring license fees for oil operations within the harbor district, payable to the harbor commissioners and becoming a part of the harbor revenue fund, showed that city officials were not guilty of "contempt" in refusing to issue permits under the amending ordinances without payment of fees required thereby.

In Bank.

Proceeding in certiorari by William J. Brunton as City Council Member, and others, to review an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Emmet H. Wilson, Judge, adjudging petitioners guilty of contempt.

Order annulled and petitioners discharged.

For prior opinions, see Cal.App., 114 P.2d 45, and 116 P.2d 643.

Irving M. Smith, City Atty., and Roy J. Brown and Frank C. Charvat, Deputy City Attys., all of Long Beach, for petitioners.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, W. B. McKesson, Deputy Co. Counsel, and George H. Emerson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

The Los Angeles County Flood Control District owns certain real property in the channel of the Los Angeles River located in the harbor district of the city of Long Beach. In 1939 the Flood Control District entered into an agreement with the Continental Corporation giving the latter the right to operate oil wells upon the property. Certain ordinances of the city of Long Beach prohibited the operation of oil wells within this area, and the officials of the city refused to issue permits or to allow the operation of oil wells on the Flood Control District's property. The Flood Control District and the Continental Corporation thereupon brought an action against the city of Long Beach and certain of its officers to enjoin the enforcement of all ordinances affecting the right of plaintiffs to drill for oil. The trial court held that those ordinances entirely prohibiting plaintiffs from drilling for oil upon the land in question were unreasonable and discriminatory and therefore invalid.

Ordinance C-1549 as amended by C-1739 and ordinance H.D. 22 as amended by H.D. 38 required each person drilling for oil in the harbor district of Long Beach to obtain a permit from the Board of Harbor Commissioners and to pay that board a seven hundred and fifty dollar "Investigation and Permit Fee" and a one hundred and fifty dollar "Annual Permit Renewal and Inspection Fee" each fiscal year thereafter. The trial court found that these fees were imposed "for revenue as well as for regulation," that any application for such a permit is made by the Flood Control District "through its officers acting in their official capacities," and that the fees are payable "for the performance of official services of the officers named in said ordinances." It concluded that the plaintiffs were entitled to obtain such permits "without the payment of any of the fees prescribed by said ordinances" and enjoined defendants from "enforcing, seeking, or threatening to enforce: * * * the provisions relating to the payment of fees * * * in * * * ordinance H.D. number 22 as amended by ordinance H.D. number 38, and ordinance C-1549 as amended by ordinance C-1739." No appeal was taken from this judgment, and it has become final. In compliance with the injunction, permits were issued to the Flood Control District without payment of the fees required by the ordinances.

In June, 1940, the city council of Long Beach passed ordinance C-1815 and ordinance C-1814, which by its terms purported to amend ordinance C-1549. At the same time the Board of Harbor Commissioners passed ordinance H.D.55, which purported to amend ordinance H.D. 22. These ordinances required the payment of license fees to the city clerk of Long Beach by each person operating an oil well at any place within the city of Long Beach. They eliminated the previous requirement for the payment of fees to the Board of Harbor Commissioners by persons operating oil wells within the harbor district of Long Beach and substituted for that requirement the duty to pay to the city clerk the uniform fees prescribed for the operation of wells throughout the city.

In January, 1941, after the enactment of the new ordinances, the Continental Corporation, on its own behalf and as agent for the Los Angeles County Flood Control District, applied to the city clerk of Long Beach and to the Board of Harbor Commissioners for a permit to operate an oil well on the property owned by the Flood Control District. Neither application was accompanied by the fees prescribed in the new ordinances, and, on the advice of the city attorney of Long Beach, the Board of Harbor Commissioners and the city clerk refused to issue the permits. The Continental Corporation, acting through its vice president, thereupon filed in the superior court an affidavit of contempt setting forth the judgment in the injunction proceeding, the passage of the amendatory ordinances, the application for the permit, and the intentional refusal of the defendants to issue the permit without the payment of fees. The court held that the members of the city council, the members of the Board of Harbor Commissioners, the city clerk, the city attorney, and the deputy city attorney had violated the injunction and were therefore guilty of contempt. Defendants have petitioned for a writ of certiorari to annul the order of the trial court holding them guilty of contempt.

[1] The jurisdiction of a lower court to issue a final judgment of contempt may be reviewed on petition for a writ of certiorari. See cases cited in 5 Cal.Jur. 955. It is settled that the question whether the acts complained of can constitute a contempt is a jurisdictional one for the purposes of such review. Mattos v. Superior Court, 30 Cal.App.2d 641, 86 P.2d 1056; Jones v. Superior Court, 88 Cal.App. 253, 262 P. 1098. See Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court, 15 Cal.2d 99, 98 P.2d 1029; and cases cited in 5 Cal.Jur. 918. In the present case there is no dispute as to the facts. The question is whether the trial court could justifiably hold the petitioners guilty of contempt on the basis of their acts as alleged in the affidavit of contempt and as shown by the evidence. If these acts were not sufficient to constitute a contempt, the judgment cannot stand.

[2] To hold a person guilty of contempt for violating an injunction, the acts constituting the contempt must be clearly and specifically prohibited by the terms of the injunction. Mattos v. Superior Court, supra, 30 Cal.App.2d at page 649, 86 P.2d 1056, and cases there cited; American Foundry & Mfg. Co. v. Josam Mfg. Co., 8 Cir., 79 F.2d 116, 118; City of Campbell v. Arkansas-Missouri Power Co., 8 Cir., 65 F.2d 425, 427, 428. The party bound by an injunction must be able to determine from its terms what he may and may not do; he cannot be held guilty of contempt for violating an injunction that is uncertain or ambiguous (Ibid.), just as he may not be held guilty of violating a criminal statute that fails to give him adequate notice of the prohibited acts. See cases cited in 7 Cal.Jur. 843.

[3, 4] In the present case, therefore, the petitioners are guilty of contempt only if the acts complained of were clearly prohibited by the terms of the injunction. These acts consisted of a refusal to issue to plaintiffs a permit for the operation of an oil well without payment of the fees prescribed by the new ordinances. Respondents contend that petitioners were enjoined from attempting to collect any fees from respondents for the operation of oil wells. The injunction by its terms, however, enjoins petitioners only from attempting to collect from respondents those fees required by the old ordinances, H.D. 22 as amended by H.D. 38 and C-1549 as amended by C-1739. The findings of fact and conclusions of law do not indicate that the injunction was any broader in scope. The pertinent conclusion of law simply states that plaintiffs "are entitled to have issued any permits required by ordinances number C-1549, as amended by C-1739, H.D. number 22 as amended by H.D. number 38 * * * without the payment of any of the fees prescribed by said ordinances." The findings of fact state: "That ordinance H.D. number 22, as amended by ordinance H.D. number 38, and ordinance number C-1549, as amended by ordinance number C-1739, require applicants as defined in said ordinances to pay the fees therein provided for the issuance of the permits described in said ordinances; that the amounts paid for said fees are imposed by said city under said ordinances for revenue as well as for regulation; that if any permit is applied for by the plaintiff Los Angeles County Flood Control District under any of said ordinances for any operations to be carried on under the provisions of the drilling and operating agreement which is attached to plaintiffs' Amended and Supplemental Complaint and marked Exhibit A, said District makes such application through its officers acting in their official capacity, and the fees prescribed by said ordinances are payable for the performance of official services of the officers named in said ordinances."

Respondents contend that these findings constitute a holding by the court that all fees of this type are prohibited by section 4295 of the Political Code, which provides: "State, county and township officers shall not perform any official services unless upon the payment of such fees as are prescribed by law for the performance of such services, except * * * in the following cases: * * * (2) * * * neither the State nor any county, city and county, city, district, or other political subdivision, nor any public officer, or board or body, acting in his or its official capacity on behalf of the State, or any county, city and county, city, district or other political subdivision, shall be required to pay or deposit any fee for the filing of any document or paper, or for the performance of any official service." This section is concerned with fees paid to state, county, and township officers and does not expressly apply to fees paid to officers of cities. There is no clear and specific statement to indicate to petitioners that the court based its decision upon this section or that the injunction was intended to prohibit the charging of any such fees under any ordinance rather than just those provided for by the old ordinances.

[5-7] Respondents contend that the statement in the foregoing findings that the fees were imposed by the city "for revenue as well as regulation" indicates the court was of the opinion that under article XIII, section 1 of the California Constitution no fees for revenue purposes can be imposed by one political subdivision upon another. This section provides that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value and "that property * * * such as may belong to the United States, this State, or to any county, city and county, or municipal corporation within this State shall be exempt from taxation * * *." If the fee required by the ordinances under consideration is a tax, however, it is not a tax upon the value of the property owned by the Flood Control District but a tax upon the privilege of drilling for oil. It is settled that a privilege tax is not a property tax within the meaning of this and other sections of the Constitution. Ingels v. Riley, 5 Cal.2d 154, 53 P.2d 939, 103 A.L.R. 1; Douglas Aircraft Co., Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal.2d 545, 90 P.2d 572; Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 155 Cal. 638, 650-654, 103 P. 341; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 765, 767, 93 P. 1006; McAdams Oil Co. v. Los Angeles, 32 Cal.App.2d 359, 89 P.2d 729; Roth Drug, Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal.App.2d 720, 57 P.2d 1022; see cases cited in note 103 A.L.R. 35 et seq. If the lower court was of the opinion that this constitutional provision prohibited all fees in the nature of the ones in question it failed to give any indication sufficient to charge petitioners with notice that the injunction extended to all such fees rather than just those required by the old ordinances.

[8] It is thus clear that the injunction enjoined petitioners from collecting from plaintiffs only those fees required by the old ordinances. Petitioners, however, could not evade the injunction by the subterfuge of enacting new ordinances that did not materially differ from the old ones. Perry v. Kinnear, 42 Ill. 160, 162, 163; Ray v. Parish of Rapides, 170 La. 644, 128 So. 663; see cases cited in 32 C.J. 493, 494, § 860. Their attempt to collect fees under the new ordinances would constitute contempt of court if the new ordinances were not substantially different from the old. A comparison of the old ordinances with the new, however, reveals the following material differences: (1) The new ordinances require license fees for oil operations anywhere in the city of Long Beach whereas the old ordinances were effective only in the harbor district of the city. Thus, the old ordinances were discriminatory while the new ones are uniform in operation. (2) Under the new ordinances the fees are payable to the city clerk and become part of the general funds of the city, whereas under the old ordinances the fees were paid to the Board of Harbor Commissioners and become part of the harbor revenue fund. Since the general funds of the city enable it to furnish services such as police and fire protection, street maintenance, building inspection, and health and sanitary facilities, the fees paid under the new ordinances are used to furnish special services for the benefit of those to whom the permits are issued, whereas under the old ordinances the fees collected could be expended only by the Board of Harbor Commissioners exclusively for harbor purposes.

In view of the material differences between the new ordinances and the old, petitioners cannot be held guilty of violating an injunction that prohibited them from attempting to collect the fees required by the old ordinances. The validity of the new ordinances is not now before this court. Plaintiffs are free to test their validity by appropriate proceedings.

The order is annulled and petitioners are discharged.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 340

PHILLIPS v. McINTOSH et al.

Civ. 6755.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 21, 1942.

1. Trial ⚷142

It is trial court's duty to deny motion for nonsuit if there is any substantial evidence which, with aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to plaintiff, tends to establish averments of complaint.

2. Licenses ⚷39

In action for work performed and materials furnished, evidence held to show that plaintiff was not "employee", but "contractor", making profit on labor of others, so as to require nonsuit, in absence of proof that plaintiff had a contractor's license. St.1939, p. 3020, § 7026; p. 384, § 7031.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employee" and "Contractor".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Alva L. Phillips against James C. McIntosh and others for work performed and materials furnished. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

J. O. Stemmler and George M. Hench, both of Stockton, for appellant.

Lafayette J. Smallpage and Forrest E. Macomber, both of Stockton, for respondents.

TUTTLE, Justice.

Plaintiff seeks to recover the sum of $1,131.99 for work performed and materials furnished. At the close of her case, the court granted defendants' motion for nonsuit and plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from the order granting said motion.

The sole question on appeal is whether or not the evidence brings the case within the purview of section 7031 of Business and Professions Code, St.1937, p. 1229 as added by St.1939, p. 384, which reads as follows: "No person engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor, may bring or maintain any action in any court of this State for the collection of compensation for the performance of any act or contract for which a license is required by this chapter without alleging and proving that he was a duly licensed contractor at all times during the performance of such act or contract."

Plaintiff made no proof of compliance with said section, and relied solely upon the theory that she was not a contractor, but an employee, and hence required no license.

Section 7026 of the Business and Professions Code defines the term "contractor" as follows: "The term contractor for the purposes of this chapter is synonymous with the term 'builder' and, within the meaning of this chapter, a contractor is any person, except a licensed architect or a registered civil engineer acting solely in his professional capacity, who in any capacity other than as the employee of another with wages as the sole compensation, undertakes to or offers to undertake to or purports to have the capacity to undertake to or submits a bid to, or does himself or by or through others, construct, alter, repair, add to, subtract from, improve, move, wreck or demolish any building, highway, road, railroad, excavation or other structure, project, development or improvement, or to do any part thereof, including the erection of scaffolding or other structures or works in connection therewith."

[1] It is the duty of the trial court to deny a motion for nonsuit if there is any substantial evidence which, with the aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to the plaintiff, tends to establish the averment of the complaint, or, in other words, where plaintiff's evidence would support a judgment in his favor. 9 Cal.Jur., § 36, pp. 558, 559. We will proceed to subject plaintiff's evidence to the foregoing rule.

[2] C. F. Phillips testified that he was the manager of the Phillips Heating and Plumbing Company, and as such manager, he performed the work and labor, and furnished the material as alleged in the complaint, for the defendant James C. McIntosh, doing business under the name of Electric Planing Mill. The work was done for defendant Kestin, through the Electric Planing Mill. He testified that he was the husband of plaintiff Alva L. Phillips, and was in full charge of plaintiff's business as her manager; that plaintiff personally performed no labor; that he had a conversation with defendant McIntosh, in regard to doing the work and supplying the materials mentioned in the complaint; that McIntosh told him that he wished to have some plumbing work done in a restaurant at Merced, on a time-and-material basis; that there was no bid made for the value of the labor or material, and that his only instructions were "to go down there and see the business agent, and see that it was run on a Union basis"; that all work was to be done according to instructions received from the manager of the restaurant where the work was to be done. He further testified that he paid for helper's labor the sum of $6.00 per day, while he charged defendants $8.00 for such work. To use his language: "I made a profit on it, which I was entitled to."

In regard to the materials to be used on the job, Phillips testified: "I was to use everything that he had there that I could find, and not to buy anything except what we had to have and he didn't have." There is further evidence to the effect that all the materials supplied were billed direct to defendant McIntosh, doing business under the name of "Electric Planing Mill." Phillips testified that he charged defendants 15 per cent upon all materials furnished by plaintiff, and he also charged for board and room furnished his employees.

We have set forth facts proven by plaintiff which are most favorable to her. We are of the opinion, however, that such facts do not establish a prima facie case. It is at once apparent that the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from such evidence is that plaintiff was acting in a capacity "other than as the employee of another with wages as the sole compensation." Plaintiff made a profit upon the labor of others. She charged 15 per cent over and above the cost of materials. She performed no labor herself.

Appellants have cited numerous cases upon the question of the relation of employer and employee. We do not deem it necessary to discuss them at length as we are concerned only with the definition of a "contractor" as laid down by the legislature in the Business and Professions Code. We conclude that under the facts as adduced by plaintiff, it was necessary for her to prove that she had a contractors' license. Failing in this, she is precluded from bringing or maintaining the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 323

HOWTON v. HOWTON.

Civ. 11897.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
April 20, 1942.

1. Divorce 🔑211, 223

Statute authorizing court to require husband pending divorce action to pay any money "necessary" to enable wife to support herself and children and prosecute or defend the action uses the quoted word in the broadest sense, and what is necessary rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. Civ.Code, § 137.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary".

2. Divorce 🔑211, 223

The discretion vested in court by statute authorizing allowance to wife of maintenance and suit money pending divorce action must be exercised in view of the circumstances of the parties, their several necessities, and the pecuniary ability of the husband. Civ.Code, § 137.

3. Divorce 🔑211

Court did not abuse its discretion in requiring husband pending divorce action to contribute $75 per month to support of wife and three minor children, where it appeared $153 per month was needed to maintain household, including payments on loan on house, and wife earned approximately $70 per month while husband whose necessary expenses amounted to less than $100 per month had an income of over $200, and the earnings of children, one of whom was in college, were being used or saved for their education. Civ.Code, § 137.

4. Divorce 🔑215

In determining what amount husband should be required to contribute to support of wife and children pending divorce action, trial court, under statute authorizing it to make any reasonable order concerning the education of the children as might seem necessary or proper, could exclude earnings of minor children being used or saved for their education in computing amount available for maintenance of household. Civ. Code, §§ 137, 138.

5. Parent and child 🔑5(4)

Where father during the three or four months following his departure from family home contributed only $32 to support of wife and three minor children, such conduct constituted such "abandonment" as is by statute made presumptive evidence of relinquishment of right to children's earnings. Civ.Code, §§ 169, 197, 211.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Abandonment".

6. Parent and child 🔑5(3)

Mother had a legal right to relinquish to minor children their earnings to be used by them in securing an education. Civ. Code, § 169.

7. Divorce 🔑223

The granting of suit money to the wife pending divorce action rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. Civ.Code, § 137.

8. Divorce 🔑223

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in requiring husband, pending divorce action, to pay $100 attorney's fee and $15 costs, notwithstanding statement in wife's affidavit that she had made arrangements with her attorney to pay his fees, where record disclosed that wife was entirely without funds to defray such expenses and there was a justifiable inference that arrangement referred to in affidavit was that attorney should accept court's award. Civ.Code, § 137.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Beardsley, Judge.

Divorce action by Esther Doras Howton against Norman E. Howton. From an order directing defendant pendente lite to contribute $75 per month to the support of plaintiff and the three minor children of the parties, and pay attorney's fees and costs, defendant appeals.

Order affirmed.

Daily & Gallaudet, of Glendale, for appellant.

P. V. Davis, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Judge.

Defendant appeals from an order made in a divorce action whereby the defendant husband was ordered, pendente lite, to pay to the plaintiff wife $75 per month towards her support and the support of the three minor children of the parties, $100 for attorney's fees, and $15 costs.

Plaintiff filed her complaint for a divorce on November 13, 1940, charging extreme cruelty. On the same day, upon her affidavit, an order to show cause was issued to the husband directing him to appear on December 4, 1940. The defendant filed his opposing affidavit on that date. At the hearing defendant was required to, and did, pay plaintiff $50, which was used to pay taxes on the home of the parties owned by them in joint tenancy. The further hearing on the order to show cause was continued to December 20, 1940, on which date, after taking evidence, the trial court made the order appealed from.

Appellant urges that the trial court abused its discretion in awarding $75 a month to the wife for her support and the support of the three children. The contention is without merit. The evidence produced at the hearing of December 20, 1940, and the affidavits filed by the parties, show that the wife and the three minor children who, in September, 1940, were 20, 19 and 18 years of age respectively live together and that the husband has left the family home. The wife works and earns, on an average, $70 per month; the 19 year old boy, who wants to save his earnings and go to college, earns about $100 per month; the daughter, who is 18, and who has just graduated from high school, earns $8 to $9 per week, and desires to continue her education; the oldest boy is attending Cal.-Tech. where he has received a scholarship that pays him $150 per year, and where his tuition of $150 per year is borrowed from the school. The appellant, who is a sergeant in the police department, earns a little over $200 per month. The wife, in her affidavit, stated that she needs $153 a month to run the house, and, at the hearing, testified that she needed $80 to $85 in addition to her salary of $70 to properly run the house. Included within this estimate was a monthly payment on the loan on the house of $25.50 per month, and taxes and insurance of $7.50 per month. Prior to the separation it cost about $195 a month to run the house.

It is the theory of appellant that, since respondent testified that she needed but $153 to run the house, and, since her testimony showed that she and the children have a total monthly income of over $200, she has failed to show that any allowance is "necessary" within the meaning of section 137 of the Civil Code. That section provides: "When an action for divorce is pending, the court may, in its discretion, require the husband * * * to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife * * * to support herself and her children * * * or to prosecute or defend the action. * * *" Section 138 of the Civil Code empowers the trial court, during the pendency of an action, to "make such order for the custody, care, education, maintenance and support of such minor children as may seem necessary or proper * * *."

[1-3] The term "necessary" in section 137 must be given its broadest connotation. What is "necessary" rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. Westphal v. Westphal, 122 Cal.App. 379, 10 P.2d 119; see cases collected 1 Cal.Jur.P. 964, § 19. In Turner v. Turner, 80 Cal. 141, 144, 22 P. 72, 73, it is stated that the discretion vested in the trial court is "to be exercised in view of the circumstances of the parties, their several necessities, and the pecuniary ability of the husband." See, also, Tremper v. Tremper, 39 Cal.App. 62, 177 P. 868. Tested by these standards, it is obvious that no abuse of discretion has been shown.

The wife does not have an income of $216.50 per month, as urged by the appellant. That sum is arrived at by adding to the wife's income of $70 per month, the total income of the three children, including the $12.50 per month received by the oldest boy as a scholarship. That $12.50 cannot be considered as income of the respondent for she asked nothing for this boy's tuition expenses. The money earned by the other boy ($100 per month) and the money earned by the girl ($8 to $9 per week), under a fair reading of the record, is not being received by respondent, but such earnings are being saved for the children's education.

[4] Under section 138 of the Civil Code, supra, the trial court had power to make any reasonable order concerning the education of the children "as may seem necessary or proper." The record shows that the trial judge and the wife believed that the further education of the three children was of great importance. The trial judge obviously believed, and properly so, that the earnings of the children should be saved for their education. Thus, the facts are that the wife earns $70 and has been awarded $75, from which she must pay out $33 for the taxes and payments on the house. The husband's income is over $200 a month, while his necessary expenses, as set forth in his affidavit, including $25 per month on past due bills and a car payment of $24.73 are but $99.73.

[5, 6] Appellant urges, however, that under section 169 of the Civil Code the mother is entitled to the earnings of the children, and that therefore such earnings, as a matter of law, must be considered as part of the income of the respondent. Moreover, it is urged, no order awarding the custody of the children to the mother was made. The obvious answer to this last contention is that no such order was necessary. If it be assumed that without a formal order of custody, under section 197 of the Civil Code both parents are equally entitled to the children's earnings, then under section 211 of that code the evidence shows that both parents have relinquished such earnings to the children. Section 211 provides in part that: "Abandonment by the parent is presumptive evidence of such relinquishment." So far as appellant is concerned, the evidence shows a clear abandonment of such earnings under this section. He left the family home in September of 1940, and between that date and December 20, 1940, was so insensible of his obligations as a husband and father that he contributed but $32 to their support, and $50 for taxes—the last, under court order. So far as the respondent is concerned, her testimony clearly supports the implied finding that she has relinquished such earnings to her children so they can secure a proper education. This she had the legal right to do.

[7, 8] As to the allowance of attorney's fees and court costs it is urged by appellant first, that there was no evidence of the wife's lack of funds and inability to pay such charges, and, secondly, that in her affidavit she stated she had made arrangements with her attorney to pay such charges. It is urged that such an arrangement is a bar to such allowance. The record shows that respondent was entirely without funds. Not only did she inferentially so state in her affidavit, but she testified she had earned nothing during the summer; that in November she had but two weeks' pay, and that she had been forced to borrow $130 in order to live. While it is true that in her affidavit she stated she had personally arranged to pay her attorney's fees, there was no evidence of the terms of such agreement, and she further stated that attorney's fees of $150 are reasonably necessary; that she has paid nothing on account and that her husband is able to pay such sum. When those statements are considered with the evidence of her lack of funds it is obvious that the trial court was justified in inferring that the "arrangement," if any, between her and her attorney was that he would accept the court's award, and that she was not financially able to defray such expenses. The granting of suit money to the wife rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. 1 Cal.Jur., p. 992, § 46. No abuse of discretion here appears.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

WARD, J., and E. P. MURPHY, J. pro tem., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 374

GIVENS v. MARKALL.

Civ. 6656.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 22, 1942.

1. Evidence ⇨533

The trial judge or the jury has the exclusive province of determining amount of damages to be awarded for injury to property, and a witness may not be permitted to speculate on amount of damages which is deemed to have been sustained.

2. Damages ⇨103

There is no fixed rule relating to measure of damages for wrongful injury or destruction of property and each case must be determined on its own particular facts.

3. Damages ⇨110

Generally, measure of damages for wrongful injury or destruction of property depends on whether injury is of permanent or temporary character, and an injury is not necessarily "permanent" because it is an injury to realty.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Permanent".

4. Damages ⚿111

The courts recognize as elements of damages for wrongful injury to property which is affixed to and a part of realty, the value after separation from the freehold, if any, of the property taken, injured or destroyed and any damage to the freehold occasioned by the severance.

5. Damages ⚿111

If property which is affixed to realty and is wrongfully injured or destroyed has a value which can be accurately measured without reference to the value of the soil on which it stands or out of which it grows, measure of damages is its value, or the cost of restoring or replacing it, where this can be done at a reasonable cost, or at a cost not disproportionate to the real injury or less than the diminution in value of the whole property.

6. Damages ⚿111

If the thing destroyed, although it is a part of the realty, has a value which can be accurately ascertained without reference to the soil on which it stands or out of which it grows, the recovery may be of the value of the thing destroyed, and not the difference in the value of the land before and after such destruction.

7. Damages ⚿111

Where defendant wrongfully removed from plaintiff's mining property machinery which was affixed to the land and was used in operation of mine, at a time when mine was not in actual operation, and after plaintiff started suit defendant returned the machinery but did not reinstall it in its proper place, the proper measure of damages was loss sustained by plaintiff by the breaking or injuring of the machinery together with reasonable cost of reinstalling it in the mine. Civ.Code, § 3333; St.1939, p. 1108, § 2601.

8. Damages ⚿138

In action for damages sustained as result of defendant's wrongful removal of machinery affixed to mining property and used in operation of mine, and failure to reinstall machinery in mine upon returning it to plaintiff, testimony of witness, who had owned and operated mining enterprises for many years and was familiar with plaintiff's mining claims and equipment, that it would cost $1,144 to replace machinery was not a mere declaration of amount of damages but was "expert testimony" of cost of labor and materials necessary to restore the machinery, and sustained judgment for plaintiff for $1,000. Civ.Code, § 3333; St.1939, p. 1108, § 2601.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Expert Testimony".

Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; Andrew R. Schottky, Judge.

Action by A. W. Givens against M. Markall for wrongfully removing from plaintiff's mining property certain machinery and equipment which was fixed to the property and used in operation of mine. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

C. Ray Robinson, of Merced, and Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis T. Milburn, of Mariposa, and Preston, Braucht & George, of Merced, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

Judgment was rendered against the defendants for damages in the sum of $1,000 for wrongfully removing from plaintiff's mining property, called the Jesus Domingues Mining Tract, in Mariposa County, certain machinery and equipment, which was affixed to the property as provided by section 2601 of the Public Resources Code of California, St.1939, p. 1108, formerly section 661 of the Civil Code, and used in the operation of the mine. The complaint asked for damages in the sum of $3,000 for the wrongful removal of the machinery. Punitive damages in the additional sum of $10,000 were also demanded. After the commencement of the action and possession of the property for four months, the defendants returned the machinery to the plaintiff's property but failed to reinstate it in the mine as it was located before the removal. The answer admitted the taking of the machinery but alleged that it was innocently purchased from a stranger to the action, whom they believed to be the owner, and that they had returned the machinery to plaintiff's mining claim.

Findings were adopted favorable to the plaintiff upon the chief issue. The demand for punitive damages was denied. Judgment was rendered against the defendants in the sum of $1,000 for the wrongful taking of the machinery and failure to restore it to the place in the mine from which it was removed. From that judgment this appeal was perfected.

The appellant contends that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence for the reason that there is no valid proof of detriment to the freehold. In other words, it is asserted the rule of evidence requires proof of the value of the real property before and after the removal or damage to the machinery which was deemed, by statute, to be affixed to the mining claim. It is asserted the court erred in permitting two witnesses to testify, over objections, to the amount of damages which they believed should be awarded on account of the removal of the machinery.

[1] It is true that the trial judge or the jury has the exclusive province of determining the amount of damages to be awarded for injury to property, and that a witness may not be permitted to speculate on the amount of damages which is deemed to have been sustained. Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Pinelli, 84 Cal.App. 42, 50, 257 P. 573.

We are of the opinion the evidence adequately sustained the findings and judgment in this case regardless of whether the rule, under the circumstances which existed in this case, required proof of damages to the real property by showing its value before and after the removal of the mining machinery, or whether the injury to the machinery and the detriment on account of its removal from the mining claim and failure to restore it to its proper place may be shown separately from the value of the real property, with and without the machinery.

Mr. A. W. Givens, the owner of the mining claim and property which are involved in this action, testified that he had bought and sold mining machinery for many years, and that he knew the value of the property. Regarding the value of the property, he was asked this question:

"Q. What would you say the value of the Domingues claim was before the machinery was taken, the machinery and equipment and buildings were still on the Domingues claim early in December, 1939?"

To which he replied:

"A. Why, I believe that as near as I can figure up, it would be worth around $3,000 to the property to have the machinery on there."

On motion that answer was stricken from the record on the ground that it was not responsive. He was then asked:

"What, in your opinion, was the value of the property after the removal of the machinery and equipment in December of 1939, what difference, if any, would you consider the removal had made in the market value of the Domingues claim?"

To which he replied:

"A. Well, I believe it will make a difference of about $3,000, as near as I can estimate."

Mr. James W. Warford was then called to establish the value of the property. He testified that, for many years, he had owned and operated mining enterprises; that he had bought and sold mining machinery and equipment, and that he was familiar with plaintiff's mining claims and equipment since 1929 or 1930, and knew their values. He said he had visited the mines in August, 1940, and knew the condition of the machinery and equipment. He was then asked the following question:

"Q. Now what, in your opinion, resulting from your examination of this property, would be the difference in the market value of the Jesus Domingues tract, immediately before the machinery was removed and immediately after it was removed?"

To this question he replied:

"A. The difference would be the value of that equipment plus its installation value amounting—* * * That amount is $2,990.25."

He was then asked:

"Q. How much would it cost to put that machinery back in the same condition it was when you saw it in 1939?"

To which he answered:

"A. I estimate the cost to be $1,144 and a few cents."

Both witnesses were elaborately cross-examined by the appellant. He had every opportunity to ascertain the knowledge of the witnesses regarding the value of the mining claim with and without the machinery attached thereto, both before and after the wrongful removal of the equipment. In a proper suit for permanent damages to a freehold, the reason for the rule which ordinarily requires the measure of damages to be shown by proof of the value of the property before and after the commission of the acts complained of, is that the jury may determine, by subtracting one valuation from the other, what the amount of actual damages may be. In the present case that result is exactly what the testimony of Mr. Givens, the owner, amounts to. In effect he said that the difference in the market value of the mining claim before and after the removal of the machinery, in his opinion, was about $3,000. To the same effect, Mr. Warford testified that the difference between the value of the mining claim before and after the removal of the machinery was the market value of the machinery and equipment, plus the cost of replacing or installing it in its proper position in the mine, which difference in value he fixed at $2,990.25. He further testified that it would cost $1,144 to restore that machinery to the same condition it was before it was removed by the defendants from the mining property. The damages which were awarded amounted to only $1,000. That is less than the stated cost of restoring the machinery to its former condition and place. The foregoing evidence adequately supports the findings and judgment in that regard.

It should be recalled that the issues of this case were changed entirely by the allegations of the answer and by the actual return of the machinery to the mining property, although it was not installed in its proper place. While the complaint did sue for damages to the freehold, the answer and the subsequent actual return of the machinery left the issue only as to what damages were sustained by the plaintiff on account of the removal of the machinery and the damage thereto, plus the detriment sustained for failure to reinstall the machinery in the mine. The suit was tried on the theory that the defendants were entitled to credit for having returned the machinery to plaintiff's claim, but that he was still entitled to damages for injury and detriment to the machinery and equipment, and for failure to reinstate it in the position in the mine from which it had been wrongfully removed. The court found that the plaintiff sustained damages on account of the wrongful acts of the defendants, in the sum of $1,000. Warford's testimony that it would cost $1,144 to "put that machinery back in the same condition" that it was before its removal is sufficient evidence to support the award of the court.

[2] There is no fixed rule with respect to the measure of damages for the wrongful injury or destruction of property. Each case must be determined on its particular facts. It is said in 15 American Jurisprudence, page 514, section 106, in that regard:

"There is no fixed rule for determining the measure of damages for injuries to, or destruction of, property in every case. The amount to be awarded depends upon the character of the property and the nature and extent of the injury, and the mode and amount of proof must be adapted to the facts of each case. In ascertaining the damages to be allowed, the jury may consider all the circumstances connected with the injury."

[3-5] In the last-cited authority, at page 515, section 107, it is further said:

"One whose real property is injured by another's wrongful and negligent act is entitled to such damages as will compensate him for the injury or loss sustained. No hard and fast rule can be laid down, however, for the measurement of those damages; whatever rule is best suited to determine the amount of the loss in the particular case should be adopted. Usually the measure of damages depends upon whether the injury is permanent or temporary in character, an injury not being necessarily permanent because it is to real estate." In discussing the rule for establishing the measure of damages for wrongful injury to property which is affixed to and a part of real estate, it is said at page 521 of the authority last cited that courts recognize two elements of damages under such circumstances: (1) "The value after separation from the freehold, if any, of the thing taken, injured or destroyed, and (2) the damage to the realty, if any, occasioned by the severance." It is further said, in that same paragraph, regarding the measure of damages:

"If the thing destroyed or injured has a value which can be accurately measured without reference to the value of the soil on which it stands or out of which it grows, the measure of damages is its value * * * or the cost of restoring or replacing it, where this can be done at a reasonable cost, or at a cost not disproportionate to the real injury, or less than the diminution in value of the whole property."

Again, it is said at page 526 of the authority last cited, regarding the measure of damages for injury to fixtures:

"The weight of authority seems to favor the rule that the measure of damages for the wrongful removal or destruction of fixtures is the value of the fixtures in their condition at the time of their removal or destruction—that is, their replacement value, or their value in place, and not their secondhand value, or their value when taken down for removal, or the difference in the value of the real property before and after their removal. But there is authority to the effect that the proper measure of damages is the cost of restoring the property to its original condition or its diminished value. In fixing the damages, the extent of the depreciation of the fixtures, if any, as well as the original cost and cost of replacement, should be taken into consideration, but if the property removed is as good as new, depreciation will not be deemed important nor will computation to a nicety be made for the difference in value between the old and the new."

[6] To the same effect is the text which is found in Volume IV, Sutherland on Damages, 3rd edition, page 2967, section 1015, where it is said:

"If the thing destroyed, although it is part of the realty, has a value which can be accurately ascertained without reference to the soil on which it stands or out of which it grows, the recovery may be of the value of the thing thus destroyed, and not the difference in the value of the land before and after such destruction."

In accordance with the principle of ascertaining the measure of damages by receiving proof of the value of the fixtures at the time of their wrongful removal, independently of the value of the real property to which they were previously affixed, at least two California cases have held that it constitutes a proper measure of damages to prove the market value of the fixtures at the time of their removal, separate and apart from the value of the real property. Rhoda v. Alameda County, 58 Cal. 357; Greenebaum v. Taylor, 102 Cal. 624, 36 P. 957.

Section 3333 of the Civil Code provides that: "For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this code, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not."

[7, 8] In the present case, since the mine was not in actual operation at the time of the wrongful removal of the machinery and equipment, and since the machinery was returned to the property of the plaintiff after the suit was commenced, but not reinstalled in its proper place, we are satisfied the correct measure of damages was the loss sustained by the plaintiff by breaking or injuring the machinery and equipment, together with the reasonable cost of reinstating it in the mine in the same condition and place it occupied at the time of its wrongful removal. Mr. Warford's testimony that it would cost $1,144 to replace it in the mine where it belonged, in the same condition that it was before the removal of the machinery and equipment, supports the judgment with respect to the amount of damages. This statement is not a mere declaration of the amount of damages. It is expert evidence of the cost of labor and materials necessary to restore and install the machinery in the mine in the same condition and place it occupied before its removal.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEEL, J., pro tem., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 307

WOODS v. WALKER et al.

Civ. 12084.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

April 17, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 16, 1942.

1. Automobiles 🔑244(14, 36)

Evidence that defendant's truck was stopped without lights at least partially on paved portion of highway, that it could have been driven entirely off pavement, that plaintiff motorist saw defendant truck driver waving flashlight but did not see unlighted truck, and that plaintiff thought it was a "hold-up" and struck truck in attempt to get around defendant truck driver, justified jury's finding that driver and owner of truck were chargeable with negligence proximately causing the collision. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 584, St.1935, pp. 190, 191.

2. Automobiles 🔑245(17)

In motorist's action for injuries sustained when he struck unlighted truck parked on paved portion of highway, whether it would have been practicable to park truck off paved portion of highway was for jury. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 584, St.1935, pp. 190, 191.

3. Automobiles 🔑245(17)

Where lights of truck went out and truck was parked at least partially on paved portion of highway for changing of fuse, whether the truck was "disabled" to such an extent as to make it impossible to avoid stopping on paved portion of highway was for jury in motorist's action for injuries sustained when he struck the truck. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 584, St.1935, pp. 190, 191.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Disabled".

4. Automobiles 🔑242(1)

Where lights of truck went out and truck was parked at least partially on paved portion of highway while new fuse was being put in truck, burden of proof was on defendant's truck driver and owner to prove defense that it was impracticable or impossible to avoid stopping on paved portion of highway, in motorist's action for injuries sustained in collision with truck. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 584, St.1935, pp. 190, 191.

5. Automobiles 🔑245(83)

Under evidence that defendant's truck was stopped without lights at least partially on paved portion of highway, that it could have been driven entirely off pavement, that plaintiff motorist saw defendant truck driver waving flashlight but did not see unlighted truck, and that plaintiff thought it was a "hold-up" and struck truck in attempt to get around defendant truck driver, whether plaintiff motorist was contributorily negligent was for the jury. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 584, St.1935, pp. 190, 191.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Personal injury action by Walter Woods against Eugene Walker and another. From an order denying their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

T. L. Chamberlain and Gerald Beatty Wallace, both of Auburn, for appellants.

Chas. J. Janigian and Jas. F. Brennan, both of San Francisco, and Chas. A. Tuttle, of Auburn, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant Eugene Walker and defendant Kenneth Lee, his employee, from an order of the trial court denying their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Plaintiff sought damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against said defendants in the sum of $5,200. Said defendants had previously made a motion for a directed verdict which was denied and, following the verdict, they made a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict which was likewise denied. In support of said motions, said defendants contended that the evidence was insufficient to show negligence on the part of the defendants and that the evidence affirmatively showed that plaintiff was chargeable with contributory negligence as a matter of law. The same contentions are presented on this appeal.

The accident occurred on the transcontinental highway known as U. S. Highway No. 40. Plaintiff was driving a Dodge truck in a general westerly direction along said highway at about 11 p. m. on the night of July 11, 1939, proceeding from Truckee toward Auburn. The collision took place at a point about one-half mile west of the Pioneer Garage, at which point plaintiff's truck collided with the truck of defendants which was admittedly parked without lights at least partially on the paved portion of the highway.

The photographs in evidence clearly show the nature of the highway and the adjacent terrain near the point of collision. Said photographs show a straight portion of a typical mountain highway running through a long but shallow cut with banks gradually sloping upward from the sides to a height of about 15 feet. The main traveled portion of the highway is well paved with a white line running down the center thereof. The testimony shows that each side of the paved portion of the highway is 11 feet 8 inches in width. On either side of the paved portion is a shoulder of small rock and dirt which slopes very gradually downward to a small ditch or drain, approximately 6 inches in depth, at the foot of the sloping bank. The distance from the edge of the paved portion of the highway to the bank is 6 feet 4 inches.

The testimony offered by defendants shows that defendant Lee had been operating a Ford truck, loaded with beehives, in a general westerly direction on said highway when the lights of said truck went out. Said defendant stopped said truck but there is some conflict in the evidence as to the exact position at which said truck was brought to a stop. Said defendant conceded that there was "about a foot and a half" of the truck on the paved portion of the highway, stating that he did not drive further off the paved portion as "there is a little ditch there." There is other evidence, however, tending to show that defendants' truck was entirely or practically entirely on the paved portion of the highway and that it would have been practicable to have driven said truck to a position where it would have been entirely off the paved portion of the highway.

After stopping the truck, a man working with defendant Lee started to take out a fuse and to put in a new one. Defendant Lee testified that he looked into the rear view mirror and saw the lights of an automobile coming down the hill from behind. He stated that he had no time to put out flares, with which the truck was equipped, but he jumped out of the truck and flashed his flashlight in an attempt to wave the driver of the approaching car around the truck. Plaintiff, a man 68 years of age, saw that someone was waving a flashlight in the middle of the road when his truck was about 85 to 100 feet away. He also saw that the person waving the flashlight was moving across the road toward the bank. Plaintiff did not see the unlighted truck and he "thought it was a hold-up." He "got all excited" and swerved his "car out to get around him to get away from him" and struck a portion of the rear of the truck while traveling at about 30 miles per hour. Plaintiff's car went out of control and ran over to the opposite bank of the road and stopped.

[1-4] We are of the opinion that there was ample evidence to justify the jury in concluding that defendants were chargeable with negligence proximately causing the collision. Defendants first claim that it was not "practicable" for them to have stopped their truck off the paved portion of the highway (Vehicle Code, § 582, St. 1935, p. 190), but under the evidence that question was one of fact for the determination of the jury. Defendants further claim that section 584 of the Vehicle Code relieved them of the restrictions provided in section 582 of the Vehicle Code. Said section 584 relates only to a vehicle which is "disabled while on the paved or improved or main traveled portion of a highway in such manner and to such extent that it is impossible to avoid stopping and temporarily leaving such disabled vehicle upon such part or portion of said highway." The most that can be said is that the question of whether said vehicle was disabled to such extent as to make it impossible to avoid stopping on the paved portion of the highway was, under the evidence presented, also a question of fact for the determination of the jury. It has been held that under these circumstances the burden of proof was on defendants to prove the impracticability or the impossibility. Casey v. Gritsch, 1 Cal.App.2d 206, 36 P.2d 696. And further, it may be added that aside from any consideration of the specific provisions of the Vehicle Code, it was for the jury to determine whether defendant Lee had done all that a reasonably prudent man would have done under the same or similar circumstances to protect other vehicles approaching along said heavily traveled highway.

[5] We are further of the opinion that the question of whether plaintiff was chargeable with contributory negligence was likewise a question of fact for the jury. It may not be said that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law merely because he failed to see the unlighted truck on the highway in time to avoid the collision. Hall v. Associated Oil Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 491, 65 P.2d 954; Scoville v. Keglor, 27 Cal.App.2d 17, 80 P.2d 162; Gammon v. Wales, 115 Cal.App. 133, 300 P. 988; Sawdey v. Producers' Milk Co., 107 Cal.App. 467, 290 P. 684; Grimes v. Richfield Oil Co., 106 Cal.App. 416, 289 P. 245. See, also, Casey v. Gritsch, supra.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 393

LORENZ v. SANTA MONICA CITY HIGH SCHOOL DIST. et al.

Civ. 13230.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 24, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 22, 1942.

1. Negligence 🔑44

Wax or soap if applied to a floor must be so applied as to afford a reasonably safe condition for invitees, and if wax or soap compounds cannot be used on a particular type of floor material without violating duty to exercise ordinary care for safety of invitees by reason of dangerous conditions created, they should not be used at all.

2. Negligence 🔑44, 136(22)

That a floor is slippery does not necessarily mean that it is dangerous to walk upon, as respects liability to an invitee for injuries, but it is the degree of slipperiness which determines whether the condition is reasonably safe and that is a fact question.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)

Trial judge's fact findings based on conflicting evidence are binding on reviewing court.

4. Schools and school districts 🔑122

In action against school districts for injuries sustained when plaintiff slipped and fell on floor of foyer leading to school auditorium where she went to attend an educational lecture, negligence of districts with respect to waxing floor and slipperiness of floor was for the jury under the evidence. School Code, § 2.801.

5. Appeal and error 🔑197(3)

In personal injury action against school districts, fact that copy of plaintiff's claim was attached to complaint and admitted in districts' answer, districts' failure to object to introduction of evidence on ground of variance, and fact that districts introduced controverting evidence, showed that districts were not misled, and hence they could not contend on appeal that there was a fatal variance between claim, allegations, and evidence. School Code, § 2.801.

6. Pleading 🔑398

A variance between the allegations of a complaint and the evidence introduced must have misled or served to mislead the adverse party to be a "fatal variance".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Fatal Variance".

7. Schools and school districts 🔑89

Where there was no dispute that slippery condition of school floor on which plaintiff slipped and fell when going to attend educational lecture in school auditorium had been created by defendant school districts or their employees acting within scope of employment, knowledge of condition was imputed to districts as a matter of law, and trial court did not err in refusing to give instruction requiring districts to have knowledge of condition. School Code, § 2.801.

8. Negligence 🔑48

Where dangerous or defective condition of property which causes injury to an invitee has been created by negligence of owner or his employee acting within scope of employment, knowledge of condition is imputed to owner, and he cannot assert that he had no notice or knowledge thereof.

9. Negligence ⚿48

Where dangerous condition of premises is brought about by natural wear and tear, third persons, acts of God, or other causes not due to negligence of owner or his employees, owner must have actual or constructive knowledge of condition and have been able by exercise of ordinary care to discover condition in order to be liable for resulting injuries to invitees on ground of failure to exercise ordinary care in remedying defect.

10. Trial ⚿260(8)

Where trial court gave several special instructions and a general instruction defining contributory negligence and explaining rule applicable thereto, and instructions given charged jury fully and impartially on all questions of law appertaining to issues presented, trial court did not err in refusing to give a particular instruction on contributory negligence.

11. Schools and school districts ⚿121

In action against school districts for injuries sustained when plaintiff slipped and fell on floor of foyer leading to school auditorium where she went to attend an educational lecture, evidence was sufficient to support jury's implied finding that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent. School Code, § 2.801.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Action by Margaret Lorenz against Santa Monica City High School District and others for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Tripp, Penney & Callaway, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Keane & Collins and Betts & Garrison, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Respondent brought the instant action for damages on account of personal injuries sustained by her when she slipped and fell on the floor of a foyer leading to a school auditorium where she went to attend the second of a series of educational lectures being conducted by appellant school districts under the sponsorship of the Santa Monica Council of Parent-Teachers.

This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment entered pursuant to the verdict of the jury in favor of respondent, upon the following grounds:

1. The evidence fails to establish any negligence on the part of appellants;
2. There is a fatal variance between the claim filed with the appellants, the allegations of the complaint and the evidence adduced at the trial;
3. The court erred in refusing to give certain instructions requested by appellants.
4. The court erred in denying appellants' motion for nonsuit.

On the evening of September 26, 1939, the respondent, a woman sixty-six years of age, entered the foyer of the auditorium of the Lincoln Junior High School at Santa Monica on her way to attend the lecture above referred to, it being her first visit to the school auditorium. In order to gain access to the auditorium by the use of the main entrance to the building, it was necessary to pass through the double doors of said main entrance, proceed across the concrete floor of the foyer and then into the auditorium through an inner doorway. Respondent, accompanied by two other women, stepped through the main entrance into the foyer with her left foot, and as she brought her right foot forward, she slipped and fell to the floor, sustaining a broken hip, technically described as a "transverse fracture of the cervical neck of the right femur * * * comminuted fracture, impacted, jammed and fixed." Respondent testified that while lying on the floor after she fell she noticed for the first time that the floor was very "slippery"; had a very "shiny" appearance.

Mrs. Moffit, president of the Santa Monica Council of Parent-Teachers, testified she had observed the floor in the foyer a week previous to the night in question and found it to be very dull and dusty, whereas on the night of the accident it was very shiny and slick and that "I slipped slightly, but I caught myself and I slipped more than once."

Mrs. Drake, chairman of the mental and social hygiene section of the Parent-Teachers' Association, testified with respect to the condition of the floor on the night of September 26, 1939, that "it was very much cleaned up and waxed and very slick"; that other people beside respondent slipped on the floor that evening. This witness also testified that this floor was very dirty and dusty the week before and that she complained to a Mr. Graybill regarding such condition, and that it appeared to her that the floor had been waxed between the night of the first lecture and the night of the accident in question.

Mrs. Bangs, who entered the foyer just ahead of respondent, testified that she slipped when she got inside the entrance; that she did not fall, but was very badly overbalanced; that she looked at the floor and found "a film or a slippery surface—very slippery"; that she assumed the floor had been waxed, as it was very shiny and slippery.

Mrs. Burness, co-chairman with Mrs. Drake of the lecture series, testified that she was in and out of the foyer during the evening; that she did not walk across the foyer, having entered through the east door instead of the main entrance; that she was stationed just inside the door of the auditorium distributing pamphlets; that she observed the floor in the foyer and it looked "slippery" and she saw skid marks on it, a heel mark about a foot or more long; that the floor looked as though it had been polished because of its high gloss; that she had waxed floors in her home and could tell when she looked at the floor in the foyer that it had been waxed.

Mrs. McIlvaine testified she observed the floor in the foyer on the evening in question and that it was "slick and shiny"; that the floor was dusty and dirty the week before; that it did not appear to be waxed at that time because it was not slippery to her feet.

The school employees testified that a wax preparation was last applied to the floor of the foyer on September 6, 1939; the floor was first scrubbed with hot water and liquid soap, rinsed with fresh water and allowed to dry; that one part wax was mixed with two parts of water; that a mop was dipped in the mixture, squeezed dry and applied to the floor. It was stipulated that the preparation used was known as Turco X'ol, and that the floor of the foyer was a painted concrete floor.

Jacob C. Eymann, who was called as an expert, in answer to a question put to him by counsel for appellants, to wit: "I just want you to tell me what the difference in the surface would be after the wax was applied when you put it on a linoleum floor and on a concrete floor?" testified as follows: "On a linoleum floor, being it is porous, we apply the wax and burnish it into the linoleum in order not to lay on the surface. On the painted floor the surface is all sealed with paint and therefore the wax lays on the surface." This witness was asked by counsel for respondent: "What is the difference, Mr. Eymann, in the waxing of a porous floor and the waxing of a painted concrete floor? A. On a porous floor your wax naturally goes into the pores of the floor; whereas, on the painted floor it lies on top.

"Q. What is the effect of that? What happens to the wax on the concrete floor? A. It makes it slippery on a painted floor.

"Q. How do you explain that? What actually happens to the wax itself? A. The wax lays on top of a painted floor, on the surface of it, and just creates a film there, or lies there in a film and just makes it slippery." Said witness was then asked: "In your opinion is it an improper practice to wax a painted concrete floor?" to which he replied: "Definitely so." However, such answer was stricken and the court sustained appellants' objection thereto on the ground that it was not "a subject for expert testimony at best."

Philip Perrault, also called as an expert, testified: "And the difference with concrete painted, the concrete wax floor compared with other floors is the concrete being painted and sealed, the wax stays on the surface. The floor will look just as nice as a waxed and polished linoleum floor, but the difference is that the wax remains on the surface and causes the floor to be slippery and that is why I do not recommend it. * * *

"Q. What we want to know is what is the practical effect of applying wax on the one hand to concrete floors and on the other hand to linoleum and hardwood. Just tell us what happens to the wax and why? A. Well, the hardwood and concrete, the wax does not penetrate as it does on linoleum, especially if both the concrete and the wood has a varnish or painted finish * * *

"Q. (On cross-examination.) So actually there is just as much adherence to the surface of the floor in painted concrete as there is in linoleum or hardwood, is there not? A. No, there is not. Linoleum is softer where concrete is hard and brittle. * * *

"Q. I understood you on your direct testimony to say that the reason for the fact that the painted concrete surface was less abrasive than the hardwood or the linoleum, was because of the fact that the wax went down into the pores and hence adhered more to such a surface, is that right? A. Yes, that is true." On redirect examination, this witness was asked: "What is the nature of the surface, Mr. Perrault, of concrete, as compared with linoleum?" His reply follows: "Well, the difference is that the wax remains on the surface, whereas on linoleum there would be such a small amount of film on the surface that you would not get the wear that you would on the harder surface * * *. On the concrete or other sealed or hard surfaced floors, you would not get as much traction as you would on linoleum."

It is shown by the testimony of the superintendent of maintenance for the school that the said foyer floor had been waxed for a period of six or seven years prior to the accident; that he had never heard of anyone slipping on said floor during this time. This witness also testified that from the 11th of September to the date of the accident, he estimated that at least 15,000 children passed up and down the foyer on their way to the auditorium. However, this witness also testified that the school children passing through the foyer did not use the main entrance (just inside of which the accident here occurred), but used the east door, and that the main entrance was kept locked during the week. In answer to the question "When children come in the side entrance and walk into the auditorium through these doors (referring to the side entrance) they have no occasion to walk over here in front of this door (the main entrance) do they?" this witness replied: "Not directly through it, but in passing they crowd close to the door when they walk through there, but they do not walk through the door."

In connection with their contention that the evidence (of which the above recital is a brief résumé) fails to establish any negligence on their part, appellants present for determination the question, "Is it negligence merely to wax a floor" using a properly prepared and applied wax mixture? and cite many cases from foreign jurisdictions, among which appear the cases of Bonawitt v. Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent's Hospital, 43 Ohio App. 347, 182 N.E. 661, and Smith v. Union & New Haven Trust Co., 121 Conn. 369, 185 A. 81. Respondent counters with the statement: "The principal issue in the instant case was whether or not it was proper to apply wax of any kind to the particular type of floor in question."

Appellants' contention is apparently disposed of by the following language appearing in the case of Nicola v. Pacific G. & E. Co., 50 Cal.App.2d 612, 123 P.2d 529, 530, recently decided by Second District, Division Three of this court:

"Appellants' argument goes further to assail the finding that the floor was maintained by defendants in a negligent manner, and they rely upon a rule, which has been followed by some courts in other jurisdictions, that the duty of an owner to exercise ordinary care is not violated by merely oiling or waxing and polishing a floor in the usual way although the floor is rendered slippery thereby. Bonawitt v. Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent's Hospital, 1932, 43 Ohio App. 347, 182 N.E. 661; Smith v. Union & New Haven Trust Co., 1936, 121 Conn. 369, 185 A. 81. This is contrary to the settled law as announced by our own courts.

[1-3] "In Rothschild v. Fourth and Market St. R. Co., 1934, 139 Cal.App. 625, 628, 34 P.2d 734, it was held that evidence that a floor of a hallway maintained by the owner of a building for use by invitees of tenants of the building had been rendered slippery by the application of wax was sufficient to support a finding of negligence. This decision was in accord with those in Williamson v. Hardy, 1920, 47 Cal.App. 377, 190 P. 646; Lamb v. Purity Stores, Inc., 1932, 119 Cal.App. 690, 7 P.2d 197; Brinkworth v. Sam Seelig Co., 1921, 51 Cal. App. 668, 197 P. 427; and Brown v. Holzwasser, Inc., 1930, 108 Cal.App. 483, 291 P. 661. It has been followed in principle in Winsby v. Kertell, 1935, 10 Cal.App.2d 61, 50 P.2d 1075; De Verdi v. Weiss, 1936, 16 Cal.App.2d 439, 60 P.2d 879; Tuttle v. Crawford, 1936, 8 Cal.2d 126, 63 P.2d 1128, and Stoddard v. Roberts Public Markets, Inc., 1938, 27 Cal.App.2d 166, 80 P.2d 519. The right of a proprietor of a place of business to wax a floor which the customers are expected to use is not one which upon any reasonable theory can be held to be superior to his duty to use ordinary prudence and caution to avoid injury to those who come to his premises by invitation. If wax or, as in the present case, both wax and soft soap, are applied to the floor, it must be in such manner as to afford reasonably safe conditions for the proprietor's invitees, and if such compounds cannot be used on a particular type of floor material without violation of the duty to exercise ordinary care for the safety of invitees, by reason of the dangerous conditions they create, they should not be used at all. Of course slipperiness is an elastic term. From the fact that a floor is slippery it does not necessarily result that it is dangerous to walk upon. It is the degree of slipperiness that determines whether the condition is reasonably safe. This is a question of fact. The trial judge could well have believed from the evidence that the surface of the floor was sufficiently hard and smooth to become unsafe with the application of wax or soft soap and water as they were used by appellants. In fact, if full credence was given to the testimony of plaintiff and her witnesses, and if it was believed that they had slipped and in some instances had fallen while walking across the floor in a careful manner, the trial judge could scarcely have believed that the floor was maintained in a wholly safe condition. And if the condition was as described by these witnesses it was for the trial judge to determine, as a fact, whether the condition was one which afforded reasonable safety to defendants' patrons or, in other words, whether defendants had exercised ordinary care with respect to the condition of the floor. Perhaps it would have been an entirely justifiable conclusion that the floor, although slippery, was reasonably safe for public use or that defendants used ordinary care with respect to its condition, but those questions of fact have been decided to the contrary upon substantial evidence, and we could not, even if we were so inclined, substitute our judgment for that of the trial judge. (See cases cited above.)" See, also, Hatfield v. Levy Bros., 18 Cal.2d 798, 117 P.2d 841.

[4] Likewise in the instant case, the jury decided these questions of fact against appellants' contentions upon substantial evidence.

As to appellants' claim that there was a fatal variance between the claim, the allegations of the complaint and the evidence, respondent's action is based upon section 2.801 of the School Code fixing liability of school boards for injuries arising out of the negligence of their officers or employees, providing that claim for damages shall have been presented within ninety days after the accident occurred specifying the "name and address of the claimant, the date and place of the accident and the extent of the injuries or damages received."

The claim (a copy of which is attached to the complaint, made a part thereof and "marked 'Exhibit A' with the same force and effect as if fully set forth herein") was filed with the proper officer on account of personal injuries sustained by respondent through the claimed negligence of appellants "in negligently and carelessly failing to properly inspect, and negligently and carelessly owning, maintaining and permitting to exist a dangerous and defective condition in said auditorium, in that the floor at the main entrance thereof was so highly waxed and polished as to cause the claimant, immediately upon entering said auditorium to slip and fall," etc.

The complaint alleged that appellants "owned, operated and maintained the auditorium of the said Lincoln Junior High School in such a careless and negligent manner that they carelessly and negligently caused or carelessly and negligently permitted the concrete floor in the main entrance of said auditorium to be so highly waxed and polished that it was, at said time and place, extremely slippery; that by reason of the extremely slippery condition of said floor, plaintiff, immediately upon entering the said auditorium and stepping upon said floor, slipped and fell thereon receiving serious personal injuries."

The evidence produced tended not only to prove that the floor was so highly waxed and polished as to render it slippery, but that said floor was maintained in so dangerous and defective a condition that appellants' failure to properly inspect it could very readily be inferred therefrom.

[5, 6] The fact that a copy of the claim was attached to the complaint and admitted in appellants' answer, as well as appellants' failure to object to the introduction of evidence at the trial upon the stated ground of variance, point to the conclusion that appellants were not misled, and "a variance to be fatal must have misled or served to mislead the adverse party." Short v. Orland Oil Syndicate, 29 Cal.App.2d 326, 329, 84 P.2d 324, 325, citing Holden v. Mensinger, 175 Cal. 300, 165 P. 950. Further, the fact that appellants introduced evidence controverting the claims of respondent, in part at least, and succeeded in obtaining a judgment substantially less than claimed is sufficient to show that appellants were not taken unawares.

Appellants complain of error committed by the trial court's refusal to give five instructions requested by them. The first three of these are disposed of by the discussion in this opinion of appellants' question: "Is it negligence merely to wax a floor" using properly prepared and applied wax mixture?

The fourth instruction which the court refused to give reads as follows: "The owner of premises cannot be guilty of negligence where he does not know of any unreasonably dangerous condition thereon, and if he is not charged with such knowledge as an ordinary reasonable person. Unless you find by a preponderance of the evidence, therefore, not only that there was here such a dangerous condition as to create an unreasonable danger of bodily injury, but also that the defendant actually knew or as an ordinary reasonable person should have known that there was an unreasonable danger to persons using due care for their own safety, then you must find in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff."

[7-9] There was no dispute that the slippery condition of the floor had been created by appellants or their employees, acting within the scope of their employment. This being so, knowledge of the condition was imputed to the appellants as a matter of law. This rule of law is set out in the recent case of Hatfield v. Levy Bros., supra, 18 Cal.2d at page 806, 117 P.2d at page 845 in the following words: "Where the dangerous or defective condition of the property which causes the injury has been created by reason of the negligence of the owner of the property or his employee acting within the scope of the employment, the owner of the property cannot be permitted to assert that he had no notice or knowledge of the defective or dangerous condition in an action by an invitee for injuries suffered by reason of the dangerous condition. Under such circumstances knowledge thereof is imputed to him. Saunders v. A. M. Williams & Co., 155 Or. 1, 62 P.2d 260. Where the dangerous condition is brought about by natural wear and tear, or third persons, or acts of God or by other causes which are not due to the negligence of the owner, or his employees, then to impose liability the owner must have either actual or constructive knowledge of the dangerous condition or have been able by the exercise of ordinary care to discover the condition, which if known to him, he should realize as involving an unreasonable risk to invitees on his premises. His negligence in such cases is founded upon his failure to exercise ordinary care in remedying the defect after he has discovered it or as a man of ordinary prudence should have discovered it."

[10] The fifth instruction refused by the court involved the issue of contributory negligence. In addition to several special instructions, the court gave a general instruction defining the meaning of "contributory negligence" and explaining the rule applicable thereto. An examination of the instructions given by the court reveals that the jury was fully and impartially instructed on all questions of law appertaining to the issues presented by the evidence and the pleadings in the instant cause, and that no error was committed by the trial court in refusing to give the requested instructions hereinbefore referred to.

[11] The court did not err in denying appellants' motion for a nonsuit. There is sufficient substantial evidence in the record to support the jury's finding of negligence on the part of appellants, as well as its implied finding that there was no contributory negligence on the part of respondent.

For the reasons stated, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DORAN, and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 403

CALLISON v. DONDERO.

Civ. 6751.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 24, 1942.

1. Automobiles 🔑244(14, 36)

In action for damage to plaintiff's truck which ran into rear of defendant's truck parked on paved portion of highway on dark and rainy night without the placing of flame-pots, near sharp turn which obscured the view from approaching vehicles, and near place where highway was blocked by a slide, evidence sustained judgment for plaintiff on ground that defendant was guilty of negligence which "proximately caused" the accident. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 583, St.1935, p. 190.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proximate Cause".

2. Automobiles 🔑246(13)

In action for damage to plaintiff's truck which ran into rear of defendant's truck parked on paved portion of highway where highway was blocked by a slide, leaving only five feet between defendant's truck and an automobile subsequently parked beside defendant's truck, jury was properly instructed pursuant to statute that driver of a vehicle which is not disabled shall not park it on paved portion of highway, and leave it unattended, when it is practicable to drive it off paved portion, and that driver of disabled vehicle shall not leave it standing unattended on highway unless at least 15 feet of paved portion is left unobstructed for free passage of other vehicles. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 583, St.1935, p. 190.

3. Automobiles 🔑242(3)

Where plaintiff showed that defendant parked his truck on paved portion of highway, and left it unattended for a period of time, contrary to statutes, burden was on defendant, in action for damage to plaintiff's truck when it struck defendant's truck, to show that it was not practicable to drive defendant's truck off highway onto shoulder, and that defendant was not otherwise guilty of negligence in violating statutes. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 583, St.1935, p. 190.

4. Automobiles 🔑173(5)

The fact that defendant was supplied with flame-pots and knew that plaintiff's truck was likely to arrive at any moment and collide with defendant's parked truck, and that defendant failed to use the flame-pots or otherwise warn driver of plaintiff's truck, might properly be considered in determining whether defendant was guilty of a failure to exercise ordinary care, though defendant may not have violated statute by failing to place flame-pots or other warning signals on highway after he parked truck on highway, for the technical reason that his truck was not actually disabled. Vehicle Code, § 590, St.1937, p. 620.

5. Negligence 🔑4

One may become liable for damages for failure to exercise ordinary care without actually violating the explicit provisions of a statute.

6. Negligence 🔑134(9)

The violation of a statute merely furnishes "prima facie proof" of negligence per se, which requires some evidence of rebuttal.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Proof".

7. Automobiles 🔑245(83)

In action for damage to plaintiff's truck when it ran into rear of defendant's truck parked at night on paved portion of highway near sharp turn in highway which obscured view, whether plaintiff's driver was guilty of contributory negligence was for jury.

8. Appeal and error 🔑999(3)

Where the District Court of Appeals could not say as a matter of law that truck driver was guilty of contributory negligence, it was bound by jury's implied finding in that regard.

9. Automobiles 🔑200, 201(8)

If defendant's conduct in parking truck on highway was a proximate cause of plaintiff's truck running into rear of defendant's truck, defendant could be held liable, either jointly with or separately from motorist whose parked automobile was blocking the other side of the highway, though the motorist's negligence may also have contributed to accident.

10. Automobiles 🔑244(14, 36)

In action for damage to plaintiff's truck which ran into rear of defendant's truck parked on highway beside automobile which blocked other side of highway, evidence was sufficient to show concurrent negligence of both defendant and motorist, proximately contributing to accident.

11. Appeal and error ⟹1064(1)

In action for damage to plaintiff's truck which struck defendant's truck parked on paved portion of highway near place where highway was blocked by slide, without display of flares or lanterns, it was not reversible error for court to instruct jury in language of statute that a disabled truck may not park on paved portion of highway without displaying flares or red lanterns, though defendant's truck was not disabled within meaning of the statute. Vehicle Code, § 590, St.1937, p. 620.

12. Automobiles ⟹173(7)

The word "disabled" as used in statute providing that a disabled truck, weighing 4,000 pounds or more may not park on paved portion of highway, outside of limits of a city or town, without displaying flares or red lanterns, means that a truck is mechanically defective and in a condition which prevents it from being operated or makes it difficult to operate on its own power. Vehicle Code, § 590, St. 1937, p. 620.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Disabled".

13. Automobiles ⟹173(7), 245(17)

A truck driver who parked truck on highway near place where highway was blocked by slide, was not guilty of "negligence per se" because he failed to place flares on highway as required by statute when a truck is disabled, but he might nevertheless be guilty of lack of ordinary care in failing to do so. Vehicle Code, § 590, St. 1937, p. 620.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence Per Se".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Harry W. Falk, Judge.

Action by Veryl Callison against Charles Dondero, D. K. Adams, and the B. F. Goodrich Company for damages arising out of automobile collision. A nonsuit was granted with respect to the B. F. Goodrich Company. From a judgment against Charles Dondero and D. K. Adams, Charles Dondero appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Nelson & Ricks and Howard P. Noyes, all of Eureka, for appellant.

Edward J. Jose, of San Francisco, and Ronald Drew, of Arcata, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

The defendant, Charles Dondero, has appealed from a judgment of $1,981, which was rendered pursuant to the verdict of a jury, jointly against him and his codefendant, D. K. Adams, as damages resulting from an automobile casualty. No appeal was perfected in behalf of the defendant, Adams.

It is contended the verdict and judgment are not supported by the evidence; that the appellant was free from negligence; that the plaintiff's driver of the truck which was involved in the accident was guilty of contributory negligence; that the conduct of Adams, who was the driver of a third automobile which was involved in the accident, was the intervening proximate cause of the collision, and that the court erred in giving to the jury an instruction based on the provisions of Section 590 of the Vehicle Code, St.1937, p. 620, since the appellant's truck was not disabled, and the placing of warning signals on the highway, as therein provided, has no application to the circumstances of this case.

At five o'clock on the morning of February 27, 1940, a string of four trucks with attached trailers were traveling northerly along the Redwood Highway about five miles south of Garberville. It was dark and raining. The highway was practically level at that point. The paved portion was eighteen feet in width with an eight-foot shoulder on either side. On the western border of the highway there is a sharp descent to the South Fork of the Eel River, which parallels the highway in that vicinity. On the easterly side of the highway there is a steep bank which rises abruptly from the outer edge of the shoulder of the road. This bank is timbered. At the foot of this easterly bank there is a shallow ditch which is maintained to drain the highway. From much rain the outer edge of the eastern shoulder is somewhat soft. There was no danger of running off the highway on the easterly side at this point on account of the presence of the high bank. At a distance of about 350 feet south of the place where the accident occurred, there is a sharp turn of the road toward the east, which completely obscures the view from approaching vehicles in that direction. Wallace Brown was driving the truck and trailer owned by the plaintiff, Veryl Callison. As these four trucks left Laytonville earlier in the night, Dondero's machine led the procession. Mr. Brown followed a short distance behind. The other two trucks followed with a reasonable distance intervening between their vehicles. Dondero saw the other trucks at Laytonville and talked with the drivers. He knew they were following closely behind his machine. His truck and trailer were equipped with headlights, red tail-lights, side green-lights and a spot-light. He also carried flame-pots, as required by law, to be placed on the highway as warning signals in case of an emergency.

The defendant, D. K. Adams, was traveling northerly in a sedan automobile, ahead of Dondero's truck. As the appellant drove around the curve in the road heretofore mentioned, he suddenly came upon Adams' car parked on the right-hand side of the paved portion of the roadway. He first observed his tail-lights. Dondero brought his truck and trailer to a stop on the easterly paved portion of the highway just behind the Adams car. His westerly wheels were within about ten inches of the center line. He turned on his spot-light and saw that the entire roadway was blocked by a slide which he observed at a distance of about 150 feet ahead of the Adams machine. Dondero knew the other trucks were following closely behind his machine. He had just turned the sharp angle in the roadway and knew it would obstruct the view of his parked car from a position beyond that turn of the road. He made no examination of the shoulder of the road to ascertain whether it was practicable for him to park his truck off the paved portion. He left his truck standing on the highway "within about 250 or 300 feet" from the acute angle in the road, and taking a flash-light he went forward to examine the slide and to talk with Adams. After some conversation, they decided to turn Adams' car about and return to get a crew of workmen to clear the highway. They maneuvered the car about and Mr. Adams drove it southerly on the westerly side of the highway until he reached a point opposite the front of Dondero's truck, where he stopped the machine. His headlights were left burning. There was a space of less than five feet between the cars. While Dondero and Adams were talking at that point, the plaintiff's truck and trailer, driven by Brown, suddenly appeared around the bend in the road. It was traveling 25 or 30 miles an hour. Dondero claims that when he saw the glare of Brown's lights he ran down the highway, waving his flash-light. There is evidence that Dondero left his truck parked on the highway for about twenty minutes before Brown's truck appeared. Mr. Callison testified that Dondero told him "We hadn't been there over twenty minutes" before Brown's truck appeared.

Mr. Brown testified that when he came around the turn in the road he saw the headlights of Adams' car, but supposed it was a machine driving southerly on its proper side of the highway. He was at first blinded by those lights. Brown arrived at a point about 100 feet from the rear end of Dondero's trailer before he first discovered the parked truck and trailer ahead of his machine. About the same time he concluded that the machine which was facing him on the westerly side of the highway was stationary. He promptly applied his brakes, and turned slightly to his left, thinking he might pass between the vehicles. He immediately saw that was impossible and he then pulled sharply to his right to attempt to pass the parked truck on that side. It was impossible to stop his heavily-loaded truck in time to avoid the collision. His truck jack-knifed and struck the right rear portion of Dondero's trailer and it plunged off the highway on the shoulder and collided with the bank and an overhanging tree. The plaintiff's truck was badly damaged. Fortunately no one was seriously injured. Knowing that the other trucks would soon arrive, Dondero ran down the highway waving his flash-light, and Adams drove forward, honking his horn. The two rear trucks managed to stop their machines without colliding with the stalled trucks.

This suit was brought by Veryl Callison against Dondero, Adams and the B. F. Goodrich Company. At the trial a nonsuit was granted with respect to the Goodrich Company. A verdict for damages in the sum of $1,981 was returned against Dondero and Adams jointly. Judgment was rendered accordingly. From that judgment, Charles Dondero, only, has appealed.

[1] We are of the opinion the judgment is supported by the evidence. There is substantial proof that the appellant was guilty of negligence in parking his truck on the paved portion of the highway on a dark and rainy night, at a point close to a sharp turn in the road which obscured the view from approaching vehicles, with knowledge on the part of the appellant that other machines were following closely and were likely to arrive at any moment; that he failed to examine the adjacent roadway to ascertain whether it was practicable to drive the truck on to the shoulder thereof and that he left the truck in that hazardous position for a period of about twenty minutes without taking any means of warning the approaching vehicles of the existing danger. It also appears that, under such circumstances, the appellant directed D. K. Adams, the driver of the automobile which was also parked ahead of his truck, to turn it about and return to procure a crew of workmen to help remove the obstruction from the highway, and that he spent several minutes engaging Adams in conversation while his automobile was parked, opposite the appellant's truck, with its headlights burning, so as to completely block the westerly side of the roadway. These facts furnish substantial proof upon which the jury was warranted in determining that the appellant was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the accident. At least, under such circumstances, we may not hold, as a matter of law, that the appellant was not guilty of negligence.

[2] The jury was properly instructed, pursuant to the provisions of sections 582 and 583 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 190, that the driver of a machine which is not disabled shall not park his vehicle on the paved portion of the highway, and leave it unattended, when it is practicable for him to drive it off the paved portion, and that, in no event, shall the driver of a disabled vehicle leave it standing unattended on the highway unless at least fifteen feet of the paved portion is left unobstructed for the free passage of other vehicles.

[3] Having shown that the appellant did park his truck on the paved portion of the highway, and leave it unattended for a period of time, contrary to the provisions of the foregoing sections of the code, the burden was on him to show that it was not practicable for him to drive his machine off the highway on the shoulder thereof, and that he was not otherwise guilty of negligence in violating the provisions of those sections of the code. Casey v. Gritsch, 1 Cal.App.2d 206, 36 P.2d 696; Scoville v. Keglor, 27 Cal.App.2d 17, 32, 80 P.2d 162; 131 A.L.R. 603, note.

[4-6] Assuming that the appellant did not violate the provisions of section 590 of the Vehicle Code by failing to place his flame-pots, or other warning signals on the highway, for the technical reason that his truck was not actually "disabled," the fact that he was supplied with such flame-pots and knew the other trucks were likely to arrive at any moment, and that he failed to use the flame-pots or otherwise warn the drivers of the approaching trucks, may, nevertheless, be properly considered in determining whether the appellant was not guilty of failure to exercise ordinary care, as distinguished from a violation of the statute. One may become liable for damages for failure to exercise ordinary care without actually violating the explicit provisions of a statute. The violation of a statute merely furnishes prima facie proof of negligence per se, which requires some evidence of rebuttal.

[7, 8] Likewise, the question regarding the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff was a problem for the determination of the jury under the circumstances of this case. We are of the opinion the record fails to show that the driver of respondent's truck was guilty of contributory negligence. At least, we may not say, as a matter of law, that he was guilty of contributory negligence. We are therefore bound by the implied finding of the jury in that regard.

[9] Having determined there is ample evidence to sustain the finding of the jury that the appellant was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the damage sustained by the respondent, Mr. Dondero may not escape liability by the fact that the act of D. K. Adams, in completely blocking the westerly side of the highway, also contributed to the cause of the accident. Even though the acts of Dondero and Adams concurred in causing the accident, if Dondero's conduct was one of the proximate causes thereof, he may be held liable, either jointly with or separately from his co-tortfeasor. This is true even though the accident would not have happened except for the negligence of the third person. Cummings v. Kendall, 34 Cal.App.2d 379, 93 P.2d 633. In 4 Blashfield's Cyclopedia of Automobile Law and Practice, Perm. Ed., § 2552, it is said in that regard:

"If the negligence of defendant is one of the proximate causes of the injury of which the plaintiff complains, he cannot escape liability by showing that the negligence of a third person also contributed to the injury, and that the accident would not have happened but for such negligence of the third person."

[10] The evidence in this case certainly does not show that the negligence of D. K. Adams was the sole cause of the accident. We are of the opinion there is an abundance of evidence to show concurrent negligence on the part of both the appellant and Adams, each of which proximately contributed to the accident. This renders the appellant liable.

[11-13] It was not reversible error for the court to instruct the jury in the language of section 590 of the Vehicle Code, that a "disabled" truck, weighing four thousand pounds or more, may not park on the paved portion of a highway, outside of the limits of a city or town, without displaying either flares or red lanterns at about one hundred feet in advance of and behind the parked vehicle. We are disposed to agree with the appellant that the instruction was inapplicable since the truck was not disabled. It is argued by the respondent that the appellant's truck was disabled in the sense that it was prevented from going forward because of the presence of the slide which completely blocked the highway. We are of the opinion the word "disabled" is used, in section 590 of the Vehicle Code, to mean that a truck is mechanically defective when it is in a condition which prevents it from being operated on its own power, or when it is difficult to do so on that account. We assume a machine is not disabled merely because its progress is blocked by some obstruction of the highway. We concede the appellant was not guilty of negligence per se, for violating section 590 of the Vehicle Code merely because he failed to place the flares on the highway as a warning of danger. The court did not so instruct the jury. But he might, nevertheless, be guilty of a lack of ordinary care in failing to do so, under the circumstances of this case. And he might also be guilty of negligence per se in failing to drive his machine off the paved portion on to the shoulder of the highway, or in neglecting to leave fifteen feet of the highway unobstructed. It was the province of the jury to determine whether it was practicable or possible for him to do so.

Assuming that the challenged instruction was inapplicable, we conclude that it was not reversible error for the reason that it does not appear there was a miscarriage of justice in the present case.

The judgment is affirmed.

TUTTLE, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 372

TOMKINS et al. v. TAYLOR et al.

Civ. 6626.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 22, 1942.

1. Associations 🔑1
Partnership 🔑47

Where there was no evidence as to terms of oral agreement to form an organization for developing realty, whether organization was a partnership or a voluntary association was determinable from admissions in pleadings, evidence of contents of by-laws and minutes of organization, and conduct of members. Civ.Code, § 2432.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1177(6)

Whether organization for developing realty was a partnership or voluntary association should be decided positively in first instance by trial court.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1176(1)

Where plaintiffs' right to dissolution of organization for developing realty depended on whether organization was a partnership and trial court's findings with respect to nature of organization were inconsistent and in conflict with conclusions of law, judgment against plaintiffs on defendant's cross-complaint was reversed with directions to enter new findings and a judgment.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge Assigned.

Action by Laura B. Tomkins and others against Walter J. Taylor and others for a dissolution of an organization on theory that it was a partnership at will, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed with directions.

Jay Maurice, of Oakland, for appellants.

H. L. Richardson, of Oakland, for respondents.

HAWKINS, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered against appellants upon the amended cross-complaint of respondents, which judgment provides for the expulsion of appellants from membership in an organization know as the Angus Club, and further provides as follows: "That defendants are entitled to continue the business of the said co-partnership provided they secure the payment by bond approved by the court, or pay to plaintiffs who have caused the dissolution of said alleged partnership wrongfully, the value of their interest in said alleged partnership less any damages recoverable by defendants under clause (2) (a) II of section 2432 of the Civil Code of the state of California, and indemnify plaintiffs against all present and future partnership liabilities."

There are other provisions in said judgment providing for the appointment of a referee to audit the accounts of the said Angus Club "for the purpose of ascertaining the interest of each of the plaintiffs in said Angus Club, and to do any and all things necessary to terminate the interest of the plaintiffs in said Angus Club, in accordance with the above judgment."

The essential facts are as follows:

On or about April 15, 1935, plaintiffs and defendants entered into an oral agreement to form an organization for the purpose of purchasing, acquiring and developing real property in the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, state of California. Thereafter a set of by-laws was adopted, officers were elected and regular meetings held. Later dissension arose among the members and appellants brought this action for a dissolution of the organization upon the theory that it was a partnership at will.

Appellants have adhered consistently to this theory, both in their pleadings and throughout the trial. Respondents, by their pleadings, alleged that the organization was not a partnership but a voluntary association, yet the judgment rendered gave relief provided for by section 2432 of the Civil Code, which section applies to partnerships.

[1, 2] There is no evidence in the record as to the terms of the original oral organizing agreement and the question as to whether the organization was a partnership or a voluntary association has to be determined from admissions in the pleadings, evidence of the contents of the bylaws and minutes of the organization and the conduct of the members. This question should be decided positively in the first instance by the trial court, and this has not been done.

Paragraph I of the Findings of Fact recites that "all of the allegations of paragraphs two and three of plaintiffs' complaint on file herein are true." Said paragraphs read as follows:

"II. That on or about the 15th day of April, 1935, and prior to the filing of this complaint, plaintiffs and defendants entered into an oral co-partnership agreement in the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, state of California.

"III. That at the time the plaintiffs and defendants entered into the aforesaid oral agreement there was no definite time stated for the duration and existence of said co-partnership aforesaid entered into orally by and between plaintiffs and defendants of the above entitled cause of action."

Paragraph 3 of the Findings of Fact reads in part: "That on or about the 15th day of April, 1935, plaintiffs and defendants entered into an agreement for the purpose of organizing an unincorporated association for the purpose of purchasing, acquiring, and developing real property in the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, state of California, and elsewhere, and with the ultimate intention of incorporation of said unincorporated association, and for the facilitation of their business transactions."

These two findings are totally inconsistent and the latter finding is in conflict with the conclusions of law and judgment which variously refer to the organization as a "co-partnership," a "so-called partnership," and an "alleged partnership."

[3] There is nothing in the conclusions of law or judgment which determines definitely whether or not the organization was a partnership, and if so, whether it was a partnership at will or one for a definite term or for a particular undertaking.

For the reason that a determination of these questions is necessary to a decision in this case, and for other reasons hereinbefore given, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to vacate the judgment and findings and to enter new findings and a judgment which will conform to the views herein expressed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 438

CRANDALL et al. v. McGRATH.

Civ. 13442.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 25, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 22, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 19, 1942.

1. New trial ⇨9

Where issues of cause are distinct and separable, trial court has power to grant new trial of one issue while refusing it as to others. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

2. Appeal and error ⇨977(3)

A trial court's order, granting new trial on one issue only while refusing it as to other issues, will not be reversed in absence of showing of abuse of discretion. Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

3. Appeal and error ⇨977(3)

In personal injury suit, trial judge's decision in granting plaintiff new trial on single issue of damages after jury's verdict for plaintiff is exercise of discretion and should ordinarily be final. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

4. Appeal and error ⇨977(3)

Whether issues of negligence and damages are so inseparably blended as to require that new trial be granted as to all issues, if at all, is question committed to discretion of trial court, whose decision will not be disturbed on appeal, unless such discretion was plainly abused. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1015(3)

In personal injury suit, if any substantial conflict exists in evidence produced by respective parties, trial judge's order granting plaintiff new trial on issue of damages only is conclusive. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

6. New trial ⇨9

In personal injury suit, where there are not actually nine jurors convinced that defendant was guilty of negligence proximately causing plaintiff's injuries or issues of negligence and damages are so inseparably blended that one cannot be fairly tried without proof of the other, trial court should grant new trial on both issues. Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

7. Appeal and error ⇨977(3)

In personal injury suit, where proof of defendant's negligence and fact that it was proximate cause of accident is overwhelming, trial judge's decision in confining new trial granted plaintiff to issue of damages only should not be disturbed on appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

8. New trial ⇨9

In action for injuries to passengers in automobile colliding with defendant's automobile, where testimony of four witnesses, of whom three were strangers to parties and wholly disinterested, supported plaintiffs' contention that defendant was guilty of negligence proximately causing plaintiffs' injuries, while defendant's testimony on such issues was wholly unsupported, trial court properly confined new trial granted plaintiff to issue of damages only. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

W. J. WOOD, J., dissenting.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by Harriett Crandall and another against John J. McGrath for personal injuries. Verdict for plaintiffs, and from an order granting them a new trial on the issue of damages only, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied; WOOD, J., dissenting. Hearing denied; EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

James W. Hughes, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Betts & Garrison, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question for decision on this appeal is whether the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial upon the single issue of damages only. The verdict returned was $100 less than the amount of special damages established.

Defendant appeals from the court's order, contending that because of the "irreconcilable conflict" in the evidence on the issue of liability a new trial should be granted upon all issues.

[1–3] It is provided by statute that a verdict may be vacated in whole or in part and a new trial granted on all or part of the issues. § 657, Code Civ.Proc. It has long been established that it is within the power of the trial court, where the issues of a cause are distinct and separable, to grant a new trial of one issue while refusing it as to the others. Such an order will not be reversed in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. Adams v. Hildebrand, 51 Cal.App.2d 117, 124 P.2d 80. The trial judge having heard all the evidence in a personal injury action, and having been convinced, he is in a peculiar position to know that nothing could be gained by relitigating the issue of negligence though dissatisfied with the award of damages. His decision in granting a new trial on the single issue of damages is the exercise of discretion and should ordinarily be final. Tumelty v. Peerless Stages, 96 Cal.App. 530, 274 P. 430; Amore v. Di Resta, 125 Cal.App. 410, 13 P.2d 986; Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 90 P. 521.

[4, 5] It has likewise been established that the determination by the trial judge as to whether the issues of negligence and of damages are so inseparably blended as to require that a new trial, if granted at all, should be granted as to all of the issues, is a question also committed to the discretion of the trial court (Amore v. Di Resta, supra) whose decision will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is plainly apparent that such discretion has been abused. Adams v. Hildebrand, supra; Rigall v. Lewis, 1 Cal.App.2d 737, 37 P.2d 97. Moreover, the rule goes further in providing that if any substantial conflict exists as between the evidence produced by the respective parties, the order of the trial judge is conclusive. Ibid.

[6] In order to obviate the rule laid down by the statute and foregoing authorities, defendant insists that the conflict in the evidence of the instant case is so irreconcilable as to make this case an exception to the rules above announced. He bases his contention upon the decisions in Wallace v. Miller, 26 Cal.App.2d 55, 78 P.2d 745, and Bencich v. Market St. R. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 518, 67 P.2d 398. A reading of those cases readily discloses that the authors of the opinions were satisfied that the verdict returned was the result of unwarranted concessions of convictions by members of the jury and that consequently it would work a grave injustice upon the defendant to limit the new trial to the issue of damages only. Under such circumstances it was deemed to be the better practice that the issue as to liability should not be forever closed against inquiry where it appeared that the verdict upon that issue was not the result of a free and unrestricted collaboration of the minds of at least nine jurors. From a study of the last two cited authorities, we deduce the rule that (1) where the record discloses that there were not actually nine jurors who were convinced of the negligence of the defendant and that his negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries, or (2) where the issues of negligence and damages are so inseparably blended that one cannot be fairly tried without proof of the other: in either of such events the trial court should grant a new trial upon both issues.

[7] But where the proof of defendant's negligence and the fact that it was the proximate cause of the accident is overwhelming, then the decision of the trial judge in confining the new trial to the issue of damages only should not be disturbed on appeal. Under such circumstances we should not interfere with the order. The conflict in the evidence may be irreconcilable because the witness who testified on behalf of defendant directly contradicted the witnesses who testified on behalf of plaintiffs in which event both narratives could not be true. There is no showing that any difficulty should have been experienced in establishing the liability of defendant.

[8] Proof of the events immediately preceding the collision of the two automobiles was presented by four witnesses on behalf of plaintiffs, three of whom were utter strangers to the parties and wholly disinterested. Proof offered on behalf of defendant was his own testimony.

The witness Robinson was driver of the car occupied by plaintiffs. According to his testimony, while driving east on Sixth Street and approaching Woods Avenue, his speed was about 15 miles per hour. He looked in both directions and slowed down. After the front of his car had reached a point 10 feet east of the intersection he saw McGrath's car 40 feet north of Woods Avenue going at a speed of about 40 miles per hour, which did not change prior to the collision. At the time of the impact, Robinson's car was going about 2 to 5 miles per hour. Robinson was corroborated by three students of the Garfield High School. Notwithstanding the slight variations in their respective observations, the substance of the testimony of each of them is that Robinson approached Woods Avenue at a speed of about 10 to 15 miles per hour; that McGrath's car thundered down Woods Avenue and into the intersection at a speed of 35 to 40 miles per hour; that as McGrath attempted to veer the direction of his car, near the center of the intersection, his right front fender struck the left front fender and headlights of the Robinson car which was then moving at about 5 to 10 miles per hour; that cars were parked close together along the curbs on both sides of Woods Avenue, the middle of which is about two feet higher than the surface at the curbs.

On the same issues as to whether he was negligent and whether his negligence proximately caused plaintiffs' injuries, McGrath in his own behalf was wholly unsupported.

According to his testimony he was on his way to a funeral and anxious to get to the chapel early. On approaching Garfield High School, he diminished his speed to 15 miles per hour. He saw the Robinson car while he was 15 feet north of Sixth Street and at that time it was 80 feet west of the intersection; that as he entered the intersection, Robinson was 50 feet west; that when the front of his car was at the center of Sixth Street, Robinson's car was 25 feet out of the intersection. When McGrath saw that Robinson was not slowing down, he turned to the left when Robinson crashed into the right side of his car. The impact of Robinson's car shoved the front of the McGrath car several feet to the west; Robinson did not swerve his car before the impact.

This testimony significantly pales when weighed against that of the four witnesses for the plaintiffs.

The motion for diminution is denied. The order is affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurred.

W. J. WOOD, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. In this action plaintiffs Harriett Crandall and Addie Robinson seek to recover damages for injuries which they suffered when an automobile driven by defendant collided with an automobile owned and driven by L. G. Robinson, in which they were riding. Defendant has appealed from an order granting plaintiffs a new trial on the single issue of the amount of damages to be awarded.

Among the injuries suffered by plaintiff Crandall as a result of the collision were three fractures of the jaw, lacerations, and an injury to her knee. Among the injuries suffered by plaintiff Robinson were a fractured cheek bone and concussion of the brain. Special damages were proved by plaintiffs in the sum of $585.67 for physicians' and nurses' services and hospitalization and medical expenses. There appears to be no conflict in the evidence as to the injuries suffered or as to the special damages incurred. The case was tried with a jury which rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff Crandall in the sum of $435.64 and in favor of plaintiff Robinson in the sum of $50.22, the total for both parties being $485.86.

Plaintiffs presented a motion for a new trial on the issue of damages only and defendant presented a motion for a new trial on all issues. The court denied defendant's motion but granted plaintiffs' motion and thereby limited the new trial to the single issue of the amount of damages.

Defendant contends that, since the evidence on the issue of defendant's alleged negligence is conflicting and since the jury awarded a sum less than the undisputed special damages, the trial court erred in limiting the new trial to the single issue of damages. In my opinion the decision in Wallace v. Miller, 26 Cal.App.2d 55, 78 P.2d 745, 746, is determinative of the question. In that case the plaintiff suffered damages in the sum of $120.25 for medical bills and $203.64 for repairs to his automobile. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $120.25. On motion of the plaintiff the trial court granted a new trial on the question of damages only. The reviewing court reversed this order, pointing out that the evidence was of about equal strength on the question of liability and that the plaintiff, if entitled to recover, should have been awarded all of his special damages and an amount sufficient to compensate him for his personal injuries. The court held that "the primarily important question, namely, the negligence of defendant, was not determined by the jury" and that the court's failure to grant a new trial on all issues was "an arbitrary refusal to exercise a reasonable discretion." The court relied upon Donnatin v. Union Hardware & Metal Co., 38 Cal.App. 8, 175 P. 26, 177 P. 845, and upon Bencich v. Market St. R. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 518, 67 P.2d 398, 403, where it is said: "The verdict of the jury which found, in effect, that defendants were guilty of negligence and that plaintiff was free from contributory negligence and yet allowed damages which were grossly inadequate, furnishes convincing proof as said in the Donnatin case, supra, page 11 of 38 Cal.App., 175 P. 26, 177 P. 845, 'that in order to reach an agreement the verdict was the result of unwarranted concessions of convictions made by each of two opposing factions of the jury, one of which conscientiously believed that defendant should prevail in the action, and the other equally conscientious in the opinion that plaintiff should recover damages commensurate with the injuries sustained.' * * * In view of this uncertainty and the fact that clearly something other than the evidence on the question of damages must have actuated the jury, or some of them in arriving at such a low verdict, substantial justice requires that (as said in the Donnatin case, supra, 38 Cal.App. 8, at page 11, 175 P. 26, 27, 177 P. 845), '* * * what is a just compensation the plaintiff should receive, if he is entitled to recover at all, can best be determined by trying the whole case before one judge and one jury instead of "splitting it up" between different judges and different juries. * * *'"

The facts in the case now before us bear a striking similarity to the facts in the case of Wallace v. Miller, supra. The testimony of the drivers of the two automobiles was in sharp conflict, the statement of each if believed by the jury being sufficient to excuse him from liability. I cannot agree with the statement contained in the majority opinion that the proof of defendant's negligence is "overwhelming." Nor was the testimony of defendant without support in the evidence. Defendant introduced in evidence three photographs of the automobiles involved in the collision and now properly argues that they give strength to his contentions. A deputy sheriff, called as a witness by defendant, testified that both headlights on the Robinson car were broken and that he found glass and debris 10 feet east of the west curb of Woods Avenue, thus, according to counsel's argument giving corroboration to defendant's testimony that the Robinson car was only partially in the intersection at the time of the impact. The fact that the testimony of three schoolboys, which contained discrepancies, was favorable to the contentions of defendant does not, in my opinion, justify a holding by the reviewing court that as a matter of law the evidence was overwhelming in favor of either party. The only distinction that can be made between the Wallace v. Miller case and the case now before us is that in the Wallace v. Miller case the reviewing court stated that the evidence of the parties was "of about equal strength." The true rule to be derived from the decision in Wallace v. Miller and the cases therein relied upon is that where the evidence is conflicting and sufficient to support a verdict in favor of either party and the jury returns a verdict for less than the uncontroverted special damages a new trial should be granted on all of the issues.

51 Cal.App.2d 390

SPANFELNER v. MEYER.

Civ. 12105.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
April 24, 1942.

1. Estoppel ⇐32(1)

On appeal in suit to quiet title to land, defendant could not claim that there was no evidence of title in plaintiff where there was a stipulation in transcript of a deed to plaintiff's brother signed by defendant and his wife and of a subsequent deed from the brother to plaintiff, and both deeds described the land.

2. Husband and wife ⇐270(5)

Where grantor acquired title to land before effective date of statute respecting interests in community property, grantor's wife was not a "necessary party defendant" in remote grantee's suit against grantor to quiet title to land, notwithstanding that wife was named as a grantor in deed to grantee's predecessor. Civ.Code, § 161a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Party Defendant".

3. Husband and wife ⇐265, 267(7)

A wife has no "vested interest" in community property acquired before effective date of statute respecting interests in community property, and, as to community property acquired previous to 1927, her joinder in a deed thereof is in legal effect but an expression of her assent to the transfer by husband. Civ.Code, § 161a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Vested Interest".

4. Appeal and error ⇐205

Where trial judge's refusal to admit a contract in evidence for defendant was only tentative, and left the door open for defendant to offer the contract again at a later stage of his proof, and there was no showing that defendant had subsequently offered the contract in evidence, defendant could not on appeal complain that judge refused to admit contract.

5. Trial ⇐47(2)

Where evidence is excluded when offered with statement by trial court that it may be offered later, failure again to offer it "waives" any error.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

6. Trial ⇐47(2)

Where the trial court rejects evidence temporarily or withholds a decision as to its admissibility, the party desiring to introduce the evidence should renew his offer or call the court's attention to the fact that a definite decision is desired.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; Herbert S. Gans, Judge.

Suit by Fred Spanfelner against Robert Meyer to quiet title to land, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Pugh & Pugh, of Red Bluff, for appellant.

Curtiss E. Wetter, of Red Bluff, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

Respondent had judgment quieting his title to a parcel of land of less than one acre, which was part of a larger tract conveyed to respondent's brother by deed of appellant and his wife in 1928. In this transaction it is admitted that respondent's brother was acting as agent and naked trustee for respondent and the property was subsequently conveyed to respondent by his brother. Appellant cross-complained, alleging that the parcel of land here in dispute was included in the description in the deed by mutual mistake of the parties and praying for a reformation of the deed in that particular.

[1] Appellant in his opening brief made the claim that there was no evidence of title in respondent. Respondent in his brief points to a stipulation in the transcript of the deed to respondent's brother in 1928 signed by appellant and his wife, and of a deed from the brother to respondent in 1933, both describing the property in suit. In view of this stipulation there is nothing in this claim of appellant.

[2, 3] Appellant further urges that his wife was a necessary party defendant. This point was not made in the trial court, but it is appellant's position here that she was a necessary party because she was one of the grantors in the deed to respondent's brother and it is claimed that it must be presumed that she had a community property interest in the land conveyed. It does not affirmatively appear in the record that this land was community property, but assuming it to have been it does affirmatively appear that appellant acquired his title before July 29, 1927, the effective date of section 161a of the Civil Code. Whatever may be the law since the adoption of that code section it is settled that a wife has no vested interest in community property acquired before that date (3 Cal.Jur.Supp., p. 592; McKay v. Lauriston, 204 Cal. 557, 269 P. 519) and that "as to community property acquired previous to 1927 her joinder in a deed thereof is in legal effect but an expression of her assent to the transfer by the husband." Riley v. Gordon, 137 Cal.App. 311, 315, 30 P.2d 617, 619.

The main ground urged for a reversal is the alleged refusal of the trial court to admit into evidence a prior contract between appellant and two vendees named Ovelman for the sale and purchase of the tract later conveyed to respondent, in which contract the land here in dispute was expressly excluded from the land to be conveyed. At the time the offer of this document was made, which was almost at the opening of appellant's case, the trial judge said:

"I was about to say I would let it be marked for identification and then see if there is any evidence to tie it into this matter or not. It may be admitted later or may not. I will see what further is shown. If it is part of the transaction or something that occurred there that day it will probably be admitted but I will defer it for a little while and see further from the evidence. It will be marked Defendant's Exhibit A for Identification."

[4-6] This ruling not only was not final but it left the door wide open for appellant to offer the contract again at a later stage of his proof. Appellant points to no place in the transcript where the offer of this document was renewed and a reading of the transcript shows no renewal of the offer. "Where evidence is excluded when offered with the statement by the court that it may be offered later, failure again to offer it waives any error." 26 R.C.L. 1040. "Where the court rejects evidence temporarily or withholds a decision as to its admissibility, the party desiring to introduce the evidence should renew his offer, or call the court's attention to the fact that a definite decision is desired." 64 C.J. 127. See 4 C.J.S., Appeal and Error, § 291, p. 583; Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 216, 78 P. 641; McKissick Cattle Co. v. Anderson, 62 Cal.App. 558, 569, 570, 217 P. 779; Watkins v. Glas, 5 Cal.App. 68, 76, 89 P. 840; Rickards v. Noonan, 40 Cal.App.2d 266, 275, 104 P.2d 839; Kern County Finance Co. v. Iriart, 26 Cal.App.2d 483, 79 P.2d 763.

Appellant says at the close of his reply brief: "With said evidence (the Ovelman contract) before the Court, mutual mistake was proven, without it Meyer was powerless to overcome the legal consequences of his deed to Spanfelner."

In view of our conclusion that appellant cannot complain of the tentative refusal of the trial court to admit this contract into evidence in the absence of a showing that it was later again offered and a definite and final ruling obtained, this concession makes it unnecessary to further extend this opinion.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 776

VALLERA v. VALLERA et al.

Civ. 13586.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 24, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 22, 1942.

Appeal and error 🔑607(1)

Where it appeared from certificate of clerk of superior court that superior court had terminated proceedings on appeal, and it further appeared that appellant had not furnished District Court of Appeal with sufficient record, appeal was dismissed.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Proceeding by Marian Vallera against Concezio Vallera. From an adverse decision, plaintiff appeals. On defendant's motion to dismiss the appeal and on plaintiff's motion to be allowed to use portions of the record filed by defendant on defendant's appeal.

First motion granted and second motion denied.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Zagon & Aaron, of Los Angeles, for defendant.

PER CURIAM.

It appearing from the certificate of the clerk of the superior court that on February 5, 1942, an order was made by the superior court terminating proceedings on the appeal of the plaintiff, and

It further appearing that plaintiff has not furnished this court with a sufficient record on appeal,

It is ordered that the motion of defendant to dismiss the appeal of plaintiff be, and it is hereby granted.

It follows as a matter of course that the motion of plaintiff to be allowed to use portions of the record filed by defendant on his appeal must be, and it is, hereby denied.

* * *

51 Cal.App.2d 343

PEOPLE v. DESCANT.

Cr. 1794.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 21, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑78

Evidence of identity and authority of agent supported conviction of principal for uttering a check without funds or credit with intent to defraud. Pen.Code, § 476a.

2. Criminal law 🔑112(5)

Where a check was drawn in Merced county and made payable at a Merced county bank, but delivered to a merchant in Sacramento county by drawer's agent, the Sacramento county courts had jurisdiction of a prosecution against drawer for uttering a check without funds or credit with intent to defraud. Pen.Code, §§ 476a, 792.

3. Criminal law 🔑112(5)

Where a check was drawn in Merced county and made payable at a Merced county bank, but delivered to a merchant in Sacramento county by drawer's agent, venue of prosecution against drawer for uttering a check without funds or credit with intent to defraud was properly laid in Sacramento county. Pen.Code, § 476a.

4. False pretenses 🔑6

The statute providing punishment for issuing a check without sufficient funds or credit with intent to defraud provides for separate offenses of drawing, uttering, or delivering a check upon a bank where drawer has insufficient funds with intent to defraud, and the word "utter" meaning to put in circulation as money or currency, to cause to pass in trade, and "utterance" meaning, as putting in circulation, as false coin or forged notes. Pen.Code, § 476a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Utter" and "Utterance".

5. False pretenses 🔑23

Under statute providing that all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, though not present, shall be punished as principals, an accused uttering or passing checks on a closed account through the agency of an accessory with intent to defraud the person to whom delivered was "concerned in the commission" of the crime so as to be guilty thereof as a "principal". Pen. Code, §§ 476a, 971.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Concerned in the Commission" and "Principal".

6. Conspiracy 🔑23

Where drawer's accessory and agent delivered a check on a closed account with intent to defraud the person to whom delivered, the drawer and agent were not required to be charged and tried for criminal conspiracy.

7. Criminal law 🔑687(1)

In prosecution for uttering a check without funds or credit, with intent to defraud, where check had been previously referred to by the prosecution and accused called no witnesses in his behalf, accused was not prejudiced by reopening of case after prosecution announced that evidence was closed to permit identification of checks relied on to show intent with which one involved was uttered. Pen.Code, §§ 476a, 1094.

8. Criminal law ⟹686(2)

The granting or denial of a motion to reopen a case for further evidence after a party has rested, is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. Pen.Code, § 1094.

9. Criminal law ⟹695(2)

In prosecution for uttering a check without funds and credit with intent to defraud, the actual uttering allegedly having been committed by an accessory, where accused did not object to receiving in evidence a photograph of the accessory, and a later objection thereto did not state the grounds, accused "waived" any objection on ground that photograph was prejudicial because containing a prison number across the subject's chest. Pen.Code, § 476a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

10. Criminal law ⟹858(3)

In prosecution for uttering a check without funds or credit with intent to defraud, trial court did not err in permitting jurors to take to jury room checks received in evidence as the jury was entitled to examine such checks to determine accused's purpose and intent. Pen.Code, § 476a; Code Civ. Proc. § 612.

11. Criminal law ⟹858(1)

It is not ordinarily erroneous to permit jurors to take with them to the jury room exhibits which have been received in evidence.

12. Criminal law ⟹1172(1)

In prosecution for uttering a check without funds or credit with intent to defraud, where there was no evidence that any witness had been convicted of a felony, and accused produced no witnesses, an instruction regarding the method of impeaching a witness, including statement that a witness might be deemed to have been impeached by evidence that he had been previously convicted of a felony, was harmless. Pen.Code, § 476a; Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Robert E. Descant, Jr., was convicted of uttering a check without funds or credit with the intent to defraud, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

George I. Lewis, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged and convicted in Sacramento County with drawing, uttering and delivering to Louis Block a check for the sum of $35.28, upon the First National Bank of Merced, in which bank the defendant then had no funds or credit, with the intent to defraud the said Louis Block, contrary to the provisions of section 476a of the Penal Code.

The defendant contends that the Sacramento court was without jurisdiction to try the cause; that the court erred in reopening the case and receiving in evidence the testimony of an officer with respect to the identity of several other fictitious checks which were drawn and uttered by the defendant; that the court erred in receiving in evidence photographs of the payee who passed the checks to Louis Block; that the court erred in permitting the jury to take to their jury room the exhibits which were received in evidence, and that the court erred in giving to the jury an instruction regarding the methods of impeaching witnesses.

The evidence satisfactorily shows that the defendant and E. R. Bartlett, the payee named in the check which was passed to Louis Block, co-operated in fraudulently issuing and passing numerous similar fictitious checks at about the same time, with the purpose of defrauding different merchants. Both men were arrested. The defendant was separately charged with this offense. Neither of them took the witness stand at the trial of this case.

On May 19, 1941, the defendant, as manager of the so-called Pacific West Coast Company, opened an account in the First National Bank of Merced, by depositing therein the sum of $117. That fund was exhausted, and the account was finally closed August 15, 1941. No deposit was thereafter made in that account, nor did the defendant negotiate for further credit with the bank. Upon opening his account the defendant was furnished a pad of blank checks, upon each of which there was printed his business card. The checks were consecutively numbered. On September 20, 1941, more than a month after his account had been closed, the defendant drew upon the Merced bank, in his own hand writing, and signed, six different checks, each for the sum of $35.28, which bore the same date and were made payable to E. R. Bartlett. Each check was endorsed by Bartlett and fraudulently passed to different merchants in Sacramento, in payment for goods which he purchased. A portion of the checks were paid to Bartlett in cash. One of these checks, numbered 204, was delivered to Louis Block, the manager of the Dundee Clothing Store in Sacramento, on September 26, 1941, in payment for an overcoat. He also received $10 in cash from that check. The defendant was not then present. This last mentioned check was deposited for collection in the Capital National Bank of Sacramento, on September 29, 1941, and promptly forwarded to the Merced bank for payment. The Merced bank refused payment of the check and returned it with the endorsement stamped thereon, "Account Closed." The other checks, which were exactly like the last mentioned one in date and amount and in every other respect except their serial numbers, were likewise passed by Bartlett to other merchants in Sacramento from whom he purchased goods on or about the same date. They were deposited for collection and forwarded to the Merced bank for payment. Payment on each check was refused, and they were returned with the same endorsement, that the account was closed. Several of these merchants took the witness stand and testified to the respective transactions.

After the arrest of the defendant there was found in his possession the unused portion of the pad of blank checks with stubs corresponding to the previously mentioned checks, and eight other checks which had been filled out and signed by the defendant, for the sum of $20 and $25. These checks were also dated September 20, 1941. The name of the payee was left blank in these eight checks. It was evidently the purpose of the defendant to also fraudulently pass these checks.

The six fictitious checks which were passed to different merchants aggregated the sum of $211.68, which is nearly twice the amount of the entire deposit in the Merced bank. The eight checks which had not been passed aggregated the sum of $180. The similarity of dates, amounts, name of payee of all the negotiated checks, the fact that they were passed by the same man to different merchants in Sacramento on or about the same date in similar transactions furnishes satisfactory evidence of a concerted plan between the defendant and Bartlett to fraudulently procure from various merchants money and goods by means of circulating these fictitious checks.

[1] The judgment is adequately supported by the evidence. To identify the man who passed the check numbered 204, which is the one involved in this action, Mr. Block was asked if the defendant, who sat in the courtroom, was the man. He looked at him, and said "No." He was then shown a card upon which there appeared two bust-photographs of Bartlett in different profiles, across the breast of one of which there appeared a number containing several figures, in the manner in which the pictures of convicts are usually identified. He promptly identified the photographs as pictures of the man who passed the fictitious check to him. An officer afterwards testified that the defendant admitted those photographs were pictures of Bartlett to whom he drew and delivered the six checks. The photographs were received in evidence without objection. Later defendant's attorney objected to them, but failed to assign the reason that one of them was prejudicial because it contained a prison number.

[2-6] The defendant's motions for a directed verdict, for a new trial, and for an arrest of judgment on the ground that the Sacramento court lacked jurisdiction to try the cause, because the checks were asserted to have been drawn in Merced and payable at a bank situated in Merced county, were properly denied. The Sacramento court had jurisdiction of this offense. The venue was properly laid in Sacramento county. The gist of the offense was the uttering or passing of the check in question "with intent to defraud," not the bank, but the merchant to whom the fictitious check was delivered in pretended payment for the overcoat and the ten dollars in change. Section 476a provides for separate offenses of "drawing," or "uttering," or "delivering" a check upon a bank where the maker has insufficient funds with which to pay it, with the intent to defraud another person. Webster's New International Dictionary, at page 2809, defines the word "utter" as it is here used, as "to put in circulation, as money or currency; to cause to pass in trade." The same authority defines the word "utterance" as "putting in circulation, as false coin or forged notes." In the present case the evidence satisfactorily shows that the defendant uttered or passed the fictitious check in question to Louis Block in Sacramento, through the agency of his accessory, E. R. Bartlett, with the intent to defraud the merchant to whom it was delivered. It is true that the defendant was not present when the check was passed. But it was not necessary that the defendant should be actually present when the crime was consummated, provided he was "concerned * * * in its commission," to render him guilty thereof as a principal. § 971, Pen. Code. The evidence in this case certainly shows, without a doubt, that the defendant was concerned in defrauding the several merchants in Sacramento to whom the fictitious checks were passed as genuine. Nor was it necessary that the participants in that crime should be charged and tried for the offense of criminal conspiracy.

Since the defendant was guilty of the offense of uttering a fictitious check in Sacramento county, through the agency of Bartlett, although the defendant was not then present, the jurisdiction of the crime was located in Sacramento county, where the case was properly tried. § 792, Pen. Code. The section last cited provides in that regard: "The jurisdiction of a criminal action against a principal in the commission of a public offense, when such principal is not present at the commission of the principal offense, is in the same county it would be under this code if he were so present and aiding and abetting therein."

[7, 8] The defendant was not prejudiced by the reopening of the cause after the prosecution announced that its evidence was closed, for the purpose of permitting an officer to identify certain checks which were relied upon to show the purpose or intent with which the particular one which is involved in this case was uttered and passed. The granting or denial of a motion to reopen a case for further evidence after a party has rested, is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. There was no abuse of discretion in the present case. § 1094, Pen. Code; People v. Berryman, 6 Cal.2d 331, 338, 57 P.2d 136; 8 Cal.Jur. 239, § 307. All of those checks had been previously referred to by the prosecution in the course of the trial, and witnesses had been examined in regard to them. The defendant was advised from the outset that the prosecution relied upon the uttering and passing of other similar fictitious checks at about the same time to establish the purpose and intent with which the particular check which is involved in this case was passed to the merchant. The defendant was not taken by surprise. He called no witness in his own behalf. Evidently he did not intend to do so. He submitted his case upon the testimony adduced by the prosecution.

[9] The court did not err in receiving in evidence the photographs of the accessory, Bartlett. It was received without objection. When the defendant did not later object to it, he failed to object on the ground that one of them was prejudicial because it contained the impression of a prison number across the chest. That objection was waived by failure to call the court's attention to it.

[10, 11] The court did not err in permitting the jurors to take with them to the juryroom the checks which were received in evidence. One of the jurors requested that they be permitted to take the exhibits with them to the juryroom. It is ordinarily not erroneous to permit jurors to take with them to the juryroom exhibits which have been received in evidence. There appears to have been no abuse of discretion in that regard in the present case. The jury had a right to examine the various checks to determine whether they were all in the same handwriting of the defendant, whether they bore the same date, and whether they contained other evidence from which the purpose and intent of the defendant might be determined. § 612, Code Civ. Proc.; 24 Cal.Jur. 755, § 36; 114 A.L.R. 1519 note.

[12] Nor did the court err in giving to the jury an instruction regarding the method of impeaching a witness. The challenged instruction is couched in the language which is usually given to the jury regarding that subject in appropriate cases. It contained the usual clause that a witness might be deemed to have been impeached by evidence that he had been previously convicted of a felony. § 2051, Code Civ. Proc. There was no evidence that any witness in the case had been convicted of a felony. That instruction was harmless. It could not prejudice the defendant, for he produced no witnesses at the trial to whom he might apply.

Clearly there was no miscarriage of justice in the conviction of the defendant.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

TUTTLE, J., concurs.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 431

VUCINICH et al. v. GORDON.

Civ. 13417.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
April 25, 1942.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑119(2)

Tenant who continued to hold over after expiration of lease became a "tenant by sufferance".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Tenant by Sufferance".

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑199½

A deed of an undivided one-third interest in the realty by one of three landlords to tenant had no effect on the relationship of landlord and tenant which had existed prior thereto between the other two landlords and the tenant, and did not extinguish tenant's liability to those two landlords for rent under the lease, though it did extinguish rent due under lease to that landlord who conveyed the one-third undivided interest.

3. Tenancy in common 🔑33

Where relation of landlord and tenant is created between the owners of the fee as tenants in common, he who holds the exclusive possession of the realty after the term of the lease, whether his possession was gained by his attornment to his co-owner or by an assignment of the leasehold to him by another, occupies the land as a tenant, and the same rules apply as in case of any other tenant holding over.

4. Landlord and tenant 🔑90(1)

An express agreement by a tenant to pay rental during holdover after expiration of lease, is unnecessary to continue him as a tenant.

5. Tenancy in common 🔑33

Where relation of landlord and tenant is created between the owners of the fee as tenants in common, and the one holding as tenant holds over after expiration of lease, he occupies the premises as a tenant and not as co-owner.

6. Tenancy in common 🔑33

The same rules governing the relationship between an owner of realty and a stranger to the title apply to tenants in common when one of them enters into occupancy of the realty as the tenant of the other.

7. Landlord and tenant 🔑90(1)

Tenant who held over after expiration of term of lease was presumed to have held over under the provisions of the lease providing for such holding over.

8. Landlord and tenant 🔑96, 199½

Where tenant acquired one-third undivided interest of one of three landlords, the tenant's interest as tenant was "merged" with his interest as one of the three owners as tenants in common and tenant was obliged to pay the other two landlords only two thirds of the rental provided for by the lease. Civ.Code, § 1933.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Merge".

9. Damages 🔑79(5)

The statutes making a provision in a contract fixing amount of damage for breach of an obligation thereby created void unless, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage, did not render void as a "penalty" a provision in lease for payment of certain monthly rental in event tenant should exercise his privilege to hold over after expiration of lease. Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Penalty".

10. Landlord and tenant 🔑200(3)

Landlords and tenant had the right to include in the lease a provision concerning the amount of monthly rental to be paid by tenant for use of the premises after expiration of the term of the lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by Voislav Vucinich and another against Joseph H. Gordon to recover rentals due under a lease. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Gordon P. Shallenberger, of Wilmington, for appellant.

Marion Vecki, of San Francisco, and Lester E. Hardy, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question for determination on this appeal is whether the acquisition by a tenant of a one-third interest of a tenant in common terminated the lease and the obligation of such tenant under the lease.

March 25, 1935, plaintiffs who were then minors, through their guardian, and with the approval of the court, leased their undivided two-thirds interest in certain real property to defendant. They were joined in the lease by their sister, Desanka Vucinich, owner of the other one-third, whereby defendant obtained a leasehold interest on the entirety of the property which was situate in the city of Wilmington. The term of the lease was for five years, to wit, from January 1, 1935, to December 31, 1939, and was for a graduated rental whereby for the years of 1938 and 1939 the monthly rental was fixed at $100. The lease further provided that, on the last day of its term, the lessee shall peaceably and quietly surrender and yield up the premises to the lessor; that if the lessee should hold over after the expiration of the lease, then and in that event the holding over shall be deemed to be a tenancy only from month to month and the said lessee shall pay the sum of $500 for each and every month that he continues in possession of the property.

Three months before the expiration of the lease, to wit, on September 28, 1939, Desanka conveyed to defendant her undivided one-third interest in the property by a grant deed. Such deed was recorded January 26, 1940, whereupon defendant instituted his action for a partition of the property, the possession of which he continued to hold until the 30th of August, 1940, when plaintiffs filed this action to recover the rentals due them under the lease. Defendant contends that he ceased to be a tenant of the plaintiff after the expiration of the lease. This contention has no support in the law.

[1, 2] Upon the expiration of the lease, defendant became a tenant by sufferance. Hull v. Laugharn, 3 Cal.App.2d 310, 39 P.2d 478; Kaye v. M'Divani, 6 Cal.App.2d 132, 44 P.2d 371; Odell v. Buttrick, 126 Cal. 551, 59 P. 133. The deed from Desanka to defendant had no effect upon the relationship of landlord and tenant which had existed prior thereto between plaintiffs and defendant. Inasmuch as defendant became the owner of Desanka's one-third interest, his obligation to pay one-third of the rental due under the lease was thereby extinguished. Higgins v. California Petroleum & Asphalt Co., 109 Cal. 304, 308, 41 P. 1087.

[3] When the relation of landlord and tenant is created between the owners of the fee as tenants in common, he who holds the exclusive possession of the property after the term of the lease, whether his possession was gained by his attornment to his co-owner or by an assignment of the leasehold to him by another, he occupies the land as a tenant. Then the same rules apply as in the case of any other tenant holding over. Schmidt v. Constans, 82 Minn. 347, 85 N.W. 173, 83 Am.St.Rep. 437.

[4-8] An express agreement on the part of the tenant to pay rental during the hold-over is wholly unnecessary to continue the occupant as tenant. Under such circumstances he occupies the premises as a tenant and not in his capacity as co-owner. There is nothing mystical about the relationship of landlord and tenant. The same rules governing that relationship between an owner and a stranger to the title apply to tenants in common when one of them enters into the occupancy of the land as tenant of the other. The relationship between plaintiff and defendant was established by the lease itself. Upon the expiration of its term, defendant, having continued his occupancy, is presumed to have held over under the provisions of the lease providing for such holdover. Carson v. Broady, 56 Neb. 648, 77 N.W. 80, 71 Am.St.Rep. 691. He could not by merely continuing in possession extinguish his obligation as a tenant which he had carefully fixed by entering into a written lease providing for the holdover. By that instrument, he agreed to pay $500 monthly for the use of the premises after the expiration of his term. However, having acquired the one-third interest of Desanka, his interest as tenant was merged with his interest as one of the three owners as tenants in common. Civ.Code, § 1933; Higgins v. California Petroleum & Asphalt Co., supra; Landis Bros. v. Lawrence, 104 Cal.App. 499, 503, 286 P. 177; Erving v. James H. Goodman & Co., 171 Cal. 559, 153 P. 945. From that time forward he was obligated to pay plaintiffs only two-thirds of the rental provided to be paid by the lease.

The court found that defendant was indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $3,416.74, which is two-thirds of the total rentals which would have been due from defendant if he had not acquired Desanka's one-third interest, as tenant, in the land. For the reasons given such finding was justified.

[9] Defendant makes the further contention that the provision for the payment of the monthly rental of $500 in the event he should exercise his privilege to hold over after the expiration of the time is a penalty and therefore is void under sections 1670, 1671, Civil Code. By those statutes a provision in the contract fixing the amount of damage for a breach of an obligation thereby created is void unless from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. Neither the question of penalty nor of liquidated damages is involved in this action.

[10] Upon the expiration of the lease defendant had no further right to remain upon the property except as he might choose to do so as a tenant and under the terms to which he had subscribed. At the time of executing that instrument, both parties were free from obligation to each other. They dealt at arm's length. Deliberately and free from coercion, they made the provision for the rental to be paid for the use of the premises after the expiration of the definite term. This they had the right to do. It is universal practice to include such covenants whereby the tenant may determine the extent of his liability. Farley v. Knight Light & Soda Fountain Co., 223 Ill.App. 317. Its presence in defendant's lease suggests no reason for holding that the rental fixed for the season of the holdover provided for a penalty. If the tenant deem such terms oppressive, he is at liberty to leave. He cannot enjoy the benefits of his continued user and at the same time escape from the obligation which he voluntarily undertook under the claim that such obligation is a penalty. There is no reason why the courts should adjudicate that which the parties have determined by their free, solemn and voluntary act.

Judgment is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 415

MENCHES et al. v. INGLEWOOD HUMANE SOC. et al.

Civ. 13233.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 25, 1942.

1. Animals ⚷72

Liability for bite of dog may attach not only to owner without reference to knowledge, but to keeper, also, if keeper has knowledge of dog's viciousness. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 384a.

2. Animals ⚷72

Plaintiffs who accepted delivery of impounded dog at their home by humane society and paid impounding fee acquired title to dog, and hence could not recover from society and its servant for bite inflicted on one plaintiff ten minutes after servant, who delivered dog, had departed under statute making owner of dog liable for damages from bite. Gen.Laws 1937, Acts 384, 384a; Civ.Code, §§ 1865, 1870; St.1933, pp. 124–128, and p. 126, §§ 391–416, and § 396.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by Elaine Menches and another against the Inglewood Humane Society and another for injuries and damage from the bite of a dog. From an order granting plaintiffs a new trial, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Sidney A. Moss, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Don Lake and Edgar Mulvihill, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

This action is for damages resulting from the bite of an unruly dog which had been impounded and for a time kept by defendants before its sale and delivery by them to plaintiffs. The question for determination is whether, after payment of the impoundage and the acceptance of the animal by plaintiffs at their home, defendants are liable under the dog bite statute which imposes liability upon the owner of a vicious dog when it bites another.

Plaintiffs' ground for recovery was stated in two causes of action: by the first they alleged that the defendants knowing it to be vicious and accustomed to bite mankind did negligently harbor a vicious dog and suffer it to go at large without being properly guarded or confined; that by reason of such carelessness of defendants in permitting the animal to run at large, and with knowledge of its ferocity, plaintiff Elaine was attacked and bitten by the dog to her damage. In the second count, it is alleged that plaintiffs agreed to purchase a dog from defendants; that it was vicious and accustomed to bite mankind, which facts were known to defendants and unknown to plaintiffs; that when defendants brought the animal to plaintiffs' home, they negligently failed to inform plaintiffs of such cruel and furious temper of the beast and allowed it to run at large without proper restraint; that by reason of such negligence Elaine received great bodily injury to her damage in the sum of $25,000.

At the conclusion of the trial, the court peremptorily instructed the jury to return a verdict for defendants. Thereafter a motion for new trial upon the statutory grounds was granted because "the court erred in taking certain questions from the jury."

In order to warrant a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, it was necessary for the court to find in accordance with the allegations of either or both of the two counts. While there was an attempt in the second count to allege a different ground for recovery, in substance it is identical with the first in that both of them charge defendants with negligence in permitting a vicious dog to run at large unattended.

In the first count the allegation of the untamed qualities of the dog are accompanied by the statement that such propensities were within the knowledge of defendants; in the second count it is charged that defendants negligently failed to advise plaintiffs that the dog was vicious.

The facts in proof are that the defendant society, pursuant to its contract with the board of supervisors, was keeping the police dog when plaintiff Anthony called at the pound of the society on a Saturday, inspected the dog, entered the cage where he was kept and was told by defendants that the dog was friendly, "very nice" and a good watch dog with a "husky bark." He had been harbored for about two weeks by defendants. On the following Monday morning in a telephonic conversation, Anthony was told that Brown would arrive at the home of the plaintiffs within thirty minutes with the dog. After his arrival, Brown advised plaintiffs to buy a long chain with which to keep the dog in restraint and to step on his toes if he caused annoyance by jumping upon them. The dog was then turned loose and ran about the yard as Brown wrote a receipt for $1.50 "a general charge that he had to make." Thereupon Anthony Menches paid Brown $1.50. While the dog was running arount, Elaine fed him pieces of steak from her hand. After ten minutes as Brown was departing the dog leaped upon Mrs. Menches, sank his fangs into her mouth and caused her the injuries of which she complained.

Under the state of the pleadings as presented at the trial, the basis of plaintiffs' right to recover must be founded upon the dog bite statute of 1931 (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 384a), which read as follows: "The owner of any dog which shall bite any person while such person is on or in a public place, or lawfully on or in a private place, including the property of the owner of such dog, shall be liable for such damages as may be suffered by the person bitten, regardless of the former viciousness of such dog or the owner's knowledge of such viciousness."

[1] Much of the discussion presented by respondents' brief is to the effect that the society was the owner of the animal and therefore itself and its servant are liable, while appellants contend that the society was merely a keeper and had no title or ownership of the dog or knowledge of its vicious tendencies. It may here be observed that liability for the bite of a dog may attach not only to the owner without reference to knowledge but to a keeper also as well if the latter have knowledge of the viciousness of the animal. Smith v. Royer, 181 Cal. 165, 183 P. 660; Hensley v. McBride, 112 Cal. App. 50, 296 P. 316.

[2] The evidence discloses beyond a peradventure that the plaintiffs dealt with the defendants for the purpose of procuring the ownership of the dog. That ownership became absolute upon delivery of the animal to plaintiffs and the payment by them of the impounding fee requested by Brown. The fact that the ownership had been vested in plaintiffs only ten minutes does not minimize or alter the significance of the acts of the acceptance of the dog and the payment of the impounding fee. Their title to the dog became vested in plaintiffs just as conclusively as though they had housed him for more than three years and had asserted adverse title to him. Title was transferred by virtue of the following facts: (1) That an instrumentality of the state, pursuant to statutory authority (Act 384, Deering's Gen. Laws, 1937) had taken the animal into its custody; (2) the former owner having abandoned his pet; (3) acceptance of the animal, and (4) payment of the poundage. If the title to the animal was not vested in plaintiffs by their acceptance of the dog and the payment of the impounding fee, then all statutory provisions regulating the care and disposition of estray animals (Agricultural Code, §§ 391–416, St.1933, pp. 124–128, and Acts 384 and 384a, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937) are ineffectual for the purpose of governing their treatment and for the purpose of enforcing the payment of liens upon such animals. See Agricultural Code, § 396. Upon payment of the charge made by the society, the ownership of the dog was vested in plaintiffs to the same extent as the purchaser of a thing at a finder's sale becomes its owner. Civ.Code, §§ 1865, 1869, 1870. The dog which caused the suffering of Mrs. Menches was the proper subject of transfer to a stranger by defendant society which had been engaged to perform such office. The transfer was effected prior to its attack upon the unfortunate lady. Therefore, under the dog-bite statute, she has no valid claim against the defendants.

Under the facts disclosed by the record, it is conceivable that the plaintiffs might have stated a cause of action for breach of warranty or for fraud in inducing plaintiff to purchase the dog by making statements as to its qualities without having sufficient knowledge to warrant the declarations with reference thereto. The pleadings before us are not based upon any such claims.

The record is barren of evidence tending to show that defendants were aware of any facts indicating that the dog was vicious. It is therefore unnecessary to pass upon the question whether the second count alleges facts sufficient to permit recovery on the ground of negligence.

Since plaintiff had no right to recover, the court erred in granting the motion for a new trial.

The order is reversed.

W. J. WOOD, and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 311

GEORGE v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

Civ. 13360.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 16, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1099(6)

The holding of Supreme Court on prior appeal that allegations of complaint were sufficient to state cause of action, was "law of case" on subsequent appeal from judgment entered on sustaining of demurrer to amended complaint alleging substantially the same facts.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Law of Case".

2. Appeal and error 🔑1097(2), 1195(1)

A principle or rule of law stated by appellate court and necessary to decision is "law of case" to be thereafter followed in case in trial court and on subsequent appeal, even though appellate court on subsequent appeal might think former decision erroneous.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑821(16)
Whether dangerous condition of street has existed sufficiently long for city to have constructive notice thereof, and whether city has had reasonable time to remedy condition, are "questions of fact" for jury.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

4. Municipal corporations 🔑819(6)
Evidence that alleged defective condition of street was created and accepted by city, and that accident in which plaintiff was injured occurred more than four years thereafter, warranted jury's finding that city had "notice" of defect.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Notice".

5. Negligence 🔑125
In case involving accident due to alleged dangerous condition of premises, evidence of earlier accidents at same place is admissible to prove dangerous condition and that accident resulted therefrom, where circumstances were similar and physical condition of premises was substantially the same.

6. Automobiles 🔑305(6)
In action against city for damages in automobile accident allegedly caused by street defect, admission of testimony of earlier accidents at same place under similar conditions was not error.

7. Trial 🔑412
A litigant withdrawing motion to strike testimony "waives" any error in admission of testimony.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

8. Appeal and error 🔑1170(7)
In action against city for damages allegedly resulting from street defect, refusal to permit city engineer to testify whether plan and design of street conformed to good engineering standards was error, but such error would be disregarded where not prejudicial to city. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑788(1)
To establish city's liability under Public Liability Act, city must have knowledge of dangerous character of condition causing injury. St.1923, p. 675.

10. Trial 🔑228(3)
In action against city for damages allegedly resulting from street defect, instruction relating to city's knowledge of defect need not use any specific words, providing that the proper conception is conveyed to the jury. St.1923, p. 675.

11. Municipal corporations 🔑822(3)
In action against city for damages allegedly resulting from street defect, instruction that city must have had knowledge or notice of dangerous condition of street, sufficiently advised jury that city must have had knowledge of dangerous character of condition causing injury. St.1923, p. 675.

12. Appeal and error 🔑882(12)
A party cannot complain of error in instructions given at request of adversary, where instruction requested by party urging error contained the same vice.

13. Appeal and error 🔑882(12)
A city sued for damages allegedly resulting from street defect could not complain that instruction was erroneous as imposing liability under general doctrine of negligence, where defendant asked and the trial court gave an instruction substantially the same.

14. New trial 🔑143(1)
The verdict of juror cannot be impeached by testimony or affidavits of juror except where affidavits show that verdict was reached by resort to determination of chance. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 2.

15. New trial 🔑143(2)
The striking of testimony of juror testifying on motion for new trial in negligence action, that he had visited scene of accident during trial, was proper, in absence of showing that verdict was reached by resort to determination of chance. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 2.

16. New trial 🔑44(1)
In action against city for damages allegedly resulting from street defect, juror's failure to disclose that prior to trial he had driven over street where accident occurred, was not "misconduct" warranting new trial, where he was not asked on voir dire examination whether he had traveled on such street.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

17. New trial ⚿56

In accident case, juror's statement on voir dire examination that neither she nor husband had been in accident involving personal injuries, whereas husband had been in such accidents, did not warrant new trial, where juror understood question related solely to her, and appellant was not prejudiced.

18. New trial ⚿44(1), 56

A new trial motion on ground of juror's incorrect answers on voir dire examination will not be granted, in absence of prejudice to appellant or dishonest motive of juror in giving willfully false answers.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis Howell Smith, Judge.

Action by Walter George against the City of Los Angeles and another for damages received in automobile accident alleged to have been caused by defective condition of street. From a judgment for the plaintiff, the named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., Frederick von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and Leonard Husar and Bourke Jones, Deputies City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bradner & Weil and Jerold E. Weil, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff after trial before a jury in an action to recover damages received in an automobile accident alleged to have been caused by the defective condition of a street of defendant municipality, defendant city of Los Angeles appeals.

The essential facts are:

Plaintiff filed an original complaint charging defendant city of Los Angeles and defendant Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation with negligence. Thereafter the trial court sustained demurrers of both defendants to the original complaint. Plaintiff thereupon filed an amended complaint as to defendant city, to which a general demurrer was sustained. Subsequently plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered upon the sustaining of the demurrer of defendant municipality to plaintiff's amended complaint.

Our Supreme Court in George v. City of Los Angeles, 11 Cal.2d 303, 79 P.2d 723, held that the facts alleged in the pleadings just mentioned were sufficient to constitute a cause of action against defendants, and reversed the judgment of the superior court.

Plaintiff then filed an amended complaint which embraced the allegations of the original complaint and of the amended complaint. This latter pleading is the one upon which the present trial was had and the allegations therein are substantially those set forth in George v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 11 Cal.2d page 305, 79 P.2d 723.

[1, 2] Appealing defendant urges six propositions for reversal of the judgment. These will be stated and discussed hereunder seriatim.

First: The evidence failed to disclose that:

(a) A dangerous or defective condition existed on the street on which plaintiff was traveling;

(b) Appealing defendant had notice of any dangerous character of the existing physical condition of the street; and

(c) The condition of the street or catch basin therein was the proximate cause of the accident.

This proposition is untenable. There was received substantial evidence in the present case to support the jury's implied finding that substantially all of the facts existed which were alleged in the complaint as amended. This pleading alleged substantially the same facts as were before the Supreme Court on the former appeal. (See George v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 11 Cal.2d page 305, 79 P.2d 723.) In the opinion just mentioned our Supreme Court held that such facts were sufficient if proven to constitute a cause of action against defendant. Therefore, under the doctrine frequently denominated as "the law of the case," we are foreclosed from considering the foregoing proposition now urged by appealing defendant.

The doctrine of "the law of the case" is this: Where, upon an appeal an appellate court in deciding the appeal states in its opinion a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision, such principle or rule becomes the law of the case and will be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon a subsequent appeal, and this, although in a later appeal of the case the appellate court may be of the opinion that the former decision was erroneous. (Tally v. Ganahl, 151 Cal. 418, 421, 90 P. 1049; Balfour v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 395, 399, 55 P. 1062.)

[3, 4] Second: The appealing defendant had no knowledge of the defective or dangerous character or dangerous or defective condition existing in the street.

This proposition is likewise untenable. It is conceded by the appealing defendant that the alleged defective condition was created and accepted by it in February, 1932. The present accident occurred April 11, 1936. Therefore, under the established rule that it is a question of fact for the trial jury to determine whether the dangerous condition in a public street has existed for a sufficient length of time to constitute constructive notice and also whether a reasonable time to remedy the condition has existed, we are bound by the finding of the jury that the defendant municipality had knowledge of the dangerous and defective condition which existed in the public street. (See Wise v. City of Los Angeles, 9 Cal. App.2d 364, 366, 49 P.2d 1122, 50 P.2d 1079; Cressey v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.App.2d 745, 747, 53 P.2d 172.)

[5, 6] Third: The trial court committed prejudicial error in permitting a witness to testify that (a) on two previous occasions he had seen automobiles run up on the curb at approximately the place where the accident in the instant case occurred, and (b) in a third case he saw an automobile upon the sidewalk at approximately the same place.

This proposition is also without merit.

(a) The rule is established that in cases of accident due to the alleged dangerous condition of premises it is proper to receive evidence of earlier accidents occurring at the same place as tending to prove the condition to have been a dangerous one and that the accident in question may have resulted from such condition. As a basis for such testimony it should be shown that the physical condition of the premises was substantially the same at the time of each accident and that the circumstances and conditions under which the several accidents occurred were similar. (Wilkerson v. City of El Monte, 17 Cal.App.2d 615, 618, 62 P.2d 790.) However, it is not necessary that it be shown that the several accidents occurred under circumstances precisely the same. (Magnuson v. City of Stockton, 116 Cal.App. 532, 535, 3 P.2d 30. In the present case there was evidence from which it might be inferred that the first two accidents relative to which the witness testified, for all substantial purposes took place under conditions similar to the accident in question.

[7] (b) Appealing defendant moved to strike out the testimony of the witness relative to the third accident but before the judge ruled upon the motion counsel for the appealing defendant withdrew the same. By so doing he waived any error in the admission of the testimony, the law being established that, where counsel moves to strike out testimony to which he has previously objected and before the ruling on the motion to strike withdraws the motion, he thereby waives any objection he has made to the admissibility of the testimony. (D'Avanzo v. Manno, 16 Cal. App.2d 346, 348, 60 P.2d 524; Driscoll v. California Street Cable R. Co., 80 Cal.App. 208, 221, 250 P. 1062; Bronge v. Mowat & Co., 29 Cal.App. 388, 402, 155 P. 827.) In view of our conclusions relative to the admissibility of the foregoing testimony it was not error for the trial judge to instruct the jury as follows:

"Evidence has been admitted as to other accidents prior to the accident involved in this case. This evidence may be considered by you, together with other evidence in the case, in determining the following:

"Whether or not the condition of Allesandro street at the time and at the scene of the accident involved in this case was or was not dangerous;

"What caused the accident involved in this case and in what manner the accident involved in this case occurred;

"Whether or not the defendant city knew or should have known of the dangerous condition, if you find there was such condition."

[8] Fourth: It was prejudicial error for the trial court to sustain objections to the following question asked an assistant engineer of defendant municipality:

(a) "Q. By Mr. Husar: Now, Mr. Swan, have you examined the profiles, the plans and design and have you made a further examination of plaintiff's map up here on the board, plaintiff's exhibit number one with reference to the physical condition of Allesandro Street at and near the intersection of Rosebud Avenue, from about a hundred feet southerly of that intersection of Allesandro Street and Rosebud Avenue to a point approximately one hundred and fifty feet north of said intersection? A. Yes, I have.

"Q. Now having both that and the physical facts in mind, can you state whether or not such design and construction, and the physical conditions of Allesandro Street and as described in the previous question in said locality, on the night of April 10th and in the early morning of April 11th, 1936, as it existed on the late night of April 10th and early morning of April 11th, of 1936, were in accordance with and in compliance with good engineering practise and standards in this community? A. They were.

"Mr. Weil: I move the answer be stricken out for the purpose of an objection.

"The Court: You may make your objection and it may be deemed to proceed the answer.

"Mr. Weil: We make the objection on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and whether it is in accordance with good engineering plans or not, is not a matter that is within the issues of this case and we object to it on all of those grounds.

"The Court: The objection will be sustained and the answer may go out, and the Jury will disregard it."

(b) "Q. By Mr. Husar: Now Mr. Swan, having the physical facts in mind, did the contours of such intersecting streets, namely Rosebud Avenue and Allesandro Street, so constructed, conform to the customary standards of design and construction for the disposal of surface waters on streets—may I add to that—I think it is proper to add to that—customary standards of design and construction in this community—for the disposal of surface waters on the streets?

"Mr. Weil: Now to which, your Honor, we object on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and not within the issues of this case.

"Mr. Husar: As authority for that, your Honor, I cite to your Honor the case of Wilkerson vs. The City of El Monte.

"Mr. Weil: Well, if the Court please: —

"The Court: The objection will be sustained."

(c) "Q. By Mr. Husar: Now, Mr. Swan, in designing the construction of the catch basin—I will withdraw that and put it this way. In designing and constructing a catch basin in a street with a grade like that in Allesandro Street, with a five per cent grade, how are they constructed with reference to the street surface?

* * * * *

"The Court: The objection will be sustained to that question."

In view of the decisions in Long v. John Breuner Co., 36 Cal.App. 630, 636, 172 P. 1132; Martin v. Angel City Baseball Assn., 3 Cal.App.2d 586, 589, 40 P.2d 287, and McStay v. Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank, 5 Cal.App.2d 595, 601, 43 P.2d 560, it was error to sustain objections to the foregoing questions. However, from an examination of the record we are of the opinion that the error was not prejudicial to defendant municipality and that therefore we must disregard it, pursuant to the mandate of article VI, section 4½ of the Constitution of the state of California.

Fifth: The trial court committed prejudicial error in instructing the jury as follows:

(a) "If you find that at the time of the accident involved in this case that Allesandro Street, at the scene of the accident, was in a dangerous condition, as that term is defined to you hereinafter, and, if you find that the defendant city had knowledge or notice of the dangerous condition (if you find such condition existed) for such length of time prior to said accident as to give the defendant city a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or notice, and prior to said accident, to remedy such condition or to take such action as might be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such condition and that the defendant city failed or neglected for such reasonable time to remedy such condition or to take such action, and, if you find that the plaintiff, while lawfully and in the exercise of ordinary care driving his automobile on said street, suffered personal injuries or property damage resulting from such dangerous condition, or in other words proximately caused by such dangerous condition, if any, then your verdict must be for the plaintiff."

(b) "It was the duty of the defendant city of Los Angeles to exercise ordinary care to maintain Allesandro Street in a reasonably safe condition for its use in a proper manner, and if a dangerous condition existed on Allesandro Street at the time and place of the accident, it is not necessary, in order that the city of Los Angeles be liable, that such condition be due to any defect created in the street after its construction, but the city would be liable if such dangerous condition arose from the construction of the street in the first instance; provided, of course, the other elements necessary to impose liability and explained to you elsewhere in these instructions exist. In other words, even if a dangerous condition is inherent in the very nature of an improvement constructed, the city would be liable for injuries resulting from a dangerous condition so created or arising, as it would be for injuries resulting from a dangerous or defective condition arising from disrepair, or deterioration."

This proposition is without merit.

[9-11] (a) It is the unquestioned law in California that to establish liability of a defendant municipality under the provisions of the 1923 Public Liability Act (Stats.1923, p. 675, Act 5619, Vol. 2, Deering's Gen.Laws (1937) 2630), it is necessary that the defendant city have knowledge of the dangerous character of the condition which causes the injury. (Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 363, 54 P.2d 725; Whiting v. City of National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 165, 69 P.2d 990; Beckley v. Vezu, 23 Cal.App.2d 371, 377, 73 P.2d 296.) We are of the opinion that the instruction set forth in paragraph (a), supra, fully meets the requirement of this rule. It is not essential that any specific words be used providing that the proper conception is conveyed to the jury. It is our view that the words, "If you find that the defendant city had knowledge or notice of the dangerous condition," as used in the questioned instruction, is equivalent to advising them that they must find that defendant city had knowledge of the "dangerous character of the condition which caused the injury."

[12, 13] (b) Appealing defendants' contention that the instruction set forth in paragraph (b), supra, was erroneous because it in effect instructed the jury that defendant municipality would be liable under the general doctrine of negligence, may not be urged by said defendant, for the reason that the law is established that a party may not complain of error in instructions given at the request of his adversary, where an instruction requested by the party urging error contained the same vice. (Jesse v. Giguiere, 24 Cal.App.2d 160, 163, 74 P.2d 310; Miller v. Dollar Steamship Lines, Inc., 19 Cal.App.2d 206, 212, 64 P.2d 1163.) In the present case appealing defendant asked and the court gave an instruction substantially the same as the one set forth in paragraph (b) above. It read as follows:

"The defendant, City of Los Angeles, is not an insurer of the safety of travelers on its streets, but is required only to exercise ordinary care to construct and maintain its streets in a reasonably safe condition for those using them in a lawful manner with ordinary care for their own safety."

Sixth: The trial court committed prejudicial error in not granting appealing defendants' motion for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of:

(a) Juror George A. Long who at the hearing on defendants' motion for a new trial testified that during the course of the trial he visited the scene of the accident;

(b) Juror James V. Garland, who failed to disclose on his voir dire examination that on various occasions prior to the trial he had driven over the street where the accident occurred; and

(c) Juror Pauline Gates, who stated on voir dire examination, contrary to the fact, that neither she nor her husband had been involved in an accident in which personal injuries were suffered.

The foregoing proposition is untenable.

[14, 15] (a) After permitting, over objection, Juror Long to testify that during the course of the trial he had visited the scene of the accident, the trial judge granted plaintiff's motion to strike his testimony from the record. This ruling was correct, since the law is established in this jurisdiction that the verdict of a juror may not be impeached by the testimony or affidavits of a juror except where the affidavits show that the verdict was reached by a resort to the determination of chance within the meaning of subdivision 2 of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (Phipps v. Patterson, 27 Cal.App.2d 545, 546, 81 P.2d 437.) Therefore, there was no testimony before the trial court lending support to the alleged misconduct of Juror Long.

[16] (b) Juror Garland was not asked upon his voir dire examination whether he had ever traveled upon the street where the accident occurred, and in the counter affidavits filed on the motion for a new trial he stated that had he been asked such a question he would have answered it in the affirmative. There is, therefore, no showing that this juror wilfully concealed any fact from the court.

[17, 18] (c) Juror Gates on her voir dire examination when asked whether she or her husband had been involved in an accident in which personal injuries were suffered, replied, "No." However, it developed on the motion for a new trial that her husband two years before she had met him had received an injury to his hand in an automobile accident and also slight injuries in an automobile accident thirteen years before the present trial. Juror Gates in her counter affidavit, used on the motion for a new trial, said that she understood the question to relate to her solely. We are of the opinion that from the foregoing facts appealing defendant was not in any way prejudiced by the juror's failure to understand the question and properly answer it. Therefore, since it is established that a motion for a new trial will not be granted upon the ground that a juror upon voir dire examination has incorrectly answered questions, in the absence of a showing that (1) prejudice has resulted to the appealing party, or (2) there were wilfully false and untruthful answers given by the juror which would lead to the inference that the juror was animated by a dishonest motive in qualifying, the trial judge properly denied the appealing defendant's motion for a new trial predicated upon the alleged misconduct of Juror Gates (Mast v. Claxton, 107 Cal.App. 59, 67, 290 P. 48.)

The record is free from error. It discloses zealous and sincere effort of the patient, kindly, industrious judge who, since the filing of this appeal, has passed to his final reward.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 327

HEDLUND v. SUTTER MEDICAL SERVICE CO. et al.

Civ. 11917.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 20, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 20, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 18, 1942.

1. Hospitals 🔑7

Where plaintiff went to a hospital having the name over the door for an examination and the hospital's receptionist sent plaintiff after she had paid the cashier to a physician with offices in the building where plaintiff received an examination and was sent to a technician in the building for an allergy test and the physician later admitted her to the hospital for treatment of her injuries without reference to the hospital, hospital was "estopped" to deny that technician was an "employee", and hence was liable for technician's negligence.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employee" and "Estop".

2. Principal and agent 🔑25(1)

Where the duty, the violation of which constitutes the tort sued for, springs from no contract with or relation to the principal, the party may not be "estopped" from denying the wrongdoer was his agent, even though he had held him out as such, but whenever the tort consists of a violation of a duty springing from the contract between the parties, the ostensible principal is liable to the same extent in an action ex delicto as in one ex contractu.

3. Estoppel 🔑115

Where issue that defendant was estopped was first raised by defendant's answer, facts constituting estoppel could be proved without pleading them in complaint.

4. Hospitals 🔑.

Where a hospital corporation either contracted or led plaintiff to believe that it was contracting with her for medical services, the hospital was not relieved from liability for its technician's negligence resulting in plaintiff's injuries, on the ground that hospital could not lawfully practice medicine, as the restriction was for the benefit of the public, and the parties were not in "pari delicto".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Pari Delicto".

5. Hospitals 🔑7

Hospitals are liable for tortious acts of their physicians where the hospital had contracted to furnish medical services.

6. Contracts 🔑138(1)

If refusal to enforce or rescind an illegal bargain would produce a harmful effect on parties for whose protection the law making the bargain illegal exists, enforcement or rescission, whichever is appropriate, is allowed.

7. Master and servant 🔑333

In action against a hospital corporation and attending physician for personal injuries resulting from a negligently conducted allergy test, where attending physician and technician giving the test testified that technician was physician's employee and hospital was estopped to deny that technician was its employee, a verdict for attending physician was not fatally inconsistent with a verdict against the hospital, since the defendants were independently liable, if at all, under the doctrine of "respondeat superior".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Respondeat Superior".

8. Judgment 🔑630

A judgment in favor of one joint tortfeasor is not evidence in favor of or a bar to an action against another, except where the liability of the latter is purely derivative or he is entitled to indemnity from the other.

9. Appeal and error 🔑880(3)

One joint tort-feasor against whom a judgment was rendered cannot complain that the other was erroneously exonerated in the same action, since the liability of joint tort-feasors is joint and several, and neither has a right of contribution from the other.

10. Master and servant 🔑333

Where master's liability was solely by reason of servant's conduct, if the master directed servant's tortious act and is thus independently liable, the master may be held although the servant is exonerated.

11. Appeal and error 🔑880(3)
Hospitals 🔑7

In action against hospital corporation and attending physician for injuries resulting from a negligently conducted allergy test, where hospital was estopped from denying that technician conducting the test was its employee, hospital was equally "estopped" to assert that attending physician was technician's employer, and hence could not take advantage of judgment in favor of the attending physician on appeal.

12. Hospitals 🔑8

In action against hospital corporation for personal injuries resulting from a negligently conducted allergy test, evidence supported verdict for plaintiff on issues of negligence.

13. Hospitals 🔑8

In action against hospital corporation for personal injuries resulting from a negligently conducted allergy test, whether plaintiff was injured from the application of a harmful solution to her arm or from an unusual, but natural reaction to a properly applied test was for jury.

14. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)

In action for injuries allegedly resulting from a negligently conducted allergy test, where defendant's medical expert testified that the reaction suffered by plaintiff could have been caused by a proper allergy test, that plaintiff's expert was permitted to testify that he had never seen anything like the condition of plaintiff's arm as a result of such test was not prejudicial.

15. Appeal and error 🔑1053(3)

In action for injuries from a negligently conducted allergy test, where plaintiff's expert testified fully on the proper manner of giving allergy skin tests and effects to be expected from tests properly and improperly given, and defendant's expert testified that the usual solution used in such test caused no painful sensation, and jury found that the usual solution was not used, plaintiff's expert's evidence that when he saw plaintiff's arm he concluded that something was wrong was cured by an instruction that jury should weigh the reasons given by one expert against those of another and the reasons for each opinion.

16. Trial 🔑296(3)

In action for injuries resulting from a negligently conducted allergy test, instruction that it was the duty of defendant hospital to exercise ordinary care to furnish suitable supplies for care of a patient was required to be taken in connection with other instructions, to apply only if jury found plaintiff was a patient, as the hospital was estopped to deny otherwise and that the liquid supplied for use on her as a patient was harmful, and as so limited, was proper.

17. Pleading ⚷406(1)

In action against hospital for personal injuries resulting from a negligently conducted allergy test, where defendant tried the issue of liability without objection to the complaint, any defect in complaint was "waived".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

18. Damages ⚷132(8)

An award of $3,750 to a waitress for injuries from a negligently conducted allergy test resulting in small scars on plaintiff's left arm was not excessive.

19. Costs ⚷90

The statute requiring the trial court to award costs to such of defendants not united in interest and making separate defenses by separate answers as have judgment in their favor is "mandatory". Code Civ.Proc. § 1032(b).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory".

20. Costs ⚷90

Where physician and president of a hospital corporation sought to be held liable for negligence of a technician were represented by the same attorney and filed separate answers they were not "united in interest" within the statute relating to imposition of costs, since each could be held liable only on the theory he was bound by the technician's tortious conduct, and the relation of each to the technician was different, and hence where plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant hospital but did not recover against the president and physician, the latter defendants were entitled to their costs. Code Civ.Proc. § 1032(b).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "United in Interest".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Action by Emma Hedlund against Sutter Medical Service Company and others for personal injuries from alleged negligent treatment. From an adverse judgment, named defendant appeals and remaining defendants appeal from an order striking their cost bill.

Judgment affirmed. Order reversed with directions.

Hadsell, Sweet, Ingalls & Lamb and Hadsell, Sweet, Ingalls & Carroll, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

A. D. Ericksen, of Oakland, and Johnson & Harmon and Wm. H. Henderson, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice, pro tem.

This is an appeal by Sutter Medical Service Company from a judgment against it and in favor of plaintiff entered following the verdict of a jury. The appellant is the owner and operator of the Sutter Hospital in San Francisco. The defendant S. Nicholas Jacobs is a licensed physician and the president of appellant company. The evidence shows that a group of doctors known as "Sutter Hospital Group of Doctors" have their offices on the first floor of the building occupied by the Sutter Hospital. The hospital and the group of doctors have a common bank account and a common bookkeeping system, but it is appellant's contention that they operate entirely independently, the doctors belonging to the group being all employed by Dr. Jacobs as president of the group, paying rent to the appellant company for the office space occupied by them in the hospital building, and being paid for their services from the receipts of the group by checks on the common bank account. The testimony of Dr. John E. Morgan, another defendant who was actually in charge of plaintiff's treatment, was sufficient to cast grave doubt upon appellant's claim that this was the actual arrangement. Dr. Morgan testified that he was employed at a monthly salary by Dr. Jacobs "as a resident physician at the Sutter Hospital," that at the time of his employment Dr. Jacobs said nothing to him about the group of doctors and spoke only of his taking a position as resident physician, and that he knew very little about the group of doctors until the day that he was called to the witness stand. However, we do not find it necessary to inquire further into the intricacies of the relationship between the appellant and the Sutter Hospital Group of Doctors for the reason that we are satisfied that the verdict and judgment against appellant can well be rested upon the doctrine of estoppel.

Plaintiff, who is a waitress belonging to the Waitresses' Union in Oakland, had long been a sufferer from asthma. On September 28, 1939, she went to the Sutter Hospital. Over the door of the building she saw the words "Sutter Hospital." She had no particular doctor in mind. She went to the desk in the reception room and the lady at the desk asked her what she wanted. She told her: "I was troubled with asthma and I wanted a general examination." The receptionist took her history and she told the receptionist that "I was troubled with asthma and I was advised to come to the Sutter Hospital because, my sister advised me to go there and have an examination and see if they could find anything that would help me. So she ordered me in to Dr. Morgan." Plaintiff had never met Dr. Morgan before and did not ask to see him or any particular doctor. Before she was taken to Dr. Morgan's office the receptionist gave her a bill for $26.50 and she went to the office and paid that amount to the cashier. Dr. Morgan after an examination of the plaintiff and the taking of an X-ray sent her to Miss Lockwood, a technician in the hospital building, for an allergy test. It was as a result of this test that she suffered the injury to her arm for which the jury awarded her a verdict against appellant. Even after her arm became seriously swollen and inflamed nothing was said to her about the Sutter Hospital Group of Doctors, and on the day following her examination Dr. Jacobs admitted her to the Sutter Hospital as a bed patient for free treatment of her injured arm.

[1, 2] The trial judge gave an instruction on estoppel as against appellant. The facts above recited would justify a finding by the jury that appellant was estopped to deny that Miss Lockwood in giving the allergy test was its employee. Donnelly v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 117 Cal. 417, 49 P. 559; Lowmiller v. Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc., 101 Cal.App. 147, 281 P. 433, 282 P. 537; Hannon v. Siegel-Cooper Co., 167 N.Y. 244, 60 N.E. 597, 52 L.R.A. 429; Adelphia Hotel Co. v. Providence Stock Co., 3 Cir., 277 F. 905; Standard Oil Co. v. Gentry, 241 Ala. 62, 1 So.2d 29; Augusta Friedman's Shop v. Yeates, 216 Ala. 434, 113 So. 299; Manning v. Leavitt Co., 90 N.H. 167, 5 A.2d 667, 122 A.L.R. 249; Fields, Inc., v. Evans, 36 Ohio App. 153, 172 N.E. 702; Christiansen v. Fantle Bros., Inc., 56 S.D. 350, 228 N.W. 407; Maloney Tank Mfg. Co. v. Mid-Continent Petroleum Corp., 10 Cir., 49 F.2d 146; Rhone v. Try Me Cab Co., 62 App.D.C. 201, 65 F.2d 834. The basis of the rule in tort cases is well stated in Hannon v. Siegel-Cooper Co., supra [167 N.Y. 244, 60 N.E. 598, 52 L.R.A. 429]: "It may very well be that where the duty, the violation of which constitutes the tort sued for, springs from no contract with, nor relation to, the principal, a party could not be estopped from denying that the wrongdoer was his agent, even though he had held him out as such. In such a case the representation of the principal would be no factor in producing the injury complained of. But, whenever the tort consists of a violation of a duty which springs from the contract between the parties, the ostensible principal should be liable to the same extent in an action ex delicto as in one ex contractu." We cannot agree with appellant that under the facts the jury was not entitled to find that plaintiff, relying upon appearances for which appellant was responsible, believed that she was contracting for medical services with the appellant.

[3] The facts constituting the estoppel could be proved without pleading them in the complaint, since the issue was first raised by the answer of appellant. Wilson v. Grey, 49 Cal.App.2d 228, 121 P.2d 514, and cases there cited.

[4] It is true that appellant could not lawfully practice medicine, but this fact should not avail it in an action of this character. It either did contract, or led appellant to believe that it was contracting, with her for medical services. The same question was disposed of in Hannon v. Cooper-Siegel Co., supra, where the court said:

> "The public health law, by section 164, makes it a misdemeanor for any person to practice, or to hold himself out to the public as practicing dentistry * * * without being licensed to practice as such * * * and it would seem that the action of the defendant, in assuming to carry on the business of dentistry, was illegal and ultra vires. But, though it was beyond the corporate powers of the defendant to engage in the business, this does not relieve it from the torts of its servants committed therein (Bissell v. [Michigan, etc.], Railroad Co., 22 N.Y. 258), and the unanimous affirmance of the appellate division is conclusive to the effect that it either practiced dentistry or held itself out as practicing dentistry."

[5] The case of Pilger v. City of Paris Dry Goods Co., 86 Cal.App. 277, 261 P. 328, announcing a contrary rule, was expressly disapproved in Inderbitzen v. Lane Hospital, 124 Cal.App. 462, 12 P.2d 744, 13 P.2d 905, and as pointed out in that case both before and since the decision of the Pilger case hospitals have been held liable in this state for tortious acts of physicians where the hospital had contracted to furnish medical services. Brown v. La Societe Francaise, 138 Cal. 475, 71 P. 516; Bowman v. Southern Pacific Co., 55 Cal.App. 734, 204 P. 403; Bellandi v. Park Sanitarium Ass'n, 214 Cal. 472, 6 P.2d 508; Criss v. Angelus Hospital Ass'n, 13 Cal.App.2d 412, 56 P.2d 1274. Many cases to like effect from other jurisdictions are collected in the Inderbitzen case at page 466 of 124 Cal.App., 12 P.2d 744, 13 P.2d 905 and to these cases may be added the following since decided: Edwards v. West Texas Hospital, Tex.Civ.App., 89 S.W.2d 801; Giusti v. C. H. Weston Co., 165 Or. 525, 108 P.2d 1010; Hansch v. Hackett, 190 Wash. 97, 66 P.2d 1129.

[6] The useful legal fiction by which everyone is presumed to know the law, relied upon by the court in Iterman v. Baker, 214 Ind. 308, 15 N.E.2d 365, to reach a different conclusion, becomes a medium of injustice when applied in a case of this character. The maxim "No one can take advantage of his own wrong" (Civ.Code, § 3517) would seem to be more applicable. The restriction upon the practice of medicine is for the protection of the public, including plaintiff in this case, and not at all for the protection of one who wrongfully engages in its practice. The parties are in no sense in pari delicto. The rule properly to be applied in such cases is couched in the following language in the Restatement of the Law of Contracts, volume II, section 601:

"If refusal to enforce or rescind an illegal bargain would produce a harmful effect on parties for whose protection the law making the bargain illegal exists, enforcement or rescission, whichever is appropriate, is allowed."

Rescission would not afford plaintiff adequate relief for the injury done her. The return of her $26.50 paid for the examination would be a poor substitute for the $3,750 damages allowed her in this case for her injuries. The rule above quoted from the Restatement has more than once found application in the decisions of our courts. Eberhard v. Pacific Southwest Loan & Mortgage Corp., 215 Cal. 226, 228, 9 P.2d 302; Bliss v. California Co-operative Producers, 23 Cal.App.2d 245, 72 P.2d 885; Western Oil, etc., Co. v. Venago Oil Corp., 218 Cal. 733, 745, 24 P.2d 971, 88 A.L.R. 1271; Rossi v. Jedlick, 115 Cal.App. 230, 235, 1 P.2d 1065; Savings Bank v. Burns, 104 Cal. 473, 480, 38 P. 102. To refuse to apply it in this case would permit one who would otherwise be bound by a tort liability to escape that liability on the sole ground that in the commission of the tort it was violating a law enacted not for its, but for plaintiff's protection.

[7] Appellant suggests, without citation of any authority, that, if the appellant hospital is held on the theory of estoppel to deny that Miss Lockwood was its employee, the verdict in favor of Dr. Jacobs is fatally inconsistent with the verdict against the hospital in view of Dr. Jacobs' and Miss Lockwood's testimony that she was Dr. Jacobs' employee. Appellant doubtless has in mind the principle enunciated in Bradley v. Rosenthal, 154 Cal. 420, 97 P. 875, 129 Am.St.Rep. 171, that where master and servant are jointly sued for the alleged negligence of the servant alone, which the master did not direct and in which he did not participate, a verdict in favor of the servant "ex propria vigore relieves the principal of responsibility and may be availed of by the principal for that purpose." This case does not fall into that pattern. Here the act of negligence was Miss Lockwood's not Dr. Jacobs', and if Dr. Jacobs and appellant hospital were liable they were both liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The hospital's liability was in no sense dependent upon any act of Dr. Jacobs and vice versa. Miss Lockwood was not a party defendant and was not exonerated by the jury. The rule applying to joint tort feasors generally is that judgment in favor of one joint tort feasor is not a bar to a recovery against the other.

[8] "Neither is a judgment in favor of one joint tort-feasor, evidence in favor of or a bar to an action against another, except where the liability of the latter is purely derivative or he is entitled to indemnity from the other." Freeman on Judgments, 5th Ed., vol. 2, p. 1213.

The question was elaborately discussed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper M. & S. Co., 225 U.S. 111, 32 S.Ct. 641, 642, 56 L.Ed. 1009, Ann.Cas.1913E., 875, and the rule declared that a judgment in favor of one joint tort feasor is not a bar to a recovery against the other except "where the liability of the defendant is altogether dependent upon the culpability of one exonerated in a prior suit, upon the same facts, when sued by the same plaintiff. * * * The unilateral character of the estoppel of an adjudication in such cases is justified by the injustice which would result in allowing a recovery against a defendant for conduct of another, when that other has been exonerated in a direct suit. The cases in which it has been enforced are cases where the relation between the defendants in the two suits has been that of principal and agent, master and servant, or indemnitor and indemnitee."

[9, 10] The quotation from Freeman and the Bigelow case deal with the effect of a judgment in favor of one joint tort feasor when the other is later sued in a separate action, but it has been held in California that the principle is no different where the two are joined in one action. Since the liability of joint tort feasors is joint and several, and since neither has a right of contribution from the other, it is settled that one joint tort feasor against whom a judgment was rendered cannot complain that the other was erroneously exonerated in the same action. "The appellant, however, cannot take advantage of an error in favor of his codefendants. The liability is joint and several, and, if the defendant is liable, he cannot complain of the verdict in favor of his codefendants, who are equally liable." Talcott Land Co. v. Hershiser, 184 Cal. 748, 756, 195 P. 653, 656. Even in the case of master and servant, where the liability arises solely by reason of the servant's conduct, if the master directed the servant's tortious act and is thus independently liable, he may be held although the servant is exonerated. Benson v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 777, 171 P. 948. We recognize that in the Benson case no verdict was returned for or against the servant, but the case was treated by the court as one in which the failure to return a verdict was tantamount to a verdict in the servant's favor. It was cited to this effect in Blackwell v. American Film Co., 189 Cal. 689, 698, 209 P. 999.

We conclude that the judgment in favor of Dr. Jacobs cannot be taken advantage of by the appellant on this appeal. Ohlson v. Frazier, 2 Cal.App.2d 708, 715, 39 P.2d 429; Jennings v. Day, 7 Cal.App.2d 555, 557, 46 P.2d 193; Bezera v. Associated Oil Co., 117 Cal.App. 139, 142, 3 P.2d 622; Blackwell v. American Film Co., supra; Talcott Land Co. v. Hershiser, supra.

[11] The same result can be as well reached in this case in another fashion. If appellant hospital is estopped to deny that Miss Lockwood was its employee in administering the tests to plaintiff in this action, it would seem to be equally estopped to assert against the plaintiff that Dr. Jacobs was Miss Lockwood's employer.

[12] The verdict finds support in the evidence. Plaintiff testified that Miss Lockwood, after scraping her left arm in twenty-four places, dropped a solution onto each abrasion from a dropper. As soon as the liquid touched the arm it commenced to have a burning sensation. Plaintiff said: "Oh, my God, nurse, it is burning. What are you doing, putting acid in or something, it is burning something terrible." It was a sharp burning, just as if you put your hand in a stove. Plaintiff complained of the burning sensation when the first drop was applied but Miss Lockwood continued to apply the solution, although plaintiff continued to complain, until it had been applied to all twenty-four abrasions. After the liquid had been applied to all twenty-four scratches a different powder, for separate food tests, was put on each scratch. The arm swelled up and became very red and painful. Miss Lockwood then proceeded to scrape the right arm and applied different liquids, each from a small phial, to the abrasions on that arm. There was no sensation of burning in the right arm and no untoward developments in that arm from the application of the liquids. Plaintiff demanded that something be done for the left arm to prevent possible infection from her coat sleeve and Dr. Morgan was called in and directed Miss Lockwood to bandage the arm. The arm was so painful that night that plaintiff got little sleep and it was still burning, uncomfortable, red and very swollen the next morning. The abrasions were all "kind of greenish and pus in these openings." The plaintiff returned to the hospital the next day and Dr. Morgan and Dr. Jacobs examined her arm. Dr. Jacobs said: "If anything does happen to your arm and you are not in the hospital, we are not responsible, but we will admit you to the hospital free of charge." They put her to bed in the hospital immediately. After two or three days in the hospital the swelling and pain in the arm subsided but the abrasions "were red and yellow and green." She asked Dr. Morgan while she was in the hospital what had happened to her arm and Dr. Morgan said that he did not know. As a result of the injury to her arm there are small scars where the abrasions were made which become red when plaintiff gets warm or when she is not feeling well. Since waitresses are required to work in short-sleeved uniforms this has resulted in its being impossible for her to get any but casual employment at her trade.

Miss Lockwood testified that the liquid applied to the abrasions on the left arm was tenth-normal sodium hydroxid which is admittedly standard for such tests. Dr. Twain, an expert produced by plaintiff, testified that such a solution is not harmful to the human body, but that sodium hydroxid is a caustic and in stronger solution will destroy the tissues. He further testified that you seldom get a reaction from an allergy test in less than an hour and very seldom get any severe reactions from the skin-scratch tests of the kind made upon plaintiff's left arm, and that in the performance of the test you might get a very slight burning, but definitely would not get an intense burning. Dr. Tainter, testifying for appellant, stated that if a strong solution of sodium hydroxid was placed on a scratch pain would be manifest in "ten seconds at the most, maybe before," but that there would be no pain from a tenth-normal solution.

This evidence is ample, if believed by the jury to support a finding that some corrosive liquid was applied to plaintiff's left arm resulting in the injuries which she suffered.

[13] Dr. Twain on cross-examination testified that you might in an extreme case get a reaction from food tests which would result in an arm condition such as plaintiff suffered. This admission would not prevent the jury from finding for plaintiff. Plaintiff testified that the extreme burning sensation commenced with the application of the first drop of the solution and before any powders were applied. Her arm became painful and inflamed immediately. By the time the powders were put on "I don't really know the reaction because everything was burning"; and when asked if the burning increased when the powder was put on she replied: "I don't know. I think it remained the same." It was for the jury to decide whether plaintiff suffered her injuries from the application of a harmful solution, or from an unusual but natural reaction to a properly applied test.

[14] Appellant complains that Dr. Twain was permitted to testify that he had never seen anything like the condition of plaintiff's arm as a result of allergy tests. Assuming that it was error to allow this testimony we cannot find on the record that prejudice resulted. Dr. Tainter, appellant's expert, when asked if the reaction suffered by plaintiff in her left arm could have been caused by a proper allergy test answered: "Yes, that sort of reaction is caused by an occasional—fortunately uncommon, not very usual, allergy reaction."

[15] Dr. Twain was also allowed to testify that when he saw plaintiff's arm. "I naturally came to the conclusion that something was not proper * * * that something was wrong, something had gone wrong." While this testimony may have gone beyond the limits allowed to an expert witness (Hurwit v. Prudential Insurance Co., 45 Cal.App.2d 74, 113 P.2d 691) Dr. Twain testified fully on the proper manner of giving skin tests for allergy generally and the effects to be expected from tests properly and improperly given. The only question of negligence submitted to the jury was whether the "condition resulted from the application of too strong a solution of sodium hydroxid or some other corrosive substance to plaintiff's arm." The court in this respect also instructed the jury: "If you find from the evidence that Miss Lockwood * * * used the fluid that she testified that she used—that is, one-tenth normal sodium hydroxid, then your verdict must be against plaintiff and in favor of defendants." It thus appears that the jury must have found that Miss Lockwood used some corrosive and harmful liquid instead of one-tenth normal sodium hydroxid. In arriving at this conclusion they must have believed plaintiff's testimony that her arm started to burn violently when the liquid was first applied as well as the testimony given both by ap-pellant's expert, Dr. Tainter, and Dr. Twain, that there would be no painful sensation from the use of a one-tenth normal solution of sodium hydroxid. This was the ultimate question decided by the jury and in deciding it they were instructed that they must weigh "the reasons given by one (expert) against those of another" and "should consider such expert opinion and should weigh the reasons, if any, given for it." A similar instruction was held to cure the error in the admission of expert testimony in Hurwit v. Prudential Insurance Co., supra.

Appellant complains of several instructions:

1. The instruction on estoppel. This has been sufficiently covered and we conclude that the giving of the instruction was proper.

[16] 2. An instruction that "it is the duty of a hospital to exercise ordinary care to furnish to the attendants of a patient suitable supplies, equipment and facilities commensurate with the requirements of the case. * * *" The instruction was technically correct. Payne v. Santa Barbara Cottage Hospital, 2 Cal.App.2d 270, 37 P.2d 1061. Taken in connection with the other instructions the jury must have understood this instruction only to be applicable if they found first that plaintiff was a patient of the hospital, or that the hospital was estopped to deny that fact, and second that the liquid supplied for use on her as patient was harmful and not innocuous. So limited the instruction was proper.

3. An instruction on the factors to be considered by the jury in determining whether the doctors and nurses in charge of plaintiff were employees of the hospital, we find no error therein.

[17] It is claimed that the complaint did not state a cause of action against appellant. Any defect in the complaint, if such existed, was cured by the conduct of appellant at the trial. Counsel by trying the issue of liability of appellant without objection waived any defect in the complaint. Reed v. Parra, 203 Cal. 430, 264 P. 757; Say v. Barber, 202 Cal. 679, 262 P. 312; Pasquale v. Pasquale, 219 Cal. 408, 27 P.2d 76; Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal.App. 318, 147 P. 90.

[18] The trial judge on motion for new trial reduced the judgment from $5,000 to $3,750. This amount is patently not excessive.

Defendants Morgan and Jacobs have appealed from an order striking out their cost bill. Subdivision (b) of section 1032, Code of Civil Procedure, provides: "When there are several defendants in any action mentioned in subdivision (a) of this section, not united in interest, and making separate defenses by separate answers, and plaintiff fails to recover judgment against all, the court must award costs to such of the defendants as have judgment in their favor." While all defendants were represented by the same attorneys, they filed separate answers; and they were not united in interest since the liability of each depended on the claimed negligence of Miss Lockwood, each could only be held liable on the theory that he was bound by Miss Lockwood's tortious conduct and the relation of each to Miss Lockwood was distinct and different from the others.

[19, 20] The language of the section is mandatory and we conclude that appellants Morgan and Jacobs are entitled to their costs. The case of Naify v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 11 Cal.2d 5, 13, 76 P.2d 663, 115 A.L.R. 476, dealt with the question of costs on appeal, not trial costs, and did not purport to construe the effect of the code section above quoted.

The judgment is affirmed with costs to respondent Hedlund.

The order striking the cost bill is reversed and the trial court is directed to tax the costs pursuant to plaintiff's motion on file; appellants Morgan and Jacobs to have their costs on appeal excluding therefrom any portion of the cost of procuring the reporter's transcript.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 362

HUGHES et al. v. SCHWATZ.

Civ. 11802.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

April 22, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 19, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⚷979(5)

The trial court exercises a broad discretion in granting a new trial on ground of inadequacy of damages awarded, and its order granting a new trial on that ground will not be disturbed in absence of a showing of abuse of discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

2. Appeal and error ⚷977(2)

Under statute authorizing a trial court in a proper case to grant a new trial on the sole issue of damages, its order so limiting the new trial when predicated on insufficiency of the verdict is subject to attack solely on ground of abuse of discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

3. New trial ⚷9

Where no award at all is made for general damages in a negligence action, the only possible explanation is that jurors compromised issue of liability, and it is error to limit new trial to issue of damages alone; but, where a substantial but inadequate award of general damages is made, question whether new trial should be limited rests within trial judge's discretion. Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

4. Appeal and error ⚷930(4)

Jury's verdict in favor of plaintiffs in automobile negligence death action implied findings adverse to defendant on issues of negligence and alleged contributory negligence, and, in absence of appeal or request for a new trial by defendant, those implied findings, if fairly made, were a final determination of the issues as fully as though defendant, after filing his answer, had stipulated to the facts so found.

5. Appeal and error ⚷977(1)

On defendant's appeal from order granting plaintiffs' motion for new trial on issue of damages alone in death action, correctness of jury's conclusions on issues presented could not be challenged on ground that three prior juries had disagreed.

6. Trial ⚷314(1)

The trial judge has a wide discretion in determining the length of time that a jury may deliberate before discharging the jury.

7. Appeal and error ⚷1015(5)

On defendant's appeal from order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on issue of damages alone in death action, evidence was insufficient to show that verdict was the result of coercion on part of trial judge.

8. New trial ⚷9

On defendant's appeal from order granting plaintiffs' motion for new trial on issue of damages alone in death action on ground that verdict of $1,250 for general damages only was inadequate, record did not show as a matter of law that verdict was the result of compromise among jurors on issue of liability, and hence it was within trial judge's discretion to limit new trial to issue of damages alone. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; Thomas D. Johnston, Judge.

Action by Grace Hughes and others against Alfred Schwartz for the death of Fay Edward Hughes. There was a verdict for plaintiffs for $1,250, and, from an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the issue of damages alone, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Nichols & Richard, of Oakland, James F. Hoey, of Martinez, and Leonard J. Dieden, of Oakland, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs, who are the widow and children of Fay Edward Hughes who was killed by an automobile driven by defendant, brought this action for his wrongful death. The trial resulted in a unanimous jury verdict in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $1,250. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the issue of damages alone. Defendant made no motion for a new trial. The trial court granted a new trial on the issue of damages alone, the order reciting that: "The amount of the award being grossly inadequate, the court finds that said new trial [on the issue of damages] shall be granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict." From this order defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant concedes that on the issue of liability the evidence was conflicting, and that the evidence supports the implied findings that defendant was negligent and that the deceased was free from contributory negligence. It is further conceded that the verdict was inadequate. The sole point urged is that the record shows, as a matter of law, that the verdict was the result of a compromise among the jurors on the issue of liability, and that in such a situation the granting of a new trial on the issue of damages alone is erroneous. Stated another way, appellant urges that the only possible explanation of the inadequate verdict is that less than the required nine jurors agreed on the issue of liability, but, finally, compromised with the other jurors the issue of liability by awarding grossly inadequate damages.

[1, 2] The law is well-settled that the trial court exercises a broad discretion in granting a new trial on the ground of inadequacy of the damages awarded, and that its order granting a new trial on that ground will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion. Minor v. Foote, 100 Cal.App. 441, 280 P. 197; Cunha v. Lewis, 31 Cal.App.2d 1, 76 P.2d 1198; Peri v. Culley, 119 Cal.App. 117, 6 P.2d 86. By section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure the trial court, in a proper case, is empowered to grant a new trial on the sole issue of damages, and its order so limiting the new trial, when predicated on the insufficiency of the verdict, is subject to attack solely on the ground of abuse of discretion. Sanford v. Wilcox, 13 Cal.App.2d 193, 56 P.2d 548; Cox v. Tyrone Power Enterprises, Inc., 49 Cal.App.2d 383, 121 P.2d 829. These principles are not challenged by appellant. He urges, however, that if it appears that the verdict was the result of a compromise on the issue of liability, it is an abuse of discretion to limit the new trial to the issue of damages. In this connection he places his main reliance on Donnatin v. Union Hardware & Metal Co., 38 Cal.App. 8, 175 P. 26, 177 P. 845; Bencich v. Market St. Ry. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 518, 67 P.2d 398, and Wallace v. Miller, 26 Cal.App.2d 55, 78 P.2d 745.

In the Donnatin case, supra, the verdict in a personal injury action was for plaintiff in the sum of one dollar. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the issue of damages, which was denied. On appeal it was contended that the cause should be reversed for a new trial on the issue of damages. The appellate court upheld the action of the trial court in denying the limited motion for a new trial on the ground that the only reasonable explanation of the one dollar verdict was that such verdict was the result of a compromise. In so holding the court stated, at page 11 of 38 Cal.App., at page 27 of 175 P.: "In the instant case the amount of $1 awarded plaintiff as damages for the injuries sustained, if the facts were such as to render defendant legally liable therefor, is, upon the evidence presented, so grossly absurd that it furnishes convincing proof that in order to reach an agreement the verdict was the result of unwarranted concessions of convictions made by each of two opposing factions of the jury, one of which conscientiously believed that defendant should prevail in the action, and the other equally conscientious in the opinion that plaintiff should recover damages commensurate with the injuries sustained. It is apparent, we think, that those jurors entertaining the opinion that defendant was not guilty of the negligence charged nevertheless agreed to surrender their views in consideration of other jurors consenting to the trifling award made." It was held that under such circumstances it would have been error to have limited a new trial to the issue of damages alone.

The Bencich case, supra, also involved an action for personal injuries. The jury brought in a verdict for $5,000. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which motion was denied. On this appeal he contended that the damages were inadequate and that the case should be reversed for a new trial on the issue of damages alone. The appellate court held that the judgment had to be reversed because of the inadequacy of damages, but also held that under the facts and in the exercise of its discretion it would not limit the new trial. In so holding the court pointed out that in addition to very serious personal injuries, the plaintiff had paid out for nursing, X-rays, laboratory and physicians' fees $2,423.37 and had lost compensation of $3,441.72. Thus, the special damages, plus loss of compensation, exceeded the amount of the award. The court predicated its conclusion that the new trial should not be limited partly on the reasoning of the Donnatin case, supra, and partly on the fact that certain confusing instructions had been given, and concluded as follows, at page 529 of 20 Cal.App.2d, at page 404 of 67 P.2d: "In view of this uncertainty and the fact that clearly something other than the evidence on the question of damages must have actuated the jury, or some of them in arriving at such a low verdict, substantial justice requires that (as said in the Donnatin case, supra, 38 Cal.App. 8, at page 11, 175 P. 26, 27, 177 P. 845), '* * * what is a just compensation the plaintiff should receive, if he is entitled to recover at all, can best be determined by trying the whole case before one judge and one jury instead of "splitting it up" between different judges and different juries.'"

Wallace v. Miller, supra, was an action for personal injuries where the special damages amounted to $323.89 and the jury awarded the plaintiff the sum of $120.25. The plaintiff moved for a new trial on all issues. The trial court ordered a new trial on the issue of damages alone. It was held that under the facts it was an abuse of discretion to have limited the new trial to the sole issue of damages, and a new trial was ordered on all issues. In so holding the appellate court recognized that the trial judge has a wide discretion in granting new trials on the ground of insufficiency. It then discussed the limitation on that rule as follows, at page 57 of 26 Cal.App.2d, at page 746 of 78 P.2d: "Another situation is presented when it affirmatively appears from the record that nine of the jurors could not have agreed that the defendant was guilty of negligence which proximately caused the accident; that those jurors who conscientiously believed that defendant was not negligent departed from their beliefs while they entertained them and agreed to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff in a small and inadequate amount merely for the purpose of closing the case. Under such circumstances, the primarily important question, namely, the negligence of defendant, was not determined by the jury. It has been held that under such circumstances the trial judge should grant a new trial on all issues and that his failure to do so is an arbitrary refusal to exercise a reasonable discretion." After quoting from the Bencich case, supra, and citing the Donnatin case, supra, the court applied the rule as follows, at page 59 of 26 Cal.App.2d, at page 747 of 78 P.2d: "When we apply the rules which have heretofore been announced to the facts before us the conclusion is inevitable that nine jurors did not agree on the most important questions of defendant's negligence and its proximate cause of the collision. There is no other explanation for the inadequate verdict, unjust to plaintiff, had there been an agreement on defendant's liability. If the jurors had agreed on defendant's liability, their verdict should have included $120.25 expended by plaintiff for care of his injuries. The correctness of this amount was not disputed. It should also have included $203.64 spent for the repair of his car, the correctness of which amount was stipulated. In addition to these amounts the verdict should have included an award of general damages, for plaintiff was injured in the accident. From these facts 'it is apparent, we think, that those jurors entertaining the opinion that defendant was not guilty of the negligence charged nevertheless agreed to surrender their views in consideration of other jurors consenting to the trifling award made.' Donnatin v. Union Hardware & Metal Co., supra. It follows that, as the question of the liability of defendant was not determined by the jury, a general order granting a new trial should have been made. The case should be retried on all issues."

[3] It will be observed that in the Donnatin case the jury, in effect, awarded no damages. The action of the trial court in refusing to grant a limited new trial was affirmed. In the Bencich case the damages awarded were less than the special damages and loss of compensation suffered by plaintiff. The appellate court reversed the court's action in refusing to grant a new trial, but, in the exercise of its discretion, refused to limit the new trial. In the Wallace case the award was less than the amount of special damages. These cases undoubtedly impose a limitation on the discretionary power of the trial court to grant a limited new trial. But the extent of that limitation is simply that where no award at all is made for general damages the only possible explanation is that the jurors compromised the issue of liability, and it is error to limit the new trial to the issue of damages alone. But where, as in the instant case, a substantial but inadequate award of general damages is made, the question as to whether the new trial should be limited rests within the discretion of the trial judge. The cases hereafter discussed so hold.

Sassano v. Roullard, 27 Cal.App.2d 372, 81 P.2d 213, was decided by the same court and the decision was written by the same judge that had written the Wallace case, supra. In discussing the proper rule the court stated, at page 376 of 27 Cal.App.2d, at page 215 of 81 P.2d: "Since the decision of Bencich v. Market St. Ry. Co. [20 Cal. App.2d 518, 67 P.2d 398], supra, it has been frequently argued that verdicts were the results of compromises on the part of jurors. We have had occasion to observe that where, as in the Bencich case, special damages proved were admittedly in excess of the amount of the verdict rendered, there was strong evidence of a compromise on the part of certain jurors who did not believe that any verdict should have been returned in favor of plaintiff. Wallace v. Miller [26 Cal.App.2d 55], 78 P.2d 745. On the other hand, where the general damages awarded were small, but to a certain extent compensatory, no such conclusions follow. Tripcevich v. Compton [25 Cal.App.2d 188], 77 P.2d 286; Zeller v. Reid [26 Cal.App.2d 421], 79 P.2d 449. It may be very generally stated that where general damages alone are involved an appellate court should be slow to conclude that a verdict is a result of a compromise simply because the amount of the award is small. Instead, it should generally govern its actions by those rules we have already set forth concerning grossly excessive or grossly inadequate verdicts." See, also, Gates v. Wendling Nathan Co., 27 Cal.App. 2d 307, 81 P.2d 173, where the same court discussed the proper rule in substantially similar language.

The identical problem with that involved in the instant case was recently considered by the Second Appellate District, Division Three, in Cox v. Tyrone Power Enterprises, Inc., supra, hearing denied by the Supreme Court March 27, 1942. The action was for serious personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. The jury brought in a verdict of $1,250. The plaintiff had incurred special damages of $811. Thus, the award of general damages was $439. Both plaintiff and defendants moved for a new trial, plaintiff's motion being limited to the issue of damages alone. The trial court denied defendants' motion and granted the limited motion of plaintiff. Defendants urged that under the rule of the Donnatin, Bencich and Wallace cases, supra, the totally inadequate award had to be conclusively presumed to have been the result of a compromise, and that therefore it was an abuse of discretion to have granted a limited new trial. In disposing of this contention Presiding Justice Schauer stated, at page 390 of 49 Cal.App.2d, at page 833 of 121 P.2d:

"While the evidence amply supports the conclusion that the damages awarded were inadequate, we do not find that it is such as to justify us in concluding, contrary to the trial judge, that the jury compromised the question of negligence by its inadequate award of damages. Such a conclusion on this record would be more speculative than inferential. The verdict here was for $1,250 in response to plaintiff's claim for $450 doctors' bills, $361 hospital bill, and general damages. The items for the doctors and the hospital were not disputed, but the extent of the injuries was seriously contested. The verdict not only awards recovery for all the special damages but includes $439 for general damages. That the general damage award is disproportionately small seems obvious and its inadequacy is the basis for the new trial order. But that merely because we regard the award as too low we must also infer that jurors stultified themselves by bargaining inadequate damages for unjustified liability is a non sequitur.

"If such a conclusion is to be reached it must be supported by further circumstances.

* * *

"The conclusion which appears most reasonable to us from consideration of the entire record is that the jury correctly determined the issues of negligence and contributory negligence and that the granting of plaintiff's motion for a new trial solely on the issue of damages was within the discretion of the trial judge, who, as well as the jury, heard the evidence. Defendants suggest that (as asserted in the case of Zeller v. Reid, 1938, 26 Cal.App.2d 421, 425, 426, 79 P.2d 449) the cases of Donnatin v. Union Hardware & Metal Co., 1918 [38 Cal.App. 8, 175 P. 26, 177 P. 845], supra; Bencich v. Market Street Railway Co., 1937, 20 Cal.App.2d 518, 67 P.2d 398, and Wallace v. Miller, 1938, 26 Cal.App.2d 55, 78 P.2d 745, are not necessarily inconsistent with Tripcevich v. Compton, 1938, supra. Regardless of any question of harmony among those decisions, we believe that the case before us is more akin to the case last cited and to Zeller v. Reid, supra, than to the others. Certainly we find no factual basis impelling us to hold that the order as made constituted an abuse of discretion, and we do not interpret any of the cited cases as requiring such a holding on the record before us."

This holding seems to us conclusive in the present case. In the instant case plaintiffs proved no special damages at all. The verdict was for $1,250 general damages. Although obviously inadequate, such award is by no means nominal. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that such verdict, simply because of inadequacy, was the result of a compromise.

[4] Appellant urges, however, that there are other circumstances in addition to the inadequacy of the verdict that tend to show that the verdict must have been the result of a compromise. It is pointed out, first, that the question of liability was contested, second, that three prior juries had disagreed, and third, that the record shows that the verdict was the result of coercion on the part of the trial judge. It is urged that when these contentions are considered with the admitted inadequacy of the verdict, the conclusion is inevitable that such verdict was the result of a compromise. This contention is without merit. So far as the first point urged is concerned, although it is true that on the issue of liability the evidence is conflicting, and that that issue was hotly contested, it is admitted that the evidence supports the implied findings adverse to appellant. Appellant did not move for a new trial. Under such circumstances the proper rule is stated in the Donnatin case, supra, as follows, at page 10 of 38 Cal.App., at page 26 of 175 P.: "The verdict of the jury in favor of plaintiff implied findings adverse to the defendant upon the issue as to its own negligence and plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence. By its failure to appeal or ask for a new trial, these implied findings, if fairly made, must be deemed a final determination of such issues as fully as though defendant, after filing its answer, had stipulated to the facts so found."

[5] The second point urged is equally without merit. Although it appears that three prior juries had disagreed, the point is that the present jury unanimously agreed on the issues presented to it. The correctness of its conclusions cannot be challenged because of what other juries may have done. What prior juries may have done is entirely immaterial on this appeal. This point could have been, and undoubtedly was, urged when the motion for a new trial was argued. The trial judge knew the facts, and his determination that this factor was immaterial cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[6, 7] The third point urged requires but scant mention. Appellant points out that the record shows that the jury received the case at 3:10 p. m.; that at 11:00 p. m. they advised the court that "innumerable ballots" had been taken but that they could not agree; that the court then ascertained that they stood eight to four; that the court then sent them back for further deliberations; that at 12:15 a. m. coffee and sandwiches were sent in; that at 1:00 a. m. the jury was locked up for the night. The verdict was rendered at 10:35 a. m. that morning and was unanimous. The court, counsel and the jurors engaged in some jocularity which appellant now seeks to distort into impatience, importunity and coercion on the part of the court. The trial court has a wide discretion in determining the length of time that a jury may deliberate before discharging them. There was no abuse of discretion in the instant case.

[8] We, therefore, conclude that, taken singly or collectively, the various factors urged by appellant do not, as a matter of law, demonstrate that the verdict was the result of a compromise. It is equally tenable to infer that the jury misapplied or misinterpreted the instructions on damages, and that the long disagreement was on this issue. We cannot infer that some of the members of the jury stultified themselves by improperly compromising the issue of liability by agreeing to an inadequate award. Under such circumstances it was within the discretion of the trial judge to limit the trial to the issue of damages alone.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

WARD, J., and E. P. MURPHY, Justice pro tem., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 382

PLUM v. STATE BOARD OF CONTROL et al.

Civ. 6661.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 22, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 21, 1942.

1. Mandamus 🔑101

Where one who was erroneously convicted and imprisoned for a crime filed a claim against the state for $5,000, and the legislature passed a bill appropriating to him $2,000, and he accepted the $2,000, he was not entitled to compel State Board of Control by writ of mandate to approve and recommend to the legislature that his claim for $5,000 be paid, notwithstanding that the sum of $2,000 was allegedly placed in the legislative bill tentatively, with the intention to insert a larger sum thereafter, but through inadvertence the bill was passed without making the correction. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1681, §§ 1, 5.

2. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)
Statutes 🔑216

Courts must take a law as it is passed, and cannot go behind the law, inquire the motives which prompted the law, or interpret the law as those who voted it believed it to be.

3. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)
Statutes 🔑248

When a bill has been passed by the legislature and signed by the Governor, it becomes a "law" and no evidence nor the judgment of any court can be allowed to modify or change its terms or effect, or prevent or impair its complete operative force.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Law".

4. Accord and satisfaction 🔑10(1)
Compromise and settlement 🔑5(2)

If a person having a disputed claim against a state, county, or municipality accepts part payment thereof with knowledge that the claim has not been allowed in full, payment amounts to a "satisfaction" of the claim.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Satisfaction".

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Proceeding for a writ of mandate by C. D. Plum against the State Board of Control of the State of California and others to compel the board to approve and recommend to the legislature that the petitioner's claim against the state be paid in accordance with statute. From a judgment of dismissal after demurrer to petition was sustained, the petitioner appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

C. D. Plum in pro. per. for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown and Thos. J. MacBride, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondents.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered after a demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandate had been sustained, without leave to amend. Petitioner seeks to compel respondent board of control to "approve and recommend to this legislature that your petitioner's claim for $5,000 against the State of California be paid in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid Act." Stats.1913, p. 245, and amendments thereto, made by Stats.1931, p. 1615; Deering's Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1681.

The action is based upon the statute mentioned above, sections 1 and 5 of which read as follows:

"§ 1. Claim of persons erroneously convicted. Any person who, having been convicted of any crime against the state of California amounting to a felony, and having been imprisoned therefor in a state prison of this state shall hereafter be granted a pardon by the governor of this state for the reason that the crime with which he was charged was either not committed at all or, if committed, was not committed by him, or who, being innocent of the crime with which he was charged for either of the foregoing reasons, shall have served the term or any part thereof for which he was imprisoned, may, under the conditions hereinafter provided, present a claim against the state to the state board of control for the pecuniary injury sustained by him through such erroneous conviction and imprisonment." (Italics added.)

"§ 5. Board to report facts and conclusions to legislature. If the evidence shows that the crime with which the claimant was charged was either not committed at all, or, if committed, was not committed by the claimant, and that the claimant did not, by any act or omission either intentionally or negligently, contribute to the bringing about of his arrest or conviction, and that the claimant has sustained pecuniary injury through his erroneous conviction and imprisonment, the board of control shall report the facts of the case and its conclusions to the next legislature of this state, with a recommendation that an appropriation be made by the legislature for the purpose of indemnifying the claimant for such pecuniary injury; but the amount of the appropriation so recommended shall not exceed in any case, the sum of five thousand dollars." (Italics added.)

Plaintiff alleges in his petition the following facts as the gist of his cause of action:

"That under and by virtue of the said act of the legislature as aforesaid, and within the time prescribed by said law, your petitioner filed a claim against the state of California for five thousand dollars ($5,000) for pecuniary injury suffered by your petitioner by reason of his erroneous conviction and imprisonment in a state prison of this state.

"That at said hearing your petitioner presented to the state board of control conclusive and competent evidence showing that he had been convicted of a crime never committed; part of such evidence being a certified final Superior Court Judgment of Sacramento County, California, holding that the lumber your petitioner was convicted and imprisoned for stealing was, at the time of said conviction, always had been, and still was, the property of your petitioner, and further ordered that the said alleged stolen lumber or its value thereof be returned to your petitioner.

"That at said hearing your petitioner also presented conclusive, competent, and sufficient evidence showing that he had suffered pecuniary injury far in excess of five thousand dollars by reason of his erroneous conviction and imprisonment.

"That at said hearing the attorney general, represented and present in the person of the assistant attorney general of the state of California, presented no evidence whatsoever at said hearing in opposition to your petitioner's claim, or any part thereof, on behalf of the State, and by said act of acquiescence conceded that your petitioner's claim against the state of California was just and should be paid."

It is further alleged that the board of control disallowed said claim, after a hearing upon the merits thereof. Petitioner then alleges that a bill was introduced in the legislature appropriating to him the sum of $2,000, but that said amount was "tentative," and that the legislature, "in passing your petitioner's claim bill for two thousand dollars ($2,000) inadvertently neglected to amend said bill to the amount specified in the aforesaid law."

[1-3] It is the contention of petitioner that the board of control had no discretion in disposing of the claim, and that mandamus will therefore lie to compel it to approve the same. The state's contention is that the action of the board was final and binding upon the courts, it being an administrative agency committed by the statute to decide the facts in question, the chief one being whether or not petitioner was erroneously convicted. We do not deem it necessary to pass upon that question, as we are satisfied that the trial judge correctly disposed of the controversy in the following language found in his opinion:

"It will be observed that the appropriation was to pay the claim, not part of the claim. When plaintiff collected this sum, his claim was satisfied and extinguished. Plaintiff contends that the sum of $2,000 was placed in the bill tentatively, the intention being to insert a larger sum thereafter, but that through inadvertence the bill was passed without making this correction. That may be, and that contention might be made in a new application to the legislature. It seems to have been successfully made to a later session which attempted to appropriate an additional $3,000 to plaintiff. But no court can entertain such a contention. When the legislature enacts a law, the courts must take it as it is passed. They cannot go behind it, inquire the motives which prompted it, or interpret it as those who voted it believed it to be. When a bill has been passed by the legislature and signed by the Governor, it becomes a law and 'no evidence, nor the judgment of any court, can be allowed to modify or change its terms or effect, or prevent or impair its complete operative force.' Lukens v. Nye, 156 Cal. 498, 105 P. 593, 595, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 244, 20 Ann.Cas. 158."

[4] The rule governing the situation is thus expressed in 1 Am.Jur., pages 234-5, section 36:

"It has been held frequently that if a person having a disputed claim against a state, county, or municipality accepts part payment thereof with knowledge that the claim has not been allowed in full, the payment amounts to a satisfaction of the claim. Accordingly, where it appeared that a person injured by a defect in a sidewalk presented a claim to the common council, which awarded him a certain sum, the court held that when the amount allowed was accepted, it would be presumed that the payment was in full satisfaction of the entire claim."

The allegations of the petitioner bring it directly within the scope of the foregoing rule. As pointed out by the trial judge, the allegations that the amount of $2,000 was merely tentative, and that the legislature's act was an inadvertence, cannot operate to place the case without the rule and permit the courts to go behind the legislative act. As clearly pointed out in the Lukens case, supra, a collateral attack of this character, made upon a statute duly and legally passed, will not be permitted.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 350

SIEMON et al. v. LYON.

Civ. 2695.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 21, 1942.

1. Mines and minerals ⇨78(7)

Evidence that drilling of oil well on leased land was completed and that pumping equipment was installed and production commenced warranted conclusion that well was a "completed well" within gas lease provisions requiring lessee to commence drilling operations for a second well within three months after completion of the first well if it did not produce in paying quantities, notwithstanding that difficulties developed after production commenced and that well did not continue to produce in paying quantities. St.1939, p. 1122, § 3217.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Completed Well".

2. Evidence ⇨20(1)

It is common knowledge that some oil wells are brought in which never produce in paying quantities.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; William L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Suit by Fred Siemon and others against William E. Lyon. From a judgment quieting the title of plaintiffs against defendant as to rights claimed by defendant under an oil and gas lease, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Wm. G. Condron, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment quieting the title of respondents against appellant as to rights claimed by appellant under an oil and gas lease.

The complaint alleged in substance that appellant, as lessee, was required to commence the drilling of a second well on the leased land within three months following the completion of the first well; that the lease further provided that in the event any of the conditions of said lease were violated and lessee should fail to remedy same within thirty days after written notice so to do, then, at the option of the lessor, the lease should forthwith terminate as to all of said land except ten acres surrounding such producing well; that appellant lessee violated the terms of said lease in failing to commence a second well upon said premises as required by said lease within three months after completion of the first well; and that the required thirty-day notice was given.

The answer denied any breach and alleged that the first well was not yet completed but was still being worked on in an attempt to place it on steady production.

The covenants of the lease as to the drilling of the second well are expressed in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the lease as follows:

"7. If the Lessee shall elect to drill on said land as aforesaid, and oil or gas shall not be obtained in paying quantities in first well drilled, the Lessee shall, within three (3) months after the completion or abandonment of the first well, commence on said land drilling operations for a second well, and shall prosecute the same with reasonable diligence until oil or gas is found in paying quantities, or until the well is drilled to a depth at which further drilling would, in the judgment of the Lessee, be unprofitable; and the Lessee shall in like manner continue its operations until oil or gas in paying quantities is found, but subject always to the terms and conditions hereof and with the rights and privileges to the Lessee herein given.

"8. If oil or gas is found in paying quantities in any well so drilled by the Lessee on said land, the Lessee, subject to the provisions hereof and to the suspension privileges hereinafter set forth, shall continue to drill additional wells on said land as rapidly as one string of tools working with reasonable diligence can complete the same, until there shall have been completed on said land as many wells as shall equal the total acreage then held under this lease divided by ten; whereupon the Lessee shall hold all of the land free of further drilling obligations; provided, that the Lessee may defer the commencement of drilling operations for the second or any subsequent well for a period not to exceed three (3) months from the date of completion of the well last preceding it."

It was stipulated by counsel in open court that there was no issue in the case except the fact of whether the Metro No. 2 well had been completed, and that respondents were entitled to judgment in the event that it was found that said well had been completed.

The trial court found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint and appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed upon the ground that the evidence does not support the finding that said well was completed.

There is little dispute as to the facts but the parties are in sharp disagreement as to what constitutes a completed well.

The evidence shows that the well in question was cemented about September 18, 1939; that drilling thereon ceased about September 3, 1939; that pumping equipment was installed and actual pumping commenced in October, 1939; and that the well actually produced over 500 barrels of oil in each of the months of November, December and January, and over 450 barrels in the month of March, 1940, and a small quantity in August, 1940. Two witnesses called by appellant testified that the well produced for a short time and then made 50 to 75 per cent mud; that it would produce for six or seven days at a time and then fill up with mud and sand, and that they were, at the time of the commencement of the action, still working on the well and pump trying to get it to produce more oil; and that in their opinion the well was not completed.

Section 3217 of the Public Resources Code, St.1939, p. 1122, which is based upon a statute enacted in 1915, Stats.1915, chap. 718, p. 1404, provides:

"A well is completed, for the purposes of this chapter, thirty days after it has commenced to produce oil, water, or gas, unless drilling operations are resumed before the end of the thirty-day period."

[1, 2] It seems clear to us that the trial court was fully justified in finding that the well was completed. The drilling thereof was completed, the pumping equipment was installed and production commenced, and drilling operations on said well were never resumed. It is true that difficulties developed after production commenced and that it was necessary to clean the pump and the well, and it is likewise true that the well did not continue to produce in paying quantities. But there is nothing in the lease itself, or in the law, which requires that for a well to be a completed well, it must be a well that produces in paying quantities. It is a matter of common knowledge that some oil wells are brought in which never produce in paying quantities. The plain terms of the lease here involved required that appellant commence the drilling of a second well within three months after the first well was completed, and the appellant having failed to do so, and the required thirty-day notice having been given, the court below properly concluded that appellant's rights under the lease were terminated.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

51 Cal.App.2d 353

In re CHASE'S ESTATE.

CHASE et al. v. UNION TITLE INSURANCE & TRUST CO. et al. (CHASE et al., Interveners).

Civ. 3022.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 21, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 18, 1942.

1. Wills 🔑108

The formalities which the legislature has prescribed for the execution of a will are essential to its validity and cannot be disregarded. Probate Code, § 50(1).

2. Wills 🔑111(2)

The statutory requirement that a will must be subscribed at the "end" thereof, requires that testator's name be written at the termination of the testamentary provisions. Probate Code, § 50(1).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "End".

3. Wills 🔑111(2)

The "will" at whose end the testator's name is required to be subscribed is not the sheet of paper or other material on which testamentary provisions are written, but it is the declaration which testator has written down for testamentary disposition, and the "end" is not the foot or physical end of the sheet of paper on which the will is written, but is the physical termination of the testamentary provisions constituting the will. Probate Code, § 50(1).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Will".

4. Wills 🔑111(2)

Under statute requiring testator's name to be subscribed at end of will, an instrument offered for probate must be scanned to learn where the end of the instrument is as a completed whole, and testator's name must be subscribed at the end thus found. Probate Code, § 50(1).

5. Wills 🔑111(2)

Where testatrix wrote out provisions of her will on a printed form sheet and on three other blank pages and signed will on back of printed form sheet following appointment of executor, attestation clause stating that instrument consisted of four pages "including this one" followed, and will read coherently and consecutively from page to page, will was signed at the "end" thereof as required by statute. Probate Code, § 50(1).

6. Wills 🔑111(2)

The statute relating to the execution of wills and requiring a will to be subscribed at the end thereof by the testator does not require that form be raised above substance. Probate Code, § 50(1).

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Robert B. Burch, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Josephine L. Chase, deceased, wherein Louis Chase and others filed a petition to revoke and set aside the probate of the will of the decedent, opposed by the Union Title Insurance & Trust Company and others, and wherein Gertrude Chase and others intervened. From a judgment denying their petition, petitioners appeal.

Affirmed.

Lindley & Higgins, J. F. DuPaul, and Higgs, Fletcher & Glen, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Luce, Forward, Lee & Kunzel, of San Diego, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying the petition of appellants to revoke and set aside the probate of the will of Josephine L. Chase, deceased. We will summarize briefly the evidence so far as material upon this appeal.

In the latter part of July, 1939, Mrs. Chase had been informed that she was to have an operation, and on the 3rd day of August, 1939, while she was in Mercy Hospital in San Diego, she purported to execute her will before Mrs. William Archibald and a nurse by the name of Hope Teel. Mrs. Archibald testified that she was one of the respondents in the case, that on the evening before Mrs. Chase was to be operated upon, about 9 o'clock, and as Mrs. Archibald was about to leave the hospital, Mrs. Chase brought papers out from under her pillow and said, "Will you witness my will?"; that Miss Teel was called in and asked "How do I know you signed that will?" Mrs. Chase tore a piece of paper off a tablet and signed her name so Miss Teel could see it and asked her to compare the signatures. That Mrs.

Archibald signed first. That the will was folded and she just saw that part of the page that she signed which contained the signature of Mrs. Chase down to that of Miss Teel. That she did not see any printed matter above her name and it looked like there might have been three or four sheets with the one she signed, but she did not know how many. That they left Mrs. Chase in the room and that at that time she had paper and a pen. All she knew was when she signed the will, it was substantially the same bulk as Exhibits Proponents' "A" and Contestants' 8.

Hope Teel testified that when she signed, she signed a printed form with writing on it. That there were a number of papers with writing and Mrs. Chase handed her the form and that is what she signed. She hadn't read any part of it and she did not see anything except that she knew Mrs. Chase had already signed her name when she showed her the will and wanted her to witness it, and that she had no idea how many other papers there were with the printed form, and there were no other papers fastened to the form.

Dr. Frederick Hollander testified that some time about 6:00 or 6:30 on Wednesday, or it might have been Thursday, Mrs. Chase asked him to take charge of her will. That the document was sealed in an envelope and that he handed it to a Mrs. McMahon, credit manager at the hospital, and that it was written on the envelope that it was her last will and testament. That Mrs. Chase entered the hospital on Wednesday and was operated on Friday morning, and that she gave him the will either on Wednesday or Thursday, at least, before the operation. Mrs. McMahon testified that she received the sealed envelope and placed it in the vault at the hospital and that after the death of Mrs. Chase she handed the envelope sealed and unopened to James D. Forward, president of the Union Title Insurance and Trust Company, which company was named executor in the will. Mr. Forward testified that he brought the envelope down to his office and opened it and read the will, and that there were several sheets of paper constituting the will all in the envelope, rolled up together or pinned together, or maybe clipped together.

The instrument in controversy was written entirely in the handwriting of decedent except for some printed matter. The decedent used a printed form commonly sold and used for wills. It was headed "Last Will and Testament." On the first page in the blank below the printed matter the decedent wrote out the provisions of her will. One paragraph was designated, in printing, "Firstly." The next paragraph, in printing, "Secondly." On the back of the single sheet on the printed form of will is the attestation clause and the endorsement, which we will refer to later. The second sheet was a blank sheet and everything thereon contained was written in the handwriting of the testatrix. The paragraphs on the second sheet were numbered beginning with the figure "3," ending with the figure "11." The third sheet was likewise entirely covered with the handwriting of the testatrix and contained dispositions of her property. The paragraphs on this page were numbered in figures, the first being "12" and the last "24." The fourth sheet was likewise covered wholly with the writing of the testatrix making certain dispositions of her property but the paragraphs on that page were unnumbered. They followed in natural sequence from the third sheet. On the back of the printed form sheet were the printed words "Lastly, I hereby nominate and appoint"; then in the handwriting of the testatrix "Union Title and Trust Company of San Diego, California"; and then follows in printing "the execut (and in writing) ors" then in printing "of this my last will and testament"; then in writing: "consisting of this and three other pages expressing my desires." In the attestation clause is found the printed words, "the foregoing instrument consisting of —— page, including this one, was at the date hereof," etc. In the blank before the word "page," the testatrix had written in the figure "4" and had added the letter "s" to page.

Including the printing the writing, the above testamentary clause reads as follows:

"Lastly, I hereby nominate and appoint Union Title and Trust Company of San Diego the Executors of this my Last Will and Testament consisting of this and three other pages expressing my desires, and hereby revoke all former Wills by me made.

"In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this third day of August, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and thirty-nine.

"(Testator's signature.)

"Josephine L. Chase (Seal).

"The foregoing instrument, consisting of 4 pages including this one, was, at the date hereof by the said witnesses signed and sealed and published as, and declared to us to be her last Will and Testament in the presence of us, who, at her request and in her presence, and in the presence of each other, have subscribed our names as witnesses thereto.

"Mrs. W. M. Archibald
"Residing at 1252 Lincoln Ave.
"San Diego, Cal.
"Miss Hope Teel
"Residing at 4190 Monroe
"San Diego, Cal."

There were pinholes through the four sheets that indicated that they had all been pinned together. This will appear from the examination of the original Exhibit itself.

The sole question to be decided upon this appeal is: Was the will here in controversy subscribed by the testatrix at the end thereof as required by section 50 of the Probate Code, which reads as follows:

"Witnessed Wills: Subscription: Presence of witnesses: Testator's declaration: Number of witnesses, attestation. Every will, other than a nuncupative will, must be in writing and every will, other than a holographic will and a nuncupative will, must be executed and attested as follows:

"(1) Subscription. It must be subscribed at the end thereof by the testator himself, or some person in his presence and by his direction must subscribe his name thereto * * *."

[1] Appellants argue with great earnestness and at considerable length that the trial court erred in finding that the testatrix subscribed said will at the end thereof. Appellants assert correctly that it is well settled that the formalities which the legislature has prescribed for the execution of a will are essential to its validity and cannot be disregarded.

[2-4] In Re Estate of Seaman, 146 Cal. 455, at page 461, 80 P. 700, at page 702, 106 Am.St.Rep. 53, 2 Ann.Cas. 726, our Supreme Court said: "The provision that the will must be subscribed at the end thereof requires the testator's name to be written at the termination of the testamentary provisions which he makes in the instrument. The 'will' at whose end the name is to be subscribed is not the sheet of paper or other material upon which these testamentary provisions are written, but it is the declaration which the testator has written thereon for such testamentary disposition, and the 'end thereof' is not the foot or physical end of the sheet of paper upon which the 'will' is written, but is the physical termination of the testamentary provisions which constitute the will. 'The act of authentication must take place at the termination of the testamentary disposition.' McGuire v. Kerr, 2 Bradf. [N.Y.] 244. 'To say that, where the name is, there is the end of the will, is not to observe the statute. That requires that, where the end of the will is, there shall be the name. It is to make a new law to say that, when we find the name, there is the end of the will. The instrument offered is to be scanned to learn where is the end of it, as a completed whole, and at the end thus found must the name of the testator be subscribed.' Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N.Y. 409; Matter of O'Neil's Will, 91 N.Y. [516], 522; Matter of Andrews' [Will], 162 N.Y. 1, 56 N.E. 529, 48 L.R.A. 662, 76 Am.St.Rep. 294."

There are no cases in California in which the facts are closely similar to those of the instant case. However, the question has been before the courts of the state of New York where the statute is the same as our California statute, and the rulings of the appellate tribunal of that state should be of assistance to us. A leading case on the subject is In re Field's Will, 204 N.Y. 448, 97 N.E. 881, 882, 39 L.R.A.,N.S., 1060, Ann.Cas.1913C, 842, decided by the court of appeals. It is apparent from the opinion in that case that it is quite similar to the case at bar and we will therefore quote the following from the opinion of the court:

"The surrogate refused probate, because the paper purporting to be a will was not 'subscribed by the testator at the end' thereof as required by statute, and the decree was affirmed by the Appellate Division for the same reason. As the essential facts were stipulated and the original paper itself is produced as one of the facts agreed upon, the question whether it was signed at the end is a question of law. The entire printed form was treated below as the first page, the sheets numbered from one to six as succeeding pages, and thus the conclusion was reached that the decedent did not sign at the end of the paper. When read in this way, the instrument does not read naturally or consecutively, and does not make sense. The physical position of the six sheets, the place and method of attaching them, and the closing paragraphs at the bottom of the printed form are substantially ignored. The natural order of reading the paper is subverted and an artificial order substituted, not to aid, but to overturn, the obvious intention. The natural order of reading it is to begin with the opening words on the printed blank and, continuing with form and sense reasonably connected, to read the first of the numbered sheets, and, turning it over in the usual way with legal papers, to read the other sheets in their actual order, and after the last has been read to turn that over also, when the closing paragraphs of the printed form follow, the end of the instrument is reached, and no part thereof follows the signature. Who would read it in any other way, unless he wished to destroy it as a will? Who would turn over the six sheets without reading them, read the testimonium clause, and then turn back to read the rest? In reading an ordinary card calendar with the record of the month of December printed on the card itself and descriptive matter printed above, with the records of the other months on slips attached in the usual way, that of January being on top, who would not regard December as the end, both of the calendar and the card? The slips become by the place and method of attachment virtually embodied in the card. So the six sheets of the paper in question are part of the body of the will, being physically incorporated therein, and not, as in some of the cases, wholly without the body and merely referred to therein. The essence of the paper subscribed is not the printed form alone, but the printed form with the six sheets so inserted therein as to become blended therewith at the point of insertion. Thus the physical and the literary beginning, body, and end of the instrument are the same, and the signature of the testator is found at the end.

"The position of the courts below, however, finds some support in the adjudged cases; for we have gone far to protect testators from the danger of imposition and fraud through unauthorized additions and changes in their wills. That danger does not exist when, as in this case, the will is holographic, and, while we do not regard that fact as controlling, it is worthy of remark that none of the six numbered sheets could have been changed without the co-operation of the testator himself. While the pins could be removed and other sheets substituted, that is true of many wills written on different sheets and fastened together by rivets or tape. There is no statute forbidding the use of separate sheets, or directing how they shall be joined together. Cases where wills have been altered after execution are vary rare, as the records of the courts show, while cases where the intention of the testator has been wholly defeated by a rigid construction of the statute requiring subscription at the end of the will are alarmingly frequent."

In regard to the Matter of Andrews' Will, 162 N.Y. 1, 56 N.E. 529, 48 L.R.A. 662, 76 Am.St.Rep. 294, one of the earlier New York cases relied upon by appellants, the court in the Field's case, supra, said:

"We regard the decision in the Andrews case as extreme, and as marking a boundary beyond which we should not go. The natural end of a will is where the draftsman stopped writing in the consecutive order of composition, which, in the Andrews will, preceded the third page, and in the will before us succeeded the six numbered pages. The will before us, when read consecutively as the mass of mankind would read it, has the signature at the physical and natural end thereof. We think that the will of the decedent should have been admitted to probate. We base our decision largely on the natural and consecutive method of reading, without turning backward or skipping a part and then looking forward, only to turn backward again, in order to have the sense connected and continuous. Form should not be raised above substance, in order to destroy a will, and the substantial thing in this case is a paper which reads straightforward and without interruption from the beginning to the end, and when thus read the signature is found at the end."

A more recent case decided by the Surrogate Court of Queens County is In re Golden's Estate, 165 Misc. 205, 300 N.Y.S. 737, 738. In that case the facts were even more identical with those in the case at bar because in that case the testatrix, after going on to the second and third pages and finishing the paragraphs disposing of her property, returned to the second page and filled in the testimonium clause with the date, and duly signed and published it as her will in the presence of two witnesses. The court, in upholding the will in that case, said:

"The paper writing here presented for probate is a so-called will form whereon the blanks are filled in by testator in her own handwriting and apparently without competent advice. She wrote on the first page as far as it gave her room so to do without trespassing on the printed words providing for the appointment of an executor, then manifestly, because there was not space enough to finish at the top of the second page, she continued on the third, and, finishing her dispository paragraphs, returned to the second page, filled in the testimonium clause with the date and duly signed and published it as her will in the presence of two witnesses, who signed as such. It is urged that the paper cannot be accepted as a will because is does not conform to the statute, in that it is not signed at the end. This brings up again the question, 'What is the end of a written document?' No little discussion pro and con has been had thereabout, and it seems that, in a maze of argument and attempt to construe the meaning of the words 'at the end,' the real object of section 21 of the Decedent Estate Law has been lost sight of recently. A will is not a sheet of paper, nor a number of sheets or pages; it is the words written thereon. The law affords the right of testamentary disposition; such disposition is to be gathered from language, hence the end of the language, not the paper on which it is written, is the only appropriate interpretation to be given the wording of the statute.

"It has been said, and rightly, that no will has a brother, hence no difficulty arises from such an interpretation, for each will must and can be considered as sole and distinct from every other; and where, as in the case at bar, the writing is in the hand of the testator and its words follow on in natural sequence, though the sentence be broken on one page and continued on any subsequent one, to complete the paragraph, then logically finished on and by use of an intervening space, it cannot be held otherwise than that the testator ended the will with the paragraph immediately above her signature. No quarrel is had with the contention that the statute was enacted to prevent fraud by way of insertion or addition, or otherwise, and where additional matter, complete in itself, be found below the signature, it may well be that a different conclusion as to the validity of the will should be arrived at; but as Judge Vann aptly wrote in Matter of Field's Will, 204 N.Y. 448, 455, 97 N.E. 881, 883, 39 L.R.A.,N.S., 1060, Ann. Cas.1913C, 842, 'The evil of fraudulent changes in wills is rare, while the evil of defeating wills altogether in the manner suggested is common. Hence, we think we have gone far enough in the direction of rigid construction and that the doctrine of certain authorities should not be extended, lest in the effort to prevent wrong we do more harm than good.' In the will before the court, no additions or interlineations are found; it is easily readable by following handwriting and language, i. e., 'to my' (foot of first page), 'beloved sister' etc. (top of third page), and when so read makes sense. When attempted to be read otherwise, i. e., 'to my' (foot of first page) 'In witness whereof,' etc. (top of second page), it makes nonsense. Testator wrote the will herself, where she finished her dispositive wishes is the end of this will; there it is signed and witnessed; let it be admitted to probate. Submit decree on notice."

In the instant case, it appears that the testatrix numbered the paragraphs consecutively. On the first page appears "Firstly" in quotations and "Secondly" in quotations. On the second page appears paragraphs numbered from 3 to 11. On the third page appears paragraphs numbered 12 to 24 and the clauses of page 4 are not numbered, but read consecutively with the preceding page.

Secondly, the testatrix in the attestation clause refers to "this my last Will and Testament consisting of this and three other pages expressing my desires." Also, further, in the attestation clause is this language: "The Foregoing Instrument, consisting of 4 pages including this one, was, at the date hereof."

These expressions by the testatrix entered in her own handwriting clearly establish that she filled out the attestation clause and subscribed her name after she had completed all of the rest of the will showing that she signed her name at the end of her will.

Thirdly, the will reads coherently and consecutively from page to page, showing that one followed the other in orderly sequence and that the attestation clause came last.

Fourthly, it is clear that it was the intention of the testatrix to make all of the sheets constitute one complete document. In fact, appellants, on page 13 of their closing brief said: "We concede that this is one and part of the same instrument, that the whole thing was intended by the testatrix to be her will."

[5, 6] Appellants have cited a number of earlier New York cases tending to support their position but these cases are either not in point or have been disapproved or distinguished in later cases. We believe that the trial court was fully justified in finding that the will in question was subscribed by the testatrix at the end thereof, as it is clear from the evidence that Mrs. Chase began on the front of the printed blank, then continued on through the three blank pages, then used the back of the printed blank for the closing paragraphs and then, having finished and come to the end of the will, subscribed her name thereto at the end thereof. To reach a different conclusion would, in our opinion, be unnecessarily raising form above substance to destroy a document that was undoubtedly the will of the testatrix. Such a construction is not required either by the language of section 50, nor is it supported by the authorities.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

---

51 Cal.App.2d 386

In re MOORE.

MOORE v. GRIFFITH.

Civ. 11926.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 24, 1942.

Hearing Denied June 22, 1942.

1. Arbitration and award 🔑77

Where written dissent of dissenting arbitrator was acknowledged as provided by statute, but it was not made under oath, dissent could not be considered on motion to vacate the award. Code Civ.Proc. § 1287.

2. Arbitration and award 🔑73

Party appearing before arbitrators did not show that he was prejudiced by arbitrators' refusal to continue hearing one hour to allow party's attorney to be present, where there was no showing in affidavits of that party what occurred before attorney arrived at hearing, or what, if anything, attorney would or could have done in a presentation of evidence to arbitrators that was not done by the party, or of any prejudice suffered because of attorney's absence.

3. Arbitration and award 🔑46

Objection to award in arbitration proceeding because one arbitrator inspected building, which was the subject of arbitration, in absence of his fellow arbitrators and the parties, was "waived" where inspection was made before making of prior award which was vacated, and the party complaining of the inspection stipulated to further hearing before the same arbitrators after the prior award was vacated.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

4. Arbitration and award 🔑77

Party to arbitration who claimed that arbitrators cut short his testimony and refused to hear another witness, was required to show that competent and material evidence was excluded, if he was to obtain vacation of the award.

5. Arbitration and award 🔑33

Refusal of arbitrators to continue hearing to compel the attendance of a party to the arbitration, or the taking of his deposition, was not erroneous, where it did not appear that any showing was made before the arbitrators by affidavit or under oath of the materiality of any evidence expected to be given by such witness or of any diligence used to procure his attendance, or that any request for time to prepare or present any such affidavit was made. Code Civ.Proc. § 595.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Robert L. McWilliams, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of John C. Moore in arbitration. From an order of the Superior Court denying the motion of John C. Moore to vacate an award made by a board of arbitration, John C. Moore, opposed by J. W. Griffith, appeals.

Order affirmed.

John C. Moore, in pro. per.

W. P. Caubu, of San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

[1] This is an appeal from an order of the Superior Court denying appellant's motion to vacate an award made by a board of arbitration consisting of three arbitrators. The motion was heard upon affidavits and counter-affidavits, and in support of the order appealed from we must, in accordance with the settled rule, accept as true the evidence which will support the order wherever there is any conflict. The award was signed by two of the arbitrators and the third filed a written dissent containing certain recitals of fact. This dissent was acknowledged as provided in section 1287, Code of Civil Procedure, but it was not made under oath. The trial court properly held that the "unverified dissenting opinion of Arbitrator Harris * * * may not be considered in the consideration of the pending motion."

Much of the argument of appellant is based upon statements found in this dissent. Since we are satisfied that it is without evidentiary value we need devote no further attention to those particular matters.

It appears from the transcript that a prior award had been vacated by the court on July 15, 1941. A further hearing before the arbitrators was held on July 16, 1941, commencing at 2:30 p. m. As to this hearing the affidavit of W. P. Caubu recites: "That the second hearing by the arbitrators in said matter was held on July 16, 1941, following a stipulation in open court between Mr. Moore and this affiant, and with the approval of A. Grant Harris, one of the arbitrators then personally present before the court, that the said date at the hour of 2:30 p. m. thereof would be a time agreeable for the hearing of any testimony to be offered by Mr. Moore * * * and the court so ordered."

The complaint that the time fixed for this hearing was unreasonably short is foreclosed by this evidence that appellant stipulated to it in open court.

[2] It appears that when the hearing opened appellant requested a continuance of one hour to allow his attorney to be present and that this request was refused. We need not decide the question whether a party appearing before arbitrators is entitled as of right to be represented by counsel, a matter on which the authorities are not in accord. 6 C.J.S., Arbitration and Award, § 58, p. 197. In stipulating absolutely on July 15, that the matter should be heard the next day at 2:30 p. m., appellant should have known whether or not his attorney could be present at that time, if he desired his presence. The affidavit of Caubu recites: "That said arbitrators met at said time and without any objection by Mr. Moore, proceeded to receive further testimony, offered by Mr. Moore; Mr. Moore conducted all of the examination of his witnesses and this to the exclusion of Mr. Harry J. Abraham (his attorney), though the latter was present during the greater part of said hearing." There is no showing in the affidavits of what occurred before Mr. Abraham arrived at the hearing, of what, if anything, Mr. Abraham would or could have done in the presentation of evidence to the arbitrators that was not done by Mr. Moore, nor of any prejudice suffered by appellant because of his attorney's absence from a portion of the hearing. On the record it is not made to appear that appellant suffered any prejudice by the refusal to continue the hearing.

[3] The arbitrator Thomas inspected the building, which was the subject of arbitration, in the absence of his fellow arbitrators and the parties. This, however, occurred before the making of the prior award which was vacated on July 15, 1941, and in stipulating to the further hearing before the same arbitrators on July 16, 1941, appellant must be held to have waived any objection on this ground.

The complaint that two arbitrators proceeded in the absence of the third is directed to the prior award which was vacated by the court. As to the award now before the court the affidavit of Caubu states: "Affiant states that all witnesses present at said hearing were heard; that all having been heard on motion of A. Grant Harris, the arbitrator appointed by Mr. Moore, the matter of the hearing be closed and in this motion the other two arbitrators agreed and unanimously ordered the matter closed and proceeded to sit together in judgment of the matter; that after deliberation the award was made. * * *"

[4] The claim that the arbitrators cut short the testimony of appellant and refused to hear another witness is contradicted by the evidence above quoted "that all witnesses present at said hearing were heard." Further there is no showing in appellant's affidavits of any fact or facts to which he or such witness would have testified. It is incumbent on appellant to show that competent and material evidence was excluded. No such showing was made.

[5] Finally appellant complains of the refusal of the arbitrators to continue the hearing from July 16, 1941, for the purpose of compelling the attendance of respondent Griffith or taking his deposition. It does not appear that any showing was made before the arbitrators by affidavit or under oath of the materiality of any evidence expected to be given by this witness or of any diligence used to procure his attendance, nor that any request for time to prepare or present any such affidavit was made. "A motion to postpone a trial on the ground of the absence of evidence can only be made upon affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained, and that due diligence has been used to procure it." § 595, Code Civ.Proc.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

PENNSYLVANIA R. CO. v. MIDSTATE HORTICULTURAL CO., Inc.*

Civ. 2699.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 16, 1942.

Rehearing Denied May 15, 1942.

Hearing Granted June 12, 1942.

1. Limitation of actions ⇨15, 175

Generally a debtor can "waive" a statute of limitations either by a sufficient writing or by failure to plead the statute as a defense to action against him.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

2. Limitation of actions ⇨1

A statute that in itself creates a new liability, gives an action to enforce it unknown to the common law and fixes the time within which such action may be commenced, is a statute of creation rather than a "statute of limitations", and the commencement of the action within the time fixed is an inherent element of the right created no matter in what form an action to enforce the right is brought.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Statute of Limitations".

3. Courts ⇨97(5)

The only federal decision on the construction to be given the Interstate Commerce Act as applied to the precise question presented by the case at bar and under exactly similar facts was entitled to due respect and consideration by California District Court of Appeal in determining whether shipper could by written agreement waive the limitation placed by the act on actions by carriers for recovery of their charges, even though decided by a United States District Court. Interstate Commerce Act § 16 (3) (a), 49 U.S.C.A. § 16(3) (a).

4. Common law ⇨14

General rule that there is no national common law in United States in the sense that there is a common law in the various states that have adopted it does not mean that the Federal Constitution and statutes are to be interpreted without reference to the rules of the common law.

5. Common law ⇨14

In determining the obligations assumed by a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, the court has the right to apply the rules of the common law, unless such rules have been changed by competent legislative action.

6. Carriers ⇨26, 32(1)

Interstate Commerce Act was intended to limit the power of the common carriers to fix their rates and put an end to discrimination among and preferences to shippers and was enacted for the protection of the shipper rather than for the benefit of the carrier. Interstate Commerce Act § 1 et seq., 49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

7. Carriers ⇨196

The Interstate Commerce Act did not create in the common carrier a right of action to collect its transportation charges, where no part thereof had been paid, separate and distinct from the common law right to bring such action but merely recognized such right and limited recovery to the rates established by Interstate Commerce Commission. Interstate Commerce Act § 1 et seq., 49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

---

* Subsequent opinion 131 P.2d 544.

8. Limitation of actions ⚷15

Railroad's right of action against shipper to recover transportation charges none of which had been paid was a right of action in contract given by the common law and not created by Interstate Commerce Act, and hence such right of action was not destroyed by lapse of the time limited in the act for commencement by carriers of actions for recovery of their charges, but such limitation was merely upon the remedy and might be "waived" by the carrier. Interstate Commerce Act § 1 et seq., and § 16(3) (a), 49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., and § 16(3) (a).

9. Carriers ⚷35

A cause of action to recover the difference between an undercharge or an overcharge and the legal rate for transportation by interstate carriers fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission is created by the Interstate Commerce Act and hence the limitation imposed by the act upon the time for commencing such action is a condition to maintaining the action and may not be "waived" by either carrier or shipper, since the lapse of time destroys the right of action itself. Interstate Commerce Act § 1 et seq., and § 16(3) (a), 49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., and § 16(3) (a).

10. Carriers ⚷35

Under the federal rule there cannot be an "estoppel" against the collection of freight charges that will result in discriminations or preferences which will amount to rebates of legal freight charges. Interstate Commerce Act § 1 et seq., 49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

SCHOTTKY, J., pro tem., dissenting.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company against Midstate Horticultural Company, Inc., to recover certain transportation charges. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Sullivan, Roche & Johnson, of San Francisco, and Kellas & Lamberson, of Fresno, for appellant.

W. H. Stammer and Galen McKnight, both of Fresno, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

The facts of this case are fairly and clearly stated in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice pro tem. SCHOTTKY and need not be repeated here. He also cites the leading cases on the question presented though we believe a somewhat closer examination of some of them is advisable.

The sole question involved in this appeal is this: Can the limitation provided in sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph (3) of section 16 of the Interstate Commerce Act, vol. 49 U.S.C.A. § 16(3) (a), be waived by the shipper by a written agreement executed on sufficient consideration before the statute has run? This subsection, in effect at the time here involved, provided as follows:

"§ 16 * * * (3) Limitation of actions. (a) All actions at law by carriers subject to this chapter for recovery of their charges, or any part thereof, shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after."

[1] It is too well settled to need citation of supporting authority that, generally, a debtor can waive a statute of limitations either by a sufficient writing or by failure to plead it as a defense to the action against him.

[2] An important exception to this rule is clearly stated in 34 Am.Jur., page 16, as follows:

"A statute of limitations should be differentiated from conditions which are annexed to a right of action created by statute. A statute which in itself creates a new liability, gives an action to enforce it unknown to the common law, and fixes the time within which that action may be commenced, is not a statute of limitations. It is a statute of creation, and the commencement of the action within the time it fixes is an indispensable condition of the liability of the action which it permits. The time element is an inherent element of the right so created, and the limitation of the remedy is a limitation of the right. Such a provision will control, no matter in what form the action is brought. The statute is an offer of an action on condition that it be commenced within the specified time. If the offer is not accepted in the only way in which it can be accepted, by a commencement of the action within the specified time, the action and the right of action no longer exist, and the defendant is exempt from liability. Whether an enactment is of this nature, or whether it is a statute of limitations, should be determined from a proper construction of its terms."

In Walsh v. Mayer, 111 U.S. 31, 4 S.Ct. 260, 262, 28 L.Ed. 338, it is held that where a right of action is created by statute and a limitation on the time in which to commence the action is imposed, the limitation is a condition attached to the right itself and is not a part of the law of remedy; that if the remedy "is not asserted within the permitted period, it ceases to exist, and cannot be claimed or enforced in any form." The same conclusions were reached in The Harrisburg (Lewis v. Rickards), 119 U.S. 199, 7 S.Ct. 140, 30 L.Ed. 358; Davis v. Mills, 194 U.S. 451, 24 S.Ct. 692, 48 L.Ed. 1067, and the same rule was announced in United States ex rel. Texas Portland Cement Co. v. McCord, 233 U.S. 157, 34 S.Ct. 550, 552, 58 L.Ed. 893, as follows:

"By this statute a right of action upon the bond is created in favor of certain creditors of the contractor. The cause of action did not exist before, and is the creature of the statute. The act does not place a limitation upon a cause of action theretofore existing, but creates a new one upon the terms named in the statute. The right of action given to creditors is specifically conditioned upon the fact that no suit shall be brought by the United States within the six months named, for it is only in that event that the creditors shall have a right of action and may bring a suit in the manner provided. The statute thus creates a new liability and gives a special remedy for it, and upon well-settled principles the limitations upon such liability become a part of the right conferred, and compliance with them is made essential to the assertion and benefit of the liability itself. Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 520, 526, 527, 22 L.Ed. 376, 378; Fourth Nat. Bank [of City of New York] v. Francklyn, 120 U.S. 747, 756, 7 S.Ct. 757, 30 L.Ed. 825, 829; Globe Newspaper Co. v. Walker, 210 U.S. 356, 28 S.Ct. 726, 52 L.Ed. 1096; United States to Use of Gibson Lumber Co. v. Boomer, [8 Cir.], 183 F. 726, 106 C.C.A. 164."

The cited authorities support the foregoing rule stating the exception to the general rule and it should not be necessary to review them in detail here.

It follows that the only question necessary for consideration is whether plaintiff's right of action to recover its bill for freight was created by the Interstate Commerce Act or whether it existed independent of that act.

[3] Counsel for both parties have been diligent in their search of the law and have cited a large number of cases. They agree that the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Susquehanna Collieries Co., D.C., 23 F. 2d 499, is the only decided case with facts exactly paralleling those of the instant case. In no other case had the carrier and shipper signed a written contract in which the shipper expressly waived the statute of limitations set forth in the Interstate Commerce Act. While that case was decided by a United States District Court, it is entitled to due respect and consideration here as it is the only federal decision on the construction to be given the Interstate Commerce Act where the precise question is presented which confronts us and under exactly similar facts. In that case the court held that the right of action grew out of a contract and was not created by statute. Having reached that conclusion no other result could have been reached than to hold that the bar of the statute had been waived.

[4] While it is true that it is generally held that there is no national common law in the United States in the sense that there is a common law in the various states that have adopted it, this does not mean that the federal Constitution and statutes are to be interpreted without reference to the rules of the common law. Under this theory federal statutory construction has been so closely related to the rules of common law construction that in some cases it has been said that in this respect there is a national common law resting upon national authority.

[5] An instructive case on this question is Murray v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., C.C., 62 F. 24, 42, written by a United States district judge who courageously refused to follow prior holdings of other courts on this question. That action was brought by a shipper to recover alleged discriminatory overcharges for freight shipped over a common carrier commencing in 1875 and continuing a number of years thereafter so the shipments were made before and after the adoption of the first Interstate Commerce Act on February 4, 1887. The action was commenced on August 25, 1892, and the court held all claims for discriminatory overcharges paid prior to the statutory limitation period barred by the statute. In the course of the opinion it is said:

"In determining the obligations assumed by a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, the court has the right to apply the rules of the common law, unless the same have been changed by competent legislative action, and therefore, in the present case, all shipments made before the adoption of the interstate commerce act are governed by the common law, and those made since the adoption of that act by the common law as modified by that act."

The opinion in the Murray case was expressly approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Call Publishing Co., 181 U.S. 92, 21 S.Ct. 561, 565, 45 L.Ed. 765, which was a case brought to recover discriminatory charges alleged to have been wrongfully collected by the common carrier for telegraphic services rendered. It was there said:

"But this question is not a new one in this court. In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 145 U.S. 263, 275, 12 S.Ct. 844, 847, 36 L.Ed. 699, 704, 4 I.C.R. 92, 96, a case which involved interstate commerce, it was said by Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for the court:

"'Prior to the enactment of the act of February 4, 1887, to regulate commerce, commonly known as the Interstate Commerce Act (24 Stat. at L. 379 chap. 104 [49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.]), railway traffic in this country was regulated by the principles of the common law applicable to common carriers.'" See, also, Parkersburg & O. R. Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U.S. 691, 2 S.Ct. 732, 27 L.Ed. 584; United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 18 S.Ct. 456, 42 L.Ed. 890; State of Kansas v. State of Colorado, 206 U.S. 46, 27 S.Ct. 655, 51 L.Ed. 956.

The conclusion follows from these cases that unless the Interstate Commerce Act created a right of action in the carrier to collect transportation charges, independent of the common law right of action to recover those charges on its written contract, if there was a bill of lading, or on an implied contract to pay for the services rendered, if there was no bill of lading, the limitation on the carrier's cause of action affected the remedy and not the right of action where, as here, the shipper had paid no part of the freight charges.

In considering this question it should not be out of place to consider the causes that led up to the enactment of the Interstate Commerce Act and the abuses it sought to correct before adverting to the provisions of the act itself. These are set forth at some length in the case of Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U.S. 197, 16 S.Ct. 666, 672, 40 L.Ed. 940. It is there said:

"While shippers of merchandise are under no legal necessity to use railroads, practically they are. The demand for speedy and prompt movement virtually forbids the employment of slow and old-fashioned methods of transportation, at least in the case of the more valuable articles of traffic. At the same time, the immense outlay of money required to build and maintain railroads, and the necessity of resorting, in securing the rights of way, to the power of eminent domain, in effect disable individual merchants and shippers from themselves providing such means of carriage. From the very nature of the case, therefore, railroads are monopolies, and the evils that usually accompany monopolies soon began to show themselves, and were the cause of loud complaints. The companies owning the railroads were charged, and sometimes truthfully, with making unjust discriminations between shippers and localities, with making secret agreements with some to the detriment of other patrons, and with making pools or combinations with each other, leading to oppression of entire communities.

"Some of these mischiefs were partially remedied by special provisions inserted in the charters of the companies, and by general enactments by the several states, such as clauses restricting the rates of toll and forbidding railroad companies from becoming concerned in the sale or production of articles carried, and from making unjust preferences. Relief, to some extent, was likewise found in the action of the courts in enforcing the principles of the common law applicable to common carriers,—particularly that one which requires uniformity of treatment in like conditions of service.

"As, however, the powers of the states were restricted to their own territories, and did not enable them to efficiently control the management of great corporations, whose roads extend through the entire country, there was a general demand that congress, in the exercise of its plenary power over the subject of foreign and interstate commerce, should deal with the evils complained of by a general enactment, and the statute in question was the result."

[6] The opinion goes on to consider the act itself and the conclusion is reached that it was intended to limit the power of the common carriers to fix their rates and to put an end to discriminations among and preferences to shippers. Thus the burden was placed on the carrier and the benefit was given to the shipper. This was recognized in Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Anchor Line, 2 Cir., 219 F. 716, 135 C.C.A. 388, where it was held that the act was not for the benefit of the carrier but for the protection of the shipper.

[7] A study of the act leaves the conclusion that it lacks appropriate language to create in the common carrier a right of action to collect its transportation charges, where no part of them has been paid, separate and distinct from its common law right to bring such an action. Of course, such right of action is recognized, but hardly created, and recovery is limited to the rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

[8] The conclusion follows that in a case such as we have here where no part of the transportation charges had been paid and the carrier brings its action to recover all of those charges based on rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the cause of action is one in contract given by the common law to the carrier long before any Interstate Commerce Act was adopted and is not a right of action created by that act. Therefore the limitation in that act does not destroy the right of action by reason of lapse of time, but is merely a limitation on the remedy which may be waived by the shipper.

There is nothing in any of the cases cited to us that in any manner conflicts with this conclusion. With one exception all of those cases were either by the carrier to recover the difference between the rate paid by the shipper and the higher rate fixed by the commission or by the shipper to recover the difference between the rate paid by the shipper and the lower rate fixed by the commission. There was no such right of action known to the common law. The cause of action was created by statute.

A further ground of distinction between all of those cases and this case rests in the fact that there was no contract waiving the statute between the carrier and the shipper. The time fixed by the statute of limitations had run. The limitation was pleaded. The actions were held barred. No other results could have been expected under those circumstances. By what we have just said we do not intend to intimate that where there has been an under or over payment of the freight rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, a contract waiving the statute would be given effect. That question is not involved here.

It is at once apparent from this statement that none of those actions could have been maintained at common law. Under the common law the parties were bound by their contracts, the actions were upon those contracts and the amounts of recovery were fixed by those contracts.

The distinction here made is recognized in the case of Button v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 8 Cir., 1 F.2d 709, which was an action by the carrier to recover the difference between an undercharge paid it by the shipper and rates fixed by the commission. The court said:

"It is plain upon these facts that at common law the carrier could not have recovered of the shipper any additional sum as freight. Its right to maintain the present suit is created by the Interstate Commerce Law (Comp.St. § 8563, et seq. [49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.]). It arises out of the provision of that act which requires the carrier to collect, and the shipper to pay, the full charge named in the tariffs filed by the carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Pittsburgh [C., C. & St. L.] R. Co. v. Fink, 250 U.S. 577, 581, 40 S.Ct. 27, 63 L.Ed. 1151; New York Central & H. R. R. Co. v. York & Whitney Co., 256 U.S. 406, 408, 41 S.Ct. 509, 65 L.Ed. 1016."

The one case cited in which it does not appear that the carrier brought the action to recover the difference between the undercharge paid by the shipper and the rate fixed by the commission is Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Webster Co., D.C., 27 F. 2d 765. From the facts set forth in the opinion this question cannot be determined.

As the question presented here was not considered there we cannot regard that case as conflicting with the conclusions reached here.

[9] The distinction between the two lines of cases may be briefly summarized. When no part of the freight has been paid the action is on the contract and is based in the common law and is not created by statute. In those cases the effect of the statute important here is to fix the amount of recovery. When the action is to recover the difference between an undercharge or an overcharge and the legal rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the right of action is created by the statute as no such cause of action existed at the common law. In the first case where no part of the freight had been paid the limitation is on the remedy only and does not extinguish the cause of action so it may be waived by the parties to the contract. In the second case where part of or more than the rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission have been paid, the cause of action is created by the statute and the limitation is a condition to maintaining the action and lapse of time destroys the right of action.

To advert again to the purposes of the Interstate Commerce Act we quote from A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk Western Railway Co., 236 U.S. 662, 35 S.Ct. 444, 446, 59 L.Ed. 774, as follows:

> "To have one period of limitation where the complaint is filed before the Commission, and the varying periods of limitations of the different states, where a suit was brought in a court of competent jurisdiction; or to permit a railroad company to plead the statute of limitations as against some, and to waive it as against others, would be to prefer some and discriminate against others, in violation of the terms of the commerce act, which forbids all devices by which such results may be accomplished. The prohibitions of the statute against unjust discrimination relate not only to inequality of charges and inequality of facilities, but also to the giving of preferences by means of consent judgments, or the waiver of defenses open to the carrier."

If the purpose of the Interstate Commerce Act is to prohibit unjust discrimination by the carrier and to protect the shipper, then certainly the judgment in this case should be affirmed. To do otherwise would be to permit a carrier to give preference to a large shipper by the very procedure here followed. It would not only open the gate but would signpost the way to discriminations and preferences.

[10] Defendant in its brief virtually has conceded that there was no error in sustaining the demurrer to its fourth affirmative defense, so that question need not be considered except to say that under the federal rule governing these actions it seems to be established that there cannot be an estoppel against the collection of freight charges that will result in discriminations or preferences which will amount to rebates of legal freight charges.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., concurred.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem. (dissenting).

I dissent:

Appellant shipper appeals from a judgment in favor of respondent railroad company in an action to recover transportation charges for grapes shipped by appellant during the 1932 season from points in Fresno County, California, to a consignee in the city of New York. There is little dispute as to the facts and I will summarize them briefly.

During October and November, 1932, appellant, as shipper and consignor, shipped from points in Fresno County over the various lines of connecting railroads, including those of respondent, a number of cars of fresh grapes, which were consigned to and delivered to the consignee Jerome Distributing Company (hereinafter called Jerome Company). None of the transportation charges were prepaid. At the time of the delivery of the grapes, the transportation charges were neither demanded by respondent nor paid by the Jerome Company. On November 19, 21 and 22, 1932, the Jerome Company delivered to respondent three checks covering the transportation charges involved in this action, and other items not involved here, and respondent receipted the freight bills and delivered said receipted bills to Jerome Company which, within a few days thereafter transmitted them to appellant. These checks were not paid and respondent endeavored unsuccessfully to enforce payment on them from the Jerome Company. Appellant did not learn until the summer of 1933 that the Jerome Company had failed to meet the transportation charges. Shortly before the expiration of three years after delivery to Jerome Company of the various shipments of grapes, demand was made upon appellant for the unpaid transportation charges and litigation threatened unless payment was made. In order to enable appellant to make such investigation as it deemed essential with respect to the basis of respondent's claim, and to avoid the immediate commencement of the threatened action, appellant, on October 25, 1935, signed and delivered to respondent an extension of time for the bringing of such action. This agreement recited that appellant agreed that respondent was urging against appellant a claim for certain specified transportation charges; that respondent proposed to bring suit against appellant; that appellant desired additional time to investigate and consider the claim, and requested respondent to withhold filing suit until January 1, 1936; that respondent, in the hope that appellant would conclude to pay without litigation, was willing to defer commencement of suit until January 1, 1936; and said agreement then concluded as follows:

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the forebearance of The Pennsylvania Railroad Company to bring such a suit against the Mid State Horticultural Company, Inc. prior to October 28, 1935, the said Mid State Horticultural Company, Inc. hereby agrees that if and when The Pennsylvania Railroad Company may find it necessary to bring such an action, it, the said Mid State Horticultural Company, Inc., will not plead in any such suit the defense of any general or special statute of limitations.

"This agreement is not an admission of the alleged debt by the Mid State Horticultural Company, Inc., and is made without prejudice to any other defenses which the said Mid State Horticultural Company, Inc. may have to said claim."

Appellant notified respondent prior to January 1, 1936, that it would not pay said transportation charges and the action was filed on December 31, 1935.

Appellant in its amended answer to the amended complaint set up the provisions of section 16(3) (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act, contending that the three-year lapse of time before suit was commenced destroyed the right asserted by respondent to recover the transportation charges, and deprived the court of jurisdiction, notwithstanding the agreement hereinbefore referred to; and appellant further set up in its fourth affirmative defense the facts relied upon by it to establish that respondent, by its silence respecting the Jerome Company's failure to meet the transportation charges, which silence continued during the period in which appellant ignorantly settled its account with the Jerome Company, estopped respondent to look to appellant for payment thereafter. The trial court sustained respondent's demurrer to the fourth affirmative defense and granted respondent's demurrer to strike out said defense.

Appellant's principal contention is that the trial court erred in giving effect to the extension agreement of October 25, 1935, which appellant contends, "was void and of no effect and could not and did not serve to avoid the operation of the limitation provision of the Interstate Commerce Act, which upon the expiration of the three-year period, destroyed the liability of appellant and deprived the court of jurisdiction of this action." Appellant contends further that "irrespective of how our primary contention that the action is governed by the limitation of section 16(3) (a) may be determined upon this appeal, the inconsistency between the trial court's conclusion with respect to that proposition and its exclusion of the defense of estoppel must compel a reversal of the judgment, so that if, as the trial court necessarily held, the action was not barred by limitation, the defendant and appellant may be afforded an opportunity to establish the defense of estoppel."

By the enactment of the Interstate Commerce Act, Congress assumed exclusive jurisdiction over interstate carriers and shipments. As was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, 226 U.S. 491, 33 S.Ct. 148, 152, 57 L.Ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.,N.S., 257:

"That the legislation supersedes all the regulations and policies of a particular state upon the same subject results from its general character. It embraces the subject of the liability of the carrier under a bill of lading which he must issue, and limits his power to exempt himself by rule, regulation, or contract. Almost every detail of the subject is covered so completely that there can be no rational doubt but that Congress intended to take possession of the subject, and supersede all state regulation with reference to it. Only the silence of Congress authorized the exercise of the police power of the state upon the subject of such contracts. But when Congress acted in such a way as to manifest a purpose to exercise its conceded authority, the regulating power of the state ceased to exist."

And as stated by our own Supreme Court in New York Central R. Co. v. Frank H. Buck Co., 2 Cal.2d 384, 41 P.2d 547, 549: "The shipments being interstate, the rights and liabilities of the parties are governed by the acts of Congress as interpreted by the federal tribunals. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Rankin, 241 U.S. 319, 36 S.Ct. 555, 60 L.Ed. 1022, L.R.A.1917A, 265."

It is apparent from the act itself and from the decisions rendered since its enactment, that the principal purposes sought to be achieved by the enactment of the Interstate Commerce Act were to secure just and reasonable charges for transportation, to prohibit unjust discrimination in the rendition of like services under similar circumstances and conditions, and to prevent preferences to and discriminations among persons, firms, corporations and localities.

As was well said in the case of L. M. Kirkpatrick Co. v. I. C. R. Co., 190 Miss. 157, 195 So. 692, 693, 135 A.L.R. 607: "The outstanding purpose of the Commerce Act was to absolutely uproot and destroy all discriminations in interstate commerce regardless of how conceived or by what plan, scheme or device they may be sought to be accomplished. To that end, the carrier is without power to waive any valid provision of the contract constituting a defense."

Appellant's position is as follows: First, respondent's cause of action is one created by the Interstate Commerce Act, and as such is destroyed by the lapse of time provided in section 16, paragraph (3) (a). Therefore, it is beyond the power of the parties to waive those provisions, and the court lacked jurisdiction to enforce payment of the freight charges. Respondent's answer to this argument is that the cause of action is not one created by the Interstate Commerce Act, but is a common law action based upon a contract of shipment between the parties; that as to such a cause of action, section 16, paragraph (3) (a), is a mere statute of limitations and may be waived.

Appellant's second position is that to permit a waiver of section 16, paragraph (3) (a), invites discriminations and preferences, and therefore any such attempted waiver is illegal and void. Respondent's answer to this argument is that the agreement resulted in no discrimination; that if any preference could be said to have resulted from such waiver, it was not an undue or unreasonable preference forbidden by the act; and that to permit appellant thus to entirely avoid payment of the freight charges would result in the most exaggerated and reprehensible type of discrimination which the act seeks to prevent.

We believe it may fairly be stated that the right of a transportation company engaged in interstate commerce to collect its transportation charges existed prior to the Interstate Commerce Act, and that in that sense it was not created by the act, but it must also be stated that a transportation company engaged in interstate commerce cannot enter into a contract for transportation except upon the rates, terms and conditions set forth in the act, and that the act, and every part thereof, must be considered a part of the contract.

In the case of Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. J. I. Case Plow Works, 173 Wis. 237, 180 N.W. 846, 847, the court said: "The right to private contract between shipper and carrier is wholly abrogated by the Interstate Commerce Act, and the rates fixed by law are enforceable by the carrier by force of law."

And in Chicago, I. & L. Co. v. Peterson, 168 Wis. 193, 169 N.W. 558, 559, the court said: "The relations between common carriers and shippers are no longer mere matters of contract, but are fixed by the laws and rules regulating such interstate commerce and partake of the nature of statutory obligations." (Citing cases.)

We are, therefore, unable to agree with the respondent's contention that respondent's cause of action is not one created by the Interstate Commerce Act but is a common-law action of shipment between the parties, because it is clear to us that under the authorities the cause of action as it existed and as it must necessarily be enforced, was one created by said act. But whether it is considered that the cause of action is one at common law, or is one created by the Interstate Commerce Act, we think it must be conceded that section 16(3) (a) of the act applies to this action, because it is certainly an action at law by a carrier, subject to the act, for the recovery of its charges.

One of the things that we must decide is the proper interpretation of section 16(3) (a) which reads as follows: "All actions at law by carriers subject to this chapter for recovery of their charges, or any part thereof, shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after."

If said provision is a mere statute of limitations, then, in accordance with the general rule that such a statute may be waived, it must be held in this case that appellant by said written waiver extended the time for filing the action. If, on the other hand, the section must be construed to mean that upon the expiration of three years from the delivery of the shipments involved, the right to collect charges thereon was utterly destroyed by operation of the section, and thereafter the court lacked jurisdiction to enforce the payment of such charges, then such written waiver could not confer jurisdiction upon the court, and appellant would not be estopped from relying upon such defense by reason of such waiver.

In construing and interpreting the statute, the purpose sought to be accomplished must always be kept in mind, and the various provisions of the statute should be construed and interpreted with due regard to the manifest purpose of the entire statute. In the construction of an act of Congress we must, of course, look to and be guided by the decisions of our federal courts, and we will therefore refer to a number of such decisions.

Before doing so we think it proper to state that while subdivision (a) of paragraph (3) of section 16 is the only part of said paragraph applicable to this case, it is to be noted that with respect to each type of action referred to in said paragraph (3), the same language as to limitation, namely, "within three years * * * and not after," is used except as to time, because some of the decisions that will be referred to deal with other subdivisions of the paragraph.

In the case of A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co., 236 U.S. 662, 35 S.Ct. 444, 445, 59 L.Ed. 774, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It is argued, however, that under the conformity act (Rev.Stat. § 914, Comp.Stat.1913, § 1537 [28 U.S.C.A. § 724]), the case is to be governed by the Michigan practice, which does not permit a defendant to take advantage of the statute of limitations by a general demurrer to the declaration. But that rule does not apply to a cause of action arising under a statute which indicates its purpose to prevent suits on delayed claims, by the provision that all complaints for damages should be filed within two years, and not after. Under such a statute the lapse of time not only bars the remedy, but destroys the liability (Finn v. United States, 123 U.S. 227, 232, 8 S.Ct. 82, 31 L.Ed. 128, 130), whether complaint is filed with the Commission or suit is brought in a court of competent jurisdiction. This will more distinctly appear by considering the requirements of uniformity which, in this, as in so many other instances, must be borne in mind in construing the commerce act. The obligation of the carrier to adhere to the legal rate, to refund only what is permitted by law, and to treat all shippers alike, would have made it illegal for the carriers, either by silence or by express waiver, to preserve to the Phillips Company a right of action which the statute required should be asserted within a fixed period."

In the case of Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Wolf, 261 U.S. 133, 43 S.Ct. 259, 261, 67 L.Ed. 571, the Supreme Court, referring to the Phillips case, supra, said:

"True it is that the claim of Phillips & Co. was based upon schedule tariff charges theretofore declared to be unreasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission, while here the payments demanded are said to exceed the published rates when properly applied. But the doctrine of the Phillips case and the reasoning advanced to support it, we think, are applicable to the circumstances of the instant cause. The lapse of time had destroyed any liability by the carrier to the shipper or his assignee for the alleged overcharges, and the demurrer should have been sustained."

In the case of William Danzer & Co. v. Gulf & S. I. R. Co., 268 U.S. 633, 45 S.Ct. 612, 613, 69 L.Ed. 1126, it was said: "It is settled by the decisions of this court that the lapse of time not only barred the remedy, but also destroyed the liability of defendant to plaintiff. [A. J.] Phillips

Co. v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co., 236 U.S. 662, 666, 35 S.Ct. 444, 59 L.Ed. 774; [U.S. ex rel.] Louisville Cement Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 246 U.S. 638, 642, 38 S.Ct. 408, 62 L.Ed. 914; Kansas City Southern Ry. v. Wolf, 261 U.S. 133, 139, 43 S.Ct. 259, 67 L.Ed. 571. On the expiration of the two-year period, it was as if liability had never existed."

The case of Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Webster Co., D.C., 27 F.2d 765, was an action by a carrier to recover charges from a shipper and his surety, and the defendants relied upon the provisions of section 16(3) (a). The court said, at page 766 of 27 F.2d: "The single subject-matter of the suit is the recovery by the carrier of its charges for freight in interstate transport. Its right to sue is given by the Interstate Commerce Acts. The federal law governs. That statute provides something more than a limitation of the time within which suit is to be brought. By its terms, failure to sue within the time fixed absolutely destroys further right of action. There can be no saving exception accorded the surety by the local law. Principal and surety stand on the same footing in this case. The action is destroyed by the supreme law. The cause of action no longer exists against either principal or surety."

In the case of Button v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 1 F.2d 709, at pages 711, 712, likewise an action by a carrier to recover charges from a shipper, the Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, said: "There is another ground upon which the case may be rested. Plaintiff's right of action is given by statute. It was not created for its enrichment but to protect the public against secret rebates and discriminations. It is not a right of contract or of property. The right, therefore, is at all times under the full control of the legislature. It may limit it in any way without impairing any constitutional right of the plaintiff. [Citing cases] * * *

"As to such a right the time limited for its enforcement is a constituent part of the right itself. The lapse of time not only bars the remedy, but destroys the liability. Theroux v. Northern P. R. Co. [8 Cir.], 64 F. 84, 12 C.C.A. 52; [A. J.] Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk [Western] R. Co., 236 U.S. 662, 667, 35 S.Ct. 444, 59 L. Ed. 774; Kansas City S. Ry. Co. v. Wolf, 261 U.S. 133, 43 S.Ct. 259, 67 L.Ed. 571."

In the most recent case upon this subject, Wisconsin Bridge & Iron Co. v. Illinois Terminal Co., 7 Cir., 88 F.2d 459, 461, the court said:

"As to the third count, which was in the form of the consolidated common counts, the court overruled the demurrer, and the case went to trial on this count before a different judge. The facts were stipulated. Appellant again pleaded the statute of limitations, and the court held that it was estopped from setting up this defense inasmuch as it was at its own request that the question was submitted to the Commission, thereby causing the period to run while it was there pending. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the carrier, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted by the shipper.

"Section 16(3) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.A. § 16(3), lays down certain rules as to limitations of actions, providing, inter alia, that 'All actions at law by carriers subject to this chapter for recovery of their charges, or any part thereof, shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after.' 49 U.S.C.A. § 16(3) (a). The Supreme Court has in numerous cases construed these limitations as jurisdictional, and held that the lapse of time not only bars the remedy but also destroys the liability. See A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., 236 U.S. 662, 35 S.Ct. 444, 59 L.Ed. 774; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Wolf, 261 U.S. 133, 43 S.Ct. 259, 67 L.Ed. 571; William Danzer & Co. v. Gulf & S. I. R. Co., 268 U.S. 633, 45 S.Ct. 612, 69 L.Ed. 1126; United States ex rel. Louisville Cement Co. v. I. C. C., 246 U.S. 638, 38 S.Ct. 408, 409, 62 L.Ed. 914. In the last named case, the Court said '* * * the two-year provision of the act is not a mere statute of limitation, but is jurisdictional—is a limit set to the power of the Commission as distinguished from a rule of law for the guidance of it in reaching its conclusion.' This being true, we think that the defense of limitations was not subject to estoppel, and that it could properly be raised by demurrer or plea, and even if appellant had failed to plead it, it would not thereby have conferred jurisdiction upon the court over the claim which had already been barred at the time the action was brought. Cf. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Carolina Portland Cement Co. [4 Cir.], 16 F.2d 760; Arkansas Fertilizer Co. v. United States, Com.Ct.

193 F. 667." See, also, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Carolina-Portland Cement Co., 4 Cir., 16 F.2d 760; Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Cory, 6 Cir., 54 F.2d 8; Zang v. Railway Express Co., 130 Ohio St. 17, 196 N.E. 901.

Respondent, in reply to the foregoing authorities cited by appellant, asserts correctly that not one of such cases involves an action by a carrier to recover freight or demurrage charges in which the shipper has waived or extended the provisions of section 16, paragraph (3) (a), and respondent cites the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Susquehanna Collieries Co., D.C., 23 F.2d 499, as being the only decision on the precise facts, and contends that that decision should amount to binding authority upon this court. In view of the fact that practically the entire argument of respondent is based upon this case, we will quote the brief opinion in full:

"Westenhaver, District Judge. This cause is before me on defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's petition. Plaintiff's action is to recover demurrage charges. The point urged in support of the demurrer is that paragraph 3, § 16, of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended by Transportation Act 1920, § 424 (Comp.St. § 8584 [49 U.S.C.A. § 16(3)]), requires that all actions at law by carriers subject to that act for the recovery of their charges or any part thereof shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrues and not after. Plaintiff's action was not commenced within three years. In excuse, it is pleaded that within three years, and before the cause of action was barred, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement to waive the defense of the statute of limitations on condition that suit should not be brought within the statutory period, and that this agreement is still open and subsisting. Plaintiff admits that under the Ohio practice the defense of the statute of limitations may be made by demurrer, if, on the allegations of the petition, the statute is applicable.

"Defendant urges that the right to recover demurrage charges is a right conferred by statute, to which is annexed as a condition that suit to recover must be brought within the statutory period, and hence that the right of action is barred, and cannot be prolonged or kept alive by an agreement such as would apply to an ordinary action.

"Upon due consideration, I am of opinion that plaintiff's action to recover demurrage charges is not a right conferred by the Interstate Commerce Act, and is not within the authorities relied on by defendant. On the contrary, I am of opinion that plaintiff's right of action grows out of contract. This is none the less true, even though demurrage charges, like tariff rates, must be prescribed in a tariff filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and cannot be departed from or varied by the parties, either before or after the service is performed. The cases cited, arising under other provisions of the same section, have no application. In those cases the right of action did not grow out of contract, but out of the statute. No right of action existed except until and as the Interstate Commerce Commission made a finding of certain facts.

"In view of this conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider whether a right created by statute, with a condition annexed that it shall be enforced within a limited period, as suits for wrongful death, or actions on a reparation award of the Interstate Commerce Commission, may be kept alive by a voluntary agreement of the parties. It is difficult, however, to perceive any sound reason why it may not. Certainly none of the cases cited so hold.

"The demurrer will be overruled, and an exception may be noted."

The decision just quoted was rendered by the District Court, Northern District of Ohio. No authority is cited in the opinion and there is no reference to any of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court hereinbefore cited. The author of the opinion held that the right to sue for demurrage charges was not a right conferred by the Interstate Commerce Act but was a right which accrued out of contract, and that the statute of limitations could be waived. The opinion does not discuss the object intended to be achieved by the statute and emphasized in other decisions. It is worthy of note that this case has not been cited in any subsequent case.

We are convinced from the authorities that the conclusion reached by the court in the Susquehanna case is opposed to the great weight of authority. We believe that it was the intention of Congress in fixing the limitation of "within three years * * * and not after" to guard against the circumvention of one of the chief purposes sought to be achieved by the enactment of the Interstate Commerce Act, namely, the prevention of preferences and discriminations among persons, firms, corporations and localities. We believe further that under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and various United States circuit courts and district courts, we are compelled to hold that when Congress provided in the Interstate Commerce Act that "all actions at law by carriers subject to this chapter for recovery of their charges, * * * shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after," it meant that carriers should not grant preferences for delaying for a long period of time the enforcement of the payment of charges, and therefore intended to provide, and did provide, that unless the action was commenced within the three-year period, the carrier would lose the right to collect them by action. In construing this section we must have in mind the paramount purpose of the Interstate Commerce Act, and when we have that purpose in mind that it was an act to protect the public against rebates and discriminations, it is not difficult to understand why the federal courts have, with the single exception of the Susquehanna case, held that the period provided for the commencement of actions thereunder was different from the ordinary statute of limitations created for the benefit of the debtor, who could waive it, because it was simply a matter which concerned the parties to the action.

It may be that in some cases the waiver of the statute will not result in undue or unreasonable preference or discrimination. However, that is a question that goes to the wisdom or policy of the act, and, as was said by Mr. Justice Field, later a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 502, 520, "It is not the province of the judiciary to pass upon the wisdom and policy of legislation; and when it does so, it usurps a power never conferred by the Constitution."

We conclude, therefore, that under the provisions of section 16(3) (a), upon the expiration of the period therein prescribed within which action must be taken by the carrier, the cause of action is destroyed and the court's jurisdiction over the matter is terminated; and that neither the carrier nor the shipper can legally waive the provisions of said section, nor extend the period within which an action must be instituted, and that any such waiver or agreement to forbear is contrary to the plain policy of the act and is therefore against public policy and void.

It follows that the trial court erred in giving effect to the extension agreement of October 25, 1935, and in holding that plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

In view of the fact that appellant concedes that under the authorities the trial court was correct in its view that a shipper cannot assert an estoppel against a claim for transportation charges, it is unnecessary to discuss the question as to whether or not the court erred in sustaining respondent's demurrer to appellant's fourth affirmative defense and in striking out said defense.

In view of the foregoing the judgment should be reversed.